ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1963

U.S. SENATE,
PERMANENT SUBCOMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS
OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
Washington, D.C.

The subcommittee met at 10:35 a.m., in the caucus room, Old Senate Office Building, pursuant to Senate Resolution 17, agreed to March 14, 1963, Senator John L. McClellan (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat, Arkansas; Senator Thomas J. McIntyre, Democrat, New Hampshire; Senator Daniel B. Brewster, Democrat, Maryland; Senator Karl E. Mundt, Republican, South Dakota; Senator Carl T. Curtis, Republican, Nebraska; Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, New York.

Present: Jerome S. Adlerman, general counsel; Donald F. O'Donnell, chief counsel; Philip W. Morgan, chief counsel to the minority; LaVern J. Duffy, assistant counsel; Paul E. Kamerick, assistant counsel; Harold Ranstad, assistant counsel; Arthur G. Kaplan, assistant counsel; Alphonse Calabrese, investigator; Eugene J. Marshall, Bureau of Narcotics; Martin Pera, Bureau of Narcotics; Ruth Y. Watt, chief clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will come to order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at the convening of the session were Senators McClellan, McIntyre, Brewster, Mundt, and Curtis.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to make a brief statement for the record before we proceed to hear testimony in the course of the hearings.

By resolution of the Senate adopted March 14, 1963, the Senate Committee on Government Operations or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of syndicated or organized crime.

Under previous similar resolutions of the Senate, this subcommittee has heretofore conducted some fruitful investigations into this subject matter. Obviously, however, our task is not finished, and further study of this problem is necessary.

Today, we begin a new series of hearings in this field. We will further examine into the existence of organized or syndicated crime in this country, its growth, how it operates, its impact on society, the toll it exacts from our economy and just how effective or deficient existing laws are in preventing it. We will also consider the evidence we hear and make a study of the record of this inquiry with a view to determining if further statutes are needed to cover improper activities that are not now prohibited, and to give the law enforcement officials whatever additional tools they may need to secure better law enforcement.

Notwithstanding more diligent efforts to deal with the problem of lawlessness, organized crime continues to flourish in many of our metropolitan cities and in other areas throughout the country. As our society becomes more complex and our population increases, the opportunity for criminal activities and illicit operations also increase. Means of detection do not improve as rapidly as do methods of evasion.

The existence of such a criminal organization as Cosa Nostra is frightening. This organization attempts to be a form of government unto itself and outside of the law. This tightly knit association of professional criminals demands and gets complete dedication and unquestioned obedience by its members to orders, instructions, and commands from the ruling authority or boss or bosses thereof. Family, religion, and country are all secondary and required to be subservient to the interest of this vicious criminal syndicate. The benefits of membership therein are a share in its illicit gains from criminal activities and protection from prosecution and the penalties of the law, and also from enemies within the ranks of the criminal underworld society. The penalty for disloyalty or any serious deviation from the precepts, rules, and dictates of the order is usually death. This penalty has often been imposed and executed in the administration of its sinister government. Murder has often been ordered for a variety of reasons; a grab for power, the code of vengeance, gangland rivalries, infidelity to the organization, or even for suspicions of derelictions, particularly for informing or aiding law enforcement officials. The death sentence is usually carried out, we are advised, by a close friend of the condemned victim.

We expect to hear testimony from a member of Cosa Nostra, one Joseph Valachi, who is now serving a life sentence for a crime of murder committed while in prison and serving a 20-year sentence on a conviction of the narcotic laws. We believe he will be able to give a somewhat vivid description of the organization, the criminal enterprises in which its members engage, and a number of specific crimes, including murder—gangland style. He will also be able to tell us of the strict discipline imposed upon the members and the nature of the oath of allegiance required at the time of initiation. We believe a substantial part of his testimony can and will be corroborated.

We will examine further into one particular segment of criminal activity—the illicit traffic in narcotics. We will trace this drug along the route it follows from the time the opium poppies are harvested in the Middle East, through the Mediterranean, to the clandestine laboratories in Europe where it is refined, and across the ocean and through established channels of distribution and on down to the unfortunate victim and addict-consumer here in America.

Opium poppies provide the raw material for opium, morphine, and more importantly, heroin. We shall hear testimony which will describe the part played by opium in the broader picture of organized crime. The excessive profits make drug traffic attractive to criminal organizations and insures a steady income for their coffers. Traffic in opium is not only a crime in itself but it generates other crimes. A penniless addict driven by his insatiable appetite for more drugs will commit almost any crime to finance the purchase of it.

During the course of these hearings, we intend to examine the nature of criminal organizations. We hope to determine whether existing laws are sufficient. We will give attention to the question of whether law enforcement agencies need more authority.

I may say personally that I have in mind a statute to deal directly with and to prohibit membership in such a criminal and secret organization as Cosa Nostra.

We hope that the hearings will serve not only to provide material and information for legislative study and guidance but that it also will alert the people of our country to the magnitude of this problem and prompt greater cooperation and assistance to law enforcement agencies by individual citizens.

The Chair will recognize members of the committee for any comments.

Senator MUNDT.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I have only a very few comments.

I would like to emphasize because the question has been raised by various members of the press as to why we are having this particular hearing now, that our committee, to my knowledge, has been working on this business of narcotics and the dope trade for at least 2 years through its staff.

Staff members have made extensive trips in this country and abroad, and we now have a witness available at the time when we need to use him, which I believe is going to be very helpful to us in trying to get to the basis of one of the most awesome types of syndicated crimes, the narcotics racket, which, in itself, has much to do with the juvenile delinquency problem of America.

I would also like to say that not only have the means of detection improved, not as rapidly as do the methods of evasion, but I would like to add that the methods and degrees of punishment need to improve much more rapidly in order to keep pace with the expansion of crime in this country.

I think that the case of Valachi illustrates this point as well as anything that has ever come before our committee. He was first convicted of a crime in 1923. That is 40 years ago. So, for 40 years on the American scene, this man has been in and out of penitentiaries, sometimes with little sentences, and sometimes being released from prison before the sentence was completed, and each time going back in for a greater and more reprehensible crime and finally finding himself convicted of murder.

I think this is also dramatized by the fact that the Mafia or the Cosa Nostra inflicts upon its own members, who violate their code, punishments far more severe than society inflicts upon them after they are apprehended. And, as a consequence, of course, we have syndicated crime on the increase in America.

I join the chairman in the hope and the expectation that from these hearings will come information which will enable us to pass legislation which will not only make it easier and more certain that criminals are apprehended but that will provide that once they are apprehended penalties which fit the crime and which protect society from their reappearance on the scene can be endorsed and invoked.

I think this is going to be a very constructive and helpful hearing as far as law-obeying Americans are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator.

Senator MCINTYRE. I have no statement.

Senator BREWSTER. Very briefly, Mr. Chairman, allow me to commend you on initiating this study.

It has often occurred to me that local law enforcement agencies do not have sufficient power to deal with the vast organization of interstate crime that seems to have developed in the country. I believe this hearing will develop that information that will enable the Congress of the United States to pass those laws necessary to give the Federal Government all of the powers it needs to cope with this threat to our society.

So, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to what develops with great interest, and I commend you for the initiation of this hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Brewster.

Senator CURTIS, do you have any statement?

Senator CURTIS. I have no statement; thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. As Senator Mundt has mentioned, some several months ago, possibly nearer 2 years ago, we instructed the staff to begin making a preliminary inquiry or study into the illicit narcotics traffic. In the course of that work, when it was about completed, the development occurred that this prisoner in the Federal penitentiary who had been convicted of violating the narcotics laws and of other crimes had begun to talk. When we learned about it; we asked the Department of Justice if it would consent or agree that we might at some time and possibly at this time, in the course of these hearings, have the benefit of that witness' testimony. The Department has very graciously consented to make him available whenever the committee would need to use him.

I may say that in the entire course of this investigation and preliminary work, the Department of Justice has wholly cooperated with this committee and without its cooperation our task would certainly be far more difficult and probably much less successful. We appreciate that.

It so happens that a former member of the staff of this committee, the former chief counsel of this committee, now holds the high position of Attorney General of the United States, the highest official in the law enforcement realm, and he is quite familiar with the work of this committee and its problems. He is experienced in sitting on this side of the table; but we wanted and we have asked him if he would not be the first witness to testify in these hearings, to give us the benefit of knowledge that he has gained in the high office he now holds; and also to give us the benefit of his counsel with respect to this problem. It is something of interest to every law-abiding citizen in this Nation.

We are happy and honored today to have with us the Attorney General of the United States, Robert F. Kennedy.

May I ask you to come around, Mr. Attorney General, if you will, please.

Mr. Attorney General, just as a matter of formality and in keeping with the rules of the committee, may I ask you if you will take the oath, please, sir?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 5

You do solemnly swear that the testimony you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Attorney General KENNEDY. I do.

TESTIMONY OF HON. ROBERT F. KENNEDY

The CHAIRMAN. We welcome you today.

Little did I ever think that this situation would be exactly what it is many years ago when we were struggling over here on this side of the table together, but I am glad to have an Attorney General of the United States and particularly one who is such a good friend, who is experienced, knowledgeable, and understanding of the work of an investigating committee and particularly one in a hearing of this nature where we are trying to delve into one of the greatest menaces that confronts us from within.

We welcome you, and we are hopeful you will be helpful to us.

Senator MUNDT. May I say you should not have been surprised because this committee has made it a habit to train Attorneys General. This is the second Attorney General in quick succession who has graduated from the committee staff to the attorney generalship—Bill Rogers, you may recall, followed the same trip earlier.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if we keep producing good ones, I think that this committee justifies its existence if for no other reason than by giving them that training that they need when they get there.

Senator MUNDT. I am worrying about Mr. Adlerman's operations over there.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Don't worry about that.

The CHAIRMAN. We have to keep a little levity in these things. However, we will now proceed.

Mr. Attorney General, do you have a prepared statement?

Attorney General KENNEDY. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest to my colleagues that we do not interrupt the Attorney General until he has concluded his prepared statement. I am sure he will be then willing that we will ask him some questions.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Before I begin, could I introduce several members of the staff of the Department of Justice who have done a good deal of work?

The CHAIRMAN. We are glad to have them, too, and we appreciate your introducing them to us at this time so the record may reflect that they are present and that they are working with you and us.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Mr. Jack Miller, head of the Criminal Division; Mr. William G. Hundley, who is head of the Organized Crime Section of the Department of Justice, in which most of this work is done; and Mr. Henry Peterson, who is the first assistant of the Organized Crime Section.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, gentlemen.

We are glad to have you and, again, you are the ones principally I was referring to when I spoke of the excellent cooperation we are getting from the staff of the Department of Justice.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Organized crime, one of the biggest businesses in America, has many faces. Some are well known, like that of the gambler operating the roulette wheel which is not only illegal, but fixed. Another is that of the narcotics peddler, trading on the misery of the poor.

There are other faces—those of racketeers who engage in extortion, prostitution, corrupt labor relations, and bootlegging.

The reason racketeering can flourish in our society depends, however, on some other faces, not so well known.

There is the rackets leader, seeking protection from the law, and there is the public official who offers it—for a price—daily betraying his position of honor and trust in his community.

There is the syndicate gunman who issues threats, and there is the potential witness who receives them, frightened almost inevitably into silence.

It is this last aspect which makes the job of fighting racketeering hardest and it is this aspect which means that one of our most important weapons in the fight, at the Federal and local level, is criminal intelligence.

Intelligence—the most detailed information obtainable on the background and activities of suspected criminals—is essential to all law enforcement. It is even more important to successful action against racketeers.

Evidence concerning their clandestine operations is particularly hard to uncover. A witness who will testify in the face of threats to himself and his family is rare. This is one reason the disclosures made by Joseph Valachi are of such significance: For the first time, an insider—a knowledgeable member of the racketeering hierarchy—has broken the underworld's code of silence.

Valachi's disclosures are more important, however, for another reason. In working a jigsaw puzzle, each piece in place tells us something about the whole picture and enables us to see additional relationships.

It is the same in the fight against organized crime. Valachi's information is a significant addition to the broad picture. It adds essential detail and brings the picture into sharper focus. It gives meaning to much that we already know.

The picture is an ugly one. It shows what has been aptly described as a private government of organized crime, a government with an annual income of billions, resting on a base of human suffering and moral corrosion.

In 1957, more than a hundred top racketeers met at the now infamous crime convention at Apalachin, N.Y. But until 1960, the Federal Government had only the barest shreds of evidence about what happened at that meeting. A number of the delegates, including those from Chicago, escaped detection.

Federal investigative agencies are now pooling information on more than 1,100 major racketeers. Because of the investigative vigilance possible as a result of this intelligence effort, such a meeting could not occur unobserved today.

Because of intelligence gathered from Joseph Valachi and from informants—

We know that Cosa Nostra is run by a commission and that the leaders of Cosa Nostra in most major cities are responsible to the commission. We know that membership in the commission varies between 9 and 12 active members and we know who the active members of the commission are today.

We know, for example, that in the past 2 years, at least three carefully planned commission meetings had to be called off because the leaders learned that we had uncovered their well-concealed plans and meeting places.

We know that the commission makes major policy decisions for the organization, settles disputes among the families and allocates territories of criminal operation within the organizations.

For example, we now know that the meeting at Apalachin was called by a leading racketeer in an effort to resolve the problem created by the murder of Albert Anastasia. The racketeer was concerned that Anastasia had brought too many individuals not worthy of membership into the organization. To insure the security of the organization, the racketeer wanted these men removed.

Of particular concern to this racketeer was that he had violated commission rules in causing the assault, the attempted assassination of Frank Costello, deposed New York rackets boss, and the murder of Anastasia. He wanted commission approval for these acts—which he has received.

We know that the commission now has before it the question of whether to intercede in the Gallo-Profaci family gangland war in New York. Gang wars produce factionalism, and continued factionalism in the underworld produces sources of information to law enforcement. Indications are that the gangland leaders will resolve the Gallo-Profaci fight.

The casualty list of this one gang war alone offers a somber illustration of how cruel and calculating the underworld continues to be.

Since the summer of 1961, there have been 5 persons murdered and 13 persons seriously injured; 10 of these were shot, 1 nearly strangled, 1 beaten in a New York night club, and 1 beaten and then thrown from a speeding car.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that both the Gallos, Larry and Joe Gallo, appeared before this committee as did Mr. Profaci.

Such violence is not limited to New York or Chicago. There have been 37 gangland murders since 1960 and in the Youngstown, Ohio, area, there have been 70 bombings since 1950.

We know that Joseph Magliocco, who has taken over in Brooklyn as successor to the recently deceased Joseph Profaci, has not been confirmed by the commission and will probably not be. This is despite the fact that Magliocco recently sought the support of commission members Angelo Bruno and Steve Maggadino.

We know that while Vito Genovese is in Federal prison, Tommy Eboli is substituting for him in New York and Gerry Catena is doing the same in New Jersey.

Because of the power that Genovese wielded within the organization and the fear in which he is held by the New York organization, no move has been made to take over the top spot while his appeal of a narcotics conviction is pending in the courts.

If Genovese stays in prison after his case is concluded, we anticipate a major underworld power struggle in New York.

We know that because of Federal intelligence efforts other commission meetings have been limited to one or two members and have been held in highly clandestine fashion.

8 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Such intelligence is important not only because it can help us know what to watch for, but because of the assistance it can provide in developing and prosecuting specific cases.

Syndicate leaders and their associates have been identified and all are now under intensive investigation. A number of major racketeering figures have been convicted and many more cases are in the indictment or investigation stage.

Thus we have been able to make inroads into the hierarchy, personnel, and operations of organized crime. It would be a serious mistake, however, to overestimate the progress Federal and local law enforcement has made. A principal lesson provided by the disclosures of Joseph Valachi and other informants is that the job ahead is very large and very difficult.

We are doing an increasingly better job of using most of our assets in the effort to curb the enormous power of organized crime. But the effort has only just begun.

In 1961 and 1962, Congress granted us new statutory authority with which to act against the rackets. With bipartisan concern and support, we obtained new laws forbidding interstate travel for racketeering purposes, interstate shipment of gambling machines or paraphernalia, and use of interstate communications for gambling purposes.

These statutes have given the FBI jurisdiction to investigate such activity for the first time. Further, the FBI's investigative jurisdiction has been enlarged with the expansion of the Fugitive Felon and Federal Firearms Acts.

With these additional legal weapons, we have been able to improve greatly the Federal law enforcement effort. The Organized Crime and Racketeering Section of the Department's Criminal Division has been enlarged and revitalized and it has been given increasingly powerful help in prosecuting cases from the various Federal investigative agencies.

The statistics for cases involving organized crime give some indication of our activity. For the first 6 months of this year, we secured indictments of 171 racketeering figures—compared with 24 for the same period 3 years ago. This year, the number of convictions was 160; 3 years ago it was 35.

Organized crime cases have been in large part responsible for sharp increases in the work figures for the entire Criminal Division. Last year, Criminal Division attorneys spent 809 days in court and 7,359 days in the field. Two years prior, the figure was 283 days in court and 1,963 days in the field.

The parallel efforts of the investigative agencies have been unremitting. Above and beyond its outstanding activity under previous statutes, the FBI has conducted extensive and effective investigations of possible violations of the new laws. It is penetrating deeply into the operations and structure of the rackets.

The Federal Bureau of Narcotics has continued and improved on its notable record of intelligence gathering and enforcement. The Internal Revenue Service is pursuing racketeer tax frauds as an integral and important part of its work.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service, Postal Inspectors, and Customs Bureau, the Secret Service, the Department of Labor, and other agencies all have made an important contribution to our effort.

The work of local law enforcement officials in many communities have been outstanding, notably in Los Angeles, under Police Chief William Parker; in Cincinnati under Police Chief Stanley R. Schrotel, and in New York, under Commissioner Michael J. Murphy.

All these efforts notwithstanding, however, we have yet to exploit properly our most powerful asset in the battle against the rackets: an aroused, informed, and insistent public.

In the words of the old saying, every society gets the kind of criminal it deserves. What is equally true is that every community gets the kind of law enforcement it insists on.

Regardless of new laws and old, regardless of resourceful and dedicated Federal investigative efforts, and regardless of how well rounded a picture of organized crime our intelligence helps us to secure, the only force that can conquer organized crime is the vigilance of citizens in every community.

Public attention is not enough. The extensive efforts of this committee and that of the late Senator Kefauver focused wide public attention on the scope of the problem. And yet not only has organized crime not diminished, but it has become an even more urgent national problem.

The recurring theme we have found in case after case is that where there is little public interest, the cash registers of organized crime clang loudly. Where public interest is aroused—and stays aroused—racketeers are driven into bankruptcy or prison.

A notable example is Newport, Ky., which was long known nationally for wide-open gambling and prostitution. Law enforcement there was deeply corrupted and small citizens' groups had been fighting the rackets for years without success.

In 1961, while reformers were mounting a new effort, we convened a special Federal grand jury. On the basis of solid investigative work by the Internal Revenue Service and FBI, the grand jury returned indictments which led to the conviction of Frank Andrews, one of the country's leading numbers operators, and an attorney and night club operator involved in the rackets.

We also made grand jury witnesses available to State authorities and an aroused local grand jury then indicted the mayor of Newport and several council members and policemen, for malfeasance. They are awaiting trial. Meanwhile, the voters ousted the Campbell County sheriff, and the chief of detectives in Newport has been replaced.

The fight is not over in Newport, but organized gambling and prostitution have been eliminated. A reform candidate has been elected sheriff and there are continuing efforts to elect more decent citizens to local public office. And, we are told, the Newport economy, once thought to be so dependent on illegal gambling, has had a sharp upturn. Business, which once avoided the area, is now settling down in an atmosphere of safety.

Beaumont, Tex., provides another example. Since 1960, when a special squad of IRS agents began intensive investigation there, the wide-open vice and corrupt law enforcement which had existed for decades have been largely eliminated. This result has been achieved by joint State and Federal efforts, which continue.

A number of public officials, including the sheriff, district attorney, and police chief of Beaumont and Port Arthur each admitted receiving substantial amounts as "political contributions." In one case, these amounted to $85,000 in 5 years.

All of these officials have been removed. Three leading local gambling figures have been convicted of tax charges and still other cases are either pending or under investigation.

The effect of aroused community interest is by no means limited to smaller cities. One of our principal areas of concentration has been a highly industrialized eastern city. A task force of Federal agents and several attorneys from the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section, working with the U.S. Attorney's Office, organized a coordinated drive against the racket interests there.

Their first target was the syndicate in the suburbs. They found half a dozen major crime figures—all of whom attended the Apalachin conference—conducting racketeering activities outside the city proper. Because of their connections with police, the racketeers were virtually immune from local prosecution.

As a result of our coordinated effort, their gambling headquarters were raided. Two were indicted and are awaiting trial for tax evasion and their top lieutenants have been convicted on gambling tax charges.

Further action at that time was blocked only because corrupt local police prevented surveillance of a courier who was bringing gambling profits to rackets chiefs shortly before the raid.

Nevertheless, the public attention aroused by these cases resulted in replacement of the suburban town government and police force.

Meanwhile, the attack on extensive racketeering activities within the city itself began with undercover surveillance by the Internal Revenue Service.

Raids on gambling headquarters followed and in one of these, we were able to make a clean sweep of arrests—of the operators and the employees of the three largest numbers operations in the city. Of the three operators, two have been convicted and the third is awaiting trial.

Law enforcement efforts in this city now are changing drastically. Police are now cooperating with fellow law enforcement officers rather than with the gamblers. Local, as well as joint Federal-local raids have been conducted and more are planned throughout the area.

I think it is fair to say that the change results from the public awareness and action stimulated by the original Federal drive.

Let me make it clear that for the most part, our experience with local law enforcement officials has provided us with case after case of dedicated, honest, and courageous police action.

One excellent example came in Detroit November 9, 1962. The scene was a former hotel, turned over totally to very large-scale numbers operations, other types of gambling, and prostitution. Security was maintained not only by a buildingwide buzzer alarm system, but also by a closed-circuit TV in the lobby.

City and State police joined forces with Internal Revenue Service agents and a joint 100-man raiding team was established. Operating with complete secrecy, they then conducted one of the most successful gambling raids in history.

The indictments of a number of gambling figures, including the chiefs of six numbers games in the city, have followed. While these have not yet been tried, Detroit officials tell us that many gambling figures have moved out of town, that those who remained move around constantly, and that the numbers business in the city has dropped sharply.

Seized records show that prior to the raid, this single hotel operation brought in $21 million a year.

Such enormous totals are not unusual. They illustrate how big a business organized crime has become.

As I testified before the Senate and House Judiciary Committees in the summer of 1961, we estimated that illegal gambling alone had a gross volume of some $7 billion annually.

The work and the efforts we have made since that time, Mr. Chairman, bear out that figure.

We have made progress since that time. We have successfully prosecuted 1,283 gamblers for wagering tax or interstate gambling violations. This is a good beginning, but it is no more than a beginning, and the success of our efforts cannot be measured properly for several years.

There is, in any event, no doubt that illegal gambling still takes in enormous amounts of money, much of which is used to feed other kinds of organized crime.

To illustrate, in an interstate numbers game case which we prosecuted successfully in New York City, records seized during a raid disclosed that this single operation grossed $6 million a year. In the three related cases successfully prosecuted in the western district of Pennsylvania a total of $40 million was involved.

Figures of this magnitude have been found all over the country. In the State of Washington the defendants in a case involving interstate transportation of pinball machines admitted in open court that they paid 20 percent of their gross income of $16.5 million to the State in taxes in 30 months despite the fact that the pinball machines, which were the source of the money, were illegal under State law.

Narcotics also provides enormous profits. Because of the remarkable vigilance and law enforcement efforts of the Bureau of Narcotics, under Henry Giordano, we know the syndicate leadership has ordered its members to stay out of the narcotics traffic.

The greed of a number of racketeers is so great, however, that despite the risk and despite these orders, they have continued to operate extensively in this field. More than a score of Cosa Nostra members have been convicted recently on narcotics charges.

This greed—and the efforts of the Bureau of Narcotics—are typified by a historic case involving an international heroin ring. This operation smuggled, conservatively speaking, $150 million worth of heroin into this country in the false bottoms of trunks supplied to unsuspecting Italian immigrants.

How important this case was to the syndicate can be gaged from what happened to the 24 men indicted in New York. The body of one defendant was found in the Bronx, full of bullet holes, shortly before the trial. The badly burned body of a second defendant was found in a field near Rochester, N.Y., during the trial. Another defendant attempted suicide and three others, the leaders of the ring here, fled the country, two of them forfeiting $50,000 bail.

The Bureau of Narcotics, picking up their trail in the Caribbean, traced them to Italy and then to Spain where they were arrested and returned to this country. Ultimately, they were convicted both on the original narcotics charges and also on flight charges.

The remaining defendants were convicted and sentenced to long prison terms.

Gambling and narcotics are not the only sources of great income to the rackets. Usurious loans—known in the underworld as “juice loans” or “shylocking”—involve large amounts, as well as frequent hoodlum threats of violence made to insure repayment.

The principal syndicate “shylocker” in New York was carrying some loan records when he was arrested by the FBI recently for violating probation. While he first contested revocation of his probation at a hearing, he quickly changed his plea to guilty when the court sought to question him about the records.

From other sources we know why he was so anxious to avoid talking about his loans. He had loaned over $125,000 of his own money at usurious rates. The additional money he was handling for the syndicate ran into hundreds of thousands more.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, he was one of those who attended the meeting at Apalachin.

Considering that an interest rate of $6 back for $5 borrowed per week is not unusual in the underworld, the size of the profits from this activity is apparent. If there is no repayment, that rate would compound to more than 700 percent over the usual 12-week loan period.

Yet even the enormous amounts of money involved in these activities tell only part of the story of the rackets' financial interests. What is at least as disturbing, and far more insidious, is the increasing encroachment of the big businessmen of the rackets into legitimate business.

In some cases, the familiar weapon of extortion has been used not only as a source of direct income, but as a wedge to obtain control of respectable enterprises.

An illuminating case in point began in 1960 with a series of threats directed against the partners in a Brooklyn furniture enterprise. Subsequently, one partner was beaten by unknown assailants. Acting on the advice of a New York rackets leader, the partners then sought protection from another important racketeer ranked high in the Pro-faci-Magliocco family.

The “patron” agreed to provide the necessary protection, but announced that he, too, was now a partner in the business, of which the paidup inventory alone was more than $60,000.

In return for his new “partnership” he gave $10,000 to one partner for his entire interest and $5,000 to the other for a half interest.

Thereafter, the racketeer proceeded to milk the company dry. Then came a series of mysterious fires which resulted in an insurance settlement of over $105,000.

Another scheme used by racketeers for intrusion into legitimate business is bankruptcy fraud. The method of operation is simple.

A racketeer buys or opens a retail store, often through a “front” man. He deposits substantial funds into a bank account for the store and, using that as a basis for credit, orders large amounts of merchandise.

He then sells the goods through the ostensibly legitimate store, but does not pay his creditors. Anxious to protect their investment, they give him extended opportunity to pay.

By the time the collector comes with the sheriff, however, the ostensible merchant has disappeared—or contends that he lost the retail sale proceeds, now safely hidden, at the race track or in a so-called burglary.

Racketeer involvement in such cases is increasing. We have two cases now pending in different eastern cities, each involving six-figure amounts and other similar cases are under investigation.

Still another form of encroachment into legitimate business is the fictitious employee scheme.

To cloak their illegal activities, racketeers in some parts of the country have arranged to be placed on the payrolls of ostensibly legitimate businesses, which they may, indeed, own themselves.

This employment is purely fictitious and the racketeer performs no services for the firm. But the “job” permits him to devote his time to operating illegal activities while the job title and his tax returns show him to be a member of the honest business community.

A racketeer in this position can use the business as a funnel for racketeering profits by repaying loans, for example, with illegally obtained funds.

We now have this kind of activity under scrutiny in several areas, including a midwestern city where nine top racketeers are engaged in fictitious “front” jobs.

Other racketeers have interests in a variety of legitimate businesses—the garment industry, construction, bowling alleys, liquor wholesaling, real estate, jukeboxes, vending machines, restaurants, and others.

Such business interests in some cases have fostered official corruption. In an eastern city, a leading racketeer and the city’s mayor and police chief are awaiting trial on charges of extensive corruption involving substantial payoffs to the city officials in exchange for approving contracts for city business.

In a midwestern city, a high ranking municipal official is under indictment for attempting to extort thousands of dollars from firms seeking city contracts. There are other similar cases, and we now have more than a hundred investigations in 30 States involving the corruption of public officials.

Another highly profitable activity for racketeers with legitimate business interests has been stock fraud. Often rackets figures with considerable capital at their disposal invest not only in legitimate securities, but also in questionable stock.

Typically, they artificially raise the price of such stock with calculated purchases and then sell large amounts through “boilerroom” telephone solicitation.

In one case, a leading eastern rackets figure is now under indictment for evading taxes on more than $1 million profit received from such sale of stock.

Similar situations and cases involving the sale of stolen securities are now under close investigation.

Racketeers’ intrusions into businesses are paralleled by their intrusions into labor relations. No one is better aware of the extent of labor racketeering and the toll it exacts than the members of this committee.

We have been alert to this type of criminal activity as well and in the past 32 months have taken prosecutive action against a number of corrupt businessmen as well as dishonest officers or members of some 45 different unions.

In the past 2½ years, 43 labor and 34 management representatives have been indicted for violations of the Taft-Hartley Act prohibition against payoffs to union officials. A total of 201 persons have been indicted for this and other labor-management offenses during the same period and we have so far secured 146 convictions.

In the case of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters alone, in the same period, we have secured 124 indictments against union officers, members, and associates and have, so far, secured 65 convictions, with 7 acquittals. In addition, as the result of Federal-local cooperation, there have been 23 convictions on State charges.

The job of law enforcement has become correspondingly harder as racketeering figures have tried to blur the line, in all fields, between their criminal and legitimate activities.

Our principal problem is insulation. The kingpins of the rackets—our main targets—are often far removed from their illegal activities. In fact, when we see that one of our subjects has become operational, we know he is no longer a kingpin.

For example, a racket lord need only contact one or two trusted lieutenants to successfully direct a massive, illegal gambling operation and collect great profits. With modern means of communication, he need not even enter the State in which the illegal activity is centered.

Needless to say, the racketeer knows that under present law, his telephone conversations are protected from interference.

And there are various telephone techniques to frustrate investigating officers who must attempt to obtain evidence of violations legally.

A bookmaker may subscribe to a regular telephone answering service. A bettor calls, usually from a pay phone, and leaves his number. The bookmaker then calls the answering service periodically and places a telephone call from pay booths to his customers.

Gamblers also install hidden knife switches or similar devices which can be tripped to cut the telephone circuit and prevent raiding officers from accepting calls from bettors which come in after they have gained entrance to the gambler's premises.

Top racketeers always deal in cash and there are innumerable ways to conceal cash from the very best of investigators. Secret numbered accounts in foreign banks, legitimate "front" businesses of the kind I have described, loan sharking—these are just a few of the methods.

Another is the "skimming" operation, conducted behind barred doors, in which a large percentage of the proceeds of so-called legal gambling is skimmed off and then hidden.

To avoid possible detection of this and other devices for concealing cash, the modern racketeer often reports sizable amounts, perhaps as much as $30,000 or $40,000, as "gambling winnings" or "miscellaneous income." These amounts are insignificant compared with the real totals and the racketeer can afford to pay them to avoid or discourage a tax case.

Racketeers use other modern methods to avoid detection. Just 3 weeks ago, special agents of the Internal Revenue Service broke up the latest version of the old rolling crap game.

After a wild chase through a southeastern city, they apprehended a "rolling numbers bank"—a 1963 panel truck, air conditioned and completely equipped with tables, chairs, adding machines, and electrical outlets.

Thus, organized crime not only becomes more refined in its activities, but also takes advantage of modern developments in transportation and communication. As it does so—and grows richer and more powerful in the process—it can more easily elude law enforcement efforts.

And, as evidence becomes harder to obtain, the importance of informants increases correspondingly. They, to say the least, are hard to come by. The usual reply of a convicted hoodlum in a position to give information is that he doesn't want to trade a jail cell for a hearse.

The disclosures of Joseph Valachi—and of others with knowledge of criminal operations in various parts of the country—have helped to give us an unprecedented understanding of how those operations work.

But even the increasing flow of information from such sources does not answer the problem. Being able to identify a top racketeer is one thing. Securing the evidence to convict him in a court of law is quite another.

(At this point Senators Muskie and Javits entered the hearing room.)

Attorney General KENNEDY. While the new legal weapons Congress has already given us have been extraordinarily effective, as I indicated earlier, one major purpose in my appearing here is to seek the help of Congress in the form of additional legislation—the authority to provide immunity to witnesses in racketeering investigations; and reform and revision of the wiretapping law.

The problem of obtaining testimony is nowhere more acute than in establishing violations of the Racketeering Travel Act (sec. 1952 of title 18, United States Code, interstate and foreign travel or transportation in aid of racketeering enterprises) which the Congress enacted in August 1961.

Immunity here would materially assist our investigations of interstate racketeering in gambling, liquor, narcotics, prostitution, extortion, and bribery. For example, the power of immunity under the bribery provision of this statute could be used to advantage in our investigations of political corruption.

To further assist our investigations of political corruption, which is such a serious byproduct of organized criminal activity, we would also suggest to this Congress S. 1246, which would provide for the use of immunity in the general bribery and conflict-of-interest statutes.

This change would make an important tool available in certain political corruption situations where we are unable to establish an interstate connection as required under the travel statute.

Finally, if we are to make maximum progress in our drive on organized crime, I am convinced that we need legislation to permit the use of wiretapping by law enforcement officials.

The urgency for revision of the present and ineffective provision of the wiretapping statute is emphasized by the fact that the latest electronic improvements are easily available to the criminal. The advantages these can give him over law enforcement officers are plain.

Leading racketeers make almost unrestricted use of interstate facilities, particularly communications, to direct their illegal activities.

Meanwhile, the present statute fails to protect the right of privacy over the telephone, because anyone can listen in without violating that statute. At present, to convict someone of illegal wiretapping, we must not only prove both that a tap was made but also that there was unlawful disclosure of the conversation.

Thus the present law neither prevents indiscriminate wiretapping nor recognizes the legitimate needs of law enforcement for authority, closely circumscribed to use this means of gathering evidence.

Last January the Department of Justice resubmitted to the Congress a carefully worded bill, S. 1308, with strong procedural safeguards, which would afford a clear-cut basis for the legitimate and controlled use of wiretapping by law enforcement officials. At the same time, the bill would expressly forbid all other types of wiretapping.

Section 5(b) of this bill empowers the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General specially designated by the Attorney General to authorize application to a Federal judge for a wiretap order.

The section empowers the judge to issue an order permitting wiretapping in cases involving national security, murder, kidnaping, and racketeering cases.

Enactment of both of these statutes would give us important and effective weapons against organized crime.

The fact remains, however, that if such weapons and all of our efforts are to make any lasting difference, we must encourage, arouse, and sustain the vigilance of the public.

For if one thing is clear, it is that organized crime is a national problem. The racketeer is not someone dressed in a black shirt, white tie, and diamond stickpin, whose activities affect only a remote underworld circle.

He is more likely to be outfitted in a gray flannel suit and his influence is more likely to be as far-reaching as that of an important industrialist.

The American public may not see him, but that makes the racketeer's power for evil in our society even greater. Lacking the direct confrontation with racketeering, the American citizen fails to see the reason for alarm.

The reason, decidedly, exists. The financial cost of organized crime is not limited to the vast illicit profits of gambling or narcotics. When racketeers bore their way into legitimate business, the cost is borne by the public.

When the infiltration is into labor relations, the racketeer's cut is paid by higher wages and higher prices—in other words, by the public.

When the racketeer bribes local officials and secures immunity from police action, the price exacted by corrupt law enforcement—incalculable in dollars—is paid, again, by the public.

In short, organized crime affects everyone. It cannot be the concern only of law enforcement officers. It must be the urgent and active concern of every citizen.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

(At this point Senator Javits withdrew from the hearing room.)

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Mr. Attorney General.

May I ask if you have anything additional you wish to add to your prepared statement?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Not at the moment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is a most excellent statement. I wish every American citizen could have heard, and maybe many have heard you give your statement. Those who have not I wish might read it because I think it points up the critical situation that exists in our country with respect to law and order, in many aspects of it at least.

I know it is gratifying to every citizen to realize that through vigorous efforts we are making possibly some progress in this effort to abate the menace. But I think it is as you suggest, it is almost imperative that we get the rank and file citizens of this country to realize how important, how serious it is to the end that they will become aroused and make their contribution, any contribution within their power, toward enforcement of our laws and the assisting of law enforcement agencies and officers who have in this field today a very heavy responsibility.

I deeply appreciate your giving the time from your other duties to come here and work with us to give us the benefit of your observation and experience since you have been performing the duties of the high office you hold.

I was interested particularly in the recommendations you make for new laws. I think that good can come from hearings of this kind by simply getting information to the public that it might not have and that might, as you have indicated, bring to the citizen a greater consciousness of his duty and obligation and of the seriousness of the problem.

But the primary purpose always of congressional investigation is to search for knowledge and information to serve as instruction and guide to the Congress with respect to its duty to legislation; to examine into conditions, to ascertain if existing laws are adequate; to deal with those conditions, also to ascertain whether the tools that we have provided by law to our law enforcement agencies are adequate, that they are up to date, if they are effective or if they are deficient and what we should do about it.

That is and will remain the primary objective of not only this but other investigative hearings that this committee will conduct.

I notice you emphasize again the wiretapping legislation which you have previously recommended.

I fully understand that and I share the views of your Department and of yourself with respect to the need for this legislation. Those who introduce these bills and who recommend them know that they are subject to examination and study and they should be.

But the objective that you seek has my unqualified support.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. I will do all I can to get such legislation enacted.

You mentioned another recommended legislation in another field, that is of granting immunity. I should like to have you amplify your statement about that for the record and indicate how it would work, how the legislation we seek in that area would operate, what use you could make of it advantageously in this war against crime.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Well, both provisions I have recommended here, Mr. Chairman, have to do with immunity. One is to have an immunity statute attached to 1952 of title 18 which was passed by Congress at the last session, which deals with travel or illegal business across State lines and the illegal business is described as prostitution, organized crime, gambling, bribery, extortion. This is a very powerful weapon and it has been very useful to us so far. But we have a difficult time, as always, in obtaining witnesses to testify on some of these matters.

If we could give immunity to some of the key witnesses who have information about these kinds of activities, that would be extremely important.

The CHAIRMAN. Where two conspire to violate the law in a rackets game or where, for instance, a local official may be corrupted by a racketeer to permit him to engage in his racket, I understand now you do not have authority under the law to grant immunity to one of those so that he may testify against the other.

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is what we would like to have, Mr. Chairman. The difficulty is that where it goes across State lines these matters involve some of our biggest gangsters and hoodlums in the United States or their lieutenants. It is virtually impossible to obtain testimony from any of those who are directly involved. If they bring in one outside individual, a businessman, a labor leader, or an ordinary citizen, we have found from our experience that he becomes so intimidated that he will also refuse to testify.

So the result is that cases that we—because of our investigative work—realize exist we are not able to present in a court of law because we just do not have the witnesses.

If we could obtain an immunity provision attached to that statute so that we could give immunity and require testimony, it would be very helpful in cutting down on the bigtime activities of those involved in organized crime.

The CHAIRMAN. Has that legislation been introduced that you have recommended?

Attorney General KENNEDY. It has.

The CHAIRMAN. It is also pending?

Attorney General KENNEDY. The other immunity provision I have also recommended, Mr. Chairman—and we have not recommended an overall immunity statute because I know there is a good deal of reluctance about that—the second part that we have requested is an immunity provision dealing just with public corruption, corruption in labor-management affairs.

Once again you have a very difficult time, if there is a payoff or deal made between someone involved in a labor union and management, to get one or the other to testify, because both of them appear to have violated the laws. So they refuse to testify.

If we could take the least culpable and require his testimony, that would be extremely helpful. We would have made many more cases over the last 2½ years if we had had that.

Also, I think one of the worst byproducts of organized crime is the corruption of public officials. This would permit us to grant immunity and require testimony in those kinds of cases.

Third, we have had information on occasion that efforts have been made to fix juries and if this provision was forthcoming from Congress we could grant immunity and therefore obtain evidence that we cannot obtain at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. Now this you think would be most useful and would become an important tool in trying to reach the higher criminals in these conspiracies?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Senator, if those three bills were passed, the wiretapping, which is the most important, plus the immunity bills, then I would think that the need for this kind of hearing 5 years from now would not be necessary.

I think you are still going to have organized crime, you are still going to have problems, but the major effect that it has on peoples' lives and on communities would not exist 5 years from now.

I say that if the legislation is not passed, even though this increased effort is made at the local and Federal level, you are going to still have a major problem in the United States.

Organized crime has grown immensely since the days of the Ke-fauver investigation. I think that now we are treading water at least, but to start to make any major inroads into it we are going to need more weapons.

We can have a lot more hearings but unless we get the weapons to deal with it, unless local law enforcement has this kind of support which the wiretapping bill would give them, and unless the Federal Government is given the weapons to deal with this kind of problem, all we are going to do is to have articles written, stories written, and hearings, and not really get the jobs done.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, many States have comparable statutes.

Attorney General KENNEDY. On the immunity?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct. But on the wiretapping, as Frank Hogan stated 2 years ago, some of their biggest cases had to be thrown out at the local level.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, that is because of a Federal court decision.

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand you to say that if you had these weapons that it is your sincere belief you would have the tools with which you believe you could successfully combat this menace?

I do not mean wipe it out. There will always be crime, there will always be evil in the world, I understand that. But you believe with these weapons you would be able to combat the rise in crime successfully and particularly in these areas of racketeering?

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct, Mr. Chairman. I think the wiretapping bill, of course, is the most controversial, but I think an individual citizen's privacy would be safeguarded far more if this bill is passed than he is at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you one other question at this time and then I want to yield to my colleagues but then I would like to ask you later possibly two other questions.

I stated in my opening statement, and I have discussed this with some of your staff recently—and I am sure the idea is not originally mine, I am sure others have thought of it before and no doubt you have discussed it some in your consideration of this problem—as you said possibly for the first time now we hope at least to have a witness who has been a member of such an organization as Cosa Nostra testify and reveal inside knowledge about it. I know this would have its constitutional difficulties. In other words, it would not be easy to draft legislation to accomplish this result.

I am thinking in terms of making it a crime, making it illegal to belong to a secret society or organization or association, whatever term we want to give to it, where allegiance is taken that assumes disloyalty, an individual pledges disloyalty to the Constitution and laws of the United States. In other words, where there is a conspiracy at the time of entering the organization to violate laws, to permit crime, to pursue an enterprise of crime against the laws of the country, to make that act of joining or taking of the pledge or taking the oath to commit these things, and to provide protection to others of the organization who do and commit these acts, to make that a crime.

I know it will have some problems, constitutional problems maybe, but to me it seems that we have established the fact, and I think we all know it, that such an organization exists, that we might be able to enact some law striking directly at the source. There is where the source is, in the organization. That is why it can be so effective because it is organized. Why it can be so effective is because they agree and conspire to go beyond the laws, to violate the laws, to disregard them, to obstruct law enforcement right from the beginning.

We should strike directly with some statutes, strike directly at the membership, at the incipency of the offense, so to speak.

I wish you would give some thought to it.

I do not know whether you wish to comment on it now. You might have your staff study it.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes, we will be glad to work with the staff of the committee.

As you have pointed out and as we have discussed, there are certain constitutional problems. Obviously we are most sympathetic to the objective which would be very, very helpful.

If we can work out the constitutional problems, I think that that is what we should devote our attention to.

The CHAIRMAN. The general objective of it seems to me to be rather important.

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. I think I know that from another source but I will wait for the right time to place it in the record, but there are many today whom you are prosecuting, and some of whom you have already convicted, who possibly would not have been such misfortunates among our human population if they could have been prevented or if there had been an inhibition against it, or something to deter them from ever becoming a member of such an organization.

I think it is worth our serious study.

I am not saying at the moment that it can be done constitutionally, but if it can be I think that might be one of the important pieces of legislation that could come out of these hearings.

Thank you very much.

I will want to ask you another question or two.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 21

Senator Mundt indicated he wished to ask you a question. I do not want to monopolize the time. I want to give my colleagues an opportunity to ask questions.

Senator MUNDT. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Just how would this immunity statute operate if you had the authority you seek in the legislation? Would that mean that you could then get cited for contempt of court the witness who used the fifth amendment to protect himself?

Attorney General KENNEDY. You would give him immunity, Senator, if you required his testimony. You could grant him immunity and provision would be made that he would not be prosecuted for anything that he testified to.

Senator MUNDT. Then if he still was adamant and refused to testify, would you be able to convict him?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Then you bring him before the court and then undoubtedly, if he had been given immunity under the law and the statute was on the books and we had a right to give him immunity, the court would order him to answer the question. If he refused to answer the question after the court, the judge, ordered him to answer the question, then he could be sent to jail.

Senator MUNDT. In other words, his right to plead the fifth amendment on that particular question would be denied to him because there would not be any possible way for him to convict himself, but if he still refused he could be held for contempt of court?

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct.

Senator MUNDT. Otherwise I do not see how your immunity would help because this other factor you describe, the fear of reprisal, would still prevail.

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct.

I might say there are more than a dozen immunity statutes on the books at the present time dealing with all kinds, different kinds. The Federal Communications Commission has a right to grant immunity. When an individual is called before a grand jury under the antitrust laws he gets immunity automatically. So this is not a precedent-shaking step.

There are many other bills that have it already. This would be adding to it.

As I say, in this extremely important field, it would be very, very helpful.

Senator MUNDT. You seem to use the words "Mafia" and "Cosa Nostra" sort of interchangeably in these discussions. Could you outline for us the difference or the relationship between the Mafia and the Cosa Nostra?

Attorney General KENNEDY. I think it is almost a matter of semantics, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. You can use them interchangeably?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes. Some refer to it as the commission and consider it at that time not only just the 8 to 12 men that head it up but the whole organization. It is an organization. It is Mafia. It is the Cosa Nostra. There are other names for it, but it all refers to the same operation.

I think the importance of it is that it indicates, it shows, it demonstrates that there is an organized crime operation in the United States and that it is run by a group of 10 or 12 men at the top, like a major industrial concern.

Senator MUNDT. It ramifies out to the members of a family.

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct. It is then broken down in the various major areas of the United States.

Senator MUNDT. I was rather expecting you to say something about the degree to which aliens belong to these organizations.

I wanted to inquire whether that is correct and, if so, whether you have all the deportation powers required to rid this country of aliens who take advantage of their presence to engage in these big-type crimes.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Some of them do participate. Deportation proceedings, as you know, Senator, frequently take a long period of time. Some of them, by the time the individual exhausts his legal remedies, it is 12, 15, or more years. So that is a great problem.

Senator MUNDT. It could cause a great frustration.

I was wondering whether anything could be done to expedite it.

Attorney General KENNEDY. There was some remedy we recommended last year which was passed by Congress which I think will be very helpful. It is not up before some of the higher courts for their interpretation. But if it is interpreted as we expected and as we anticipated and as we hoped when we suggested it, I think it will expedite the deportation of some of these individuals.

Now the ones who can really delay the deportation are those at the top because they are the ones who have all of these legal remedies that they have studied for such a long period of time.

It has not been helpful to those who are less fortunate and do not have the financial means, and that is not the way it should be.

Senator MUNDT. I recall in our earlier crime testimony, when you were serving as chief counsel, there was a case of a fellow down in New Orleans.

Attorney General KENNEDY. His case is about to come up, so I would rather not comment on it.

Senator MUNDT. It seems to me that is illustrative of what would happen.

Here is a fellow, an alien, a criminal, apparently reached the United States, and it was not able to get rid of him.

Attorney General KENNEDY. I would rather not discuss it.

Senator MUNDT. Are you completely satisfied with the nature of the sentences which are meted out, once you go through the laborious process of detection, prosecution, and conviction?

Attorney General KENNEDY. I say generally I would be, Senator. Obviously there are disappointments. At times when we have worked a long time on a major figure, as we have on occasion, and then he avoids any real serious penalty and receives a $200 fine, it is obviously a disappointment to the investigative group as well as the Department of Justice and does not really further the ends of justice.

There are certain problems that we have around the country in connection with that.

Senator MUNDT. Is there anything that could be done in the legislative field to increase the minimal and maximal penalties which would be helpful; or is this just a matter of getting the case before the right judge?

Attorney General KENNEDY. I do not think that there is anything that can be done in the legislative field. We have had these conferences around the country, Senator, talking about sentencing, which I think have been helpful, to try to get some more uniformity. While we are concerned that sometimes they are too lenient, we are also concerned that on occasion they are too harsh. If we can get greater uniformity I think it would be very helpful to those who get into difficulty with the law as well as law enforcement generally.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the balance of my questions because I think other members would like to ask questions before the morning session ends.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Muskie, do you have any questions?

Senator MUSKIE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do not have many questions.

I would like, first, to compliment Attorney General Kennedy on his statement, on his concern with the problem, on his efforts to deal with it, and on the proposals he has advanced for improving those efforts. I think he has particularly made mention of the fact that as organized crime becomes more refined, more sophisticated in its method and activity, it becomes more difficult to deal with it.

With respect to Cosa Nostra, as I understand it, this is an organization which establishes an allegiance for its members that is higher than family, country, and religion. It becomes the primary allegiance of the member.

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct.

Senator MUSKIE. I think this is at the heart of the chairman's suggestion for dealing with it.

In connection with your own proposals, Attorney General Kennedy, are you concerned primarily with the problem of detecting crime and uncovering these activities or are you primarily concerned with obtaining evidence that will hold up in court?

Attorney General KENNEDY. The latter, Senator. I think we do have machinery that is now in operation which gives us a good deal of intelligence.

I think we are approaching this matter now as the Communist Party was approached in the 1930's and we are going to have intelligence. It might not pay off in prosecutions right away but maybe 3 years from now, or 5 years from now, or 10 years from now the information we can place in our files, the information we can learn on these individuals, can be extremely helpful to our successors. So I think that is on its way.

What we need, however, is that because the members of the commission, the top members, or even their chief lieutenants, have insulated themselves from the crime itself, if they want to have somebody knocked off, for instance, the top man will speak to somebody who will speak to somebody else who will speak to somebody else and order it. The man who actually does the gun work, who might get paid $250, or $500, depending on how important it is, perhaps nothing at all, he does not know who ordered it. To trace that back is virtually impossible.

You are going to have to get every one along the line, these two or three men, to talk.

They have all taken this oath. They all believe in the organization. They have always felt the worst thing you can possibly do is talk.

They have seen others who have talked who have not lived, so they are not going to talk.

The reason that Valachi is interesting is not that we don't have other people who are not talking to us but they are talking to us on the basis that we not disclose it or not disclose where the information came from. That is how we found out what happened at Apalachin. We could not produce a witness here who would tell you what happened at Apalachin.

Mr. Valachi is the only one who will actually come and testify in public and disclose the information in public as to what he knows. That is what distinguishes him.

You look back on organized crime and people who are talking about organized crime, somebody might talk about a particular criminal act.

What we have always lacked is somebody who could come in and tell the whole picture.

Now, he tells it mostly from the city of New York but he can touch on some of these other areas.

From what he has told us, what others have told us, we have been able for the first time really to put together who make up the commission.

It is extremely important. We have been able to put together who makes up these families and how they operate. That intelligence is well on its way.

With the passage of these bills then we would be able, in my judgment, to start to prosecute successfully those who are at the hierarchy. We get some of them. We have convicted some of them over the period of the last few years. There is a tremendous amount more to be done.

Until we have that kind of weapon to make that kind of breakthrough, we are not going to be successful in this operation.

Senator MUSKIE. An interesting thing about Mr. Valachi's case is that fear of reprisals has brought him forward. In most instances, it is the fear of reprisal which persuades these people to keep their information to themselves.

Attorney General KENNEDY. As you know, that fear of reprisal does not disappear because somebody happens to be behind bars because they feel as frightened there as they do any place else.

Senator MUSKIE. Senator Mundt touched on what seems to me to be the heart of the problem in this respect and that is this: I know these people fear reprisal from other members of the Cosa Nostra more than they do from prosecution. As a matter of fact, the imminence of protection of the bars might actually be a stimulus to them to talk rather than to the contrary. Is this how it has worked in Valachi's case?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes.

Senator MUSKIE. Would immunity without protection of some kind really serve the purpose that your recommendation is designed to serve?

Attorney General KENNEDY. They are going to have to be convinced that not only will they obtain immunity but that they will also obtain protection.

Senator MUSKIE. How long can you give them protection unless you convict them of a crime that would insure a long sentence?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 25

Attorney General KENNEDY. How long can you give an individual protection who comes in and testifies?

Senator MUSKIE. Yes.

Attorney General KENNEDY. We have taken steps, Senator, to even move people out of the country.

We have provided them positions and work in areas where nobody will really have any contact with them. We have arranged to move their families and have their names changed.

I think that we have procedures now where, if an important individual comes forward and is willing to testify, that we can give him that kind of protection.

We are also going to require funds to deal with that, not a great deal but we are going to require funds, and we are asking for that.

As I say, it is not a great deal of money but just for the transportation of families and establishing a person in another country.

Senator MUSKIE. Your ability to protect him in that way is inhibited by your inability to give him immunity from prosecution?

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct.

Senator MUSKIE. Thank you, Attorney General Kennedy.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions? Senator Curtis.

Senator CURTIS. It is nice to have you back, Mr. Attorney General.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Thank you, Senator.

Senator CURTIS. In this question of immunity, do you propose to give them general immunity? For instance, you might be investigating narcotics but his disclosure might also involve his tax returns. The statute you are suggesting would be a general immunity from anything he might testify to.

Attorney General KENNEDY. You would give him immunity to obtain particular information under this statute. If, in the course of the questioning of it, Senator, in the course of your asking questions, it was brought out that he committed another crime, we would not be able to prosecute him.

However, if you asked him about this particular crime and then it was developed later on that he also violated the tax laws, then he could be prosecuted under that.

What he testified to in response to your questions, he would have immunity for that.

Senator CURTIS. But it would be specific immunity rather than a general immunity?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes, it would be.

Senator CURTIS. So he would still be the judge as to whether or not his answer would tend to incriminate him?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Whatever answer he gave to the question posed to him, he would receive immunity for that, so he could not refuse to answer that. He would have immunity for any answer he gave to the question, any information.

Senator CURTIS. Even though it involved crime that was incidental to what you were investigating?

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct.

Senator CURTIS. How about a violation of State laws? Can Federal officials grant immunity to someone in order that they make a disclosure, and in so doing they disclose a violation of State law, then what would be the situation?

26 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Attorney General KENNEDY. We could not give him immunity for that. We would have to work that out with the State officials if that was important. But the Federal Government has no authority to grant immunity for State offenses.

Senator CURTIS. That is what I am thinking of. Many times these people are guilty of local and State laws as well as interstate.

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is right. They still would not have the right to take the fifth amendment when those questions were asked of them after they had been given immunity. They could not refuse to answer questions.

Senator CURTIS. I do not want to delay here but that raises the question, whether or not a Federal tribunal or even this committee could compel an answer if the only possible incrimination was the violation of a State law.

I do not know offhand whether the courts have passed on that or not. But I will not delay this discussion at this time.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Let me say that same kind of problem exists for any immunity statute at the present time.

Senator CURTIS. I am aware of it. I am not against it.

I merely illustrate the complexity of the problem.

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is right.

Senator CURTIS. Now, the avenue of using internal revenue violations, tax avoidance and failure to pay taxes, that still is an important weapon in reaching the underworld, is it not?

Attorney General KENNEDY. It is, Senator. It is also important in this drive and effort that has been made by the Internal Revenue Department and it has paid considerable dividends so far as collected income from these individuals—fines, penalties, and income.

Senator CURTIS. And it has been the direct tax cases as well as using the process of tax investigation that has led to the convictions of quite a portion of some very serious offenders, is that not correct?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes. Also there are over 25 various investigative bodies of the Federal Government, the information from all of them now is pooled on these major racketeers in the organized crime section. In a number of them the FCC investigated, came up with some important information regarding a major racketeer in his efforts to obtain a license to operate the radio on his boat. He had filled out his form falsely, so he got into difficulty.

Somebody else was in difficulty under the migratory bird statute, so a major racketeer, Joey Aiuppa, was convicted several weeks ago for violation of that statute.

It is all the investigative agencies of the Government working together.

Senator CURTIS. It requires a long tedious process of investigation; is that correct?

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct.

Senator CURTIS. Sometimes running not a few years but many years?

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct.

Senator CURTIS. There is a certain time which has to elapse from these original parcels of information that come in from the first investigation before you know whether you have a case or not.

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is right.

Senator CURTIS. Then some further investigations before it is presented to a grand jury. Is that not correct?

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct, Senator.

Senator CURTIS. Ultimately there is a trial and that is a further delay. Then, of course, there is an appeal. So, the investigating work that you are doing, say in 1963, may have a very important effect upon convictions obtained in 1966, 1967, or even 1970. Is that not correct?

Attorney General KENNEDY. There might be that delay. On the other hand, we might have it at the present time. It varies.

As I said earlier, we are trying to obtain intelligence information now which might be helpful 10 years from now.

Senator CURTIS. So a good job done now in investigating, observing racketeers, coordinating information, is apt to pay off a long time from now; is that correct?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes.

Senator CURTIS. And the same is true, successful accomplishments now sometimes have had their roots back in some fine work that officers have done maybe just recently or maybe some time ago?

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct.

Senator CURTIS. Now, with reference to wiretapping, is it an oversimplification to say that Federal officers can wiretap but they cannot use the evidence in court. Is that about the problem?

Attorney General KENNEDY. No, they cannot wiretap just generally. In security cases, matters involving the national security, with the authority of the Attorney General upon a request from the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, wiretapping can be undertaken but that evidence and information cannot be used publicly or in a court of law.

Senator CURTIS. But a Federal official can receive, informally, information obtained from wiretapping by others?

Attorney General KENNEDY. I think he might very well be violating the law if he does so.

Senator CURTIS. But he cannot use it in court?

Attorney General KENNEDY. I think it is a question of whether, if, in receiving that kind of information, the person disclosing that kind of information might be violating the law.

Senator CURTIS. I will not delay the discussion any longer; but I wonder if this has been given consideration. These problems of immunity and wiretapping are quite complex, and I am inclined to favor them, myself, but certainly not everyone who has resisted them does so with the remotest thought of assisting organized crime or the underworld, but they have certain fears and concerns about working it out. Is that not correct?

Attorney General KENNEDY. I think that is correct.

Senator CURTIS. I mean at the legislative level. Is that not true?

Attorney General KENNEDY. I am sure that is true.

Senator CURTIS. Has the Justice Department given any thought to asking for this power for a limited time, say, 2, 3, 4, or 5 years, and then for the law, by its very terms, to expire? That would force the issue upon the Congress again. It would give the Congress and the public an opportunity to see whether this enforcement weapon can be used without abuses and thus might enhance its chance of passage. Has any thought been given to that?

Attorney General KENNEDY. No, I don't know that any thought has been given to it, Senator. If I thought that through such a provision we could obtain the passage of the wiretapping bill for a period of some time, say 5 years or so, we could obtain the passage of the law through adding such a provision, that would be acceptable to us.

Senator CURTIS. Because there are some very good lawyers, and others who raise serious questions about it, who definitely are the highest type citizens, in no way connected with the criminal element and who have strong reservations about this. But they might be willing to take a trial, as contrasted with enacting something that would forever be a part of our judicial code and require an affirmative act to get it repealed.

It seems to me that that angle should be given consideration.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Senator, also I have found, from our own discussions, in speaking about this in public that there is a great deal of lack of knowledge or information about the bill and what is the present status of the situation as far as wiretapping is concerned.

I think the citizen has less protection now from wiretapping, from violation of his privacy, than if the bill is passed.

You mention wiretapping, and immediately certain individuals say automatically there is something wrong with it and that they are going to be against it. They don't read the bill.

I have seen public statements by heads of organizations which obviously indicated they had not even read the bill which had been suggested.

No. 2, they don't know what the situation is at the present time and what the effect of section 605 is.

I think that an intelligent discussion about the bill would throw a lot of light on it.

Also, if we could get the bill with the provision you suggested, because I recognize that it does create a lot of controversy, if we could get the bill with the addition of the provision you have suggested, we would certainly accept that. I think it is just that important to try to get it by.

Senator CURTIS. It would cause some restraint on the use of it?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes.

Senator CURTIS. I think this is true, that a law-enforcement officer in almost any jurisdiction can stand in the shadows and hear what one citizen says to another and if he can properly identify the voices he can testify as to that any place in court. But if the conversation is on the telephone, he cannot.

It seems rather ironical to me because, after all, both of them might be an invasion of privacy to the same degree.

That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator McIntyre.

Senator McINTYRE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Attorney General, I want to thank you for your statement this morning, and tell you that I, for one, will keep in mind your recommended legislation.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Thank you.

Senator McINTYRE. Is it true that these syndicates gain their principal source of income from the so-called numbers racket?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes; I think, lately, the principal source of income has been gambling, and the numbers racket is included in that.

There have been other forms of gambling, gambling on sporting events, for instance, which has been a considerable source of income and the so-called legitimate gambling has also been a considerable source of income.

Senator McINTYRE. I am sure that you are aware and, surprisingly, that there is this tremendous desire on behalf of the people to gamble.

I think perhaps you are aware that up in New Hampshire this past year we have passed a sweepstakes or general lottery?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes, I am.

Senator McINTYRE. I have often wondered whether or not the legalization of this whole field would at least tend to drive these hoodlums out of it and go along with what seems to be the public's desires.

Attorney General KENNEDY. I would be opposed to it.

I can understand the feeling for it. I happen to be opposed to it.

First, I don't think it drives the hoodlums out. Where we have seen legal gambling operate, it has not been a very happy picture, so far.

Senator McINTYRE. Have you found, then, that legalized gambling actually attracts this element of society into its midst?

Attorney General KENNEDY. It does, Senator.

Senator McINTYRE. I know this was one of the concerns in New Hampshire while this bill was being debated. But I have been tremendously impressed by the fact that there is a general public desire to put down a bet or to buy a number, or to get rich quick, unfortunately.

Another aspect of this which has always interested me is the field of narcotics. I realize that this opens up a large area. That is for public, legalized facilities for treatment of the narcotics addict.

Attorney General KENNEDY. We had a conference, Senator, last year, in which that position was voiced as well as other positions.

We had some reports on what happened in England and what happened in other countries.

A tentative report was made to the President at that time. He set up a commission under Judge Prettyman, who is now going to further study the situation and is in the process of writing a report which they will make to the President and to Congress for recommendations on changing the laws dealing with narcotics and also making some findings on this particular matter.

I think the work which they have done, plus the work which has been done by the Commission and everybody pooling their knowledge and information in this very difficult field, that we will have a good deal more to go on.

I think from the knowledge that we have it is changing many areas from the use of heroin and some of these others to pep pills, to these barbiturates that can be more easily procured. The trade in that kind of narcotic is now much higher and far more serious than it is in the narcotics as we ordinarily understand them.

Senator McINTYRE. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Brewster?

30 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator BREWSTER. Mr. Attorney General, allow me to add my compliments to the others you have already received.

You have testified that we have a single national crime syndicate. Is there an international crime syndicate that this is part and parcel of?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Senator, let me break it down. First, in the field of narcotics, there is no question that those who operate here in the United States operate with their counterparts in other countries. That would have to be an international operation. Sometimes that is done directly. Sometimes it is done through innocent third parties, sometimes even those in the diplomatic area, those involved in representing their country in the diplomatic field are brought into it and become involved themselves. So, that does touch on the international group that operates in narcotics.

On the broader area, I think that the Bureau of Narcotics feels that there is a close tie-in with racket figures in other countries.

I don't think yet that the evidence is conclusive as far as that is concerned. We have some evidence but I think it would be perhaps premature for me to make any overall answer to that.

Senator BREWSTER. Would you have any reason to believe that the activities of the syndicate here are directly controlled by outside forces that are outside our ability to prosecute?

Attorney General KENNEDY. They are not controlled. They have made alliances on occasion with outside forces and even officials in other countries, but they are not directed or controlled. I can say that, they are not directed or controlled by any outside power.

As I say, they have made alliances which have caused a good deal of concern with officials and leading citizens in other countries. But they are not controlled by them.

Senator BREWSTER. Changing the subject, sir, in some very few of our States we do have legalized slot machines or one-arm bandits. Do you have reason to believe that these are owned or controlled by the syndicate?

Attorney General KENNEDY. I think it varies, Senator. In some cases, I don't think there is any question that that is true. In others, I don't have that much information.

This generally has been a considerable source of income for racket figures in the United States.

Senator BREWSTER. Would you care to make any recommendations to the committee on whether or not these one-arm bandits should be legal under our Federal statutes?

Attorney General KENNEDY. We have passed some legislation dealing with the one-arm bandits and also with these pinball machines. I think passage of that law has had a considerable amount of effect.

After the Kefauver investigations, we passed a bill dealing with the one-arm bandits. Then the major source of income for these kinds of operations passed to the pinball machines.

We made extensive investigations here in this committee.

When I became Attorney General, we recommended some legislation dealing with the pinball machines. That has been passed and I think it has had some effect. It has put out of business, for instance, the largest manufacturer of pinball machines. I think it has had some effect.

Of course, as you know, in your State of Maryland it has had some effect.

Senator BREWSTER. Do you believe you have been able to effectively prohibit the interstate shipment of gambling devices under the statute that you now have?

Attorney General KENNEDY. There are some problems under the law but I think there is no question that just passage of the bill, Senator, has had a major effect on the shipment of the machines.

Senator BREWSTER. One last question.

You mentioned oath. Do the members of the syndicate literally take an oath of allegiance to the syndicate?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes, they do, Senator. They literally take an oath and they have the bloodletting.

I think it will be described to you before the committee, but those who are members of this organization, who were brought into the organization, take this oath.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a ceremony and it is an impressive oath, too.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes, it is.

I might say in that connection that part of the requirement formerly was that you had to kill somebody in order to come into the organization. That seems to have been waived lately. But you could not go into the organization unless you had murdered somebody.

Senator BREWSTER. That is unbelievable.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Attorney General, just one or two more questions—

Attorney General KENNEDY. May I just add on there, Senator, there is focus on the fact that gangsters or hoodlums are getting more into legitimate businesses. I have expressed concern about that.

I don't want anybody to misunderstand the fact that they are also doing the same things that they were doing during the days of Al Capone. Because there have been large numbers of very brutal murders which have been committed by those in organized crime just over a period of the last 2 years. Certainly not a week goes by that somewhere in the United States an individual is not killed or murdered in some kind of gangland battle or a witness is not garroted and killed.

I don't know if you remember Mr. Squillante who appeared before this committee—

The CHAIRMAN. I remember him very well.

Attorney General KENNEDY (continuing). Who was involved in the garbage racket.

Our information is that he was taken up into Connecticut and chopped up into little bits and burned. That is why they have never been able to find him.

So this is going on, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not sure that I mentioned Mr. Hoover, the head of the FBI, a while ago. He has cooperated with us always, with this committee always, and he has no objection, as I understand it, to your making Mr. Valachi available to this committee.

Attorney General KENNEDY. No. I have seen stories written, Senator, that the Federal Bureau of Investigation or Mr. Hoover was opposed to these matters coming out by Mr. Valachi. That is completely untrue.

32 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

There isn't any information in connection with Mr. Valachi which has appeared and which will appear before this committee which was not cleared with the Bureau of Narcotics, the Internal Revenue Department, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation, to make sure that nothing was brought out that would hinder any investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought the public should know that. We do get these stories. Sometimes writers draw on their imagination, sometimes they have heard some rumor to that effect.

I think it is well to clear it up so that we will know, the public generally will know, that this committee and your establishment, all of us, are working cooperatively together in this field.

Attorney General KENNEDY. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask you one other question about investigative hearings of this kind.

You said something about if you got all of these tools that 5 years from now such investigative hearings as these would hardly be necessary and you did not think would be necessary.

Until we get tools, until we get adequate staffs to deal with it effectively—I do not mean we will ever completely eliminate it—but to deal with it effectively, combat it successfully, what is your opinion about the duty of Congress to conduct hearings, to make inquiry, to continuously study the problem, to know what is going on, what is taking place and try to meet its responsibility to enact legislation from time to time that may be indicated by the conditions that prevail?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Senator, I think there is no question that if it had not been for the hearings that were held in 1957 through 1960 that involved organized crime that we would not have obtained passage of the legislation in 1961 and 1962. For instance, as a result of just the three bills dealing with gambling, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has more than 2,500 active investigations in this field already. It has made a major difference in the jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to go into matters that they could not go into in the past and has already broadly widened our area of intelligence.

So I think it is essential, since this is a major problem in the country, that it be studied, and that is why we were pleased to cooperate in providing Mr. Valachi and also in giving this other information because a congressional committee is the one that can do it. A congressional committee can develop that and a congressional committee can then develop findings which can lead to needed legislation which is essential. We need more legislation to deal with this problem.

After 2½ years in this position—I felt we needed it before—there is no question if we are going to be successful we need it now. The only way we are going to get it is through the action of this committee making report to Congress and then following up on these recommendations.

(At this point Senator Javits entered the hearing room.)

(At this point, Senator Curtis and Senator Mundt withdrew from the hearing room.)

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to me, as a Member of Congress, that there are often areas as where the Congress ought to take action where legislation is needed. Yet we have to bring things to the attention of Congress to arouse it to meet its responsibilities sometimes. That is not a reflection on Congress.

The Government is big today. We all have many, many complex problems, and the burden of work, the legislative burden grows heavier all the time. So we are prone to go along and say, "Well, we have law enforcement officials, they are on the job," and we do not realize what has developed and what the conditions really are and how urgently they do need attention. I think you will agree with this, that to prepare and conduct hearings like this, your staff and members of the committee, it is an arduous task and often a very unpleasant one. But I do think that there is a necessity for it, at intervals at least, to keep us informed with respect to conditions as they have developed and as they may exist.

I wish to thank you for that.

I have one other question. I am not going to ask it now. I am going to wait until some further testimony is developed.

I see another member came in, Senator Javits. I want to give him an opportunity to ask some questions.

I want to say this before I conclude that during the course of these hearings we invite you to follow them. If you have any other suggestions, any other information you think the committee should have, we will certainly welcome it. We will welcome any recommendations or comments or help you can give us.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Thank you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. I want you to know that.

Senator Javits?

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Attorney General, I apologize for not being able to hear you. I did read your statement.

I will explain I was urgently compelled to vote, very close votes, in the Labor and Public Welfare Committee on the pending bills for various types of Federal aid to education. I will only seek to take your time on one critically important thing to me.

As the Attorney General knows, I have been attorney general of my State and I have dealt with somewhat the same problems the Attorney General describes. In addition, it is well known that my State is rather a clinch opinion in this problem. So many of these racketeers are concentrated there, unhappily for us, and Apalachin, of course, is Apalachin, N.Y., which is the great showcase for this particular group of nefarious people.

Now, I notice the Attorney General's recommendations for legislation are based upon two concepts, the concept of immunity; that is, immunity to witnesses who will talk, and the concept of a wiretapping in the Federal Establishment.

I would like to ask the Attorney General in both those respects, treating with them separately, would the Attorney General, who I think is just as full of feeling on this subject as I and others are, give us some idea of the civil liberties aspects involved, first in the immunity, and second in the wiretapping, and how the Attorney General proposes to equate this civil liberties question, particularly in the wiretapping field, with the necessity, as he sees it, in view of the great feeling by so many Senators, that this is a field in which the Federal statute on balance ought to be permitted to remain as it is because of the invasion of privacy, civil liberties implications of wiretapping?

Attorney General KENNEDY. May I talk about the immunity first?

Senator JAVITS. Whatever you like.

Attorney General KENNEDY. On the question of immunity, I will say that there are well over a dozen bills already to grant immunity.

I mentioned, while you were out, the antitrust laws, the Federal Communications Commission. I think there will probably be more than 20 or so bills that give immunity.

Senator JAVITS. May I correct the Attorney General, if he will allow me, so that his testimony may be accurate? He is not talking about bills, he is talking about laws.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes, excuse me, I mean there are laws on the books, statutes which have been enacted by Congress, which are now in existence.

The fifth amendment deals with testimony that might incriminate an individual. An individual does not want to talk. If he does want to talk, there is a certain penalty which we should be willing to pay if he cooperates with the Government. I think that has been accepted down through the ages.

The immunity provision we are suggesting does not establish any new precedent, does not go into any fields that have not already been plowed, if we are going to deal with this extremely difficult problem, if we are going to grant immunity in the field of communications, in the field of antitrust. I am not aware that anybody has been harmed in the civil liberties area. I think that in this extremely important field also it is not a general immunity but when you are having immunity for the bribing of public officials, for the attempt to fix a jury, for the payoff between labor and management, where it involves kidnapping, where it involves extortion, these are the kinds of crimes we are talking about here, then I think that it would make a major difference and we can show repeatedly in cases that we have had that it would make a major difference.

I am not aware that the immunity bills that are already in the books have affected individual civil liberties. I don't have any concern that they would have that kind of adverse effect.

Studying the overall picture, I don't think as a practical matter they would have an adverse effect.

Senator JAVITS. May I say to the Attorney General that, based upon my own law enforcement experience, I am giving this matter consideration most sympathetically. I do not want the Attorney General to assume I am against it.

Attorney General KENNEDY. You have had a lot of experience. This is an area where concern is voiced and I think it is well we discuss it.

Senator JAVITS. What I have had in mind is that the record should disclose your views on these subjects.

I would like to ask you your views on the immunity granted by the prosecutor proceeding unilaterally as contrasted with an immunity subject to application to the court. What does the Attorney General have in mind?

Attorney General KENNEDY. I have no objection to the latter. We have some laws that allow the prosecutor to do it, some which allow the prosecutor with the further approval of the Attorney General, and I would require at least that, and somewhere we have to go to the court.

I think we could try to work out something that is satisfactory on that.

Senator JAVITS. The Attorney General's mind would not be fixed against even court approval?

Attorney General KENNEDY. No, it would not.

I would like to develop that with some of our people and see what the implications are.

Senator JAVITS. Would the Attorney General give us his position on that in due course for the record?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. May I have permission, Mr. Chairman, to include it at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. If you will submit to us a memorandum or letter, it will be included in the printed record at this point.

Attorney General KENNEDY. I might also give the other immunity statutes on the books at the present time and what they require.

The CHAIRMAN. You may add to it any corroborating statement or data you think would be pertinent.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

(The information asked for was subsequently supplied and is as follows:)

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D.C., October 16, 1963.

HON. JOHN L. McCLELLAN,
Chairman, Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Government Operations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: Regarding Senator Javit's request of September 25, 1963, that the record should disclose my views on immunity statutes, I should like to point out the following.

The concept of granting immunity to a witness to compel testimony is far from being new, that first immunity statute in this country having been passed in 1857 (Rev. Stat. sec. 860, 11 Stat. 155).

At the present time there are 55 Federal immunity statutes in effect and they may be classified as follows:

1. Statutes which permit immunity to be granted and testimony compelled before administrative agencies only:

 - 50 U.S.C. App. 2155(b) (Defense Production Act) (must claim privilege).
- 4. Statutes which permit immunity to be granted and testimony compelled in grand jury proceedings and in trials:

 - D.C. Code 35-802 (life insurance) (automatic immunity).
 - D.C. Code 35-1346 (fire and casualty insurance) (automatic immunity).
- 5. Statute which permits immunity to be granted and testimony compelled in grand jury proceedings, in trials, and before committees of Congress: 18 U.S.C. 33486 (internal security cases) (must claim privilege).

The foregoing statutes may also be classified as to whether or not a witness must affirmatively claim his fifth amendment privilege against self-incrimination before he is entitled to immunity. Some of the statutes provide that the witness obtains immunity from prosecution with respect to any matter, transaction, or thing about which he is compelled to testify even though he does not first claim his constitutional privilege and refuse to answer the question. See United States v. Monia, 317 U.S. 424. These are commonly known as immunity bath statutes. The other statutes provide that the witness must first claim his privilege before he can obtain immunity. Whether the individual statute is of the immunity bath type or one under which the witness must claim the privilege has been indicated above.

It is my view that a witness should be required to claim his constitutional privilege before being given immunity and this in order to avoid the possibility of a witness getting an "immunity bath" solely by reason of his having been called to give testimony. The granting of immunity should in every instance be a considered and conscious act and should not be attained by inadvertence, mistake, or neglect. By requiring the witness to affirmatively claim his privilege not to testify the examining body is afforded the opportunity to make a positive evaluation of the expected testimony in the light of its necessity to the public interest as opposed to whatever disadvantages to the cause of justice may be the result of immunizing a particular witness.

While most immunity statutes do not detail procedures for granting immunity, the Narcotics Control Act of 1956 (18 U.S.C. 1406) provides that whenever the testimony of a witness who has pleaded his privilege against self-incrimination is necessary to the public interest, the U.S. attorney, upon approval of the Attorney General, shall make application to the court that the witness be instructed to testify or produce evidence. The witness is then granted immunity as broad as his privilege against self-incrimination.

Upon receipt of a letter from the Attorney General to the effect that the testimony of a prospective witness is necessary to the public interest and approving an application to the appropriate district court to compel the testimony of the witness, the U.S. attorney must submit an application to the court setting out the following:

1. That the grand jury is inquiring into matters pertaining to the statute;
 2. That the witness was asked the following questions (repeating the questions in detail);
 3. That the witness refused to answer the stated questions;
 4. That the answers to the above questions are necessary to the public interest of the United States;
 5. That the application is made with the approval of the Attorney General (a copy of the letter of approval is attached to the application).
- In support of the application, an affidavit is filed by the U.S. attorney stating:
1. The testimony is necessary in the public interest;
 2. That the affiant was present during the testimony of the witness before the grand jury;
 3. That the information is material and necessary to the investigation being conducted by the grand jury;
 4. That the application is made in good faith.

Under the procedure the court has no discretion to deny the order on the ground that the public interest would not warrant it. The court's duty is only to ascertain whether the statutory requirements are complied with by the grand jury, the U.S. attorney, and the Attorney General. See Ullman v. United States, 350 U.S. 422 (1956). This seems proper since only the prosecutive branch of the Government has all the facts upon which to make the judgment whether a particular witness should be granted immunity or not. In addition, there is the constitutional question as to whether allowing the court discretion to deny the order might not be imposing a nonjudicial function on the court. See Ullman v. United States, supra.

It is also felt that the provision requiring the approval of the Attorney General before a U.S. attorney may make application to the court is a wise one. Allowing the prosecuting attorney to decide by himself whether or not to grant immunity is undesirable because he is not in a position to see the overall picture of organized crime. In an attempt to make a good record for himself in one prosecution he might grant immunity to a witness who is actually guilty of far greater wrongs than the defendant being prosecuted. The requirement of the Attorney General's approval is intended to serve as a check against hasty or improper action and to provide a broad view of the enforcement situation as corrective to the views of local prosecutors.

The argument that getting the Attorney General's approval would be too time consuming is not a valid one when we consider that the U.S. attorneys work closely with the Attorney General (through various sections in the Department of Justice) on all Federal criminal prosecutions. This is particularly true when organized crime is involved, so that it would be a matter of very little time before the approval or disapproval of the Attorney General would be forthcoming. Actually, in nearly all cases the decision to grant immunity would come before trial and probably even before the grand jury proceedings.

It is evident to all of us that combating the forces of organized crime is an undertaking of major proportions. It is also readily apparent that one of the few ways to get incriminating evidence against the principal figures in organized crime is to compel minor participants, who have valuable information, to testify in return for an immunity grant. It is imperative that the Department of Justice should be given this effective weapon in its fight against organized crime. The authority to make immunity grants has been given to nearly all administrative agencies and it seems incongruous to withhold it, in large part, from the prosecutive arm of the Federal Government, where it is most needed.

As was mentioned earlier in my testimony before the committee the problem of obtaining testimony is nowhere more acute than in establishing violations of the Racketeering Travel Act (18 U.S.C. 1952, interstate and foreign travel or transportation in aid of racketeering enterprises) which the Congress enacted in August 1961. With the foregoing in mind, I hereby submit for your consideration a draft bill aimed at remedying a serious defect in our present law. (See attachment 1.)

Your consideration of S. 1246 is also invited. (See attachment 2.) This bill would apply immunity provisions to chapters 9 and 11 of the United States Code, title 18, dealing with bankruptcy, bribery, and graft. This change would aid considerably in our efforts against organized crime activities regarding bankruptcy frauds, mentioned earlier in my statement to the committee, as well as make an important tool available in certain political corruption situations where we are unable to establish an interstate connection as required under the travel statute.

Sincerely,

ROBERT F. KENNEDY,
Attorney General.

A BILL To provide for the compulsion of testimony in racketeering cases

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That section 1952 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(d) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, and documents before any grand jury proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violations of this section, or in any trial involving violations of this section, on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction matter or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that any individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying. No individual shall be compelled to testify or produce evidence after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, unless such action has been approved by the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General designated by him."

A BILL To amend chapter 223 of title 18, United States Code, to permit the compelling of testimony under certain conditions and the granting of immunity in connection therewith

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subsection (c) of section 3486 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the words "in any case or proceeding before any grand jury or court of the United States" the following: "involving violations of chapters 9 and 11 of title 18, United States Code, or".

Senator JAVITS. Now as to the wiretapping, may I give a suggestion, because it is useful perhaps to exchange experience.

We do have such a statute in New York. It is a court order statute. It is not in the sole power of the prosecutor. As attorney general, I had authority to seek such orders. I did. So that I am not trying to claim a virtue which is not mine. But I did impose in my office a whole list of regulations which I imposed but which were complied with, in order to safeguard the process and keep it from the excesses with which we are all familiar: the routine granting orders, perpetuation without review, the utilization of what is obtained for purposes far beyond, way out of the context that they were obtained for, and so on.

The Attorney General is very familiar with the classic portions that are contended for by civil liberties interests, people who have strong views on civil liberties?

Attorney General KENNEDY. First, I think it would be well to look at the legislation which is on the books at the present time, which, in my judgment, is completely inadequate under section 605.

First, to have a successful prosecution of a wiretapping case, you have to not only come up with the tape but you have to show a disclosure of the information. This means that the possibility of obtaining a prosecution of somebody tapping a telephone is very, very difficult. I think that there have been hardly any, certainly over the period of the last 10 or 15 years, because it is so difficult. I can trace a tape down, you can find out perhaps who was responsible for the tape, but then to prove that there was a disclosure of that information is extremely difficult.

I don't think, Senator, that individual privacy is being protected properly at the present time. I think it should be a violation of the law to tap, just putting a tap on a personal telephone.

I think it should be a violation of the law to disclose information.

I don't think you should have both requirements.

I think that, for the protection of the ordinary citizen, the private individual, the bill should be changed to give him greater protection. I don't think he has adequate protection at the present time.

I think the legislation that we have suggested and recommended would give him that kind of protection.

No. 2, I would have more authority at the present time as Attorney General than I would if this legislation were passed that we have recommended. I have authority to put a tap on a telephone, if I reach a conclusion that there is a matter involving national security. Nobody is going to review that. I just make that decision myself.

So I can decide that an individual, what he is doing, what an organization is doing, might have an effect on our national security. So I can have a wiretap. Nobody has any check on me. When I talk about "me," I mean me and all the preceding Attorneys General. You are just relying on our good judgment and good faith. Based on my predecessors, I think that that is warranted.

My point is that we have immense authority at the present time.

The enactment of this legislation certainly would not increase that authority.

I will summarize what we have suggested in this legislation, Senator, in matters dealing with the major crime, kidnaping, murder, extortion, narcotics, and organized gambling, that with the permission, with court permission and court authority, a tap could be imposed.

Now, what we would have to do when we went to the judge is that we would have to meet certain conditions. You provided them in your own office. We provide them in the statute.

I say the Attorney General or any Assistant Attorney General of the Department of Justice especially designated by the Attorney General may authorize application to the Federal judge of competent jurisdiction and such judge, after making findings required by section 8(c), may grant in conformity with section 8 of this act, leave to permit the FBI or any Federal agency having investigative responsibility for the crime set forth on this subject to intercept wire communication when such interception may provide evidence of an offense punishable by death or by imprisonment for more than 1 year dealing with conspiracy to commit espionage or violation of Atomic Energy Act, offense involving murder, kidnaping, or extortion, an offense involving organized crime, dealing with organized gambling, an offense under the law of the United States involving the manufacture, importation, concealment, buying, selling, or otherwise dealing with narcotics, drugs, or marihuana.

Now, in order to get the order from the judge, each applicant under this section shall be made in writing under oath or affirmation and to state the applicant's authority to make such. Each applicant shall include the following information:

A full and complete statement of the facts and circumstances relied upon by the applicant, the nature and location of the communications facility involved, all previous applications known to the individual authorizing the application made to any judge for leave to intercept wire communications, involving the same communications or any of them, or involving any persons named in the application who have committed, are committing, or about to commit an offense, and the action taken by the judge in each such application.

So you are going to have to tell the judge how many applications you have made to put a tap on this particular phone and what has been the result of those applications, the date, the time, and the circumstances.

The judge may require the applicant to furnish additional testimony or documentary evidence in support of the application. Then the grounds for the issuance. Upon such application, the judge may enter an ex parte order granting leave to intercept wire communications at any place within the territorial jurisdiction of the court in which the judge is sitting.

If the judge determines on the basis of the facts submitted by the applicant that there is probable cause to believe: (1) an offense for which such application may be filed under this act is being or has been or is about to be committed; (2) facts concerning that offense may be obtained through such interception; (3) no other means are readily available for obtaining that information. That means, if we could obtain it through ordinary investigation that the judge would not give that right to wiretap; (4) the facilities from which such communications are to be intercepted are being used or about to be used in connection with the commission of such offense or are leased to, listed in the name of, or commonly used by a person who has committed, is committing, or is about to commit such an offense.

So that is a good deal of protection. It is an outline which the judge himself would have to pass on.

Then, (1) each order granting leave to intercept any wire communication shall specify the nature and location of the communications facility to which leave to intercept is granted; (2) each offense as to which information is to be sought; (3) the identity of the agency authorized to intercept the communication; and (4) the period of time during which such interception is authorized.

Then, no order entered under this section may grant leave to intercept any wire communications for any period exceeding 45 days.

Therefore, you are going to have to go back. Extension of the order may be granted for periods of not more than 20 days.

I won't read all this to you, but the person then who is the subject and who might ultimately be indicted has the right to contest each one of those provisions and there would be a court hearing as to whether the applicant has met the requirements of the statute and whether the judge has adequately passed on it.

So all this record would then be available to the defendant.

Now, those are the areas in which we have to go to a court.

As I said, at the present time in that security case, espionage and sabotage, the Attorney General can grant that right, himself, can put a wiretap on.

In this bill we have outlined what is espionage and sabotage and violation of the Atomic Energy Act and where it involves those kinds of offenses, then the Attorney General on his own order, after a request from the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, can put a tap on the telephone. However, that cannot be used in court unless these other provisions are met at that time.

So, in summary, I think there is a good deal of protection. If this legislation is passed, there is a good deal of protection for the individual, and if this legislation is passed, much more protection for the individual will exist than exists at the present time.

But I think so many people think if you are talking about wiretapping that you must be granting this immense authority to go around and tap everyone's telephone without any authority, which is not true in this bill.

Actually, as your New York Times has said, it is the best protection that can be given under the circumstances and is a required measure if we are going to deal with this problem.

If we didn't have the problem of espionage or sabotage, if we didn't have the problem of narcotics and organized crime in the United States, I would be against this entirely. But I think you have to put this against what the problem is that we are dealing with.

We are dealing with a problem that is getting greater and greater in this country. Either we are going to get the tools to deal with it or we are going to slip along as we are.

Senator JAVITS. I will say that I realize that there is this balance of public interest which must be considered. We will have to show also that really the wiretapping is an appreciable factor in crime detection and perhaps the criminals have gotten away from it because they are always finding ways by which to evade the law and perhaps are not using it quite as much as we might think. But that is a factual question.

I would like to conclude my questioning and ask the Attorney General this one question.

Is the Attorney General's mind open on the question of implementing the safeguards with respect to wiretapping as it is on implementing the safeguards with respect to immunity?

Attorney General KENNEDY. Absolutely.

Senator JAVITS. I thank you.

I thank the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator.

If there are no other questions, then, we wish to thank you, Mr. Attorney General, for your patience and for a most excellent presentation.

Attorney General KENNEDY. Thank you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. We do have permission to meet while the Senate is in session this afternoon, I am advised. But, since it is now 1 o'clock, I think we had better go over until 3.

I may announce that our next witness we will hear this afternoon is Commissioner Murphy of the New York police force.

We will resume hearings at 3 o'clock with him as our witness.

The committee stands adjourned until 3 o'clock.

(Members present at time of recess: Senators McClellan, McIntyre, Brewster, and Javits.)

(Whereupon, at 1 p.m., the committee recessed until 3 p.m., the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

(The hearing was resumed at 3:10 p.m., Senator McClellan presiding.)

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will be in order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at the convening of the session were Senators McClellan, Brewster, Curtis, and Javits.)

The CHAIRMAN. The next witness is Police Commissioner Michael J. Murphy of New York.

Mr. Commissioner, will you come around, please?

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, would the Chair indulge me if I take the privilege and pleasure of introducing our police commissioner, whom we think does a mighty fine job. He is a career man so there is no politics in this. I would like to introduce him to the committee and I am very proud that the committee has seen fit to call New York City's police commissioner as one of its very early witnesses in these critically important hearings, and also that the commissioner is accompanied by Deputy Chief Inspector Shanley, one of the really strong and outstanding men of our police department, to help give this testimony today.

Assistant Commissioner Reisman is with him and it is a very strong team, Mr. Chairman, and I commend them highly.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

All right, Mr. Commissioner, will you be sworn, and the other gentlemen, if you are going to testify.

Do you and each of you solemnly swear the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Commissioner MURPHY. I do.

Mr. REISMAN. I do.

TESTIMONY OF MICHAEL J. MURPHY AND LEONARD REISMAN

The CHAIRMAN. Commissioner Murphy, the committee is very glad indeed to have you and to have you testify in these hearings and give us the benefit of your experience, long years of experience, I observed, in law enforcement work. I believe you have a prepared statement; have you not?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir; I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The note here before me says for a period of 25 years you have been actively engaged in law enforcement, that you worked your way up from a patrolman to assistant chief inspector of the New York Police Department, and in 1955 you were appointed executive director of the New York-New Jersey Waterfront Commission, which position you held until 1959, when you returned to the police department as chief of staff and later becoming chief inspector, and was appointed commissioner of police two and a half years ago.

Am I correct?

Commissioner MURPHY. That is right, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you implement that further if you like for the record. I just had this brief note here, and if you will further identify yourself, you may proceed. I believe you have a prepared statement.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. Reisman, do you have a statement, or will you just assist the Commissioner?

Mr. REISMAN. If there are any particular legal problems, which is my particular status, I will.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not have a prepared statement yourself?

Mr. REISMAN. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, you may proceed.

Commissioner MURPHY. Thank you, Senator, and thank you, Senator Javits, for your kind introduction.

Mr. Chairman, and distinguished members of the committee, I am happy to be here with you today to discuss the problem of organized crime, and to pledge the continued cooperation of the New York City Police Department in all efforts aimed at eliminating this menace from our society.

In any large metropolis today, the crime problem is urgent and diversified and a source of constant concern. New York City, with its almost 8 million residents and its additional millions of workers and visitors daily, is the focal point for various enterprises, both legal and illegal. It is an extremely attractive magnet to every boy who wants to "make good," to everyone who wants to be in the "big time," whether the careers they envision are legitimate or unlawful. This, of course, presents New York with enormous law enforcement challenges.

To meet these challenges, the New York City Police Department has been raised to its greatest strength in history—over 25,000 policemen and women. It has a detective force of over 3,000, including experts who specialize in countering the attacks of racketeers. The police force has been increased by more than 5,000 in the last 9 years, through the efforts and interest of Mayor Robert F. Wagner.

Organized crime is not a recent phenomenon. Legislative hearings in the 1880's and 1890's revealed widespread and continuing criminal conspiracies which are the heart of organized crime. In 1904, the focal point of New York City's subculture was the depredations of the "Black Hand," a group which preyed on newly arrived Italian residents to the city. Their activities, which took the form of extortions, bombings, and death threats, led to the creation of a special squad in the police department. The new squad smashed the "Black Hand" in 4 years.

Tragically, its first commanding officer, Italian-born Lt. Joseph Petrosino, was fatally ambushed by assassins while on an investigation in Sicily in 1909. Lieutenant Petrosino was a firm believer in undercover work, the maintenance of dossiers, and the need for legislation in this field. But, spawned by prohibition, organized crime began its comeback more blackhanded and blackhearted than ever.

Throughout the early years, police efforts against organized crime continued unabated and largely alone. The struggle, a difficult one, ebbed and flowed; for our foe was and still is resilient, resourceful, and unregenerate. As illegal sources of finance were shut off he sought and found new rackets. These ran from frauds on the immigrant through prostitution and gambling to bootlegging and rumrunning, whose profits and savagery have never been equaled before or since.

With the end of prohibition came the Luciano prostitution ring; the waterfront invasion; industrial racketeering with bomb-throwing, acid-spraying terrorists; the paper unions; and the sweetheart contract. Strenuous deeds by the city's prosecutors, in cooperation with the police department rackets squad, eliminated prostitution as an arm of organized crime. Thanks to the same combination, the industrial terrorist, as known then, no longer exists. This is not to say that all industrial racketeering has been eliminated; but it is now curtailed and circumspect.

Today the caution, sophistication, and personal conduct of the major racketeers, and the insulation inherent in their system, make it, in every practical sense, extremely difficult and, at times, almost impossible to secure evidence to convict them.

These difficulties, faced by law enforcement officials in obtaining evidence, are due in large measure to the lack of cooperation and absence of a sense of community responsibility on the part of that substantial element of the public that deals directly and indirectly with the underworld. The labor leader who hires a "few of the boys for picket line duty"; the no-questions-asked management who seek "the man who can deliver," that is, the strikebreaker; the businessman who overextends his credit and seeks the shylock; the horse player; and the policy player, all contribute to organized crime.

There are so many people who in one way or another seek the services of these racketeers and then find themselves saddled with unwanted and unscrupulous business partners and overseers. Additional invasion of industries and corporations is achieved through fronts and corporate structures which hide true ownership. The victim himself at first does not consider himself victimized. After a while, when his control over his personal or business life has been assumed by others, he decides he dare not seek the aid of law enforcement to extricate himself.

In other areas, such as organized gambling, law enforcement not only has to battle the criminals but also that substantial element of our society which in effect pounds on the gambler's door seeking admission. Their sympathies are too often with the bookie and the policy operator rather than with police and others who seek to eliminate this profitable underworld enterprise.

The history of organized crime throughout the last 80 years demonstrates that gambling has been a major revenue producer, although at times supplanted by rumrunning, black markets, and narcotics. In that period, dozens of other rackets, once widespread and firmly entrenched, have been practically eliminated. But gambling demonstrates an ability to withstand every onslaught made upon it. I might add, this is in large measure due to its wide community acceptance. These cunning criminal groups have an almost instinctive ability to capitalize on the persistent desires of a part of the public for the prohibited. Their ingenuity in creating and supplying wrongful accommodations stresses the insidious nature of the enemy. Routine enforcement has never been adequate. Strenuous attempts to arouse the public through legislative committees and exposés, and similar extraordinary circumstances, produce only relatively short periods of suppression. Constant enforcement aimed at complete elimination of the bookie and the policy banker is the only answer.

Organized crime today is big business and, like all big business, employs all the aids and techniques of industry. Sophistication is so advanced that public relations policies are laid down by the various underworld groups. Ostentatious display, lavish public entertaining, conspicuous clothes, and the flashy blond, are 20 years out of date. The top echelon frowns on those who create a bad image. The air of respectability, the quiet life in the residential neighborhood, the "portrait" of the respectable, aging family man, are the order of the day.

Ease of transportation and communication has added to the difficulties in combating crime's higher echelons. Our constant attention has led to a large exodus of New York racketeers from New York City proper to places near and far. Yet we do not believe that any criminal interest has been relinquished to a material degree because of this. The remote control racketeer is commonplace. In addition, confederation is nationwide. An occurrence on the west coast may have had its genesis in New York City or vice versa. Jet transportation has made the United States a 4½-hour nation and the criminal select have taken full advantage of this streamlined age.

Organized crime has also built for itself a strong defensive position by other means. Its use of a more venerable asset—the Constitution—has made it almost impregnable. The adoption to illegal purposes of the safeguards intended to shield the rights of the law-abiding citizen are well known. These safeguards, by adroit manipulation, have been expanded and distorted to provide a shield for the professional criminal and, in turn, the criminal organization.

The same names appear year after year as the acknowledged hierarchy. The best efforts of law enforcement on these fronts have been—with some exceptions—discouraging. Experience has shown that the most practical approach is to strike at their sources of income.

In New York City, the police department and the district attorneys through the years have taken vigorous steps toward this objective, and as a result many very profitable ventures have been eradicated or curtailed. Today, it is fair to say that the following once flourishing rackets in our city have been eliminated: Slot machines, pinball machines, Italian lottery, punchboards, football cards, organized prostitution, and many protection rackets. Street and horse-room bookmaking and bigtime floating dice games have become a rarity.

Curtailed, and subject to constant enforcement activity, are policy, telephone bookmaking, other illegal gambling of all types, and racket-controlled trade associations. Jukeboxes and carting, once mob monopolies, are now under legal supervision by special licensing bodies. Gambling and narcotics have been given increased police attention in New York City for the last 10 years. We believe these evils are being contained as much as possible under the laws as they exist. In 1962, police in New York made an arrest for violation of the gambling laws every 17 minutes, a total of 28,888; and an arrest for a narcotics violation every hour—a total of 7,914. In both areas, arrests are achieved in conformance with search and seizure rulings. However, since these new rulings, arrest totals have diminished.

The searing searchlight of the public hearing, and the increased effort by the State through its waterfront commission, State investigation commission, and State police, and by the city through its department of investigation have aided in reducing the power of the underworld. So has the entrance of the additional Federal agencies into the fight against organized crime, in the form of a newly created unit in the Department of Justice, and in its investigative arm, the FBI.

Led into the arena by new legislation and, most important, by the vigorous and knowledgeable leadership of Attorney General Robert Kennedy, these new allies have added to the existing aggressive and experienced forces of the police and district attorneys' offices. The constant anticrime activities of the Federal Narcotics Bureau, the U.S. Customs, and the Internal Revenue Bureau have also given great impetus to the attack.

Another ally in the battle against organized crime is the vital and penetrating reporting of the seven great daily newspapers in New York City.

The spotlight of publicity, which brings their corrupt and evil manipulations into the open, is a constant source of fear and anxiety to the criminal hierarchy. Aroused public opinion is one of the most effective weapons in routing out and destroying these underworld figures.

Much of these efforts have been building up since the Senate crime hearings in the 1950's. Now the responsibility for this segment of crime is no longer confined to the local police department and the various district attorneys in the city.

This combined effort has brought organized crime in New York City, in the last 10 years, to a relatively low ebb. The subsociety that existed in 1950 and exerted such malignant influence has gradually been depopulated. The higher levels of the antisocial community recognize this trend and have described the current condition as "the end of an era." But none of these "easy money"—indeed "dirty money"—boys ever considered retiring. Instead, they have moved into other fields, and continued to seek other revenues. Criminal cartels die hard. Despite the combined might of every level of government, the undersociety is still strong in membership and its vitality, endurance, and reserves are not to be underestimated.

The harsh fact is that, although organized crime has never faced such dedication to its destruction, it can afford to wait.

Law enforcement must press for greater strength and more legal weapons to hold the gains it has achieved and to make further inroads against this evil community. But it must also realize that total victory can only be achieved with the full support of an aware and courageous public.

The supercaution of organized crime, while a tribute to law enforcement, generally helps thwart police efforts. The need for appropriate weapons to combat this ruthless group will become evident in the bloody testimony to be given here by one of their own. The witness' recital, I am certain, cannot help but support the constant demand for a more realistic approach to police problems on the part of State and Federal legislators. We need, on the part of Congress, more understanding of what we are trying to do; more information about the enemy we face. Perhaps the revelations given to this committee will spur that change in attitude.

The first step must be to provide Federal legislation reinstating unequivocally the right of law enforcement agencies to intercept telephonic communications. Without hesitation, I state my opinion that this right is the single most important weapon in the arsenal of law enforcement. My associates, including the most eminent and well respected names in law enforcement, have journeyed here to Washington time after time to plead for this type of legislation to no avail. The records of committee hearings contain in monotonous detail our statements, our frustrations and the deleterious effects which have stemmed from the lack of this essential investigative technique. As only one example, major narcotics indictments against wholesale traffickers have been dismissed solely because of the inability to utilize information obtained through these interceptions.

With Federal, State, and municipal enforcement agents combined in their efforts, there is no lack of skill or purpose, there is no absence of dedication or integrity.

Yet the best efforts and personnel that the United States can offer are turned back time and time again. The occasional battles that are won never quite approach victory against the overlords. They write off an underling or two, shore up the organization here and there, change tactics somewhat, and then go on as merrily and as mercilessly as before.

We know that the Bill of Rights applies to all; that these constitutional safeguards are an unshakable heritage of the people cannot be denied; nor do we suggest that they should be. But we hope for some relief in more practical applications of these basic laws—basic to the safety and protection of all the people.

The existing liaison between municipal police departments is strong, but can be stronger, particularly among its intelligence units.

The flow of information between Federal, State, and municipal agencies should be stronger, smoother, and swifter.

Serious thought should be given to the establishment of a nationwide agency to concentrate on gathering vital criminal intelligence—a natural clearinghouse for crime fighters—but not, however, with any enforcement responsibility.

In New York, we have embarked on two such mutual enterprises which should greatly aid the gathering and flow of information.

In the State, at the recommendation of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, the legislature appropriated $50,000 for a 6-month study of criminal identification and intelligence systems of all law enforcement agencies in our State.

The study will attempt to bring together the resources of all State and local level agencies which are concerned with prosecution, probation, prison, and parole functions in addition to the police and the courts.

In the metropolitan area, through the sponsorship of the Metropolitan Regional Council, police chiefs of 3 States, in which lie the 21 counties that comprise the Greater New York metropolitan area, have formed together for the purpose of coordinating on a regional basis with their goal the solving of common problems of law enforcement and police administration.

Until these needed legal and procedural improvements are made, we will continue to attack the problem with all the skill and ability and dedication we possess. We must continue to lop off the tentacles of organized crime until we finally reach and destroy the heart and mind of this monster.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much, Commissioner. It is an excellent statement.

Before I ask any questions, however, I wish to defer to the distinguished Senator from New York, who is a member of this committee; since this is your citizen, I am willing to grant you the privilege of interrogating him first.

Senator JAVITS. I am certainly very grateful to you, Mr. Chairman. I do notice, Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted, to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that Deputy Chief Inspector Shanley apparently has a statement, too.

The CHAIRMAN. He will testify next, I think.

Senator JAVITS. Commissioner, one thing which perhaps may pervade these hearings interests me, concerning our town. We have about 1 million New Yorkers of Italian extraction, something in that area.

Commissioner MURPHY. I am not sure of the figure. I am sure it is in that area.

Senator JAVITS. It is pretty big.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. I gather we are as big an Italian city in that sense as there is in the world.

Commissioner MURPHY. It is a bigger Italian city than Rome, I think.

Senator JAVITS. I notice also that page 2 of your statement (p. 44 of the hearing) speaks of the heroic life of Lt. Joseph Petrosino, who devoted his life early in this century to ruling out the Black Hand, which was operating in New York. That leads me to this question: Is crime any monopoly of those who are of Italian extraction or of Italian names?

Commissioner MURPHY. Not at all.

Senator JAVITS. And must we not be very careful in the course of everything that we do and say in respect of the particular inquiry we are going to be engaging in now, to see that every one understands that it is not blood that makes a criminal, it is the fact that an individual living in a society becomes a criminal?

Commissioner MURPHY. There is no question about it, Senator. Crimes are committed by individuals and not by any racial group or ethnic group.

Senator JAVITS. Do you feel, too, that our procedures with respect to deportation of those who are not citizens, even though they may have come to this country—and this is the important thing that concerns me—at a very tender age tends to raise this question so that it should be answered?

In other words, if a man has been here, let us say for 50 years or more, and he came to the United States at the age of 1 or 2, if he is not a citizen, under our laws in the event of a conviction for serious crime, he can be, and often is, deported. That kind of gives a picture of a lot of foreigners over here destroying the peace and tranquillity of our Nation. I just wondered if you had any comments on that.

Commissioner MURPHY. As I said before, Senator, crimes are committed by individuals and not by any racial group. Certainly the Italians have no monopoly on the commission of crime in our city. We arrest many, many hundreds of thousands during the years. I have no breakdown of what their origin is or their background, but I am sure that they weren't all Italians. I think that your comments with respect to this are so. As far as the deportation proceedings are concerned, it is again the safeguards which our laws and our Constitution place about people, the rights of appeal, and so on, and these do drag on much longer than we would like to see them. But I am not expert in deportation, and I have no idea how it could be improved.

Senator JAVITS. The fundamental thing I wanted to ascertain from you, because I think it is an important question, is that there is no particular pattern that you find as our chief police officer in our great city, which has so many people of Italian extraction, which would make you feel that crime is in any way a problem associated with those of Italian extraction.

Commissioner MURPHY. No, and I would say to our shame it is not a monopoly of the foreign born by any means. The vast majority of our criminals are born here in this country.

Senator JAVITS. I am very glad to hear that from you, because that is important, as we shall be dealing so much in this particular set of hearings with people of Italian extraction and with Italian names.

Now I notice on page 4 of your statement that you deal with the apparent seduction for the citizen of gambling. Without in any way trying to get you into something which is a hot issue in New York, are we to take it that in your opinion gambling today represents what level in the hierarchy which have been the subject of writers in New York—No. 1, No. 2, or No. 3?

Commissioner MURPHY. I can't put it in an order of priority. It is a very important criminal enterprise. In the last hundred years it has been a major revenue producer in the organized crime structure and it always is and still is a major revenue producer for organized crime. The proceeds of this are channeled into many other illegal fields, including narcotics, and shylocking. To me it is a very, very important and very serious problem, illegal gambling.

Senator JAVITS. I notice that you say, or at least you feel it is your judgment, that the once flourishing rackets have been eliminated in, and I am quoting from page 4 of your statement and p. 45 of your testimony:

slot machines, pinball machines, Italian lottery, punchboards, football cards, organized prostitution and many protection rackets, street and horse-room book-making and bigtime floating dice games have become a rarity.

50 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Commissioner MURPHY. The gambling situation in our city is more of a telephone business now than it ever was, and bookmaking is almost conducted solely on the telephone.

Senator JAVITS. Now, my question is this: Is it in your judgment immeasurably greater than it was when these flourishing rackets, that you now say are pretty well under control, although they are by no means, I am sure, eliminated? Is gambling and bookmaking a much bigger operation today relative to the rest of racketeering activities than it was when these other rackets flourished?

Commissioner MURPHY. That is a very difficult assessment to make. In my opinion today the biggest gambling racket is policy, both in the number of people involved in it and the amount of moneys involved. Now, these other ones that we mentioned such as pinballs and slot machines and so on, those have been actually and virtually eliminated. I haven't seen a pinball or slot machine in 15 or 20 years.

Senator JAVITS. My point really was that these pinball and slot machine operations are on the whole pretty smalltime operations, and bookmaking and so on can be very bigtime. The question I am trying to get at is have we gotten into a stage here where bigtime gambling has replaced many of these other smaller time rackets?

Commissioner MURPHY. Well, all of them existed simultaneously some years ago. What proportion or what percentage of the overall picture each represented, I don't know. But I say that 15 or 20 years ago pinball was a very big thing in our city and in our State, and slot machines. But there hasn't been those in years and years and years.

Senator JAVITS. Now, would you care, Mr. Commissioner, to identify the No. 1 racket today, as far as we are concerned in New York, in the New York area?

Commissioner MURPHY. That is a very difficult thing to do, Senator, to say the No. 1 racket. From what point of view?

Senator JAVITS. From the point of view of law enforcement.

Commissioner MURPHY. That gives us the most problems, you mean, and the source of corruption and the source of illegal revenue to the underworld. Gambling is the most serious problem.

Senator JAVITS. I ask that only because we are a legislative committee, Mr. Commissioner, and naturally we would want to level our fire at what is primary. That was my only point in asking that.

Now, I notice that you feel that so many of these rackets have come under control and you say at page 7 of your statement:

This combined effort has brought organized crime in New York City in the first 10 years to a relatively low ebb.

I quoted those words from page 46 of your testimony.

Now, is that reflected in our felony arrests in New York?

Commissioner MURPHY. No, our felony arrests have gone up. What the percentage of them in the racket field is, I would have to make a detailed study of it. Each year our arrests go up, but so does everything else in the city.

Senator JAVITS. Except that with us, Mr. Commissioner, our population has remained relatively stable and, if anything, it has gone down a shade.

Commissioner MURPHY. That is right.

Senator JAVITS. So that it is not attributable to population increase.

Commissioner MURPHY. No.

Senator JAVITS. Would you say it is a fair deduction, then, to say that the problem of crime, of serious crime, has increased to a greater extent than the problem of rackets?

Commissioner MURPHY. Oh, by far.

Senator JAVITS. You think that?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Could you give us any reason for that, or any basis for these hearings in respect of that point?

Commissioner MURPHY. Any reason for the increase in crime?

Senator JAVITS. What is your analysis, as an official, of that situation as it might bear on our work?

Commissioner MURPHY. Well, generally, it has appeared to me to be a complete loss of respect for authority on the part of many of our younger people. I think this is reflected in the antisocial behavior of juvenile delinquents, our assaults, and muggings. I think there has been a breakdown in family life in many instances. Actually, what we as police face is the failure of many organizations. We get the end product. Where the church has failed and the home has failed and the school has failed, and when all is lost, then the youth comes to our attention. The increase in crime and crimes of violence has far outstripped any increase in our population.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Commissioner, do you see any connection between the operation of the racketeering, organized racketeering underworld, and their exploitation of these more numerous criminals, especially young criminals?

Commissioner MURPHY. Well, certainly in the area that I spoke of before, the policy operation, it requires a great many people to run the operation, from the runners to the collectors, through the bankers, and all the way up.

Senator JAVITS. Well, as to the narcotics business which I was directing myself to particularly is there some connection between the greater incidence of crime, that is, individual crime, and serious crimes and the operation of the rackets in narcotics?

Commissioner MURPHY. Well, we believe that a large percentage of our crime, particularly the petty larceny, and larceny field, in New York City is due to the drug habit, and drug addiction.

Senator JAVITS. So that in that way there is a connection between the narcotics racket and crime?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Would you put narcotics after gambling as the object of racketeering?

Commissioner MURPHY. You mean as a dollar-volume thing?

Senator JAVITS. As a problem.

Commissioner MURPHY. It is a very serious problem, and I think the two of them, and I hesitate to say one is more important than the other. They are equally urgent.

Senator JAVITS. I heard the figure mentioned that over 30 percent of those arraigned for felony in New York County in the criminal court, that is, the criminal court of jurisdiction over felonies, are narcotics addicts. Would you have any opinion on that?

Commissioner MURPHY. I don't know that statistic, but our estimate of the total amount of crime committed in the city is that about one-third is by narcotic addicts.

Senator JAVITS. I notice in your list of those rackets that are curtailed, as you say, curtailed and subject to constant enforcement activity and so on, the omission of reference to labor rackets and just telescoping two questions in one, boilerrooms for the same worthless stocks. Is there any reason for that omission, and is there any different situation in those?

Commissioner MURPHY. I don't think that that exists today on the scale that it once did.

Senator JAVITS. In other words, you think that those two rackets also are not in the prime category of gambling and narcotics?

Commissioner MURPHY. Oh, no.

Senator JAVITS. I just had one other question and I am very grateful to the Chair for his courtesy to me. I notice that you recommend the wiretapping thing, upon which you put great stress, and of course we know the district attorneys of New York and Kings and our other counties are very interested, and I discussed that with the Attorney General this morning, and I won't take your time with that. I notice that you recommend the establishment of a nationwide clearinghouse. You call it an agency to concentrate on gathering vital criminal intelligence, a natural clearinghouse for crime fighters but not with enforcement responsibilities.

Now, isn't that maintained today, essentially, in the Federal Establishment? Isn't there quite a clearinghouse now?

Commissioner MURPHY. I think that they are slow in coming to it, and it has never been a clearinghouse.

Senator JAVITS. What do you have in terms of cooperation with our local police department that gets close to that in the Federal Establishment?

Commissioner MURPHY. Well, there is no central repository of criminal information in this country, or for that matter, in any State, except I believe an approach has been made to it in California. They are starting an operation there. We are trying to set one up in New York State now and we hope to expand it to Connecticut and New Jersey. The liaison is advisedly with each agency. We have men assigned to, say, for instance, Secret Service, Immigration and Naturalization, and Customs, and the FBI, and Narcotics, and Post Office inspectors, and so on, and everybody may have a little piece of information on this particular person.

Now, I notice the Attorney General in his testimony this morning stated that they are combining information from all Federal agencies on some 1,100 known racketeers, which I think is a major step in the right direction. Particularly in view of the smallness of our country today in the ease of transportation, and the nationwide confederation which does exist, and the interchange of personnel from city to city, we have to have this kind of information.

Senator JAVITS. So that you believe, Mr. Commissioner, I gather, that there is an organized hierarchy of racketeering in this country?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Which is countrywide?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Javits. I wanted to concur in the remarks you made about our Italian people. I think our last population census showed about 4½ million of them in this country, and we are dealing with only a very, very small segment of them and they are not all on that side. We have a lot of very competent, able, and courageous law enforcement officials of that extraction, and so it just happens that this is one small segment that may have organized itself into something that offends us and needs looking into.

I think we could spend the rest of the afternoon reciting the names of great Italian statesmen, and doctors, and philosophers, and so on. The purpose here is to find out what the condition is and to ascertain if we need further legislation or if there is anything that the Congress should do or that can be done to remedy this condition.

Following up the last thought that Senator Javits interrogated you about, when I read that part of your statement about some clearinghouse agency, I thought in terms of what I have often thought of. I introduced a bill in the last session of Congress, a cosponsored one with Senator Kefauver, to set up or to establish a National Crime Commission.

Now, I wouldn't undertake to try to spell out the details of it, but having in mind two things, I intended to ask the Attorney General about this this morning and bring it up for discussion, and I overlooked it. I had in mind two things—to set up, as you say, a clearinghouse arrangement so that from all over the country anyone could call there and get a line on any record of any man convicted of crime and also to give that commission investigative authority, something comparable to that of a congressional investigating committee, with authority to hold hearings and require it to make annual or periodic reports to the Congress and to the Department of Justice with respect to conditions they may find to exist and also with respect to any remedial action they think could be taken.

I wouldn't want it in any sense to infringe upon the present authority and functions of the FBI. That wouldn't be the idea, but it would be to somewhat implement those functions. In other words, I don't know but what, if we had a good commission authorized and empowered to do work of that character, it would save a lot of time of some of us in Congress who have that duty and responsibility under the mandate of resolutions that Congress passed from time to time.

I wondered if you would care to make any comment about it. I think that is something else that the Congress needs to consider in connection with finding a remedy and tools and to deal with this problem.

Commissioner MURPHY. Senator, I specifically noted, I believe, that I would favor the establishment of a clearinghouse for criminal information divorced from an agency with any law enforcement responsibility.

I think there are enough law enforcement agencies in this country, and good ones, that we don't need another one.

The CHAIRMAN. What I had in mind, if you misunderstood me, was not to have any enforcement powers whatsoever.

Commissioner MURPHY. I fear that the start of such an agency could become the start of a national police. For that reason I would be very much against any such agency.

The CHAIRMAN. You would oppose a National Crime Commission?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I see a number of States do have such.

Commissioner MURPHY. The crime commissions?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, we have a New York State Commission of Investigation which is, in effect, a crime commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that not work well?

Commissioner MURPHY. I think it works well. It has done some excellent work in our State. The results are being shown in a number of cities.

The CHAIRMAN. It has no enforcement powers, has it?

Commissioner MURPHY. No, sir. It operates very much as you say, like a Senate committee, it hears evidence, holds public hearings, makes investigations, and turns over its information to the appropriate prosecuting official if a crime has been uncovered.

The CHAIRMAN. Are we to understand that you object to this character of hearings?

Commissioner MURPHY. No, sir; not at all. I think they are very useful and I think these are here. I think it is the only way we can get before the public some of our problems.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not the hearing powers that you object to, it is not the purpose of the hearings that you object to at all?

Commissioner MURPHY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It is your apprehension about creating another agency?

Commissioner MURPHY. Another agency?

The CHAIRMAN. How could you set up a clearinghouse, a national clearinghouse, without it being another agency?

Commissioner MURPHY. Because what I envision is strictly a center where all information will be funneled into it by the various Federal agencies, State agencies, municipal agencies, relating to criminal activities, and where you can draw on this bank of information and find out who this man's associates are in Tucson, Ariz., or in Los Angeles, and you can put together a jigsaw that comes to a solution of the crime you may be investigating.

The CHAIRMAN. I agree with that completely.

How can you set that up without its being another agency of government?

Commissioner MURPHY. I did not object to another agency of the Government. I objected to anything that could become a national police agency.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not have that in mind as the commission. The commission would be limited to two functions. I said a while ago I would not undertake to spell out the details.

I am thinking about it as a study project along with hearings like this and, of course, along with Congress from time to time as Congress may consider legislation in this field. It would have only two functions, as I indicated: To hold hearings and make investigations comparable to this and report its findings and recommendations to the Congress and to the Department of Justice, and also to set up a clearinghouse along the lines which you have advocated.

That is all I would favor.

I would not want it to have any police powers whatsoever.

Of course, if you set up just that one aspect of it that you strongly favor, that would be another Federal agency, it would have to be, and I would favor it, I would agree with you completely.

As I understand it, you would not have the investigative powers because you think that might lead it into some enforcement.

Commissioner MURPHY. I think it would lead to it. I think it is superfluous. I think you have some of the greatest police investigating business in the country on all levels. I don't see why we need another one.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not talking about police investigation of that character. I am not talking about going out to investigate a given crime like the FBI.

I am talking about an overall investigation such as we may be conducting here.

Of course, Congress would still have the power and still has it now and from time to time such hearings are held. We held quite a lot of hearings some few years ago in various areas of criminal activity, including racketeering and improper activities in labor-management relations.

The point I am making is whether this burden must continue on the Congress or whether some responsibility in that line can be shifted to a commission set up for that purpose as a number of States have done.

I am not arguing now, I am just simply presenting it.

I wanted to be sure you understood what I had in mind.

Commissioner MURPHY. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know, myself; I just thought of it. In trying to think what the Congress can do and what needs to be done to more effectively combat evil.

I do not know that that is original. You probably have heard of it from other sources.

On page 44 you say:

Today the caution, sophistication, and personal conduct of the major racketeers, and the insulation inherent in their system make it, in every practical sense, extremely difficult and, at times, almost impossible to secure evidence to convict them.

Would you amplify that?

Commissioner MURPHY. You take the narcotics business, for instance, the key figures in this area would not be found within a quarter of a mile of any actual narcotics or anything that could possibly lead to their arrest.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean it is their techniques that they have improved so that makes it difficult to get at the real source?

Commissioner MURPHY. It makes it almost impossible to get at the top people because of the insulation that surrounds them. They have one or two trusted lieutenants who carry out their orders or their messages.

This is one of the great reasons we advocate this wiretapping legislation. They must, from time to time, resort to the use of the telephone.

The CHAIRMAN. I noticed this morning the Attorney General had as one of the conditions in the bill that they would have to establish the fact that there is no other way to obtain the information needed, or the evidence, except by wiretapping, before a court would be authorized under the law to grant the request?

Commissioner MURPHY. We have wiretap legislation in New York State which was put in our constitution by referendum in 1938.

We have had many years of experience with it and it is a very strict law and very stringent requirement.

There have been legislative committees and investigations and hearings and no major abuses, very, very few abuses of this have ever been brought to light in these hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. That is since 1938?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is 25 years ago.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have had a quarter of a century's experience with it.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Has there ever been serious complaints about abuses of it?

Commissioner MURPHY. No, sir. There have been investigations, there have been allegations, and nothing has been brought to light that would discredit the system.

The CHAIRMAN. Did it operate effectively for you when you were able to use it?

Commissioner MURPHY. Senator, a lot of the information that our witnesses will give you today would be impossible to secure without it.

The CHAIRMAN. I beg your pardon?

Commissioner MURPHY. I say a lot of information that will be given to this committee by our witnesses could not have been secured any other way.

The CHAIRMAN. Could not have been secured?

Commissioner MURPHY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, you regard it as one of the vital and indispensable tools necessary to combat organized crime?

Commissioner MURPHY. It is the most important and the most indispensable tool. It is not abused. We have over 4 million telephones in New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. A study of the bill that is pending now, recommended by the Justice Department, is pretty convincing that you just almost have to have a crooked court for it to be abused.

Commissioner MURPHY. We depend on the courts, we let them put us in jail, handle just matrimonial problems, and anything else.

I am sure we can trust our courts with discretion on this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. That is right. In a court where the issue can be contested, where there is a record kept—as pointed out here this morning that record can even be challenged by the defendant—it seems to me that, I would not say he has every right but on the surface it seems to me like the rights of the individual are pretty well protected, and particularly when you take into account that today his phone can be tapped and information gained and no conviction secured even though you approve the tapping of the phone.

Commissioner MURPHY. In New York we have that situation.

The CHAIRMAN. I am talking about the Federal.

There is one other thing over here. You say:

Organized crime has also built for itself a strong defensive position by other means.

This is not what I referred to a moment ago.

You say:

Its use of a more venerable asset, the Constitution, has made it almost impregnable. The adoption to illegal purposes of the safeguards intended to shield the rights of the law-abiding citizen are well known. These safeguards, by adroit manipulation, have been expanded and distorted to provide a shield for the professional criminal and, in turn, the criminal organization.

Now, would you amplify that statement for us, what you mean?

(At this point, Senator Javits withdrew from the hearing room.)

Commissioner MURPHY. I don't know any way it could be changed or whether it should be changed, but it is a fact, the technical aspects of the laws with relation to search and seizure, some of the extremely technical grounds on which search warrants are vacated and evidence suppressed, the availability of the fifth amendment, these are the things I am referring to.

The CHAIRMAN. Some of these things we would not want to change.

Commissioner MURPHY. Of course not. I don't know that it could be changed if we wanted to.

The CHAIRMAN. You are just relating a condition that emphasizes the difficulty of law enforcement?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir; and to further emphasize that we need all the help we can get.

The CHAIRMAN. I go to the next page of your statement. You say:

We believe these evils are being contained as much as possible under the laws as they exist—indicating that you might think there should be a change in some laws or supplemental laws.

Then you say:

In 1962, police in New York made an arrest for violation—and so forth. You close that paragraph by saying:

However, since these new rulings, arrest totals have diminished.

What rulings do you have in mind?

Commissioner MURPHY. I am talking about the extension of the Federal exclusionary rule to all the State courts and the requirements of the search and seizure rulings. These have made it difficult for us and we are operating within it and we are learning to live with it the same as other agencies.

The CHAIRMAN. Those have made the problem more difficult?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir; and talking about the laws as they now exist, there are some problems on the local scene than can be corrected by our own State legislature with reference to technical aspects of the laws relating to the issuance of warrants and the execution of warrants that can be changed and fairly so.

The CHAIRMAN. You are referring primarily to your local situation?

Commissioner MURPHY. Plus the wiretapping situation which I always get back to.

The CHAIRMAN. On page 46, you say, and that is what I was driving at a moment ago:

Aroused public opinion is one of the most effective weapons in routing out and destroying these underworld figures.

At page 47 you say:

But it must also realize that total victory can only be achieved with the full support of an aware and courageous public.

How are we going to get the public more aware of these conditions?

Commissioner MURPHY. I think having hearings such as you are having now, with the coverage it is receiving, is the only way we are going to be able to do it. Certainly after you have had this series of hearings, I can't see but how the public would not become aware of the situation that exists in this country and the need for their cooperation in eliminating it. Every man who puts a two dollar bill on a horse with a bookmaker or on a policy slip is contributing to support of organized crime in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. Many of them today do not realize it, they are not conscious of it.

Commissioner MURPHY. That is true.

There are many others who don't have the community responsibility and wouldn't care.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand many would not care but there are many who do it without a present consciousness of what actually the consequences and implications of it are.

Commissioner MURPHY. That is why these hearings will be of great assistance to us.

The CHAIRMAN. You think hearings of this nature, conducted by the Congress, are calculated to get information and to arouse the public to a greater sense of obligation and duty in this field?

Commissioner MURPHY. I firmly believe that; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

I believe we have discussed the wiretapping. You say you think that is the most essential.

You said at page 47:

As only one example, major narcotics indictments against wholesale traffickers have been dismissed solely because of the inability to utilize information obtained through these interceptions.

That is through wiretapping?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have been compelled to dismiss a number of cases?

Commissioner MURPHY. Against major narcotic traffickers in the New York district.

The CHAIRMAN. Where you felt you had the top man?

Commissioner MURPHY. We had him, no question about it.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no question about it but because of these rulings and this technicality you had to release him?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. If you were given what you here recommend and you got him you would not have to release him, you would be able to convict him?

Until we do something about that, until our laws are adequate to make your work effective, then you frequently go through a lot of—

Commissioner MURPHY. Months and months of investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. Just go to waste.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You get the knowledge but you can do nothing about it.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The criminal continues his operation.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. I believe I have covered all I had in mind.

Senator CURTIS?

Senator CURTIS. Mr. Commissioner, I appreciate your comment here and I want to follow through a little bit on this wiretapping business. These cases that you referred to where you have had top operators in the narcotics racket, cases which had to be dismissed because you could not use the evidence that came through interceptions.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. Those were in State courts?

Commissioner MURPHY. That is right.

Senator CURTIS. The defendants were being charged under State law?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. At one time, you could use that evidence?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir; prior to the decision which made these laws applicable to the State court.

Senator CURTIS. Over how long a period of time, roughly, was wiretapping evidence admissible in New York?

Commissioner MURPHY. It was admissible up around 1957.

Senator CURTIS. And going back almost to the invention of the telephone; is that right?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. Was it permissible during any period where the telephone was used extensively for big, illegal operations?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, indeed. As I said before, it was in our constitution from 1938, and still is, and was used extensively during those years. Very important convictions resulted from the use of interceptions.

Senator CURTIS. There was never any public outrage against its use?

Commissioner MURPHY. No, sir.

Senator CURTIS. It has been tested in your own State court?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes; time and time again.

Senator CURTIS. Do you recall what decision this was?

Can any of your aids supply it?

Commissioner MURPHY. Schwartz v. Texas, my learned counsel tells me.

Senator CURTIS. About 1957?

TESTIMONY OF LEONARD REISMAN

Mr. REISMAN. If I may, Senator.

Senator CURTIS. Yes, I wish you would elaborate on that.

Mr. REISMAN. The matter of whether or not the State laws authorizing wiretapping were constitutionally sound was tested in the U.S. Supreme Court many years ago, Schwartz v. Texas, and other cases of similar nature, and they were found to be constitutionally sound.

In 1957, with the Bonanti case, the Supreme Court of the United States indicated that section 605 of the Federal Communications Act preempted the field and thus the interception and divulgence in a State might subject the police official in the State to Federal prosecution.

As a result, the district attorneys in the city of New York, and the police, although they have continued under court order to intercept, have not divulged that evidence either in grand juries or at the trial level.

Since that case, the highest court in the State of New York has still indicated that we can wiretap, and the evidence is admissible. However, we run the risk of Federal prosecution.

Senator CURTIS. Now, had the U.S. Supreme Court ruled on this provision in the Federal Communications Act prior to the time they made the——

Mr. REISMAN. Yes, they had. There had been all sorts of rulings. However, the trend in the Court finally culminated in 1957 with their decision that it preempted the field.

However, if I may just make a comment, it is moot at this point since the Supreme Court has acted. The legislative history of section 605 seems to indicate that it was never intended to preempt the field against the States' rights to intercept and indeed the Senate hearings in these very rooms, in the mid-1950's and later, were done with the aid of information obtained by court-ordered interceptions which came out of the city of New York.

Senator CURTIS. Do you recall whether or not this opinion was from a divided court?

Mr. REISMAN. I do not recall. I think it was divided; it usually is.

Senator CURTIS. You have reinforced my prejudices. I am a "States' Righter."

You say that this is in the constitution of New York, authorizing wiretapping?

Mr. REISMAN. In 1938, we had a constitutional amendment, by referendum of the people of the State of New York, and the legislative history there, Senator, is interesting. When this was first considered, the immediate reaction of the people of the State was opposed to the adoption of a wiretap amendment. However, after the debates in the halls of the State legislature, where the prominent and well-respected prosecutors testified as to their considered opinion, the whole attitude on the part of the people of the State of New York shifted, resulting in the adoption of the constitutional provision.

Senator CURTIS. It seems inconceivable that a crime, whether or not a series of acts constitute a crime, is determined by the mechanical vehicle used for it. The same conversation at a table which a detective overhears is admissible, is it not?

Mr. REISMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. The fact that that is amplified over a wire makes it inadmissible. I do not know. Now, I do not think I am at odds with what you have to say about the constitutional guarantees being a hindrance to law enforcement, but I want to make it clear concerning the record. If you go back to the original language in the Constitution, it is not your feeling that the right of a trial by jury is a deterrent to law enforcement?

TESTIMONY OF MICHAEL J. MURPHY—Resumed

Commissioner MURPHY. Not at all.

Senator CURTIS. Is it your feeling that the right that no one can be compelled to testify against himself is a deterrent to law enforcement?

Commissioner MURPHY. No, sir.

(At this point, Senator Javits entered the hearing room.)

Senator CURTIS. Or the protection of people's homes against seizure and search without a warrant is not?

You are speaking of the web of interpretation that little by little has been attached to and woven around, rather than in finding fault with the basic principles involved.

Commissioner MURPHY. We are not finding fault with the principles. We are trying to point out the great difficulties that we face in securing evidence and obtaining convictions.

In pointing that out, we are asking for what relief can be granted within the Constitution, and the decisions to help us in our work.

We find no fault with the Bill of Rights, or trial by jury, or the fifth amendment, or search or seizure.

Senator CURTIS. In other words, as you have well stated, if you could present your evidence in court that you are able to obtain, you could live with all of these protections that are given to accused people?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. Do you have any particular comment that you wish to make on juvenile crime, as such, or is it different from any other crime or any other group?

Commissioner MURPHY. I think, as I indicated before, in response to questions from another gentleman of the Senate, that this has become increasingly a problem of ours. It results, in my opinion, from the breakdown, the loss of respect for all authority in schools, homes, churches, police, government, and I think it has to be corrected first in those places.

We are only dealing with the sad results of failures elsewhere.

Senator CURTIS. Now, on another subject, I want to be sure I understand correctly. When you are speaking of the $2 bet on the horse, are you including the bets placed at the racetrack?

Commissioner MURPHY. No, sir; the money that is bet at the racetrack does not go to support organized crime.

Senator CURTIS. I understand. I wanted the record to be clear on that.

Whether people approve or disapprove of betting at the racetrack, the fact remains it is regulated and carried on out in the open and the tax is paid and it is not an undercover operation.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Brewster.

Senator BREWSTER. Mr. Commissioner, this morning the Attorney General testified that there was a national crime syndicate, that this commission or board of directors actually directed criminal activity throughout the United States.

Would your experience bear that out?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir; completely.

Senator BREWSTER. Would you say that certain criminal activity in New York City was today being directed by forces outside of the State of New York over which you have no control and cannot reach?

Commissioner MURPHY. I would say that is quite possible.

Senator BREWSTER. Changing the subject, let me ask you about the degree of cooperation or noncooperation that exists between your law enforcement agencies in New York City and those of the Federal Government. Do you cooperate well together in exchanging information and working as a team?

Commissioner MURPHY. I can only characterize the relationship between all the law enforcement agencies, State, Federal, and local, in New York City as being on the highest plane with a complete exchange of information and trust and confidence.

We are in the unenviable position that we have more business than all of us put together can handle. So there is no competition for the business.

Senator BREWSTER. Would you recommend any legislation in this area that would make cooperation easier or more effective?

Commissioner MURPHY. The recommendation I made in my prepared statement relative to a clearinghouse, I think would make it less arduous to obtain the information which we have to get sometimes by traveling to 10 or 15 different agencies.

Senator BREWSTER. In connection with this, would the existing identification of services in the FBI serve on an expanded basis as a possible base for such a clearinghouse?

Commissioner MURPHY. Of course, largely the identification services are merely compilation of the fingerprint records and arrest records which are helpful in themselves but are not exactly what I had in mind. They are just part of it.

Senator BREWSTER. Thank you, Mr. Commissioner.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Commissioner, I understand that even the Italian Government now is undertaking to make a drive against what it regards as an organized criminal group in Italy. Do you have any information about that?

Commissioner MURPHY. Not any firsthand information. I have been following it with great interest.

I believe the public opinion in Italy was aroused as a result of the killing of five or seven policemen with a boobytrapped car over there.

The Italian Government has been conducting—actually—practically house-to-house searches, as I read it, in Sicily.

The CHAIRMAN. I think there have been published reports to that effect. I thought the record should reflect it here.

I do not know whether their organization there, so far as we know, is somewhat on the same order as the organized syndicate here, but, anyway, you are convinced we do have such an organized group here—

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). Who are dedicated—I use that word “dedicated”—to the pursuit of crime, the enterprise of crime as a livelihood and as a means of carrying on their business?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you been familiar with the name of Cosa Nostra very long as the name of that organization?

Commissioner MURPHY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been a new name?

Commissioner MURPHY. It is a name I am not familiar with.

The CHAIRMAN. Without actually possibly knowing, what have we generally termed this organized group in this country heretofore?

Commissioner MURPHY. Syndicate, the mob, Mafia, the organization.

The CHAIRMAN. Various terms have been used but ultimately they mean the same thing: a group organized, dedicated to the perpetration of crime.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And to the protection of each other in that operation.

Commissioner MURPHY. That is right.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I have just one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, Senator Javits.

Senator JAVITS. Commissioner, one thing interests me. We are going to look into something which is said to be a crime hierarchy and so on, composed of a certain number of “families.”

The inspector’s testimony, I notice, refers to them as “families.”

Would you be able to tell us whether, in your judgment, this is the only one of these syndicate operations, whatever you might call them, groups of families, that exist in this country, in this field, or would you say there are others?

Commissioner MURPHY. There are other organizations. They are smaller, more local in nature.

This is the only thing I know of on this nationwide basis.

Senator JAVITS. On this scale?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir?

Senator JAVITS. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Counsel wishes to inquire.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Commissioner, I notice in your testimony a little while ago you stated that about 30 percent or one-third of the arrests are those who have been using narcotics in one way or another.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is this due to the fact that the narcotic addict has to find money to satisfy his craving for the drug?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes; and I think it is also due to the fact that the great work done by the Federal Bureau of Narcotics and local narcotics squads has made the supply very scarce and very expensive.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And by reason of the fact it is expensive they have to find money and so they go into things like prostitution, thievery, burglary, robbery?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And the fact that there is a narcotics problem enormously increases the problem of law enforcement?

Commissioner MURPHY. Of course.

Mr. ADLERMAN. On the addict level, this is not an organized group, these are small people, are they not, as a general rule, I mean in the hierarchy of criminal activity?

Commissioner MURPHY. The addict is the poor unfortunate who has this habit.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The root of the thing is the supply of the narcotic?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The control of the supply of narcotics, the source of narcotics, is that in the hands of the mob, the organization, the Cosa Nostra?

Commissioner MURPHY. It is my belief and information that that organization has warned its members to stay out of the narcotics business. It is increasingly dangerous.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Some members violate those regulations?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do those members, the ones who have the source and control, the source of the narcotics, bring it in?

Commissioner MURPHY. I don't think there is a monopoly.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do they have a large part?

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So, if you could successfully eliminate the mob, the mob control, or this hierarchy of criminal activity on a higher level, you would go a long way in reducing the source of supply?

Commissioner MURPHY. You would put a large dent in it. Actually, not the source of supply but the distribution. The source of supply is from abroad.

Mr. ADLERMAN. It would make it more difficult to get it here.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. It would dry up the sources in a way.

Commissioner MURPHY. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Coming to the wiretapping proposition, I was wondering perhaps if Commissioner Reisman could tell us—I think there has been a general misconception as to the amount of wiretapping that goes on in a city of the size of New York with 8 million people and 4 million telephones—how many orders have been obtained to wiretap by court order in the city of New York by the police department?

Mr. REISMAN. Mr. Counsel, our records in our department show that we have obtained on an average 300 wiretap orders a year as against our telephone population of some 4 million. Of course, you must add to that figure for a complete total the wiretap orders which are obtained by the five district attorneys. However, it is my impression from the previous testimony of District Attorneys Silver of Kings County and Frank Hogan of New York County, that together the five district attorneys probably do not obtain the same amount or double the amount that we do.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, a reasonable amount would be less than 500?

Mr. REISMAN. I would think so.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And that is for the whole city of New York: 8 million people, 4 million telephones?

Mr. REISMAN. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, before you get a court order, you want to satisfy yourselves that it is going to be productive of results in a prosecution; is that correct?

Mr. REISMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This is ordinarily a rather expensive thing and it entails a lot of manpower, a 24-hour, round-the-clock watch, it entails subsequent investigations, surveillance, and so forth, it becomes a costly affair.

Mr. REISMAN. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This is not promiscuously engaged in; is that correct?

Mr. REISMAN. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The average person is never subjected to wire-tapping, only the criminal is?

Mr. REISMAN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Commissioner, do you have any further statements you wish to make?

Commissioner MURPHY. No, thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to express very deep gratitude to you and to your assistant for your presence here today, especially for the excellent testimony you have given.

Commissioner MURPHY. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. I hope the Congress will respond by giving you some help.

Commissioner MURPHY. Thank you; I hope so.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you kindly.

We have one other witness for today, Mr. John F. Shanley, deputy chief inspector, New York City Police Department.

Will you be sworn?

You do solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give before the Senate subcommittee will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. SHANLEY. I do.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN J. SHANLEY

The CHAIRMAN. Be seated, Mr. Shanley.

You have been in law enforcement work 23 years. You are head of the Central Investigation Bureau of the New York City Police Department, is that correct?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

66 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. According to the information I have, this is the intelligence unit. Is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. You also represent the police department, do you, in dealing with the various district attorneys in New York City and their work?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. As they perform their duties, you associate yourself with them and assist them?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You appeared before this committee I believe in the hearings we had in 1961, did you?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. This is your first appearance?

Mr. SHANLEY. This is my first appearance. Members of the central investigation bureau have appeared before.

The CHAIRMAN. Other members have appeared but you have not personally?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I was thinking we had had some help from your group before.

Thank you very much.

You have a prepared statement?

Mr. SHANLEY. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you may proceed with it.

Mr. SHANLEY. Thank you.

The organized crime rulers, as exemplified by these five families which will be under scrutiny during these hearings, have had relatively long reigns. This stability of command, frustrating to the police, must be a puzzle to the public. These overlords have remained in their position of power despite ruthless and ambitious underlings on one side and the full might of Federal, State, and municipal enforcement on the other. This can be accounted for, to a degree, by certain tactics—methods of operation—employed by them.

Law enforcement efforts on the fringe of these kingdoms have had some success. However, police progression toward the core of this subculture is hard going, and the nearer to the heart the tougher the coverings.

This condition, unfortunate for law enforcement, is achieved through various measures. All have evolved from experience, all are employed in one form or another by each of the five families and all have proven successful. Some of these shields are in the form of tasks performed by subordinates. Others are variations on traditions, and still others, adaptations of practices used either in business or affairs of the State.

Among these protective measures are the following:

INSULATION

Every lawbreaker tries to avoid arrest. These efforts usually become more concrete and complicated in direct proportion to the prestige and cunning of the perpetrator. The top ranks of these families seldom become involved in crimes in such a manner that would subject them to embarrassment, much less arrest.

Their personal conduct is free of obvious misdeeds. Social associations are generally very restricted, and contact with actual lawbreakers is nonexistent. Of necessity, as the levels descend, the members get closer to operations and become increasingly vulnerable to police activity. But this descent is deep in the pyramid and a long way from the top.

Specific plans and devices are used, but, basically, the strongest insulation is supplied by a philosophy which permeates the group; i.e., that the boss must be protected. Inculcation of this thinking on the membership has been highly successful. Whether, in younger men, this stems from the hope that such sacrifices in the beginning will eventually afford them similar comfort, or, in the case of the older men, never advanced, this thinking has become a part of a way of life, or whether it is a combination of fear and the traditional distaste for informing, cannot be firmly stated. But it is this philosophy that gives the strongest protection to the hierarchy of these infamous families. And it is a philosophy which has produced 30 years of silence, this witness being the only one who dared to abandon the credo.

RESPECT

Another inviolate rule is the requirement that there must be a strong sense of respect for leaders and traditions. This is beyond merely protecting the boss. It exceeds deference due any leader, and is not confined to ordinary bowers and scrapers present in all organizations. This is respect in the true sense of the word.

With relations to individuals, it seems to be achieved partly by position and partly by seniority, with stress on the former, although all things being reasonably equal, the older member has more prestige. Among some older men, it involves hat-tipping and bowing reminiscent of royalty, but usually it is less courtly, although by no means subtle. It is unmistakable.

A member's position and the value of his counsel appear, in many cases, to be enhanced by age per se. Perhaps old age, under the circumstances, is a superior achievement in itself.

In public places, the reflex response triggered by the need to comply with this code has been beneficial to law enforcement. The terms of address, the tone of voice, the held door, the proffered seat, and demeanor generally frequently reveal status in different groups. Based on these observations it is easy to believe that neglect of such niceties might bring severe discipline to the offender.

A number of sleepers—high-ranking members previously considered possessors of routine membership—have been uncovered from a deep probe started by displays of this nature.

THE BUFFER

As has been said, the top members of this evil group, as a rule, do not mix or even do business with their immediate subordinates. They deal through a buffer, a member, usually around the same age, who is carefully selected and highly trusted. When traveling, they generally have this person with them.

This underling acts as an aid, but he is no menial. He drives the boss when necessary, but he is not his chauffeur; he handles messages from the field, but he is not a messenger; he discusses problems with the boss, but he is not a counselor; he would fight for his boss, but he is not a bodyguard; he travels with the boss socially, but he is not his equal. He performs a variety of functions—none overtly criminal—although he no doubt furthers many a conspiracy.

The buffer's main duty is to stay between the boss and trouble. In this, his value is great. The buffer, although he may not be a high-ranking member, has the confidence of the organization and is aware of all the operations. Only he could testify against the top man, but even here precautions are taken to assure that his testimony would be uncorroborated, and, therefore, useless in our State.

THE APPOINTMENT

In these families, all important matters go through channels. At the last stage, it comes to one man—the buffer—and he takes it to the overlord. This procedure is strictly followed, but there have been times when a low-level superior was permitted to speak to the boss on business. This is unusual, and requires following a set method.

The member concerned must obtain permission from his immediate boss. This request then goes through channels to the buffer, who presents it to the head. All this communication is done in person. Such a request is not honored except under unusual and urgent circumstances, or when it comes from an old, old friend.

When a request is granted, the buffer picks up both the petitioner and his immediate superior, and brings them to a place previously selected as convenient and acceptable to the overlord.

The meeting is formal. The matter is discussed, the petition is made, and, in due time, a decision is rendered, and then is handed down to the petitioner. This concludes the matter. These "appointments" are very infrequent, occur within families only, and differ from a sitdown.

SITDOWNS

A sitdown develops when there is a threat to gangland peace because of a dispute between members of this subsociety. At one time, force—frequent and ruthless—was the ultimate pacifier. However, according to the chiefs of these notorious clans, when open violence is used "the only winners are the cops."

If a question comes up, the syndicate lesser leaders arrange to sit down and thrash it out. In most cases the issue can be resolved at this level. If necessary, it can go higher. On occasion, when these disputes reach a higher level, the disputants find out they are members of the same family.

Sometimes the quarrel must finally be referred to the highest authority, the heads of the families. Arrangements are made to meet, and the heads sit down and talk the matter out. Their decision is final.

The sitdown, really a peace conference, has eliminated clashes between established houses.

The sitdown does not apply to settling differences with people outside of these families, although conciliatory approaches are used in such instances, at least at the start.

DISCIPLINE

All disciplining of members of these tribes, no matter how barbaric, including murder, is done within the same house or family, by their own members. Thus, if a family member has violated the rules or refuses to abide by a superior's decision he must be punished. This punishment varies from a warning, through cutting him out of some lucrative endeavor, to the ultimate—murder.

Keeping the killing within the family eliminates the development of vendettas, makes it easy to perform the task, and paves the way for the disappearance.

It has been the experience in New York City that murders of mob members have been performed by fellow members of the same family. Almost without exception, any other recent racket-type killings in New York City have been committed by mavericks, spontaneously, or of people outside the family.

THE DISAPPEARANCE

Sometimes a sitdown decides murder is the only solution to the problem discussed. As mentioned, the homicide is assigned to the mob to which the victim belongs. Within a short time, the man disappears. In five instances in the last 3 years, a member and usually his car have vanished without a trace. These obliterations were carried out by Judases, "friends"—possibly actual blood relatives—completely trusted by the victim. The victim showed no fear, no change from routine, prior to his disappearance.

This technique has great advantages. There is no apparent violence. No sprawled body in a bullet-punctured car. No gruesome pictures. No inflamed press and public. Usually, sometimes after the victim was last seen, he is reported as a missing person in the jurisdiction in which he resides. Frequently, this is a small town adjacent to the city but, regardless, there is no body and no complaint of homicide. The case is carried as a missing person, a disappearance.

PERMISSION

"You gotta get permission." The first time a newcomer to a family is told this he is very surprised. He finds he must obtain permission to enter any illegal enterprise, commit a stickup or burglary, dispose of stolen property, or even borrow from a shylock.

The explanation given is that only undertakings in keeping with family policy will be allowed. As long as permission is obtained, the family will help with lawyers, bail bondsmen, et cetera, if anything goes wrong. This is a practical consideration, and then from a viewpoint of public relations, no crimes which may cause a great public outcry are desired.

With regard to obtaining permission to deal with a shylock, the explanation is that, when permission is granted, the family is vouching for the borrower. If the borrower fails to pay, the family will be required to make good; therefore, must pass on such loans in advance.

THE MONEY MOVER

The main objective of these families is the efficient amassing of money. Huge amounts of cash from illegal sources pose two problems. Its true ownership must be hidden, and it must be put to work. The greedy overlords consider the need to put the money to work quickly equal in importance to the need to hide its ownership. The money mover provides this service.

Money movers, reasonably skilled in finances, are family members and, although not at policy level in systematized crime, are important and trustworthy. The money mover handles cash for a clique rather than an individual. He may, for instance, handle the Profaci or the Genovese "house." There may be more than one money mover for each family.

The cash is given him through a conduit, and the profits return to the thugs the same way. The money mover knows broadly whose money it is. But, it is probably not possible to go beyond him in tracing the specific origin, as he does not know.

The money mover is apt at insulating himself. He has fury at his service. He has excellent and widespread connections. And he has as a partner an astute, unethical businessman. He and his partner merge two basic abilities: brains and brawn. The partner invests through corporations, other partners, and as an individual. Importing, real estate, trust funds, books, stocks and bonds, are typical undertakings. Both the money mover and his partner enjoy some return, but the bulk of the profits go to the mob. The object is to invest in legitimate situations, but anywhere a quick buck can be made without too much risk is not overlooked.

PUBLIC RELATIONS

More than ever, public opinion is a concern of the criminal administrators. All strong action must be cleared with higher authorities. So compelling is this concern that failure to control bad situations is a serious reflection on the boss. A recent assault on a Federal agent in Brooklyn caused a considerable decrease in the prestige of the head of the faction concerned. Many felt that the absence of discipline within his unit could cause his disappearance, although he personally was not involved.

The foregoing methods and traditions are fundamental to the administration of organized crime, and they have kept the leaders in their top spots. Right now, these hearings have aroused great apprehension among these criminals—particularly in the notorious five families. No doubt all aspects of the hearing and its possible repercussions have been examined and analyzed. Organized crime will take steps wherever possible to ride out the storm while waiting for a better climate. If new or additional tactics are necessary, organized crime will seek them and, having found them, will adopt them.

To prevent any additional defensive measures, law enforcement must think in terms of longtime exertions, sustained harassment of the upper echelons, must press for arrest and conviction of the middle and lower segments of this felonious community, and must make membership in any of these families so miserable that recruitment of new soldiers will be impossible.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

I will ask just two or three questions and then, Senator Javits, I will defer to you.

I was particularly interested in your saying that right now these hearings have aroused great apprehension among these criminals, particularly in the notorious five families.

Can you amplify that any?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, this information is based on observations and certain wiretap information which has been obtained in the course of investigations into these families.

The CHAIRMAN. You know they are concerned?

Mr. SHANLEY. Definitely.

The CHAIRMAN. Which makes them a little uncomfortable.

Mr. SHANLEY. Very uncomfortable. They have considered various plans, the possibility of hiring public relations people.

The CHAIRMAN. Hiring public relations people?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. I hope that public relations actually means the common acceptance of the term.

One other question. Much of this information you had or already knew about the Valachi story, did you not?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You in your intelligence work accumulated a lot of this information over the years?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have not heard the story yet; Valachi's story will probably confirm a great deal of what you have said and probably add to it.

Mr. SHANLEY. What we have heard so far parallels pretty much what we have and will supply in detail.

The CHAIRMAN. You will testify further, I understand.

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. For that reason I am not going to undertake any further interrogation of you at this time.

Senator Javits, I defer to you.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

For the same reason that the chairman will not examine you very extensively, Inspector, I will not either.

I have just two questions to ask you.

One, do you agree with the Commissioner that this is the principal hierarchy in racket crime in this country?

Mr. SHANLEY. I do.

Senator JAVITS. And that others are more satellite, more subordinate?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true.

Senator JAVITS. Secondly, I gather that you approve of our hearings and feel that they will serve a useful purpose?

Mr. SHANLEY. Indeed. I think that the hearings have upset these people considerably more than anybody realizes.

In addition to that, in New York City, at least, it is our opinion that the whole ebb away from their full strength started with the Kefauver hearings. They have been edging down somewhat since. Not that they are weakened to any degree where we could feel confident that they would not revive, but, nonetheless, this is a starting point, I believe.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you, Inspector.

Of course, our job is legislation and the operation of Government departments, but it is also good to know that we have some other evidence of the effects of what the chairman has initiated here.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Brewster.

Senator BREWSTER. Inspector, I have just one question.

To some degree, would you say that the assistance of the syndicate causes continued juvenile delinquency in New York City?

Mr. SHANLEY. In the sense that these people will supply services which are generally prohibited, which will manufacture a general sense of disrespect and which will further anything that will make for an evil gain, obviously this would affect the youth of our city.

Senator BREWSTER. Thank you, Inspector.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any questions, Senator Curtis?

Senator CURTIS. No questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Counsel?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley, I notice you refer to the credo of this organization. I do not think you identify it as such but you mentioned it in the course of discussion of insulation. You discussed the credo of not informing.

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How strong is this credo in this organization?

Mr. SHANLEY. As strong as life itself in this organization.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is the penalty if a man talks?

Mr. SHANLEY. Death.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You are convinced of that?

Mr. SHANLEY. I am convinced of that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you have any instances where such things have happened?

Mr. SHANLEY. Numerous instances, yes. There have been exceptions where it has not happened, which is hard to understand, but almost without exception this is what happens.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This is probably one of the greatest strengths of this organization, is that correct?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

Senator JAVITS. Will the counsel yield for one question on that point?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. I notice what you said about movers of money, speaking of large sums. Is there any order of magnitude, for example; what are we dealing with here?

Mr. SHANLEY. I would say one particular man that we have a very close observation of right now, and I would not want to disclose his name, I would estimate he has a million dollars out in shylocking at one point a week which gives him $10,000 a week from this alone. These are not a number of loans, these are generally confined to $50,000 or $100,000, paper, along those lines.

Senator JAVITS. Would you have any estimate of the annual volume of this hierarchy that we are talking about?

Mr. SHANLEY. That would be pretty difficult, Senator.

Senator JAVITS. I just thought to get an order of magnitude would be interesting.

Mr. SHANLEY. I would say possibly in the gambling field and policy alone, close to the hierarchy here, would run a quarter of a million dollars a day.

Senator JAVITS. I cannot do quick mathematics, but have you thought through what that means a year?

Mr. SHANLEY. I guess it would be on a 6-day week, it would run to $75 million or thereabouts.

Senator CURTIS. Is that the whole country?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is New York City.

Senator CURTIS. Where do they get all that money?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley, if I may interrupt, you have had examples of large sums of money being found or you know of large sums of money being found when a raid has been made in some of these policy banks and so forth. Can you describe any particular amount that has been found?

Mr. SHANLEY. Normally they avoid this in New York.

The money and the policy slips are separated.

However, in recent cases, the day before yesterday, they were observing a man, a man who was subsequently arrested by the observers because he fled through red lights, and the offense was driving recklessly. When they came up to him he had $3,000 on the floor of the car.

A man who was arrested previous—2 or 3 weeks prior to that, threw something on the ground, they picked it up. It was $10,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you remember the Moriarity case, it was out of your district. Will you tell us about this case?

Mr. SHANLEY. Moriarity was apparently an exception to this rule. He did not appear to belong to anything. As a consequence, he had no way to move his money. He kept storing it up and storing it up. Eventually, he wound up with $2 million which he left in a garage. As a consequence, he was convicted, the money has been seized. This indicates the lack of services, what can happen when you lack services that these syndicates have.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was running a policy bank?

Mr. SHANLEY. He was running a policy bank.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was not in the organization of Cosa Nostra?

Mr. SHANLEY. I don't believe he was in the organization. He would not have that much money lying loose. He would have it working for him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He had it stored away in cardboard boxes and suitcases, and so forth?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That indicates the size of some of these bank takings.

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you have any illustration of the example of this matter of respect?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes. In three instances, two or three instances, which we feel very significant; in one instance there was a roundup of a group of these people such as in Apalachin. They were all brought in a station house. There was one man we knew but we never considered him to be of any particular high status.

There were very few chairs in the station house. These men were locked up. There were maybe 25 men.

All the other men we knew were pretty high-ranking. Nonetheless, every time this man had occasion to walk over to the detective to be interrogated, everybody stood up and let him pass them. When he came back, if there was no chair there, everybody jumped up and let him sit down.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This was a man comparatively unknown?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes.

Subsequently, as a result of this, we made a deep probe into this. We found out he was a person of some substance.

I believe he will appear in your charts. I believe there is an instance of Tony Bender, who is now among those who have disappeared, he was in a station house also, having been arrested, and he was arrested with two or three other people, one of whom was supposed to be a very tough man.

The arrest was of a minor nature and this fellow was showing his disregard for the arrest activity. He was clowning around in the station house. While he was doing this, the detective told him to keep quiet. Still he clowning.

Bender said one sentence to him, "Why don't you sit down, Frank." Frank sat down and never opened his mouth for the rest of the night.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This would indicate to you the absolute authority of Tony Bender? Tony Bender was considered an underboss?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This indicates to you the profound respect, the profound authority that a man would have even over a man who is considered to be extremely tough?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you give us an illustration of some of these other things like the appointments or disappearances or permission or money moving, and so forth?

Mr. SHANLEY. In relation to the insulation, I think that a study of the arrest records of the people who will appear on this chart is one of the greatest indications of how effective insulation is.

Most of these people start off with a series of arrests when they are young men. They are arrested for various types of crimes.

Then as they go on and become a little bit older, these arrests cease.

A man who does not get up in the ranks, he continues to accumulate arrests, but these other people go sometimes 25 years without an arrest.

This is because they have been removed from the operational level. Somebody else is taking the risk. They are out of it.

Then, in relation to other efforts at insulation, most of these people that you will speak of, that are top level, no longer live in New York City.

We have no idea that they are not controlling a lot of things in New York City but they don't live there.

One fellow lives way out of the State, another fellow lives in New Jersey, two of them have residences of sorts in New York but their most substantial residences are a considerable distance from New York.

Now they are so insulated we find it hard to even observe these people.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, they have several layers of people between the perpetrators of the crime, who, in turn get orders from others, and so forth, up to the buffer?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So it is almost impossible to connect the perpetration of the crime with a man who has originally given the order or who is getting the principal profit?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, as to the money mover, could you give us any illustrations of the money mover? I know you say that you did not want to reveal the name of that particular person.

Mr. SHANLEY. We have an instance in that particular one. The money mover apparently had accumulated a certain amount of money in a very successful operation. What it was we didn't know. But he had to transport this money. A man was going at that time to Cuba. He took $200,000 and sewed it in the lining of this man's coat. The man went to Cuba. He delivered it to somebody in Cuba that we feel was very high in the syndicate. Who it was, we don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that recent?

Mr. SHANLEY. That was about 5 years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. That is just to illustrate how they operate?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You have put this material together as a result of surveillances conducted by the police department, information received, bits and pieces from informants?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Arrest records, partially from intelligence reports of other police departments?

Mr. SHANLEY. Partly.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And partly from wiretaps?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Without revealing the wiretaps, you have received recent information which indicates that the Valachi testimony is a matter of deep concern and it leads to corroboration of the fact because they know or they have indicated that he knows about the way and the workings and the inner secrets of this organization?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They are concerned as to what he is going to testify about?

Mr. SHANLEY. Definitely.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Are there any further questions?

Since we are going to have the benefit of your presence in further testimony, in view of the hour, I am going to defer any further questions of you at present, but there will be some amplification, further amplification needed to lay the proper background for some future testimony.

You referred to some charts. I think we will have those later and you will help us make the presentation with respect to them, will you not?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

I wish to thank you for your appearance today and look forward to further testimony from you.

Mr. SHANLEY. Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will make an announcement.

The committee will recess to resume public hearings Friday morning at 10 o'clock.

I am going to try to start early because of the legislative situation, hoping that we can make a lot of progress by then. I cannot announce what that legislative situation is. I am just a little apprehensive.

Anyway, we are going to make as much progress as we can.

Friday morning when we resume the hearings I hope to have Valachi as a witness. He may not be the first witness that morning but we do expect and hope to have him at least that day. Possibly he will be the first witness. I am not sure.

The committee will stand in recess until 10 o'clock, Friday morning.

(Members present at time of recess: Senators McClellan, Brewster, and Curtis.)

(Whereupon, at 5 p.m., the subcommittee recessed, to reconvene at 10 a.m., Friday, September 27, 1963.)

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1963

U.S. SENATE,
OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
Washington, D.C.

The subcommittee met at 10:15 a.m., in the caucus room, Old Senate Office Building, pursuant to Senate Resolution 17, agreed to March 14, 1963, Senator John L. McClellan (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat, Arkansas; Senator Edmund S. Muskie, Democrat, Maine; Senator Thomas J. McIntyre, Democrat, New Hampshire; Senator Daniel B. Brewster, Democrat, Maryland; Senator Karl E. Mundt, Republican, South Dakota; Senator Carl T. Curtis, Republican, Nebraska; Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, New York.

Present: Jerome S. Adlerman, general counsel; Donald F. O'Donnell, chief counsel; Philip W. Morgan, chief counsel to the minority; LaVern J. Duffy, assistant counsel; Paul E. Kamerick, assistant counsel; Harold Ranstad, assistant counsel; Arthur G. Kaplan, assistant counsel; Alphonse Calabrese, investigator; Eugene J. Marshall, Bureau of Narcotics; Martin Pera, Bureau of Narcotics, and Ruth Y. Watt, chief clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will be in order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at the convening of the session were Senators McClellan, Muskie, McIntyre, Brewster, Mundt, and Javits.)

The CHAIRMAN. We have as our first witness today, Joseph Valachi, who is presently in the custody of Federal officials, serving a sentence for convictions in court. This witness has previously testified before the committee in executive session, and not in full, and only in part as to the information that he will be able to give us here.

Most of the testimony that he gave in executive session I am confident will be repeated here at this time.

I further wish to state that this witness has been made available to the committee by the Department of Justice. He is in their custody, and they did not have to make him available, but they have done so in an effort to be cooperative and to the end that we all have the same objective, I am sure, and that is better law enforcement, and better law observance, and to carry on the fight insofar as we can against organized crime and the rapid growth of serious crime in this country.

Very well, Mr. Valachi, will you stand and be sworn.

You do solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. VALACHI. I do.

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI

The CHAIRMAN. Will you be seated?

Mr. Valachi, will you state your name?

Mr. VALACHI. Joseph Valachi.

The CHAIRMAN. Where were you born?

Mr. VALACHI. In New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. When?

Mr. VALACHI. In 1903, September 22.

The CHAIRMAN. September 22, 1903?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Were your parents natives of America?

Mr. VALACHI. No, they were born in Italy, both of them.

The CHAIRMAN. What section of Italy?

Mr. VALACHI. In Naples.

The CHAIRMAN. Where are you now domiciled?

Mr. VALACHI. In the custody of the Federal prison.

The CHAIRMAN. You are now serving a sentence in the Federal penitentiary?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you actually serving three sentences, am I correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Fifteen, twenty, and life.

The CHAIRMAN. You are serving three different court sentences. The first was for 15 years?

Mr. VALACHI. The second for 20, and the third for life.

The CHAIRMAN. The first sentence of 15 years was on a narcotics charge, was it not?

Mr. VALACHI. That's correct, narcotic conspiracy.

The CHAIRMAN. A narcotic conspiracy?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. When were you given that sentence?

Mr. VALACHI. In 1960.

The CHAIRMAN. In 1960?

Mr. VALACHI. I think it was June 3.

The CHAIRMAN. And then you were given a second sentence in 1961?

Mr. VALACHI. February 13.

The CHAIRMAN. For what?

Mr. VALACHI. Narcotic conspiracy.

The CHAIRMAN. Another similar charge?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. But a different offense?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, then, you said that you had a life sentence. What is your life sentence for?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, for second-degree murder, which happened in the prison.

The CHAIRMAN. That happened while you were in prison?

Mr. VALACHI. While serving my time.

The CHAIRMAN. While serving the other two sentences?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know whether the 20-year sentence and the 15-year sentence run concurrently or not?

Mr. VALACHI. The truth is that the judge didn't say.

The CHAIRMAN. He did not say to you?

Mr. VALACHI. The lawyer knows that.

The CHAIRMAN. The lawyer would know?

Mr. VALACHI. He noticed that, that he didn't say.

The CHAIRMAN. The lawyer noticed that?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir, he noticed it.

The CHAIRMAN. We have your record and we will put it in later and that will reflect whatever it is.

Senator MUNDT. Before we get into his adult career, I would like to ask him a question or two about his boyhood.

The CHAIRMAN. I wanted to get all of that in here.

Senator MUNDT. How much teaching did you have?

You jumped over from the time you were born in New York and you got in prison. What did you do as a boy, did you go to school?

Mr. VALACHI. I went to public school and I got my working papers at 15, from 7-A. At that time we called it 7-A.

Senator MUNDT. That is seventh grade?

Mr. VALACHI. 7-A.

Senator MUNDT. Grade 7-A?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Is that as far as you got in school?

Mr. VALACHI. That is how far, yes.

Senator MUNDT. Did you go to school later at some other point?

Mr. VALACHI. I went to school in Sing Sing.

Senator MUNDT. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. I went to school in Sing Sing.

Senator MUNDT. Well, let us keep away from the prison school a little bit. You went seven grades in public school, and you did not quite finish the eighth grade and you never went to high school?

Mr. VALACHI. No, sir.

Senator MUNDT. What was the first job that you had when you left school at the end of the seventh grade?

Mr. VALACHI. I worked a scow, you know the sand boats.

Senator MUNDT. On sandbars?

Mr. VALACHI. I was a captain on a scow. I told them I was 21. I worked for O'Brien Bros., 80 South Street.

Senator MUNDT. Now, for how many years as a young man? You were still a boy?

Mr. VALACHI. I worked here and there.

Senator MUNDT. For how many years did you work to earn an honest and legitimate living before you first committed a crime?

Mr. VALACHI. I would say about a year, all told.

Senator MUNDT. About a year, and you gave up hard work at the end of about a year?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. All right, I was just trying to get your background of education. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions by members of the committee at this time?

Very well.

Before we go into any detail as to your previous record of law violations, I would like to ask you what occurred while you were in prison that caused you to commit the offense you committed there.

I want to develop that next, but before I ask you that, I want to ask you, first, if you are a member of any secret organization that is dedicated to or whose principal business is to pursue crime and protect those of its members who do commit crime. Are you a member of any such organization?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir, I am.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the name?

Mr. VALACHI. Or I was.

The CHAIRMAN. You were; meaning that you probably are not now so accepted and regarded by the authorities of that organization but there was a time when you were a full-fledged member?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask at this time, and I do not care to go into details now, but when did you become a member of this organization?

Mr. VALACHI. In 1930.

The CHAIRMAN. In 1930?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the name of it?

Mr. VALACHI. Cosa Nostra.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. That is in Italian?

Mr. VALACHI. That is "Our Thing" and "Our Family" in English.

The CHAIRMAN. "Our thing," and "Our Family" in English.

We will come back to that later, but that is an organization, is it, that requires absolute obedience and conformity to its policy as handed down by those in authority?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I might ask you at this time what are the different positions, or ratings, or rank in that organization? Starting at the top, what do you have?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, we have what we call griemeson, that is sort of like, in English, would express it as a commission.

The CHAIRMAN. That is as of now you have the commission, but in the past, at the time you joined it, what did you have?

Mr. VALACHI. They used to have the boss of all bosses.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The boss of all bosses?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir, and then we had the individual bosses of the individual families, and then we had an underboss, and then we had what we call a caporegima which is a lieutenant, and then we have what we call soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they also called button men?

Mr. VALACHI. On the outside they call them button men.

The CHAIRMAN. But in the organization they are called soldiers?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So that you have the boss of all bosses, and then the boss of a family, and then the underboss of a family, and then the lieutenants?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I meant to say if you want that in Italian, too, sotto capo is the expression of the underboss.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the expression of the lieutenant?

Mr. VALACHI. Caporegima.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the expression of the button men or soldiers?

Mr. VALACHI. Soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN. Just soldiers?

Mr. VALACHI. Soldiers among our own organization.

The CHAIRMAN. Those were the ranks or levels in the organization?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You say now, however, there is a commission. Does it now have a boss of all bosses?

Mr. VALACHI. No, no more boss over all bosses, they have what you call a concerti, a consigia. I will put it to you this way: Charlie Luciano put it into effect, a member of six, to protect the soldiers, because if a lieutenant in the old days had it in for a soldier or he wanted to pick on the soldier, he could make up stories and to protect the soldier they formed what we call the consigio. In the case of soldiers accused of something, the lieutenant or whoever it may be must bring up charges on him.

The CHAIRMAN. That is something that is settled within each family?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. Would that be kind of a kangaroo court?

Mr. VALACHI. You could call it a kangaroo court.

Senator MUNDT. A court that you set up in your own organization?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. How many soldiers would be under a boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, certain families have, Vito Genovese has about 450, in and around that.

Senator MUNDT. 450?

Mr. VALACHI. About 450, yes, sir. It could be even 500, but I am giving it roughly.

Senator MUNDT. His, I take it, it was the largest of the families?

Mr. VALACHI. I think between Vito's and Gambino's family, just about both are large families. I am talking about Gambino now.

Senator MUNDT. How many soldiers belong to the little army that you were a part of?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I was with Vito Genovese, that is the family, or our borgata, in Italian.

Senator MUNDT. Now, within the ranks of this army of crime or soldiers, were they all at the same level or did you have sergeants and captains, and so on?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, we had, for instance, we will say about 20 to 25 caporegimes.

Senator MUNDT. What are they?

Mr. VALACHI. We call this like—I don't know how you call it in English—a regime, like you say, for instance, I will talk about my cogini. We had about 30 under 1 lieutenant—

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a minute, and now one at a time, and if you will address the Chair before I recognize you.

Mr. VALACHI. Now, these other lieutenants may have 60. It varies. Some may have 40, and some may have less. It all varies, you know.

Senator MUNDT. Within this little army, it is broken up into companies and brigades, or something?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. And the whole army would be about 450 under a boss?

Mr. VALACHI. I rate, say, Gambino's family and Vito Genovese's, just about almost the same, as far as the number of soldiers are concerned.

Senator MUNDT. I have one other question on that point. Do all of the soldiers know each other? Do you know who the rest of the army is?

Mr. VALACHI. I wouldn't say all of us know the soldiers, know each other.

Senator MUNDT. Most of you know each other?

Mr. VALACHI. If one introduces to another as you go along in life.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any questions at this point by any of my colleagues?

Senator MUSKIE. Mr. Chairman, I think it ought to be clear that we are not speaking about family in the usual sense. This is not a family in the sense of fathers and mothers and sons and daughters?

Mr. VALACHI. No; we are not speaking about that.

Senator MUSKIE. It is simply an organization of people who are not necessarily related to each other?

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, no; I didn't say "related." We are speaking about the Cosa Nostra. That is the expression they use, but not in the immediate family, by no means. It doesn't mean mother or father or any sister or brother or anything like that.

Is that what you mean, Senator?

Senator MUSKIE. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUSKIE. Do these families meet, as such, or do these 450 members, for example, of 1 family, ever meet for the purpose of doing family business?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, my family, I am there 30 years and they never met, not as a whole. But we did have, every Christmas, a table, like a dinner, and my regime consists of 30, I was telling you about, and the rest of the families here and there, some did and some didn't, but my family, the one I belonged to for 30 years, never met as a whole.

Senator MUSKIE. So they did not even know each other?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, as I said, they will get to know each other as they went along, and you know, meet, and you meet quite a bit in life, as you go along. And you may be some place, and you know a member, and he is with some member you don't know, and he will introduce him to you.

Senator MUSKIE. This is a secret organization, and how do you get to know that someone is a member of the same family?

Mr. VALACHI. He will introduce him to you, for instance, as "a friend of ours." That means a member.

Now, if he happens to be with someone that isn't a friend of ours, he will just simply say, "Meet a friend of mine," which means nothing, that is the code between us.

Senator MUSKIE. So there was a code that enabled you to identify other members of the family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. I just had one or two questions. Now, with this group with which you were associated, the number of 40 or 50, were they all in New York City?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, what would you call Brooklyn, Senator?

Senator JAVITS. New York City.

Mr. VALACHI. Then all are in New York City.

Senator JAVITS. All five boroughs or in the New York City area?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator JAVITS. What business during these 30 years—what business were you supposed to be in? What were you supposed to be doing for a living, as far as your family and friends were concerned?

Mr. VALACHI. As far as I am concerned, I got into my own businesses here and there. I got into the slot machine business and pinball machines, and number business, contracting in the dressing business, and businesses like that.

During the war I sold what you call ration stamps, you know, but I didn't have anything particularly coming from "the family." I never earned anything from the family, but you do have that, but I myself earned my own money. There were jukeboxes, and so on.

Senator JAVITS. Did you tell your family that you had any job, or any ordinary job? Of course, a number of these things that you describe are rackets, but what about some ordinary job? Did you ever pretend to have just an ordinary job like other people?

Mr. VALACHI. I mean myself, I didn't.

Senator JAVITS. You did not?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions?

Senator McINTYRE. Joe, how did you get yourself in a position so that you could join this family? How did you go about applying for membership?

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't apply, Senator.

Senator McINTYRE. How does this happen?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I will have to explain, you see. In my particular case, there was some trouble going on, and I was approached, you see, if I can get some more fellows like myself, and, well, at first I refused, but then another friend of mine got ahold of me, and he explained to me. I refused for the simple reason when I was in Sing Sing, I met an oldtimer that was doing time at that time, about, I would say in Sing Sing about 12 years before I got there, and he used to have trouble in his days, and they had wars in his time, what he terms as "Sicilians against Neapolitans," and he was a Neapolitan, and his name was Alexander Senaro. So he was preaching to me and giving me the lowdown on this, like, for instance, he used the expression, "If you hang out with a Sicilian for 20 years and you argue with one of his kind, well, this Sicilian will turn against you." He made me have some fear in myself, and when they approached me, that was what I had in mind. That is the reason I sort of turned it down.

Then I was assured that it wasn't that way any more, that times have changed, and they named some of the people that were members at the time, which they named to me, and I had a special friend of mine, what we called Dominick Petrelli, and he talked to me, and another fellow named Bobby Doyle. So, when they explained the difference to me, then I agreed.

Senator McINTYRE. I have no further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have any questions?

Senator BREWSTER. I have no questions at this time, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like now to go back to your being in prison under the two narcotic charges and ask you to tell us what happened that led up to your having committed the offense for which you are serving a life sentence.

You were in there on two narcotic charges.

Mr. VALACHI. You mean the last time I went in?

The CHAIRMAN. I am talking about the last time.

Mr. VALACHI. When I had the two sentences?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the last time I was in West Street, I was called down to West Street.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us identify "West Street." What do you mean by "West Street"?

Mr. VALACHI. A Federal house of detention. It is like a county jail.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what?

Mr. VALACHI. The house of detention.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you there waiting for trial, or waiting to be transported to prison?

Mr. VALACHI. Waiting for trial.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in New York?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And you call it what?

Mr. VALACHI. West Street.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Now, while you were there, proceed.

Mr. VALACHI. Then I went back to Atlanta. Now, you asked me how I got into this trouble; is that right, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I wanted to get at. You had been there on your 15-year sentence and you were taken out for trial on another charge, and you got a 20-year sentence. During that time you were held at West Street.

Mr. VALACHI. And then I went back to Atlanta.

The CHAIRMAN. After you got your 20-year sentence, you went back to Atlanta?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, when I went back the last time, that is now I have 15- and 20-year sentences, and one of my codefendants—

The CHAIRMAN. That is a codefendant in the case where you got the 20-year sentence?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. One of your codefendants.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What is his name?

Mr. VALACHI. Vito Agueci. I don't know how to spell it, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. That is A-g-u-e-c-i. He was one of your codefendants?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. And he was sentenced at the same time; was he?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That you were?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He was indicted in the same indictment with you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; but they had taken him from West Street into Westchester County, and he was in another prison at this time, but we met on the bus going to Atlanta.

The CHAIRMAN. You met him on the bus going to Atlanta?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Go head.

Mr. VALACHI. Now, naturally he has to stay 30 days in what we call the A. & O., quarantine, or A. & O.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, when they first get to the Atlanta Penitentiary, when a prisoner gets there, they put him in what is called a quarantine, and you call it what?

Mr. VALACHI. A. & O.

The CHAIRMAN. He stays there for a period of about how long?

Mr. VALACHI. Thirty days.

The CHAIRMAN. Before he is then assigned to a cell?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And put in with the rest of the prisoners?

Mr. VALACHI. Then in what we call the population. Then he goes into population.

The CHAIRMAN. Then he goes into population.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, very well.

Now, you had already been there, you had been there through quarantine?

Mr. VALACHI. So I stayed there only one overnight.

The CHAIRMAN. So when you get there, on this trip——

Mr. VALACHI. I was only 1 day and he remains there.

The CHAIRMAN. When you rode on the bus with him and got there, he remained in this quarantine for 30 days, and you only remained there 1 night because you had already gone through it before?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. When you were there the first time?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And, therefore, you got out of there into population again the next day?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Whereas he was held there during the period of 30 days?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

86 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. Now, at this point I would like to ask you, who was the boss of the family that you belonged to in Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. In Atlanta, you mean?

The CHAIRMAN. At the time you went to Atlanta, at the time you were convicted, who was the boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Vito Genovese.

The CHAIRMAN. Vito Genovese was the boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he also and is he now also in Atlanta prison?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; he was in Atlanta, but I understand he is transferred to Leavenworth now.

The CHAIRMAN. He may since have been transferred but he was in Atlanta while you were there?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. At any rate, when you and Agueci got there on the second time, Genovese was already there?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And he is the boss?

Mr. VALACHI. He is my boss.

The CHAIRMAN. He is your boss, that is the topman of your family?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. In the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you may proceed.

(At this point Senator Curtis entered the hearing room.)

Mr. VALACHI. When I got out of the A. & O., I still call it A. & O., I met Vito Genovese, and he wanted to talk to me.

The CHAIRMAN. You met him in the course of the prison routine?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right, in the yard, in the messhall, and I met him.

The CHAIRMAN. Had you seen him before that, before you went back to your second trial?

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, yes. I saw him when I went there the first time in 1960, and he was there the first time I went there.

The CHAIRMAN. So he was still in prison, and when you got back in population after that 1 day, you saw him again?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Now, tell us what occurred.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, he asked me some questions concerning our case. He wanted to know how much I knew about two more defendants. There were about 24 in all but he was interested only in, for instance, like myself, Frank Caruso, or Vinnie Mauro, because also Frank Caruso and Vinnie Mauro belongs with Vito Genovese.

The CHAIRMAN. Out of the 24 that were indicted with you, there were some 12 or 13 of them, how many of them were Cosa Nostra members?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, these two and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were the other two?

Mr. VALACHI. Vinnie Mauro and Frank Caruso.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they sentenced at the same time that you were?

Mr. VALACHI. No; I left them on West Street.

The CHAIRMAN. They were still there, and they had not come to Atlanta?

Mr. VALACHI. They got picked up in Spain, and, naturally, our trial was already over, and so, naturally their trial was later. There were more members in the case, and I told you about Vinnie Mauro and Frank Caruso because they belonged with Vito Genovese.

Now the other members, there was another member there. Manero, and I can't think of his first name, and he belonged with Mr. Lucchese.

The CHAIRMAN. He belonged to another family?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you now, Who was your underboss, who was the next in command under Vito Genovese of your family?

Mr. VALACHI. Jerry Catena.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he also known as Tony Bender?

Mr. VALACHI. No; that's my lieutenant, Tony Bender. He was my lieutenant.

The underboss was Jerry Catena.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was your lieutenant?

Mr. VALACHI. Tony Bender.

The CHAIRMAN. Tony Bender was your lieutenant, and he was your immediate superior there?

Mr. VALACHI. That's right.

The CHAIRMAN. Now we have the command. Very well. What now occurred when you got back, and you said that you saw Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, he first told me about Tony Bender. At this time I saw about a week maybe, or 10 days, and I don't remember, Tony Bender disappeared, and he first told me.

The CHAIRMAN. He told you Tony Bender disappeared?

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, no; it was in the papers, and on radio, and I am just telling you at this time he had disappeared.

The CHAIRMAN. I might ask you, has he ever been found?

Mr. VALACHI. No; he never has been found.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. Vito Genovese told me that it was the best thing that could have happened to Tony, because Tony couldn't take it "like you and I," and he is talking to me, and so I looked at him, like I snapped back with my head. I thought maybe he was going to tell me he was an informer or something.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. I thought he was going to tell me he was an informer.

The CHAIRMAN. That Tony was an informer?

Mr. VALACHI. That is what I thought, and I said, "What do you mean?"

And he said, "Well, you know he was a sick guy, and he won't be able to take it like you and I." Like he couldn't take time, to put it this way, time in prison, or long prison sentence, and so that is the best thing that could have happened.

The CHAIRMAN. The best thing to happen was for him to disappear. That is what Genovese thought and he said to you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that "disappear" mean that that is about the end of him?

Mr. VALACHI. It meant that in our language, that he had ordered his death.

The CHAIRMAN. That he had ordered his death?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That Genovese had ordered his death?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the significance of what he told you at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. And he was telling you, the reason was that he could not take it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He could not take it like you and he?

Mr. VALACHI. He said it was the best thing that could have happened. Do you have it clear?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I have it pretty clear.

I think that you might tell at this time how much power and how much authority that the boss like Genovese has over the family, and over the soldier members like you, or any one even as a lieutenant.

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I happen to know Vito's power. He not only has the power in our family, and when I say "our family," I mean that is his family, and so I have to call it ours, because I am with him.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean the family that he is the boss of?

Mr. VALACHI. He also controls the power in the Gambino family and the Lucchese family. In other words, they eliminated the boss of all bosses, but Vito Genovese is a boss of all bosses under the table.

Can you understand what I mean?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but he is not the boss of all bosses in the sense that he is so recognized, but he does still wield a power and influence comparable to that of boss over all bosses in some three families, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right, but he could not control the family in Brooklyn.

The CHAIRMAN. These three families were all in New York?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Brooklyn family, what is the name of it?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Profaci. He died. There is Joe "Bananas."

The CHAIRMAN. Does Vito control that family?

Mr. VALACHI. No; he don't.

The CHAIRMAN. He does not control that?

Mr. VALACHI. No; they stay on the ground, in other words. I am expressing it to you, Senator, in my words. In other words, the boss of that family, no one tells them what to do.

The CHAIRMAN. So Vito can't tell them what to do?

Mr. VALACHI. Not unless he tells them when they get together.

The CHAIRMAN. With respect to the members of the Genovese family of which you were one, what power does Genovese have as to the life and death or punishment or any penalty over the members of the family?

Mr. VALACHI. You see, Genovese has such a way of, if he wants to get rid of anybody, he has such a way that he finds a way of legalizing it. In other words, for instance, he will make up stories and there is no one there to dispute him.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean legalize it—

Mr. VALACHI. Legalize it amongst ourselves.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean your own crowd? In other words, his word becomes law, that makes it legal?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Can he and does he pass out death sentences?

Mr. VALACHI. He passes them out. They tell you he was a rat, he is this. They tell you anything they want to.

The CHAIRMAN. He passes them out?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You know that of your own knowledge?

Mr. VALACHI. That is for sure. Do you want to know about Frank?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; we will get to some of those later.

Now let us get back again—I know it is difficult—let us get back again to what happened in prison after you met Genovese and he told you about Tony Bender. Now did you later become a cellmate of Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead and tell us about it.

Mr. VALACHI. At this time when he got through with Tony Bender's conversation he asked me if I wanted to go in his cell.

The CHAIRMAN. With him?

Mr. VALACHI. With him. He said, "After all, I will be here a little while. I expect to get out and you will stay with the kids."

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. He said he expected to get out. He said, "You stay with me a little while and then you remain." There was another boy, another inmate in the cell. He says, "When I leave you stay with him."

The CHAIRMAN. His case, Genovese's case, is appealed; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; he expected to get out at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. He expected to get out?

Mr. VALACHI. But he lost that appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. At that time though he expected to win his appeal and get out?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what he was telling you?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator MUNDT. How long a term has he got?

Mr. VALACHI. Fifteen years.

The CHAIRMAN. What happened after he told you that?

Mr. VALACHI. I told him, "If you want me to come I will come." How can I say no to him?

The CHAIRMAN. You could not say no to your boss? They still have an influence after they are in prison, do they? Now, following his request that you come into the cell with him, what happened and what did you do?

90 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. He said "Well, what do you know about Vinnie and Frank?" I said, "Do you want to know what the conclusion I formed or do you want to know what I know?"

In other words, I am trying to tell him, do you want to know what I picked up at the trial, you know. I went through a 3½-month trial.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, he was asking you to tell him to give him a report on what happened at the trial?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. And what you knew?

Mr. VALACHI. He don't want to know what happened at the trial. He wanted to know what I know. In other words, what did those fellows tell me.

The CHAIRMAN. That was two other prisoners, he wanted to know what they told you?

Mr. VALACHI. Vinnie Mauro and Frank Caruso. I must explain the reason why.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. In 1948 there was a law passed in our family.

The CHAIRMAN. In your family?

Mr. VALACHI. I am talking about our family now, Frank Costello at the time was boss. We weren't supposed to do any business in narcotics. That is what he wanted to know. So, I said, "Do you think them guys are going to tell me anything, knowing that I am coming here in Atlanta with you." I said, "Now if you want to know what I learned, not told"—he said, "I don't want to know what you learned or what you think; I want to know what you know."

Then I put it this way, "I don't know nothing."

The CHAIRMAN. When he told you that, you didn't know anything?

Mr. VALACHI. Naturally. He doesn't want to know what I think, he wants to know what I know. In other words, what did they tell me.

The CHAIRMAN. When you told him that, what did he do?

Mr. VALACHI. He gave me a pretty mean look and said "I will forget about it," so we forgot about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that along about the time that Vito Agueci asked you to make an appointment with Genovese for him?

Mr. VALACHI. No; not at this time, yet, because Vito Agueci is still in the A. & O. at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. He had not gotten out of quarantine?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. He had not gotten into population yet?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. When I spoke to Genovese, I myself was only out 1 day. So Vito Agueci is still in A. & O.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I got into the cell a few days later. Everything looked all right between Vito and I. At least he acted that way.

The CHAIRMAN. He acted like everything was all right?

Mr. VALACHI. Right. Now when Vito Agueci comes out of the A. & O., a couple weeks go by, a month or a couple of weeks, whatever it was, when Vito Agueci got out of the A. & O. he was out a few days, he asked me if I could make an appointment with Vito Genovese to him.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 91

The CHAIRMAN. He asked you if you could make an appointment with Vito Genovese for him?

Mr. VALACHI. That he wants to meet him.

The CHAIRMAN. Had he never met him?

Mr. VALACHI. So far as I was concerned at this time he never met him.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you this: Can a soldier just simply make an appointment and go up and see the boss, the top boss, any time he wants to?

Mr. VALACHI. No, he can't.

The CHAIRMAN. Do many of the soldiers never see or know the boss personally?

Mr. VALACHI. There are really many soldiers that never know the boss.

The CHAIRMAN. Soldiers that never know the boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it difficult, is it most unusual to ever get them to talk to the top boss?

Mr. VALACHI. It is not unusual.

The CHAIRMAN. Some of them do?

Mr. VALACHI. Soldiers are in there 10 years, probably, and never saw a boss.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not understand that.

Mr. VALACHI. Probably a soldier is there 10 years and never saw the boss.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the reason why this man Agueci had to request you to see if Genovese would talk to him?

Mr. VALACHI. Because he knew I was with Vito Genovese.

The CHAIRMAN. He knew you were in there with him?

Mr. VALACHI. He knew I belonged with Vito Genovese because Vito Agueci himself is a member, from Canada.

The CHAIRMAN. From Canada?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He is a member of another family, though?

Mr. VALACHI. In Canada.

The CHAIRMAN. The Buffalo family?

Mr. VALACHI. Buffalo and Canada is all one. When I say Canada I mean Toronto.

The CHAIRMAN. He was not a member of the Genovese family?

Mr. VALACHI. He was a member of another family in Buffalo. Stephen Magaddino.

The CHAIRMAN. He asked you to see if you could make an appointment with Genovese so he could talk with Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Had you already gotten into Genovese's cell at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. At the time he asked me, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. So he knew that you had already gotten into the cell?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. I had an idea what he wanted to tell Vito Genovese but I minded my business. I had an idea because I figured he wanted to tell Vito all about this case and about the other two fellows on West Street which I told you about. I didn't care, it was none of my business. So I felt it my duty to ask Vito Genovese about this because if I didn't then maybe Vito would get to him through others because there were also a couple more in Atlanta that he belonged to Vito Genovese, Mike Copollo and LaPlaca.

The CHAIRMAN. You felt if you did not try to make an appointment with him or else tell Genovese about it, Genovese might find out from others that the fellow had asked you and you had not told him?

Mr. VALACHI. And I shunned him, I was trying to hide something.

The CHAIRMAN. He might think you were trying to hide something?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. So I sat on his bed. I said "One of the defendants in my case," because there were two of them, the other one was no member, I says "wants to talk to you." He said "Who is he?" I said, "He is a friend of ours. He is with Steve in Buffalo." He knew what I meant by Steve. "I won't talk to him." OK.

The CHAIRMAN. He said he didn't want to talk?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Then I lay on my bunk. Maybe a half hour later, not too long, he called me on his bed. He was laying on his own bed. There were seven in the cell. Actually there is eight but at this time there was seven.

The CHAIRMAN. There were seven in the cell, including five others besides you and Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. So I lie down on his bed.

The CHAIRMAN. You have to talk privately or on the side?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. That is why I lay on my bunk or lay on his bunk. So he called me back. He said "I have a idea. I will make Sam Pia or Johnny Dio talk to him." I said, "Do what you want."

The CHAIRMAN. Johnny Dio and Sam Pia? Are they members?

Mr. VALACHI. Sam Pia belongs to Buffalo. Johnny Dio belongs with Tommy Lucchese. So I said, "Do what you want to do." He said, "Do you have an idea what he wants to talk to me about?" I said "I am not interested." He says "Ah, I have changed my mind. I will tell you what I will do. I will let you know tomorrow night." OK. He would let me know tomorrow night. The next day Vito Ageuci grabbed me again to talk to him. I said "I haven't talked to him yet, Vito." I don't want to tell him that he told me that he would let me know. I just said "I didn't talk to him yet, I didn't get a chance."

The CHAIRMAN. You told Ageuci you had not talked to him yet?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. He says "Talk to him." I will try again tonight. So that night Vito Ageuci told me he don't want to talk to him at all. OK. I said "All right, I will tell him, then." "Yes, tell him." So, the next day I told Vito Ageuci, "I spoke to him and he don't want to talk to you."

Now that might have been a day, I don't know just when but very shortly, he asked, "You know what you do?" He said "Walk around with him, I want to see who he is."

The CHAIRMAN. He claimed that he didn't even know him?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. He wanted you to walk around with him so he would get a chance to see him and identify him?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. "Where do you want me to walk with him?" He said "You know where the bench is. Walk there maybe 50 feet or a hundred feet around." I don't know how long it is. So I don't know, Vito Agueci was around there at that time so I asked him to take a walk. I walked with him and another inmate. I made two laps. Vito Agueci and Mike Copollo were sitting down. When I figured he had a good view I broke it up. I said, "I don't want to walk any more." Then it started to rain. With this I got around the bocce court and everybody was under the shed, you know, it was raining. I happened to be with Joe Beck and another inmate. They were going in. I says "I will go in, too." When it rains you can go in whenever you want, get off the yard. I went in. When Vito came in he says "Where did you go?" I said "I came in, it was raining." I said "Didn't you see him?" He said "Yes, I saw him." I said "After you saw him I figured I would come in, it was raining, I came in with Joe Beck, that is all."

So it wasn't long after that he started telling me——

Mr. ADLERMAN. At this time did you detect a change in the attitude of Vito Genovese toward you after this?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I couldn't figure anything out. It looked funny to me but I couldn't figure it out.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You were friendly with him before?

Mr. VALACHI. I am sorry, I misunderstood you. Yes, his attitude was starting to change.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was that?

Mr. VALACHI. His attitude started to change. It was noticeable.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How did you know that his attitude changed? What happened?

Mr. VALACHI. I went to take a shower——

Mr. ADLERMAN. You are back in the cell, after you walked around with Agueci?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You went back in the cell with Vito Agueci?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us what happened in the cell when you went back.

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know if it was that day or the day after when the lights went out and he said he felt like talking that night. He says, he called Ralph Wagner, he said "come over, Wagner."

The CHAIRMAN. Who is that? Ralph Wagner? Another member of the cell?

Mr. VALACHI. An inmate but he is not a friend of ours. He is sitting down as though he is. If I did the same thing, I would have to run out of the cell—he is the boss, he sits down—a guy that ain't a member. I noticed that but I made believe I didn't notice it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not according to Hoyle in the organization?

94 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. That is not according to Hoyle, that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. So he started talking. He said "It is a good thing that he is a very good judge." What he meant is that when somebody tells him a story that he is able to judge, whatever he meant or referred to, he didn't say, he is telling the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. He said that to you in the presence of this other one?

Mr. VALACHI. In the presence of Ralph Wagner.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is not a member?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That it is a good thing he is a good judge so that when anybody told him a story he knew whether they were telling the truth or not?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what he said in the presence of both of you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. In the presence of both of us he says "You know, sometimes if I had a barrel of apples, and one of these apples is touched"——

The CHAIRMAN. Is touched?

Mr. VALACHI. Touched. Touch means a little touched, not all rotten but a little touched.

The CHAIRMAN. Bruised?

Mr. VALACHI. That "it has to be removed or it will touch the rest of the apples."

The CHAIRMAN. What significance did that have to you?

Mr. VALACHI. Just shaking my head and listening to him.

The CHAIRMAN. I say: What significance did that have to you?

Mr. VALACHI. I was just shaking my head and listening to him.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. In fact, I was doing it now unconsciously as I was telling you. As I was talking to you now I was shaking my head.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. So with that he said "I think I will go to sleep." He got up and he grabbed my hand and he gave me a kiss.

The CHAIRMAN. He grabbed your hand and gave you a kiss?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I turned around and gave him a kiss on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that some ritual that goes along in your organization?

Mr. VALACHI. No, this is a suspicious kiss.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a suspicious kiss?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. With that I sleep on the left, bottom bunk, and Ralph Wagner sleeps on the right bottom bunk. You see, we have one bunk on top of the other. Ralph mumbled under his breath, "Hum, the kiss of death."

The CHAIRMAN. Ralph Wagner mumbled that?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I ignored it.

The CHAIRMAN. You ignored it. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. Naturally I laid down and tried to figure out all night. I even noticed he used to take peeps to see if I was asleep because he was across from me, Vito Genovese. Well, I must admit I was upset.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know what Genovese was talking about at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Not yet.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't yet know?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. But it had a meaning to you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. As I said, you know, suspicious kiss.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not know why he did it yet?

Mr. VALACHI. Look, an outsider got wise.

The CHAIRMAN. What?

Mr. VALACHI. Like Ralph Wagner, he got wise. He got wise and I am supposed to be smart.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask you, Senator Curtis here suggests, and I think it is right, did you at the time accept and regard that as a kiss of death?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. But I didn't think the kid would get it.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't think that the kid would get it?

Mr. VALACHI. He got it. How could I miss when he got it.

The CHAIRMAN. Now your kissing him in return, is that a practice?

Mr. VALACHI. It was to make him understand I was smart to him.

The CHAIRMAN. You were what?

Mr. VALACHI. Smart to him, on that kiss. That is why I kissed him back.

The CHAIRMAN. You let him know that you understood?

Mr. VALACHI. That was my meaning, yes. At this time right now I am losing respect for him, see.

The CHAIRMAN. You are losing respect?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I am losing respect.

The CHAIRMAN. Prior to that time?

Mr. VALACHI. I had the highest, all through the 30 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Meaning you would do anything he told you to do?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, anything. I even stuttered when I talked to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Stuttered?

Mr. VALACHI. At times. That is how much I thought of him. I must tell you the truth. You see, Senator, he is my compère. He stood up for me when I got married.

The CHAIRMAN. He is your godfather?

Mr. VALACHI. No, godfather is different.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was he the best man at your wedding?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. You see, godfather is, if you baptize somebody's baby, that is godfather.

The CHAIRMAN. He had been a friend for many years.

Mr. VALACHI. Since 1932 I got married.

Senator MUNDT. Were you trying to convey any message to him when you kissed him on the cheek?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, put it this way: I was pretty well steamed up inside.

The CHAIRMAN. He kissed you. This is the kiss of death. When you kissed him back does that mean you would kill him too?

Mr. VALACHI. That is what I meant. If somebody is going to tell me in that style, naturally I am going to answer him in the same style.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, what you were trying to get across, "I got the message and look out, I am after you, too"?

Mr. VALACHI. I am trying to tell him we are in prison and in prison it is man to man. That is the way I felt. You know what I mean.

The CHAIRMAN. Nobody is boss any more?

Mr. VALACHI. When he takes that attitude naturally that is the attitude I take.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. After you got the kiss of death what happened then? You lay there that night and you thought about it and then what?

Mr. VALACHI. The next day I went for a shower. I met a friend. He said to me—

The CHAIRMAN. You don't have to tell his name here. You told us in executive session. You don't have to tell it here. Proceed.

Mr. VALACHI. He said to me: "Of course I was with this guy at West Street." He knew Vito Agueci, this friend I referred to. "He is a greaseball."

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who did he mean by greaseball?

Mr. VALACHI. Vito Agueci. He didn't have to call him by that name.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the significance of "greaseball"?

Mr. VALACHI. A native-born Italian that don't talk English. We call him a "greaseball." Actually we never got along, the American and the Italian natives, because they have a different way of living.

Senator MUNDT. You got segregation within the family?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, that is a natural thing. They got civilized late, in the last 20 years. You know what I mean? But they lived different from us. Their way of living is different. We got out maybe to a cabaret. To them it was a mortal sin one time. Now they are going out. They are in the big money, they learned all that in the last 25 years.

Senator MUNDT. You had some members that could not talk English at all?

Mr. VALACHI. They could not talk English, they would speak broken English. If you want to make a conversation with them, I, myself, could not get it straight. I got part of it. I really wouldn't know if he meant something. I could not get a hint, at least. Put it that way.

The CHAIRMAN. What did this man tell you in the shower?

Mr. VALACHI. When he told me that the greaseball ruined me, I knew now what the barrel of apples and everything meant.

The CHAIRMAN. When he said to you that the greaseball had ruined you, you knew then—

Mr. VALACHI. Then I knew. But I made him understand or think that I knew about it. I told him, "Oh, you know about it, huh?" In other words, that was it.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not let on to him that you were getting that information from him for the first time?

Mr. VALACHI. I just told him: "Stay away from me." Now I know.

The CHAIRMAN. But it had a significance? It confirmed what you had been suspicious of?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you had been thinking about it, worrying about it, when he said that to you you knew then the meaning of the touched apple and the kiss of death?

Mr. VALACHI. Now I know, right.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, did you meet Vito Agueci in the prison yard near the bocce court?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Subsequent to that?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What happened there?

Mr. VALACHI. It wasn't long after that I was near the bocce court. There were about seven members. In Atlanta we are about 90 New Yorkers, about 70 of us know ourselves from outside.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is that?

Mr. ADLERMAN. You have 90 members of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I say there are about 90 New Yorkers, not members but through the neighborhood, downtown, Bronx, Brooklyn, you know. Most of us seem to know one another. There was about seven members, or six or seven, somewhere around there. There was Barceloni, there was Beck, there was new guys that they had not introduced me to. I didn't know who they were. There was another group of men, as I explained to you, friends from the neighborhood, which is hanging out with them, associating with them. When Vito Agueci is about 40 feet away from me—

The CHAIRMAN. Forty feet away?

Mr. VALACHI. About 40 feet away sitting on some playing card tables, or something, he calls me some names in Italian.

The CHAIRMAN. You understood them, did you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I understood but I didn't make him understand I hear him.

The CHAIRMAN. You pretended you did not hear him?

Mr. VALACHI. Because I knew right away that was a setup.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you repeat some of it? Can you repeat what they called you in Italian?

Mr. VALACHI. I was thinking if I could repeat it, yes. So I think now if I go after him, that is what I mean by a setup, if I go after him—

The CHAIRMAN. You did not tell me what he called you. Can you tell me some of the things he called you?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, that would cover it, Senator.

Senator CURTIS. Did he convey the idea that you were a rat?

Mr. VALACHI. That is what he was trying to say, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, proceed.

Mr. VALACHI. Naturally if I make them understand I hear it, then I have to go after him.

98 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, your code required you to go after him if you heard it? You were not supposed to take it?

Mr. VALACHI. Naturally. So I called him——

The CHAIRMAN. You pretended you did not hear it?

Mr. VALACHI. I am calling him as he is talking, to come and play bocce. Charley Beck was there. He says "Come on, Vito, you play with me." So with that he came over and acted as if he didn't want to play bocce.

The CHAIRMAN. Did it appear to you that that was a setup to get you in trouble?

Mr. VALACHI. I really felt if I go after him the crowd will get there and stick a knife in my back and nobody will even be arrested for it.

The CHAIRMAN. You regarded it as a setup for your murder?

Mr. VALACHI. A hundred percent.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, if they could provoke you into making an attack they would bang around you and stick you?

Mr. VALACHI. By me pulling what I pulled not only did I get him off guard, I got all of them off guard.

The CHAIRMAN. By pretending you did not hear it you threw them all off guard?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe that they definitely planned to kill you there at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, a hundred percent, Senator. One hundred percent.

The CHAIRMAN. A hundred percent? How many members of the Cosa Nostra were there at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. As I said, I can go up to about seven. Actually, you know, you can imagine how I felt. I saw who I had to see anyway. There was Barceloni and there were four more that Barceloni introduced me to. There was Charlie Beck. Somebody was sitting on the table too, alongside where he was. All told there was about a good 20 or better.

The CHAIRMAN. So when you threw them off, what happened?

Mr. VALACHI. The whistle blew at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Whistle for what?

Mr. VALACHI. To go in.

I even walked with Vito Agueci toward the cell.

The CHAIRMAN. Walked with him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I go to B block, he goes to A block. When we reach where I make a left turn he makes a right turn, I went into my own cell and I found Vito Genovese all by himself. Naturally I am observing now.

The CHAIRMAN. You are observing him very closely now?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Every move he makes now I am observing. He sort of looked surprised when I came into the cell.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean Vito Genovese was surprised when you got to the cell?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I didn't say anything to him. I laid on my bunk and I started like I don't want to play cards, I don't want to do this, I don't want to do anything, I don't want to eat.

The CHAIRMAN. He is asking you all those things?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 99

Mr. VALACHI. No; I put it all together. I started to do all I can.

The CHAIRMAN. You were upset. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. I was very much upset. It must have been about a day after that, naturally, I didn't say anything to him—

The CHAIRMAN. Did you recognize what they had said to you and were accusing you of as being that you were an informer and that meant a death sentence? Is that what it all added up to?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They were accusing you of being an informer and what you knew meant the death sentence?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Proceed now. The next day after.

Mr. VALACHI. I remember that I went to work 1 day after that. I had to go to work. I could not duck that.

The CHAIRMAN. But you were not eating?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. I might ask you why at this point you were afraid to eat.

Mr. VALACHI. I was afraid to go into any place where there was a crowd after this, any place where there was a crowd.

About 2 o'clock that afternoon, I got news in the tailor shop that they had locked up two fellows from my cell. One was Ralph Wagner and one was a close friend that I had made in prison.

The CHAIRMAN. They had locked him up?

Mr. VALACHI. They put him in the hole.

The CHAIRMAN. The hole is solitary?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. When you use the word "hole" that means solitary confinement?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I should have explained that.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. When I come in—we quit about 4 o'clock or something like that, or 10 before, I don't remember, but we quit and we come into the cell block and then from the cell block we go eat. I found Vito Genovese near the door, near the cell. The truth is, he is very seldom there at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. He is what?

Mr. VALACHI. He is very seldom there at this time. He asked me what happened, about these two fellows being arrested. I says, "I don't know." I am making pretend all the time that I am a friend of Ralph Wagner but I don't trust Ralph Wagner but I don't want him to know that.

The CHAIRMAN. You are making him think that?

Mr. VALACHI. All the time I make him think that. All the time I have been in the cell I make him think that.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you do after you found that situation?

Mr. VALACHI. He asked me "What happened?" I said, "How do I know what happened. I have to think about it."

"What do you mean?"

I says, "I have to think about it. All I know is that I have two friends and they are both in the hole. I know they didn't do anything. I don't know why they got in the hole."

Anyway, that ended that conversation.

The CHAIRMAN. You ended up in the hole, too?

Mr. VALACHI. Not at this time. The next morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The next morning?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you manage to get in the hole, too?

Go ahead. Why did you want to go there?

Mr. VALACHI. I wanted to go in there, I felt they were going to kill me.

The CHAIRMAN. They were going to kill you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. So I must have a reason to go in the hole. I can't go to an officer and say, "Lock me up." He has to have a reason. He wanted to know the reason. I told him.

The CHAIRMAN. You did go to him and ask to go in the hole of your own volition?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. He says, "I can't."

"They want to kill me. Is that good enough reason for it?"

"OK. Put him in the hole."

The CHAIRMAN. Is this when you told him you either would be killed or you would have to kill somebody?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You told him that?

Mr. VALACHI. Either way you tell him he has to put you into the hole. I told him both.

Senator MUNDT. When you told the officer "they want to kill me," he naturally would be curious as to who they were, would he not? Did he ask you?

Mr. VALACHI. Actually, as a rule they know. He didn't even ask that question.

Senator MUNDT. He did not ask the question?

Mr. VALACHI. The associated warden will call you and ask you that. He does his duty. He just locks you up.

Senator MUNDT. Did they interrogate you in the cell?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. What did you think was the reason why Wagner and the other fellow were put in the hole?

Mr. VALACHI. I couldn't figure it out. The only thing I thought is that he wanted these two fellows out of the way if something happens to me. Probably he did not trust Ralph Wagner, himself. He probably thought that Ralph would be on my side. Surely he knew the other guy would be on my side.

Senator MUNDT. Let me see if I get that. You thought that Genovese arranged to get the two fellows put in the hole. Is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, right now I would not say that, just that way.

Senator MUNDT. I was wondering what reaction you had.

Mr. VALACHI. I had some reaction, I was very suspicious and very unfavorable to me, put it that way, Senator. Is that all right?

Senator MUNDT. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. How long did you stay in the hole, was it about 4 days?

Mr. VALACHI. First let me tell you the conversation with Ralph Wagner. I met him in the hole.

The CHAIRMAN. You met him in the hole and you had a conversation with him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, he was taking a shave. I said, "Do you know he talked to Vito Agueci? Do you know he spoke to that greaseball?" I was yelling.

The CHAIRMAN. Wagner was saying that?

Mr. VALACHI. I told Wagner that.

He says, "He did that?"

I said, "He is a phony."

I just got that off my chest. I told Wagner I was going to blow my top.

The CHAIRMAN. You had some conversations there with him. When you got out of the hole, how long was that afterward?

Mr. VALACHI. About 4 days later.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you do then? What happened then after you got out of the hole?

Mr. VALACHI. I went back to the same cell.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you want out of the hole?

Mr. VALACHI. The truth?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't want out of the hole.

The CHAIRMAN. But you do not necessarily control that, do you?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I don't control that at all. Ralph Wagner was there and talked me into it to come out.

The CHAIRMAN. To come out?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does going into the hole under those circumstances have any significance to the rest of the members there present who know about it?

Mr. VALACHI. I am a dead duck after I went into the hole, Senator. Just like I would go into a police station on the outside.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, if you go into the hole for protection, they know it?

Mr. VALACHI. The members, sure.

The CHAIRMAN. The members know it?

Mr. VALACHI. Sure. It would be just like their seeing you go into a police station to inform. It would be exactly the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you say certainly from that minute you were a dead duck.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. The reason why I explained to you and compare it to a police station is so you would understand how serious it is to do something like I did in jail.

The CHAIRMAN. After you did that, was your life safe in the prison?

Mr. VALACHI. No, Senator, I am in trouble. I got to con my way around, see what I see, it was bad to come out of the hole, Senator.

You can imagine how I felt. I am in the cell again. Now I have to do the best I can, see if I can con him.

The CHAIRMAN. You had to do the best you can?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Con him, con my way out. I don't know what I have to do but I am on that line.

The CHAIRMAN. You are on that line, you have to do the best you can to try to keep them from carrying out what you anticipated they would attempt to do?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. The next day, did you go out in the yard, the next day when you got back in the cell?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I know the boys are friendly and I shook hands with everybody.

I should have told you they were giving me the cold shoulder before I went in the hole. Now everybody is friendly.

One particular person, Johnny Dio, knows that I didn't take no shower that day.

He said, "You must have got out late, Joe. You must have got out late, you didn't take no shower."

Senator, I could have told him, "How did you notice I didn't take no shower," but I was playing dumb. I said, "Yes; I got out late."

He said, "You can come tomorrow."

Tomorrow is not shower day. Now, this was a Wednesday. The next shower day is on Saturday.

I said, "Yes, John." He was looking up in the sky when he is telling me. He is not looking me in the face.

I said, "Yes, Johnny, I will be there tomorrow."

"All right. I will have the clothes for you. I will be there."

The CHAIRMAN. What job did Johnny Dio have?

Mr. VALACHI. He gave out the clothes in the showerroom. We call it the clothesroom. I never went, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Sir?

Mr. VALACHI. I never went.

The CHAIRMAN. Why?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, it was another setup.

The CHAIRMAN. Another setup?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew then?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I was more sure than the first time.

The CHAIRMAN. Johnny Dio was not so interested in getting your hide clean as wanting to get the job done?

Mr. VALACHI. I felt like pulling his chin down when he was talking to me. In other words, "look at me when you talk." He was looking in the sky. I never saw anybody do anything like that. He didn't have the nerve to look at me in the face.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. Anyway, I never went to the shower. I didn't even go and eat.

The CHAIRMAN. You would not even go and eat?

Mr. VALACHI. No. I figured it out. I talked to Vito and I said to him, I made him look bad, I said to him, "of course you know"—wait a minute, did I tell you about when he asked me "What did you tell Ralph Wagner, that I spoke to Vito Agueci?"

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet. You may tell it.

Mr. VALACHI. That afternoon he sat on my bed. He says, "What is this I hear?"

You see, Ralph Wagner came out of the hole the same time I did. He says, "What is this I hear, you told Ralph Wagner that I spoke to Vito Agueci?"

The CHAIRMAN. Ralph Wagner had passed that on apparently to Genovese, you told him that you had spoken to him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, that was all right. I was glad about that.

I said to him, "Look, whether you spoke to him or the other guy spoke to him, what difference does it make?"

You remember he had asked me about Pia and he had asked me about Dio.

I said, "What difference does it make, why don't you speak to him?"

He walked away. As I say, at this time I am a little tough in my tone of voice. Then I calmed down. I don't know whether it was the same day, it must have been the same day, when the next conversation I had with him, I said to him, "What am I supposed to do about this guy, Vito Agueci?" I said, "Can I get him?" Now I am looking for reaction.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, Genovese knew that Agueci had accused you of being an informer or rat?

Mr. VALACHI. I imagine that is the first time that he realized that I did hear him.

The CHAIRMAN. So you asked him what you should do about it?

Mr. VALACHI. Right. He says, "Now you're talking. You blow your top."

I said, "I am sorry."

You know what he meant by "blow the top." I went in the hole.

I said, "I am sorry, I will make it up to you." That night—

Mr. ADLERMAN. What do you mean when you said you were going to make it up?

Mr. VALACHI. I said, "I am going to get him," which I never intended to do. I said to myself, he wants me to get rid of two birds with one stone.

Did you hear that, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. Say that again.

Mr. VALACHI. I said to myself, he wants to get rid of two birds with one stone.

The CHAIRMAN. He wanted you to kill Vito Agueci and then that meant, of course, you would be eliminated, too?

Mr. VALACHI. I was thinking I would stall for my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. Stall for your own time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I met Vito Agueci in the yard.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any intention of killing Agueci at all?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. You were just talking to him?

Mr. VALACHI. Right. I am stalling for time.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. Naturally, if he waits for me to do that, then he has to wait to kill me. That is what it actually means.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. I saw Vito. I walked over to Vito Agueci that night or late afternoon. We call night sometimes 7 or 6 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Call it what?

Mr. VALACHI. Call night 5 or 6 o'clock. At this time we go in the yard. I walked over to Vito Agueci. I said, "Vito, before I went in the hole you were trying to say something. Remember when you were sitting on the bench over there? Were you trying to tell me something, or you called me some name or something?"

He said in Italian, "God forbid," as if to say "God forbid."

The CHAIRMAN. God forbid that he accused you?

Mr. VALACHI. He said, "No, I never said anything." In other words, he was convinced that I didn't hear him.

The CHAIRMAN. You were talking to Agueci when he was alone, you did not have a crowd around?

Mr. VALACHI. There were people around but they had nothing to do with this affair.

The CHAIRMAN. Not the same crowd that was around him when he was accusing you?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. A different crowd?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. I went into the cell that night, I told Vito Genovese, I said, "You know, I spoke to that greaseball. You know what? He denied everything. He even called me nothing. You know what I did? I made him believe that I believed him."

That is the way I left it.

"As of now I am going to take my time in getting him." He says, "Good. Don't get caught."

The CHAIRMAN. "Good" what?

Mr. VALACHI. "Good, take your time, don't get caught."

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I didn't come out of the cell no more until that morning of May 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The morning of what?

Mr. VALACHI. The morning of May 22. That morning I came out and actually I was really in a state, I didn't know what to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you in a state of fear?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Afraid for your life?

Mr. VALACHI. I walked up and down about once or twice. I made one lap a distance of about 4 blocks. The yard is about 4 blocks long. Then I made another lap, then I made another one. On my way back, I spot Joe Beck.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask you at this point if these are the ones you have told us heretofore. Charlie Barcelona?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Joseph DiPalermo?

Mr. VALACHI. DiPalermo.

The CHAIRMAN. His alias is Joe Beck?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. His alias is Joe Beck?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Charles, his brother, that is Charlie Beck?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Johnny Dioguardi, Mike Coppola, known as Trigger Mike?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And Peter LaPlaca?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Those are the ones you were afraid of?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; those are the ones that were actually having all the interviews and all that, doing all this that was going on.

The CHAIRMAN. They were the ones——

Mr. VALACHI. For instance, you remember I said when I walked Vito Agueci around, Mike Coppola was sitting with him. Joe Beck was on the side. They were all there.

The CHAIRMAN. When?

Mr. VALACHI. When I walked him around. You remember when I went into the cell to get Joe Beck the day it was raining. They were around at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they also around at the time he was calling you an informer?

Mr. VALACHI. The only guy that wasn't around was Mike Coppola and LaPlaca. But the ones Barcelona introduced me to, four 6-footers, I don't know their names.

The CHAIRMAN. These were the ones you were really apprehensive about? Charlie Beck was there. Pete LaPlaca, Mike Coppola, and Joe Beck were in another part of the yard at this time you are referring to. All right.

When you came out that morning, what happened?

Mr. VALACHI. I spotted Joe Beck. I could have spotted Mike Coppola. I could have spotted anyone. It would not have made any difference to me. It happened to be near some construction.

As soon as I saw him I actually, I don't know what I thought of——

The CHAIRMAN. What were you on your way to at the time?

Mr. VALACHI. I was on my way from walking. Now I found him in front of me.

The CHAIRMAN. You found him in front of you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was behind you?

Mr. VALACHI. He was walking with another guy. Right away I saw a pipe. I grabbed a pipe and I went to work on Joe Beck. At least that is who I thought it was.

The CHAIRMAN. You saw a man you thought was Joe Beck?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Right in front of you?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. One of these you understood was under orders to kill you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You honestly believed they were under orders from Genovese to kill you there in prison?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, a hundred percent, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. So when you saw Joe Beck, whom you thought was Joe Beck in front of you, you did what?

Mr. VALACHI. I hit him on the head with a pipe.

The CHAIRMAN. A piece of iron pipe from the construction job there?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. They were building a new industry at this particular place of the yard, you know. Near the end of the ball stand, the grandstand.

The CHAIRMAN. You hit him with that pipe?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. More than once?

Mr. VALACHI. About three times.

The CHAIRMAN. About three times?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Very hard.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what did you do?

Mr. VALACHI. Then I saw a couple of guys running toward me. I didn't know who they were. In my excitement, I could see people but I can't make them out, see.

The CHAIRMAN. You were in a frenzy, I guess, at that time, were you not?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I don't know how to explain it.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not know how to explain it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I can see the people. I must tell you that I found out in the hole from other inmates who these three people were.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not know at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. All I know is that they were rushing for me and I rushed at them.

I let go of that guy and I rushed at them.

The CHAIRMAN. You started at them with the pipe?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. In other words, they made about two attempts before the officers came up.

Now, when the officer came over he wanted to take the pipe from me. I said, "No, you don't get this pipe. I will walk into the associated warden's office but you don't take this pipe from me."

The CHAIRMAN. You were not going to let him take the pipe?

Mr. VALACHI. I can't tell him there are a couple of guys trying to get me. I think if I handed him the pipe those guys may come at me. Every now and then I am looking behind as I am walking with the officer.

The CHAIRMAN. You walked on with the officer to the warden's office?

Mr. VALACHI. All the way to the associated warden's office.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you do with the pipe when you got there?

Mr. VALACHI. I handed it to the associated warden.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what did you find out after you got there?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the associated warden, I don't know how, Senator, I sat down and he handed me a picture.

The CHAIRMAN. We will take a 5-minute break.

(Members present at time of recess: Senators McClellan, Muskie, McIntyre, Brewster, Mundt, Curtis, and Javits.)

(Members present after short recess: Senators McClellan, Muskie, McIntyre, Brewster, Mundt, Curtis, and Javits.)

The CHAIRMAN. Let us come to order.

You are testifying that you had gotten to the associate warden's room, and there you had given up the weapon you had—the pipe?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what happened, in telling about whom you had actually assaulted?

Mr. VALACHI. He showed me a picture.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the associate warden?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 107

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I still don't remember his name. The picture he showed me, I think it was, the first picture he showed me, I said to him, "Who is this?"

He said, "That is the guy you intended to hit."

"No," he said, "That is the guy you hit."

The CHAIRMAN. The first picture?

Mr. VALACHI. Then he showed me another picture. He took that away. He said, "This is the guy you intended to hit."

The CHAIRMAN. Is that when you first knew that you had hit the wrong man?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator. You can imagine how I felt. I told him, "Just lock me up," after that.

The CHAIRMAN. You told him what?

Mr. VALACHI. I told him, "Lock me up" after that. I sank in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. You what?

Mr. VALACHI. I slumped in the chair. I didn't know if he was telling me the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. We had a picture here at the executive session, I believe we showed you, of the two men and there was great similarity. Momentarily, the picture is displaced right now, but we will find it.

Mr. VALACHI. You could not separate them, Senator. You could not separate these two in height, weight, appearance; both had glasses, both were ugly, both were skinny. I say one weighs 110 pounds and the other one weighs 110½ without weighing them. I just would guess their weight. That is how close they were.

The CHAIRMAN. At this point I want to stop. A little later we will take the noon recess, but before we do, I want each Senator to ask any questions they wish about the matter.

Senator CURTIS?

Senator CURTIS. I will wait my turn, but there is one point I am not sure of. Did this man die right away when you hit him two or three times?

Mr. VALACHI. About 50 hours.

Senator CURTIS. About 50 hours? But the general feeling was when you were taking off to the associate warden's office that he was near death; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. That is what the office told me. The officer who was walking me.

Senator CURTIS. Your feeling was that you hit him hard enough and often enough that it would probably kill him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. As long as I had Joe Beck there.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you thought you were hitting Joe Beck?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You actually intended to kill Joe Beck, did you not?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Beck, Senator, was looking to kill me.

The CHAIRMAN. You thought it was a case of either you kill him or he kill you?

Mr. VALACHI. That is what I thought.

Senator MUNDT. You said after you got in the hole you learned of the identity of these big 6-footers who were coming after you and who you were keeping off with a pipe.

108 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I named them. I found out, in the hole, who they were.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were they? Were they also part of the gang who was going to kill you?

Mr. VALACHI. One was a friend of Joe Beck. Another one was a friend of Charlie Beck. And the other one was—I don't know whose friend this other one was. Like this fellow, I call him "Flo"; Flo was there.

I found out, through other inmates that came in the hole, as I was spending my time in the hole.

Senator MUNDT. After learning who they were, do you think they were trying to kill you and dispose of you or were they coming after you to protect the fellow you had killed?

Mr. VALACHI. I believed, I made up my mind about that, you see, I believed that they felt bad that I was a step ahead of them, and I believed, you see, when an inmate in the hole, in solitary, that I make friends with, say after about 2 weeks, he says, "Joe, there is an inmate here, he saw everything." He says, "You know who the three guys were that came after you?"

I said, "No."

"Well, I ain't going to tell you. The first chance we get, when we shave, I am going to let you meet him. In fact," he says, "they even want to testify for you."

I said, "I knew there was a couple of guys coming after me, but I didn't make them out."

When I met this inmate and he told me the names, I knew he was right, because, for instance, the names he mentioned, as I say, were friends of Joe Beck, of Charlie Beck; it was the same group.

Do you understand, Senator?

Only I could appreciate when he was naming them. I asked them where were they staying? He said, "When you walked, they were behind the grandstand." In other words, they didn't act fast enough or maybe they got there late; that he couldn't tell me, or they would have had me.

Senator MUNDT. You think they were part of the gang out to get you?

Mr. VALACHI. I know so. But I didn't know at the time.

Senator MUNDT. They were behind the grandstand?

Mr. VALACHI. They were hiding behind the grandstand. When this inmate mentions these names, only I knew. If he were to mention three names I never heard of, I don't know in the institution, I would figure just like that. But when he mentions three solid names to me which one of the three were members but friends of the members—

Senator MUNDT. Did you ever talk to them while they were shaving like you were going to do?

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't understand you.

Senator MUNDT. Did you have a visit with these three men while you were shaving?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I met this one inmate.

Senator MUNDT. You did not meet the three men who came at you?

Mr. VALACHI. I never met those men; no.

Senator MUNDT. I want to ask you a couple of questions dealing with the first part of your testimony.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 109

You belonged to Cosa Nostra for about 30 years?

Mr. VALACHI. Since 1930.

Senator MUNDT. What was your average income from your criminal contacts during those 30 years, your average annual income?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I wouldn't be able to tell you. Sometimes I was doing bad, sometimes I was doing good.

Senator MUNDT. What would be a good year? How much?

Mr. VALACHI. The days of the ration stamps I would say I made about $150,000.

Senator MUNDT. $150,000 a year?

Mr. VALACHI. No, just during the whole—I got in it about a year after. So let us say in a year or a little over a year.

Senator MUNDT. With the ration stamps?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. You made about $150,000?

Mr. VALACHI. I would say, all told.

Senator MUNDT. What I am trying to establish is that you were working as a soldier in this family, I am trying to determine what your income was as a soldier working for Genovese.

Mr. VALACHI. You don't get any salary, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. Well, you get a cut, then.

Mr. VALACHI. You get nothing, only what you earn yourself. Do you understand? Like what I earned with the stamps I went and got the stamps and sold them. Not that they gave them to me. I probably would go in Jersey and meet Sam Accardo, I know him personally. He would give me some.

Senator MUNDT. You say the only thing you got out of your membership and for carrying out your assignments that Genovese gave you was protection?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I told that to Vito in the cell. I said, "I never earned a nickel with you people."

He said, "Whose fault is that?"

I said, "I am just telling you. I am not saying this for any reason. I happen to be one who earned my own money."

I had machines, I had pinball machines. I had jukeboxes. I had horses. I had factories of my own. I got it all myself.

Senator MUNDT. In other words, if I understand your answer, all you got out of your membership in this family was protection from somebody cutting in on your racket?

Mr. VALACHI. That would be a good way to put it.

Senator MUNDT. Now, what would be your best estimate as to the income in those 30 years that Vito got out of this?

Mr. VALACHI. I would have to have an adding machine. I can't estimate that.

Senator MUNDT. Is it big money?

Mr. VALACHI. It would break the adding machine. I can't go anywhere near that figure.

Senator MUNDT. He made big money?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. But he did not cut anybody in so far as the soldiers are concerned?

Mr. VALACHI. He is the tightest guy around.

Senator MUNDT. The tightest guy?

110 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Even Joe Beck used to say, "He never goes for nothing." That is our expression.

Senator MUNDT. How about the lieutenants, were they on salary?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the lieutenant actually makes money with soldiers. I am an exception. Everybody likes to do business with the lieutenant. If a soldier has something he runs to the lieutenant right away but I didn't. I just didn't do anything like that.

The lieutenant has a chance, just being a lieutenant, making money with soldiers.

Senator MUNDT. In other words, the average soldier cuts the lieutenant in?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. You were the exception?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I just worked for myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator MUSKIE.

Senator MUSKIE. Why did you choose to work for yourself, Joe?

Mr. VALACHI. They never gave me nothing anyway. I wouldn't hang around just waiting until they throw anything at me. You would have to hang around like a pup. I never hung around downtown. In other words, I belonged in the Village but I hung around Harlem or in the Bronx. I never went down to the Village unless they called me.

Senator MUSKIE. Were they organized for the purpose of conducting criminal activities to make money?

Mr. VALACHI. My story will come out as we go along.

As I said, I belonged to three families. My boss—let me put it to you this way, which would have favored me was Salvatore Maranzano. After I lost him, you know, I would put it just like we will say, Squillante, when he lost Albert, he was not worth a nickel. At least, I went on and on.

Senator MUSKIE. Let me ask you two or three questions about what took place in prison.

The key to this whole incident is Vito Agueci. He is the key figure in all of this?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUSKIE. He was one of your codefenders in the narcotics case?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUSKIE. Do you know whether or not he knew Vito Genovese before he asked you to arrange an interview with Vito?

Mr. VALACHI. You see, Senator, you have to remember, I don't know if Vito Genovese spoke to him or whether the other guys spoke to him. That I don't know for sure.

Senator MUSKIE. I do not think you understand my question, Joe. Vito Agueci asked you to arrange for him to meet with Genovese, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUSKIE. Do you know whether or not he ever met Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. As far as I know, no, he had never met him. I thought you were referring to the time when he did talk to him.

Senator MUSKIE. Did he say to you why he wanted to talk to Genovese?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 111

Mr. VALACHI. He said, "I will do anything to avenge my brother's death," which his brother went out on bail and he was killed in Canada, you see. So he figures probably, I wouldn't ask any questions of Vito Genovese, he thinks probably by getting on the good grace of Vito Genovese and telling him what he knew of this conspiracy, he thought maybe he could win over Vito Genovese. That is my idea. But I don't know what he really said.

Senator MUSKIE. Did you understand from him he told you he wanted to talk to Genovese about a narcotics conspiracy?

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't understand. I was only trying to figure it out. I would not dare ask Vito Agueci what he wanted to talk to him about because if he gets to talking to Vito Genovese, why should I show an interest as to what he has to say?

Senator MUSKIE. Would you not have to have a reason to give Genovese why he ought to talk to Agueci?

Mr. VALACHI. "He said he wants to talk to you." I did not give no reason.

Senator MUSKIE. You had no idea what he wanted to talk about?

Mr. VALACHI. I surmised but I didn't know what he wanted to talk about.

Senator MUSKIE. Genovese told you he did not want to talk to him?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator MUSKIE. Do you think he meant that, when he told you that?

Mr. VALACHI. He probably meant that. God knows how many things. Vito Agueci's brother had told him once that Vito Agueci is a great storymaker.

Senator MUSKIE. Which means that he was great——

Mr. VALACHI. He was great to make up some stories. Like he said Vito Agueci used to get me beat up all the time when we were kids. He always used to make stories.

He is a very jealous character.

Since then I was kind of getting away from Vito Agueci slowly. I was not too close to him because his brother was a different type than Vito Agueci.

Senator MUSKIE. After Genovese told you he would not talk to Agueci, do you know whether or not he did in fact talk to Agueci?

Mr. VALACHI. That is what I explained before, Senator. I don't know if he did the talking directly himself or used one of the other names or it could have been Trigger Mike Coppola. Mike Coppola, let me explain to you who he is. Mike Coppola is a lieutenant of Vito Genovese. Mike Coppola, as I said to you before, we are about 27 or 28 downtown. Mike Coppola has about 60 in his regime. You remember, I explained to you some have 30.

Mike Coppola is a very important man in the organization. So, Mike Coppola could have talked to him. Joe Beck could have talked to him. Maybe Vito Genovese allowed Joe Beck to talk to him. I didn't know. I didn't know who between them spoke to Agueci but I knew they talked.

Senator MUSKIE. You told us earlier of the conversations you had in the showers with someone who said that the "greaseball" had ruined you.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

112 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator MUSKIE. Is that when you understood for the first time that Agueci had talked to Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. Absolutely.

Senator MUSKIE. At that point you knew that Agueci had had some talk with Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUSKIE. You understood from that comment that Agueci had told Genovese that you had ratted or that you were an informer?

Mr. VALACHI. I understood that the fellow in the bathroom didn't even know what he was telling me. I got it that way.

As I explained, I am very familiar with them kind of people, see. In my life I always felt that a dumb person could hurt you more than any informants. For instance, like hundred informers—a dumb person, now this person I would say, he made a dumb statement but it meant a whole life to me. Do you get that?

Senator MUSKIE. Yes, I get that. Now I would like to get out in the yard at the time you killed—I do not think we have the victim's name—What was his name?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Joseph Saupp.

Senator MUSKIE. Is that the man?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUSKIE. Is this out in the prison yard?

Mr. VALACHI. Out in the prison yard.

Senator MUSKIE. You saw him some distance away from you before you picked up the iron pipe to go after him?

Mr. VALACHI. I would say no more than 12 feet.

Senator MUSKIE. What was his attitude? Was he looking at you?

Mr. VALACHI. He was not looking, he was walking. I pounced upon him from the rear.

Senator MUSKIE. Did you feel at that time that they were prepared while you were out in the yard to get you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUSKIE. What made you feel that?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, right now I couldn't tell you.

Senator MUSKIE. You mentioned to the chairman several names, Charles Barcelona, Joe Beck, Charlie Beck, Johnny Dio, Trigger Mike Coppola, and LaPlaca.

Were all of them or some of them in prison with you at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they out in the yard?

Mr. VALACHI. They were Vito's close associates.

Like Johnny Dio is another important man. Johnny Dio is the man who was arrested for the—you remember, the newspaper man, I don't remember his name, that they threw some acid at—on Broadway—Victor Reisel. Johnny Dio was the one who was accused of ordering that. Do you remember that?

Senator MUSKIE. Yes, that is when Victor Reisel was blinded.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I am trying to make you realize who Johnny Dio was.

Senator MUSKIE. He was in prison at the time this took place with you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. That is the one who spoke to me in the shower and looked up in the air.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 113

Senator MUSKIE. Did you see all of them in the yard or some of them out in the yard at the time you hit——

Mr. VALACHI. You mean at the time I was walking?

Senator MUSKIE. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't see a soul. That is why I was walking up and down. I couldn't understand. As I explained to you, I don't know actually what I had in mind.

Senator MUSKIE. But you had the feeling that they were setting out to get you in the yard that day?

Mr. VALACHI. A hundred percent.

Senator MUSKIE. This fellow you mistook for Joe Beck was part of it?

Mr. VALACHI. If I could tell you other than in public you would understand why I had the feeling. I can't say it, Senator, not right now I can't. Will you spare me that, Senator?

Senator MUSKIE. You understood this man was Joe Beck?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator MUSKIE. Why did you decide to kill him at that time at that spot?

Mr. VALACHI. Because he was the guy that spotted me at that time. In other words, I felt that was my last day, in plain English. I felt that was my last day.

Senator MUSKIE. Did you feel you could get all of them before they could get you?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know what I would have done if I didn't see him. I can't answer what I would have done.

Senator MUSKIE. In other words, you felt helpless and surrounded and you decided to strike when you could?

Mr. VALACHI. When I saw him, yes.

Senator MUSKIE. Did you feel that by killing him you could get back in the hole and thus get protection?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUSKIE. In other words, this was a defense for you? You thought if you killed this man, whom you thought was going to kill you anyway——

Mr. VALACHI. I got some satisfaction, Senator. Put it that way.

Senator MUSKIE. You got some satisfaction.

That is all, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I might make this observation. We will put the criminal records of these folks in the record this afternoon. We are going to get to the point quick. But we will put them in the record to show that you had justification, knowing they were that type people, that they will kill.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Curtis?

Senator CURTIS. I think I will pass for now.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator McIntyre?

Senator MCINTYRE. Joe, in view of all these disclosures to the FBI and Justice you have made, how safe do you feel?

Mr. VALACHI. The way I am now, right now?

Senator MCINTYRE. How safe do you feel?

Mr. VALACHI. At this moment?

Senator MCINTYRE. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. I feel fine.

Senator McINTYRE. How would you feel if you went back to prison?

Mr. VALACHI. I will have to protect myself again, Senator. I will have to kill or be killed. I will not say they will kill me. I will always fight back if I go in prison.

Senator McINTYRE. Would it be fair to say that if you went back to prison that you would be a dead man?

Mr. VALACHI. If they got at me I wouldn't be in there 5 minutes, Senator.

Senator McINTYRE. What was your specialty in the field of crime?

Mr. VALACHI. Burglary.

Senator McINTYRE. This is what you did to make a living in addition to the jukebox business?

Mr. VALACHI. In my younger days.

Senator McINTYRE. In your younger days?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. Did you perform burglary after you became a member of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, no.

Senator McINTYRE. No further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Javits.

Senator JAVITS. Your criminal record shows that you were convicted in 1923 and in 1925 and you were not again convicted until 1960; is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, may I interrupt? Have you seen the record?

Senator JAVITS. I have it.

The CHAIRMAN. All of it? I think there are some convictions or suspensions in there. I do not know if you all have that.

Senator JAVITS. You were convicted in April 1925 on a burglary charge and in 1961 on a narcotics charge.

Now, the intervening period is 35 years, from 1925 until 1960.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Now, in that intervening period of 35 years, did you have any criminal convictions?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator JAVITS. Did you have any criminal arrests?

Mr. VALACHI. Picked up, yes; we use that expression "picked up."

Senator JAVITS. How many times were you picked up in 35 years?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't remember, Senator. If you have it there, you can refresh my memory.

Senator JAVITS. I have no record of your arrests. Were there many times?

Mr. VALACHI. Not too many times.

Senator JAVITS. A few times?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. Now, exactly to what do you attribute your immunity from convictions in 35 years? How do you account for the fact that in 35 years you pursued a criminal career and you were not convicted once?

Mr. VALACHI. Actually, I was not committing any crimes.

Do you mean crimes for making a living?

Senator JAVITS. Yes; the crimes that you described, yourself.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, after you get used to burglarizing or committing crimes, you don't feel these other things are crimes. For instance, I had been in some machines. I don't think that was a crime; everybody else had them. I don't know how to explain them. I had dress shops. I had horses. Everybody else was selling stamps.

How am I going to explain it to you, Senator?

Senator JAVITS. Now, in selling the stamps, did you know it to be an activity that was unlawful?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I did.

Senator JAVITS. Were you ever arrested while you were selling stamps?

Mr. VALACHI. I was only questioned.

Senator JAVITS. You were questioned by the police?

Mr. VALACHI. That is all.

Senator JAVITS. Were you represented, for example, by lawyers in that time when you were picked up?

Mr. VALACHI. When you are picked up, sometimes yes; sometimes no. Sometimes you don't even require a lawyer.

Senator JAVITS. How did you seek the help of your family when you were picked up?

Mr. VALACHI. I used to get my own help. What family do you mean?

Senator JAVITS. The family to which you belonged, the Genovese family.

Mr. VALACHI. I never bothered them. If I got picked up, I got myself out, I got my own lawyers.

Senator JAVITS. Did they give you any protection in the 35 years?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator JAVITS. They did not furnish lawyers?

Mr. VALACHI. Never.

Senator JAVITS. Or bondsmen?

Mr. VALACHI. Never. I got my own bondsmen, my own lawyers.

Senator JAVITS. What use were they to you during that time?

Mr. VALACHI. As I say, they feel that they protect you in anything you have, whatever business you may have, and somebody wants to step on your toes, then you run to them and they protect you.

Senator JAVITS. Did you do that in the course of your 35 years?

Mr. VALACHI. I went through that; yes.

Senator JAVITS. You did?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. In what connection? What did they do for you?

Mr. VALACHI. They straighten it out. If you are right you get your rights.

Senator JAVITS. Can you give us one example in which you went to them and they protected you and how they did it? What rights you got?

Mr. VALACHI. It would be like, let us put it this way, when I was in the numbers business.

Senator JAVITS. The numbers business?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Many times we lost a runner and all we had to do is, if the runner belonged to us—when I say “us,” I mean my office—we presented it to the lieutenant, he takes care of it.

If he belongs to you and somebody took him, well, he will come back.

Senator JAVITS. In other words, if the runner went to work for somebody else, the lieutenant got him back?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Sometimes they steal runners on you. You find out they are working under a different name, something like that.

Senator JAVITS. That actually worked for you. You actually got a runner back?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. And I returned them to them, too.

Senator JAVITS. And you returned a runner to the other people?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. When your lieutenant told you to?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. What did you pay the lieutenant for this?

Mr. VALACHI. Nothing.

Senator JAVITS. Did you do anything for the family at all in this time or did you just do things for you?

Mr. VALACHI. Just kill for them.

Senator JAVITS. When they asked you to do something like that, you will tell us about that later in the hearing.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JAVITS. That is the only thing you did for them, that was the only relationship; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. Did you have any idea how Vito Genovese made all this money that would break an adding machine if he got nothing from you, and you are typical soldier? How did he make all this money?

Mr. VALACHI. Vito Genovese had a big lottery of his own, Italian lottery. In those days, it was very, very big. Vito Genovese had the whole village of slot machines. Vito Genovese has lots of interests in gambling like Las Vegas and Havana, Cuba, when it was there, and he has legitimate businesses. He has his name in lots of enterprises.

Senator JAVITS. Now, what he got out of it then, your actions and those of other members of the family, was to kill off or otherwise deal with people who were bothering him; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Anybody bothering him, naturally he has the soldiers.

Senator JAVITS. That is the function of the family?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JAVITS. That is mutual protection?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JAVITS. Through strong-arm methods by you or by other soldiers?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JAVITS. That is the total of it.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JAVITS. Otherwise, everybody operates by himself. They may take in partners but that is their option.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JAVITS. Do you think this family is still in business?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. You think it is?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. You will in due course be giving us the names of those who are running it right now?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I am doing that now.

Senator CURTIS. In that connection, did they divide up the territory? Even though you operated on your own, you knew where you could operate?

Mr. VALACHI. No. You see, Senator, you take Harlem, for instance. We have about four families all mixed up there. There isn't any territory. You find Brooklyn guys in New York and New York into Brooklyn. They get along very well. If anything, you have in Brooklyn, in fact they help protect it for you. I would not say it is territories. You take, for instance, in Harlem, we have about three families bumping into one another. You have the Gambino family, the Lucchese family, and you have the Genovese family right in Harlem.

Harlem, it is not considered a big, how would you explain it, you know, it runs from 125th Street to about 186th Street. You have three families right there. You have members there from all different groups.

Senator CURTIS. One other question. If it is a long answer you do not need to give it now. But these stamps, these ration stamps that you sold, were they forgeries, or were they official stamps gotten away from the Government somehow?

Mr. VALACHI. There were forgeries around but I didn't bother with forgeries.

Senator CURTIS. Yours were genuine stamps?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Counterfeiting, we understand that kind of charge. There were so many legitimate stamps around I didn't think it was wise to go around with counterfeit stamps.

Senator CURTIS. Somebody was getting those out of the Government office?

Mr. VALACHI. OPA office.

Senator CURTIS. Direct from the OPA office to the gang?

Mr. VALACHI. I would not say for the gang, for the individual to whom he sold them. In other words, I didn't have any but a partner of mine, he had an OPA but he never made me know who he was, he kept him to himself.

Senator MUSKIE. Did you know how those stamps were obtained from the Government? If it is a long story, you do not need to relate it now.

Mr. VALACHI. I think I will describe that, Senator.

Senator CURTIS. We will go into that later.

Senator JAVITS. Do you attribute the fact that you were not convicted of a crime for 35 years to your membership in this family? Do you connect the two at all?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator JAVITS. You were just lucky?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator JAVITS. And you changed the nature of activities?

Mr. VALACHI. Put it that way.

Senator JAVITS. So your membership in the family had nothing to do, in your own opinion—

Mr. VALACHI. I was never in a position, if I was I would tell you, Senator, I was never in a position where the family helped me.

Senator JAVITS. In that 35 years?

118 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Probably I didn't need it. I was lucky. But if you were caught in anything they tell you to do, then you get their backing.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Brewster.

Senator BREWSTER. Joe, following the same line of questioning, the organization did help other members, did they not?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, how would you explain it, it is a sort of little politics like, in that line.

Senator BREWSTER. Insurance policy?

Mr. VALACHI. Politicking.

Senator BREWSTER. Is it usually possible for the organization to kill somebody when they are in prison if they want to?

Mr. VALACHI. No. I think he went a little too far, Vito Genovese, in this case. Usually, I done time in my younger days and inmates just want to put their time in jail and want to get out. I have known where they settle their affairs outside and they didn't bother killing one another in jail.

I can't account for Vito Genovese's power and his power craze. I thought he made a big mistake in trying to handle this affair of mine.

Can you understand what I mean? Power went to his head. How else can I explain it to you, Senator?

Senator BREWSTER. Do you know if Vito tried to kill anybody, any other people in jail, by poison or hanging?

Mr. VALACHI. There was people killed but not in this particular time. They were killed, for instance, there was a witness against him in Murder, Inc. Do you remember that?

Senator BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. There was a Peter Latempo poisoning.

Senator BREWSTER. What happened to him?

Mr. VALACHI. They found him poisoned in Raymond Street jail while he was there waiting to testify against Vito.

There was another one, Abe Reles. He was also supposed to testify. He fell out of the window.

Senator BREWSTER. How did he fall out of the window, do you know?

Mr. VALACHI. They threw him out.

Senator BREWSTER. These men were waiting to testify?

Mr. VALACHI. Against Vito and Albert Anastasia.

Senator BREWSTER. One was poisoned and one was thrown out of the window?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I think you remember the Kefauver investigation. That was brought out at that time, I remember that, about 11 years ago.

Senator BREWSTER. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

The committee will stand in recess until 2:30.

We hope to run for about an hour or hour and a half this afternoon.

(Members present at time of recess: Senators McClellan, Muskie, McIntyre, Brewster, Mundt, Curtis, and Javits.)

(Whereupon, at 12:35 p.m., the subcommittee recessed until 2:30 p.m., this same day.)

(The hearing was resumed at 2:35 p.m., Senator McClellan presiding.)

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will be in order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at the convening of the session were Senators McClellan, Muskie, and McIntyre.)

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Valachi, this morning we covered generally the incidents and things that led up to your committing an offense for which you received a life sentence. You expressed regret about that in that there was a mistake of identity, and you actually attacked an innocent man, innocent from the standpoint of having never harmed you in any way, and not one of those whom you thought were in a conspiracy to liquidate you.

I will ask you this: With the background that you gave us this morning, and there is more to fill in on it, would you care to tell us why you have been willing under these circumstances to tell the law enforcement officials and come and tell this committee your story, what you know?

Are you willing to tell us why you came to that decision, having in mind what you testified to here, that giving information to law enforcement officials or cooperating with them under the code and the law of Cosa Nostra invites and usually receives a death penalty?

You stated that you are in fear of your life even if you return to the prison, if you don't have protection, they can even reach into the inside walls of prison and carry out their plans to liquidate those whom they feel have violated their laws.

In view of that, would you tell us why under these circumstances, you decided to cooperate with the Department of Justice and its agencies and with this committee?

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Mr. VALACHI. The main answer to that is very simple. No. 1, it is to destroy them.

The CHAIRMAN. To what?

Mr. VALACHI. To destroy them.

The CHAIRMAN. Destroy who?

Mr. VALACHI. The Cosa Nostra leaders, or the bosses. The whole—how would you explain it—that exists.

The CHAIRMAN. You want to destroy the whole syndicate or the whole organization?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Why do you feel like it should be destroyed?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, through the years, first of all I was concerned, and second, they have been very bad to the soldiers and they have been thinking for themselves, all through the years. It is all put together, and I put together so many things that it all comes to that, to destroy them.

The CHAIRMAN. There are just many reasons that add up to the fact that you don't think such an organization should be permitted to operate, or to exist, is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. As the Senator put it before, what did I get out of it? Nothing but misery. As you all understand, once you are in, you can't get out.

The CHAIRMAN. Once you are in, there is no way to get out?

120 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no way to escape their penalties. You can try to get out?

Mr. VALACHI. You try but that doesn't mean that you are going to stay out.

The CHAIRMAN. You don't get out and live?

Mr. VALACHI. They will hunt you, that is right. Is that a good description of it, it is the best I can. Did I give you a good description of it? It is the best way I can express it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think I understand you. But I asked you a question when I conferred with you out at the jail. I think it was last Tuesday afternoon. I asked you what you thought that Congress might do, and what we might do to combat this organization or this kind of a criminal syndicate, and you answered me, and do you want to tell me again what you said then?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I was hoping that you or Congress, and I don't understand too much, but talking to you Senators, I understand that you would come up with some law so as to make it a penalty or felony or whatever you may want to call it, to belong to this organization.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, outlaw the organization, and make it a crime to even belong to it?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. That is what I asked.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, I had not suggested that to you, and I don't know whether anyone had or not. When I asked you the question, what you thought we could do—

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. You then are saying here today, after having given your testimony, and you have much more to give, that you would like to see this organization, this Cosa Nostra destroyed.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, and I will ask you again the same question—if you make such a law, I would be a happy man.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. If you Senators make such a law, so it would be a crime just to belong to it, I will be a happy man.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe that you said to me at that time in the presence of others, that if there had not been such an organization, if there had not been, you did not think that you would be here today?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, naturally I wouldn't be here. That is for sure.

The CHAIRMAN. You might have been committing burglaries, such as you were before, and you might have been in prison, but there would not have been the necessity for you to have to take somebody's life; that is what you mean?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right, and I would have stopped sometime, and I couldn't go on all of the time, and I would have eventually gotten into some kind of business and I would have gone out from there.

The CHAIRMAN. Once you were in this organization, you belong to it?

Mr. VALACHI. In other words, I got out of the frying pan into the fire. That is my way of expressing it.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, on this point, do my colleagues wish to ask any questions and I am going to move to something else in a moment. But that is what I thought would conclude this morning's hearings.

Are there any questions?

Senator MUSKIE. This morning we got into some discussion of the nature of Cosa Nostra. Is this organization anything like the Mafia, or is it part of the Mafia, or is it the Mafia?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, as long as I belong to this Cosa Nostra, all I can tell you is that they never express it as a Mafia. When I was speaking, I just spoke what I knew.

Senator MUSKIE. Let us suspend to see if we can get the microphones working again.

Now go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. Now, Senator, I don't know what they called it in Italy. I know this thing existed a long time, but in my time I have been with this Cosa Nostra and that is the way it was called, the way I am telling you, Senators, that the outsiders call it the Mafia, and they call it buttons, or combination, or organization, and they have been using half a dozen expressions. That is all I can tell you.

Senator MUSKIE. But you never called it Mafia within the organization?

Mr. VALACHI. We never did.

Senator MUSKIE. That is all, Mr Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions from any member of the committee?

Very well, now, we will suspend with you for a moment, and you just remain where you are, and I want to put some material in the record.

Will you be sworn, please?

Do you solemnly swear that the evidence, given before this Senate subcommittee will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Sergeant SALERNO. I do.

TESTIMONY OF SGT. RALPH SALERNO

The CHAIRMAN. Will you be seated.

Will you identify yourself for the record?

Sergeant SALERNO. Sgt. Ralph Salerno, of the New York City Police Department.

The CHAIRMAN. What are your duties?

Sergeant SALERNO. I am assigned to the supervision of the detectives in the central investigation bureau, which is the intelligence unit of our department.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have custody in that position of criminal records of individuals, their records and convictions and arrests?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir; we do.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask the counsel to proceed to interrogate you.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Detective Salerno, you are a sergeant detective?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And how long have you been with the police force?

Sergeant SALERNO. I have been with them 17 years.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And are you the expert for New York City police force on organized crime, the Mafia, and syndicate operations or Cosa Nostra?

Sergeant SALERNO. I am one of the men assigned to that work.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you speak their language?

Sergeant SALERNO. I do speak and understand Italian.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were you raised in a city close by where these people are operating?

Sergeant SALERNO. All of my life, yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And you understand what makes them tick?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I might say, that Detective Salerno has an enviable war record and he is considered by the New York City Police Department as their foremost expert in this field.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You heard the testimony of Mr. Valachi?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir; I have.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And he described a number of people who are members of the Cosa Nostra who are in the Atlanta prison or within the Atlanta prison?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. At the time that Mr. Vito Agueci called him an informant or a rat or words to that effect, he described the fact that there were a number of these people adjacent to Agueci and he feared a setup, and he named among them Michael Coppola. Do you know Michael Coppola?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you have a copy of the police record of Michael Coppola?

Sergeant SALERNO. I have submitted that to you, yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I present you herewith a document and ask you if you can identify it, please.

What is the document you have?

Sergeant SALERNO. This is a prisoner's criminal record, which is maintained in the Bureau of Criminal Identification, of the New York City Police Department. This particular document is the record of Michael Coppola, also known as Trigger Mike, and it is identified as being No. 54988.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, let it be made exhibit No. 1 to this testimony, and let it also be printed in the record, that part of it that can be placed in the record.

(The document was marked exhibit No. 1 and follows:)

The CHAIRMAN. Would you give us some of the record that you can present?

Sergeant SALERNO. In 1925, Joe Beck was arrested for selling narcotics and he was so convicted. He was arrested.

The CHAIRMAN. In 1925 he was convicted on a narcotics charge?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Just go ahead.

Sergeant SALERNO. In 1928 he was arrested for possession of a dangerous weapon, a knife. This charge was discharged. In 1937 he was arrested for the transportation of liquor and he received a $250 fine. In 1938 he was arrested for transportation of untaxed liquor, a Federal arrest, by the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. May I interrupt you? I am advised by staff here that he has a five-page record here. Is that correct?

I didn't want to take time to read all of it.

Sergeant SALERNO. There are that many pages of entries and not that many arrests, Senator. He was arrested for an unregistered still, and the sale and possession of counterfeit gasoline stamps and conspiracy to violate the internal revenue laws, for which he received 1 year and 1 day. He was arrested for alcohol tax violation, possession of counterfeit money, and conspiracy to violate the narcotics laws.

The CHAIRMAN. I see one arrest for homicide, too.

Sergeant SALERNO. I read that, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, present the next one.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I present the police record of Charles Barceloni, one of the men mentioned by Mr. Valachi, who he feared in jail.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you examine this one, please?

Sergeant SALERNO. This, Senator, is the criminal record of Charles Barceloni, who also uses the name of Joseph Barcellono occasionally and identified as B116817. It indicates arrests.

Sergeant SALERNO. 1943, he was arrested for burglary, and this was discharged. In 1946 he was taken into custody as a drug addict from Severn, N.Y., and turned over to the authorities of that city, and again in 1946, perjury in the second degree, this is a Federal arrest and this is the one for which he was wanted in Severn, N.Y. He received a suspended sentence, $50 fine, and placed on probation for 2 years. In 1946 he was arrested for burglary and possessing burglary tools, and this was dismissed. In 1949 he was arrested by the Alcohol Tax Unit of the Federal Government, for violation of the internal revenue laws. In 1949, burglary and unlawful entry and he received a suspended sentence and probation.

In 1950, forgery charge was dismissed against him.

He was arrested for disorderly conduct and he received a $3 fine, and he has a second arrest for disorderly conduct and it was dismissed.

On another arrest in 1957 for disorderly conduct he got a $10 fine and 3 days in jail. He was arrested again in 1959 for disorderly conduct again, which charge was dismissed.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Let me ask you, if you regard these records, the parties whose records have been placed in the record here about which you have testified—would you regard those as indicating or as being those of what you might term habitual criminals?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They are all repeaters?

Sergeant SALERNO. They have all been arrested a number of times, as I have read into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, is there any question on these now before I move to something else?

Senator BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I have just one question. On the case of Johnny Dio, I noted there was a 15-year term in 1956, and yet a further arrest in 1960. Does the record show why or how he was released after receiving a 15-year term?

Sergeant SALERNO. I believe there may have been a reversal. I will see if the record indicates that.

It isn't clearly reflected here, but it was reversed on appeal.

Senator BREWSTER. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Now I wish to present to you another record, criminal record, and I ask you to examine it and identify whose it is.

Sergeant SALERNO. This is the criminal record of Joseph Valachi, also known as Joseph Cargo, he used the names Charles Charbano, Anthony Sorge, and he has used the name Joseph Siano. B-58968, FBI No. 544.

Mr. HUNDLEY. We have been working together on the hearings, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. The one with the glasses on is Joe Beck?

Mr. HUNDLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Let that picture be received in evidence and made exhibit No. 7.

(The photograph referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 7" and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. HUNDLEY. And the picture of the other gentleman without the glasses is Joseph Saupp.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the victim of Valachi's attack?

Mr. HUNDLEY. That is right, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Am I right now, Mr. Valachi, the one that he presented first, of Beck, is the one you thought you were striking?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It turns out that this other man, Saupp, is the one you actually struck.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now I would like for that picture to be made exhibit 7-A so that we can keep them together. We cannot print those pictures in this record but I want them filed as an exhibit so that it can readily be seen how easy it was to make a mistake in identity.

(The photograph referred to was marked "Exhibit 7-A" and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Counsel, you may proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was he brought into the organization, Cosa Nostra, by Ciro Terranova?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who was the next associate?

Mr. VALACHI. Al Brown. I forget his second name.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is he in the United States today?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is he back now?

Mr. VALACHI. Up to the time I was in the street, he was back.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was he in the country legally or illegally?

Mr. VALACHI. He sneaked back.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know where he is located now?

Mr. VALACHI. At the time when I was in the street, Mr. Adlerman, he was supposed to be around Brooklyn. I don't know where he is at now.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is he using any other name now?

Mr. VALACHI. Al Brown.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know "Pip the Blind"; is that another one of your earlier associates?

Mr. VALACHI. That is Joseph Gagliano, yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was he a member of the Ciro Terranova Cosa Nostra family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He is not alive today, is he?

Mr. VALACHI. That is the one I spoke about this morning, the one who was supposed to have hanged himself in the Bronx jail.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you think he hanged himself?

Mr. VALACHI. That is the way the rumor was. He was talking to the district attorney or somebody and he hung himself around that time while he was talking.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you believe that?

Mr. VALACHI. You know, I don't know if they hung him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is your opinion?

Mr. VALACHI. My opinion was that they hung him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He did not hang himself?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know who.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you think he hung himself or they hanged him?

Mr. VALACHI. I and several of the boys felt that they hung him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was there another associate of yours called Chick 99?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was his real name?

Mr. VALACHI. I have to hear his name, too.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know him also by the name of Frank Cal-lace, C-a-l-l-a-c-e?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is he a member of Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What family is he with?

Mr. VALACHI. The Lucchese family.

Mr. ADLERMAN. With status of a soldier?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Charley Bullets; do you know him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Charles Albero is his real name?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What family does he belong to?

Mr. VALACHI. Theodore Genovese today but Mike Coppola is his lieutenant.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He is under the regime of Mike Coppola?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But he is in the Genovese family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Joe Hardy?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Hardy was never a member.

Mr. ADLERMAN. His name was Joseph Pellegrino.

Mr. VALACHI. Right. He was deported.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What type of burglary did you engage in at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. We were crashing windows, jewelry windows or fur windows, taking expensive furs and suits, silk and that line.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What area were you crashing?

Mr. VALACHI. You mean what particular area?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Any part of the city.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you specialize in any area like Madison Avenue or Lexington Avenue?

Mr. VALACHI. If you want to get good coats you had to go to Fifth Avenue or Sixth Avenue or Madison Avenue.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What would be the nature of the operation? How would you engage in the operation?

Mr. VALACHI. We threw a milk can in one of them. We started that way. We grabbed the coats and run, get into the car and go.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you use the car to do that?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. We developed a name, the police called us Minutemen.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Why did they call you the Minutemen?

Mr. VALACHI. Because we got away from the burglary either in a minute's time or less. Because these stores, most of them have what we call Holmes protection. They take about 5 to 7 minutes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you ever time them before you made a real attempt?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How would you do that?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 139

Mr. VALACHI. I threw a brick in the window on 125th Street once because the patrol office was 125th Street West. I had something in mind 125th Street East. So I threw a brick in to see how long it would take them to come.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you time them?

Mr. VALACHI. About 5 minutes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. By then you felt safe if you could do it in less than that time?

Mr. VALACHI. If we got away from there in less than a minute or a minute.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How many of these types of robberies would you do in a week at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. A couple a week.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Two?

Mr. VALACHI. Two, three.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Any more than three?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, according to how the weather is.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was your function?

Mr. VALACHI. I used to drive all the time.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You had a reputation as a driver of the getaway car?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you have your car especially equipped in any way?

Mr. VALACHI. I had a special pinion gear for second speed, just second speed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You used to have a second gear especially?

Mr. VALACHI. At that time, the mechanic used to call it a special pinion gear. Instead of this big, it would be this big [indicating].

Mr. ADLERMAN. This would bear up the second gear a little higher so that you could get away faster?

Mr. VALACHI. Pick up faster.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You could go how fast with that?

Mr. VALACHI. At that time, 60 miles an hour in second was a lot of speed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That was a hot car?

Mr. VALACHI. That was a lot of speed at that time.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What did you do with the coats and jewelry? How did you dispose of it?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, one burglary had a Jewish fence which I don't remember. The jewelry was disposed through the boys on 107th Street, the ones like Al Brown and Big Dick and one Vincent Rao.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Vincent Rao was one of the boys who was a fence for jewelry for you?

Mr. VALACHI. He was considered a big man at that time to us.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was considered a big man at the time as a fence?

Mr. VALACHI. To us, you know.

Mr. ADLERMAN. To the gang which operated?

Mr. VALACHI. To us.

The CHAIRMAN. How many were in your gang, would you say?

Mr. VALACHI. At that time, that is the year 1922, about six or seven or eight.

The CHAIRMAN. How many?

Mr. VALACHI. Six or seven or eight.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a small gang of you boys?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Young fellows? They were all young people like you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; 1 year apart in age, maybe 2 years.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What rank does Vincent Rao hold today in the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. He is consiglieri.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In what family?

Mr. VALACHI. Tommy Brown.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is the Lucchese family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Tommy Brown is the alias for Lucchese?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He is a consiglieri?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is a high position; is it not?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. He was a lieutenant before that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now he is one of the counsel?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. An adviser to the gang, is that it?

Mr. VALACHI. As I explained to you—

Mr. ADLERMAN. I understood.

In the robberies you had, as I understand in one case you had a burglary of jewelry, diamonds. What was the value of those diamonds?

Mr. VALACHI. $30,000 to $35,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What did you get for it?

Mr. VALACHI. We got $4,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Would that be about the average of your return in value, if you sold $5,000 you would get maybe $1,000?

Mr. VALACHI. No, they could have got more for that. They should have got more.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But is that usually the proportion you get back?

Mr. VALACHI. It should have been at least $7,500. But at that time they got $4,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You should get about 20 percent of the value?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, in 1925, you were convicted on a burglary charge, the Tremont Avenue burglary charge?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was this in about August of 1923 that this robbery was committed or was it earlier than that?

Mr. VALACHI. I think I remember the date. The burglary was committed on July 12, 1925. I remember that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. While you were attempting to get away—you were driving the car—were you shot?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I was shot in the arm.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Shot in the arm? And you were later picked up for the robbery?

Mr. VALACHI. I was identified by police. He was so close to me—do you want me to describe that?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Go ahead in your own way.

Mr. VALACHI. They sneaked up on us. The policeman put a gun to my head. He told me to get out of the car. I made him believe I was getting out of the car, I always had it in speed. I felt underneath the dashboard, I fed the gas with my hand. I gave it all she had blindly.

When I came up, I was hit in the arm. They fired about 72 shots at us. There were 12 men firing.

I found myself in the middle of the street. I was going about 80 miles an hour at that time, in high speed. We landed on the concourse. I didn't know the Bronx too good then. All the way down from the concourse, all the way up, all the way down to Harlem there was police booths on the concourse at that time. Every time we came to one, he emptied his gun at us.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How many shots were fired altogether?

Mr. VALACHI. On Tremont, about 72 shots.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You were caught and you were tried for that case?

Mr. VALACHI. I was picked up about 2 months later.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What were you sentenced to?

Mr. VALACHI. One year three months to two years and six months.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How long did you serve?

Mr. VALACHI. Eleven months and twenty days.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask you, was anyone else in your gang, that participated in your burglary with you, apprehended at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. No, only one. They identified me because I was at the wheel.

The CHAIRMAN. I beg your pardon?

Mr. VALACHI. He identified me because I was at the wheel. The other ones all had their heads down, "Step on it, step on it"; you know.

The CHAIRMAN. They did not get the others?

Mr. VALACHI. No. I went away alone.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not tell on them?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Mr. ADLERMAN. As the driver of the car in your particular outfit, were you the brains of this group?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the chauffeur is the most important thing.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In this particular type of burglary?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You are the one who makes the final decision whether to go or not to go on these robberies or these burglaries?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You would plan it and you would look over the place to determine whether or not it was worthwhile going into and whether or not you had a proper getaway area?

Mr. VALACHI. Certain locations, certain times. You know, some locations you could not do anything at 4 o'clock, you had to go back at 5, or some 6 o'clock in the morning, you know, according to where the location was.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, you were released from Sing Sing about July 1924 and you were left out on parole, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you continue in your career of burglary at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. When you came out had you found that the gang had moved to another street at that time, another hangout?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I found that the gang increased.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you still continue in this career until you were caught again the second time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In between the time you were caught the second time and the time that you left jail on your first offense, did you acquire any new members of the gang?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. This is 1924; right?

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is right.

Mr. VALACHI. I met Joe Rao, some other fellows that they called the "Irish Mob." Do you want me to name them?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Well, you can name them, yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Steve Foley, Pete Hessler, Frank Capone, Al Chovi, Nick Caputo. Did I mention Dutch Hogey?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Dutch Hogey?

Mr. VALACHI. Dutch Hogey.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you have a fellow named Connif in your gang?

Mr. VALACHI. "Killer" Connif.

Mr. ADLERMAN. C-o-n-n-i-f.

Mr. VALACHI. And Ice Cart Wagon.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know his real name?

Mr. VALACHI. No. "Bum" Rogers.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, you became affiliated with that gang, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, everybody was together. Everybody was friendly.

Mr. ADLERMAN. While you were still on a job with your original 106th Street gang, were you shot during the time of a burglary of a silk warehouse, silk store, or something?

Mr. VALACHI. 174th Street and Nichols Avenue, one of the fellows had a brother who was a policeman. I understood that this policeman was in on this burglary. I didn't like the idea. But they talked me into it. Anyway, we went up there.

At this time now, we are not crashing windows any more. They get in through the front doors. They discovered some kind of tools. We jimmied, we used an expression "jimmied" the doors.

One of the tools broke and they came over and asked me, "Do we have time to go back to Harlem?"

I said, "Sure. Get in the car."

As we were riding I only heard one shot and I was shot in the head.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You were shot in the back of the head?

Mr. VALACHI. In the back of the head.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know what the gang did with you at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Naturally, I found out after, I was told that Charley Bullets took the wheel. They put me in the back of the car and Charley Bullets took the wheel. They placed me in the street at 114th Street and Pleasant Avenue. They fired about five or six shots in the air.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was the purpose of firing these shots?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 143

Mr. VALACHI. This way when they picked me up the authorities would feel that I was shot at 114th Street.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, they pretended to shoot, they shot six shots in the air and then they felt the authorities would feel that somebody tried to rob you or kill you there, is that the idea?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. In this way, it would take the crush away from 174th Street and Nichols Avenue.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What happened as a result of that?

Mr. VALACHI. They came back about an hour later. I was still in the street. Nobody came.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Nobody paid any attention?

Mr. VALACHI. Nobody.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Nobody called the police or anything?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What did they do with you then?

Mr. VALACHI. They put me in a baby carriage in the hallway and they went looking for a doctor. Finally they brought me to a doctor. They gave me a whole bottle of Scotch for anesthetic and the doctor took the bullet out.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They used Scotch as an anesthetic while they took the bullet out of the back of your head?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was that done by the doctor?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know who the doctor was?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't remember his name.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What did they do with you after that?

Mr. VALACHI. Then they smuggled me into a hospital on 86th Street. While I was in the hospital, I was numb and giving different stories and calling names. Once I would say I was shot by a hunter. Another time I would say I was shot while walking.

They moved me out of the hospital—

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was that because they felt you were talking too much?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

They brought me to 100th Street and Manhattan Avenue, a hospital called the Community Hospital. I stayed there until I got released. I was there about 3 months, semiconscious.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They treated you in this hospital?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know whether that was ever reported to the police?

Mr. VALACHI. No, that was never reported.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know how much they paid the doctor for this?

Mr. VALACHI. They told me they gave the doctor $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. That was back about 1924?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. They paid him $2,500 just for taking the bullet out of your head?

Mr. VALACHI. No, for the whole 3 months.

The CHAIRMAN. And treatment, too? That is for all your treatment and the doctor?

144 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was it the one doctor all the way through?

Mr. VALACHI. No, this was the doctor only.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The last one?

Mr. VALACHI. The one in Community Hospital.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know his first name?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I don't.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Following your release from the hospital, you say you then became associated at the time with what you describe as the Irish gang and that was really not an Irish gang, it was a gang of different nationalities, is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the witness is growing a little tired and weary and would like to discontinue for today.

Would you wait a minute or two, though, and let us see if there are any questions the Senators wish to ask at this time?

He has a problem. I told him we would try to accommodate him when he gets tired.

Do you feel, Joe, you are tired?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The lights are troubling you?

Mr. VALACHI. I would appreciate it, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. You will be prepared, you will be ready to come back when the committee reconvenes next Tuesday?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you will resume your testimony?

Mr. VALACHI. I will be here.

The CHAIRMAN. You will be here.

Very well. The committee will stand in recess until 10:30 next Tuesday morning.

(Members present at time of recess: Senators McClellan, Muskie, and McIntyre.)

(Whereupon, at 4:30 p.m., the subcommittee recessed, to reconvene at 10:30 a.m., Tuesday, October 1, 1963.)

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

The CHAIRMAN. At the time we closed last Friday afternoon, you had just disclosed where you had gotten out of the hospital after you had been there for some time, from a bullet wound in your neck or head.

I believe that you had joined, after you had gotten out, what is called the Irish gang. Is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the Irish gang, does that mean necessarily that all of them were Irishmen, or was that just a name given to the group?

Mr. VALACHI. No, there were only about two Irish.

The CHAIRMAN. I beg your pardon?

Mr. VALACHI. There were only about two Irishmen. There were other Italians.

The CHAIRMAN. It was a mixed group so far as nationality is concerned, but it was known as the Irish gang?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. What developed as between that gang and another gang known as the Italian gang?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the Irish mob shot up the 116th Street gang; that is an Italian mob.

The CHAIRMAN. They shot up the Italian mob?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; the 116th Street and First Avenue; 116th Street and First Avenue that was.

The CHAIRMAN. On 116th Street?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there any casualties in that shooting?

Mr. VALACHI. Before the shooting, I wasn't around for a couple of days, but I heard about it afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. You left town or you were not present?

Mr. VALACHI. I wasn't present. There were no casualties; there was nobody hurt.

The CHAIRMAN. Nobody was hurt?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Later, did you meet or had you already known Vincent Rao?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; I was up in some friend's house, playing lotto, around Christmas time, and I know it is a game of lotto, you call numbers out, and I was away about 2 days and I came around looking for some of the boys and I didn't know what happened on 116th Street. So when I went to Seventh Street, everybody jumped at me. They were coming out of all kinds of hallways, you know.

The CHAIRMAN. Everybody looked at you?

Mr. VALACHI. Jumped at me. Everybody was looking to shoot me. Vince Rao had come in and he held everybody back, and I said, "What is the matter?"

He said, "Don't you know what happened on 116th Street?" and I said, "I don't know nothing."

He said, "Didn't you drive the car?" and I said, "No; I wasn't around and I don't know anything."

And he said, "Don't worry about anything. I will straighten you out."

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, they thought you were with the Irish gang at the time of the shooting. Did they know that you had been affiliated with it?

Mr. VALACHI. They thought I was.

The CHAIRMAN. They thought you were, and so when you came back to town, they immediately indicated they wanted to get you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What did Rao do?

Mr. VALACHI. With that, Rao told me, and he said, after he quieted them down, he told me that he wanted I should set these guys up, you see. So I told them I would let him know.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 147

Senator MUNDT. Let us have the witness pull the microphone a little closer to him. It is not coming through.

Can you talk a little louder?

Mr. VALACHI. You see, Senator, I have a little sore throat.

Senator MUNDT. You are not used to talking this much, are you?

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Rao told you to take it easy, or what?

Mr. VALACHI. He told me that I could set these guys up. I was friendly with them. Well, naturally, I told him I would let him know.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, he wanted you to set up these guys, and which guys?

Mr. VALACHI. The Irish guys; in other words, get in with them, and then call them up, and make a setup.

The CHAIRMAN. He wanted you to set them up for a killing; is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. I told him I would let him know. Well, the next day I got in touch with the Irish guys and they were amazed. They also thought I was with the 107th Street or 116th. It was all one, 107th and 116th. I explained to them what happened. I told them that I wanted to join them.

The CHAIRMAN. They thought you were with the Italian boys?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Italian boys thought you were with the Irish gang?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. So the next day when they thought you were with the Italian folks, when you talked to them, what happened?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, there was a fellow named Mike, and he died a long time ago, and, in other words, he stood up for me, and he took responsibilities for me. After all, the Irish guys, I knew them a short time, and Mike vouched with his life that I wouldn't do anything wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. VALACHI. That night I called Vince Rao up at the Pompeii Restaurant on 125th Street and 7th Avenue, and I told him, "Hereafter when you people meet me, shoot me, because I am going out to shoot you guys."

He said, "What is the matter?"

"Well," I said, "First, without any reason, everybody is looking to shoot me, and now you give me a contract that only a dog would get. What are you picking on me for, to pick on these guys?" I said, "That is the way I feel."

The CHAIRMAN. A contract was an order to go out and kill, was it?

Mr. VALACHI. An order to doublecross these Irish fellows, and, in other words, I wasn't even sticking up for the Irish guys; I was sticking to my own principles. Why should I set these people up?

So he said, "Well, jeez, I want to talk," and I said, "You can't talk to me."

I said, "From now on, all of you, I am going to look for you." So I hung up on him.

Can you hear me?

So with that, this lasted a couple of months, looking for one another, but nothing happened. Then they called peace about 3 months later.

Mr. ADLERMAN. At this time you were still out on bail?

Mr. VALACHI. I was out on bail, yes, for 174th Street.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you at that time—you actually renounced the Italian gang, and decided to go with the Irish people?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Or the Irish gang, as it was called?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; I was with the Irish gang.

The CHAIRMAN. What were you engaged in with the Irish gang?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, we met, sometimes I went by myself, and I would meet them and we would go looking for them and they were looking for us, and nothing happened. Nobody found anybody, and then the next thing I hear there was going to be a truce or a peace.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you do while you were with the Irish gang? What kind of business did you engage in, or activities?

Mr. VALACHI. They were doing a little stickup here and there, stick-up jobs here and there. It didn't amount to anything, but it was dangerous, and I sort of didn't like that, you know.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't like the way they were operating?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I didn't like that; no. I had no choice but to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Why didn't you like the way they operated?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, they were sticking up subway stations, and bank messengers, and things like that. And they weren't making any money.

The CHAIRMAN. They were not making any money?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Living too dangerously besides?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. Then I tried to get them, or tried to break them into cracking store windows, like I was doing. And I went with them one night and, well, I had somebody else at the wheel, because I was experienced, and I opened the front door with the tools. I am loading the car up and I see they had people standing outside on the sidewalks. I didn't know what they were doing. Afterwards, we loaded the car up and I took the wheel.

I said, "What are you doing with those people?" and they said, "We aren't going to let those people pass by," and I said, "Jesus, this is not a play any more. This is a stickup. They are sticking up passers-by," and we never done that.

The CHAIRMAN. While you were in there burglarizing, the rest of the gang was out sticking up the folks that were passing by?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, and I called one guy, and he said, "Come here," and they would line them up. And I told them, "What are you doing? This ain't a burglary any more. It is a stickup, you know."

The CHAIRMAN. You thought that was too risky, did you?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I figured burglary, you didn't get much time, and I never cared to have anything to do with stickups. They didn't like it, either, and we never went on that kind of work any more.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you said something about peace between the two gangs a while ago. What happened about that?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, one day there was a meeting and Dutchie told me that Nick is talking about making some peace. So I said, "I hope you know what you are doing," and he said, "Well, Nick wants it."

The CHAIRMAN. Who is Nick?

Mr. VALACHI. Nick Coppola, known as Nick the Thief.

Anyway, we went on this meeting, on 125th Street, up in the Pompeii Restaurant, and there was pretty cold shoulders, and all we did was shook hands with one another, and we had pistols on us, and there was a whole mob of them up there, and Big Dick Amato was calling me names, and I am calling him names back again, and it went on that way, and within 10 or 15 minutes it was all over.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, was peace pretty much effected and did it work out?

Mr. VALACHI. At this time we thought it would, although I suspected it wouldn't.

The CHAIRMAN. You had a little suspicion about it?

Mr. VALACHI. I suspected a little phony peace.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was the leader at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Nick the Thief. And he was a relative of William Moretti, and William Moretti did all of the talking at this Pompeii Restaurant.

The CHAIRMAN. He did the talking at the peace meeting?

Mr. VALACHI. At the peace meeting; yes, sir. Will Moretti was known as a big guy in those days to us.

The CHAIRMAN. He was known as a big guy?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he the leader of one of the gangs?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, he had a lot to say, you see. Naturally, I found out through the years, later on, he was one of the Cosa Nostra members, but at that time we didn't know.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't know?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. That was before you became a member of Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. We didn't know nothing at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't know anything about Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. No; this was 1924.

The CHAIRMAN. What happened after that? Did you continue burglarizing and so forth?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you out on bail at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. I was out on bail.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you ever tried for that offense, the one you were out on bail for?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Could I talk about the factory on 174th Street?

I was out on bail for a burglary in a factory in 174th Street and Park Avenue. I had got a tip that there was a silk factory.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I think you already told us about that.

The CHAIRMAN. You had told us about that, but we have been by that now.

Mr. VALACHI. Then I was called for trial.

The CHAIRMAN. You are out on bail and you were called for trial.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you convicted?

150 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. I pleaded guilty.

The CHAIRMAN. That was in 1925?

Mr. VALACHI. Around 1925; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you went on back to prison?

Mr. VALACHI. I went to Sing Sing.

The CHAIRMAN. How long were you in Sing Sing?

Mr. VALACHI. Forty-four months. I owed some time.

The CHAIRMAN. You owed some time and you were out on parole on another offense?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And you had to pay up that time, and you had to serve that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; and after I paid up for the first sentence, I started my 3 years after that.

The CHAIRMAN. You had to pay up for your first offense; in other words, serve the unexpired time of the first offense, your first conviction first, and then the 3-year sentence began?

Mr. VALACHI. All told, I did 44 months.

The CHAIRMAN. Altogether you served 44 months.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who did you meet while you were in prison at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. While I was in prison, I had read about Frank La Puma being shot at 125th Street and First and Second Avenue.

The CHAIRMAN. You had read about it?

Mr. VALACHI. But I didn't know about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know him before you went there?

Mr. VALACHI. Frank La Puma is one of the Irish mob.

The CHAIRMAN. That you were with?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; and I said they were all mixed. Frank La Puma was Italian. Well, I read about it, he was shot sitting on a stoop at 121st Street, First and Second Avenue, and that is all I could do, was just read about it.

Now, Dutch Hogey came up here, and he is the German I told you about. That is what we called him.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. They called him both ways, Hogey and Hogan. He came up there with 30 years, from his own doings, you know, from a stickup. And he told me, and he said, "Joe, that peace was a sell-out."

The CHAIRMAN. It was a sellout?

Mr. VALACHI. "It was a sellout; they sold you and Frank Coppola out." And I said, "I read about Frank, and do you know who did it?" and he said, "The Bum."

The CHAIRMAN. Had Frank been killed by that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Frank had been killed.

Mr. VALACHI. Dutch Hogey told me who did it.

The CHAIRMAN. Who did it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; and he said the Bum did it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is Bum Rogers of the Irish gang?

Mr. VALACHI. That is another one.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he say what he was paid for it?

Mr. VALACHI. He said, "Can you imagine that bum getting $100 off
Ciro?" and I said, "No kidding."

The CHAIRMAN. Who is Ciro?

Mr. VALACHI. Ciro Terranova.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he the one who was paid to kill La Puma?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; he gave him $100.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. What was he to do about you, and what information did you get about yourself at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, he told me, and he said, "Be careful when you get out," he said, "as I am telling you."

"Nick was in on this?" and he said, "Yes, but he must have been in on it."

The CHAIRMAN. That is Nick the Thief must have been in on it and, in other words, he knew about it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; and he was a relative of Louis Morello.
So, naturally, what could I do but finish out my time, and so when I came out, I was out a few days, and I found out that a friend of mine was driving Ciro Morello around. I went there.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you understand that you were to be killed, too?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, Dutch Hogey told me.

The CHAIRMAN. They told you that while you were in prison?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, and he said Frank and I were sold out.

The CHAIRMAN. They had already killed Frank.

Mr. VALACHI. They had already killed Frank.

The CHAIRMAN. And you got out of prison under that situation?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you do then to protect yourself?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, when I heard about this fellow, Frank Livorsi, Frank Livorsi at the time, when I was with the Irish guys, he was very friendly with the Irish guys into 1924, and so I went to see him, and I told him what I heard in Sing Sing. And so I said, "After all, I just come out, and see if you can find out what is what for me," and he said, "Give me a couple of days."

I went to 107th Street, and he was a chauffeur of Ciro Terranova at this time, and bodyguard of Ciro Terranova. So I went around a few days later and he told me, "You mind your business and everybody else will mind theirs," meaning everything is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. Meaning everything is all right?

Mr. VALACHI. Time heals everything.

The CHAIRMAN. They were not going to kill you then?

Mr. VALACHI. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you feel a little better about it?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, naturally; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead. What kind of business did you get into then?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I got together a couple of boys that I knew from my own neighborhood, which we will say that nobody even knew, but I knew them from my own neighborhood and I made up a new mob of burglary.

The CHAIRMAN. You started your burglary business again?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You organized a new group?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Some boys you knew from your own neighborhood?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you recall their names? Was one of them named Nick Jones?

Mr. VALACHI. Buck Jones, and Johnny Gavellas, and Nick Padowana.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is this fellow "the Monk"?

Mr. VALACHI. The Monk, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He was in on it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And Johnny Dee?

Mr. VALACHI. Johnny DeBellis, and Peter Muggins.

The CHAIRMAN. What other name do you have?

Mr. VALACHI. I think that is Peter Leone. Who was the other one? Sally Shields.

The CHAIRMAN. Is his name Salvatore Shillitani, and is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you folks, these that you have named here, were grouped together as a burglary gang?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you back in the burglary business?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What about the old Italian gang, and what was it doing?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the old Italian gang, the way I saw and heard, that they were racketeers, and we will put it that way.

The CHAIRMAN. They were racketeers, and they were not in the burglary?

Mr. VALACHI. They were no longer stealing, and naturally, I didn't know just what it means, but they were mobbed up with Ciro.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew burglary pretty well and so you wanted to kind of stick to that, didn't you?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I am not with them any more.

The CHAIRMAN. You have to hustle for yourself?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So you set up your own little gang?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir. And we went out burglarizing and I wasn't doing it too often.

The CHAIRMAN. You weren't burglarizing often?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I just figured, sooner or later something would happen, you know. I mean, to get somewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. You had already been in prison twice and you were a little tired of that.

Mr. VALACHI. I wasn't taking any chances. For instance, we went out like once every 3 weeks.

The CHAIRMAN. Once every 3 weeks?

Mr. VALACHI. And stretched it out, you know.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. Stretched the money.

The CHAIRMAN. To make it last a little longer.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

(At this point Senators Jackson and Javits entered the hearing room.)

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 153

Senator MUNDT. You were the boss of that gang, were you not? You were a kind of little Cosa Nostra boss of your own?

Mr. VALACHI. I wouldn't put it as a boss. I just happened to know what it was all about.

Senator MUNDT. I would like to know something about your functions, as the head man. Was it your job to case a joint and figure out where you are going to have the next burglary?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, no; we ride around in the afternoon.

Senator MUNDT. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. We ride around in the afternoon, looking for them in the afternoon.

Senator MUNDT. You go around together looking for them?

Mr. VALACHI. One or two or maybe some more, and spot something.

Senator MUNDT. I am trying to determine for myself, there is a difference between being the boss and being one of the members of the gang.

Mr. VALACHI. That is what I am trying to tell you, Senator. There is nothing to be boss about. I am taking chances and so are they. We are going out and stealing, and what is there to the boss? We are all jeopardizing our freedom and our lives and whatever it may be, but that is just that I knew how to do it.

Senator MUNDT. You had the experience.

Mr. VALACHI. I had the experience.

Senator MUNDT. And you sort of trained them and cautioned them, "Don't do this," and "Don't do that," and you divide up the loot evenly among the people.

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, yes. The idea is that it was daring and I had to break them in slowly, because lots of people are not used to that, and they would rather go sneaking and robbing a factory through the backyards or a store, but this was daring, right from the front, and not from the rear.

Senator MUNDT. Through a broken window?

Mr. VALACHI. Either a broken window or a door.

Senator MUNDT. What would be the average take in dollars?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I would say about $1,500 to $2,000.

Senator MUNDT. $1,500 to $2,000?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Split up between four or five of you, it didn't amount to much.

Mr. VALACHI. No; $300 or $400 apiece. Sometimes we went $400, and sometimes we went $300.

Senator MUNDT. It was nothing big.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, no; it was just to try to exist. That is all it was. We didn't depend on getting rich on it, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. Would there be any shooting involved in these?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the police would shoot after us. We got lots of shots fired at us, while in the proceeding or act of burglary, but we got away from them, and we would see them coming, and we always got away, and we never got caught. There were lots and lots of chases.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any other member of the committee want to interrogate?

154 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator JAVITS. I want to ask one question which interests us a lot in New York. How did you dispose of the stolen merchandise?

Mr. VALACHI. At this time, I had a fence, on 23d Street. I was giving him everything, and his name was Fats West, at this time.

Senator JAVITS. He disposed of everything for you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir. I got a price, and for instance if I gave him dresses, a couple of hundred dresses, it was $3 straight, and he would probably get $15 or $10, you know. He had to sell loose, and he took a lot of chances, where I would get it off my hands, and I would be satisfied.

Senator JAVITS. Was he in any regular line of business?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, he was sort of a hustler, a dice hustler, you know, with crap games and things of that kind.

Senator JAVITS. He had no store business establishment?

Mr. VALACHI. Not that I know of.

Senator JAVITS. Is he still around?

Mr. VALACHI. I heard he died, under an operation, or something.

Senator JAVITS. Did he ever tell you whether he had any in with the police or other authorities?

Mr. VALACHI. No; he never said anything.

Senator JAVITS. What about you people, did you have any in?

Mr. VALACHI. No; I didn't have any in with the police.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator McIntyre.

Senator MCINTYRE. Joe, back here a little while ago you testified that while you were in Sing Sing you learned that "Bum" Rogers had knocked off your friend, Frank LaPuma.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MCINTYRE. He was paid $100 for it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MCINTYRE. Back in the 1920's, was this the going price for a contract?

Mr. VALACHI. I tell you, Senator, this is the first time I heard anything like that.

I expressed to you just the way Dutch Hogey told me.

He said the "Bum" got a hundred dollars. That is what I was told. The way I was told is the way I am telling you.

Senator MCINTYRE. Is this the first time you ever heard of anybody being paid to knock off another gangster?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; that was the first. He also told me they will get the "Bum."

Senator MCINTYRE. They will get the what?

Mr. VALACHI. The "Bum."

Senator MCINTYRE. During these days here of the 1920's when you were just sort of running with the Irish gang—

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MCINTYRE (continuing). Or with your Italian gang, did you at any time have a feeling you had any cooperation with any of the police force that operated in your area?

Mr. VALACHI. No; not at this time.

Senator MCINTYRE. Did you later when you were a member of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. No; I never did, being you are talking about these burglaries—I thought you meant in with the police with the burglaries—no; we never did. Just that once about what happened on 174th Street, Nichols Avenue.

You saw what happened when we were doing business with the policemen, we were set up. Do you remember that?

Senator McINTYRE. I know about that. That was the case where you felt one member of your group, a brother or something, was a policeman?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. My question was answered, that is, during the 1920's, at least when you were operating as a part of your own gang, the Minute Men, or the Irish gang, you never had any feeling of cooperation with the police?

Mr. VALACHI. Never had.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Jackson.

Senator JACKSON. I will pass at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. You were back in the burglary business.

I will ask you if, during that period of time, that you met the "Gap?"

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I knew the "Gap."

The CHAIRMAN. You already knew the "Gap?" What was his name?

Mr. VALACHI. Dominick Petrelli.

The CHAIRMAN. His name was what?

Mr. VALACHI. Dominick Petrelli, P-e-t-r-e-l-l-i.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. You already knew him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, to get the record straight, who is this fellow, Terranova?

Mr. VALACHI. Terranova——

The CHAIRMAN. What was he known as?

Mr. VALACHI. He was known as Ciro Terranova and Ciro Morello.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he also known as the Artichoke King?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; the Artichoke King.

The CHAIRMAN. What gave him that designation?

Mr. VALACHI. The way I understand it, he had the artichokes tied up. He would buy all the artichokes that came into New York. I didn't know where they came from, but I understand he was buying them all out. Being artichokes, they hold, they can keep.

Then he would make his own price. In other words, an artichoke is something that Italians must have as a dessert. For instance, if he bought them for $5, then he would make his own price, say like $15 a case. You could not get an artichoke nowhere else.

The CHAIRMAN. He was the king?

Mr. VALACHI. He was the king.

The CHAIRMAN. He controlled the market?

Mr. VALACHI. That is how he got the name, I understand.

I was young at the time. I did not pay attention, but that is the way it was.

The CHAIRMAN. What happened with the Gap and Bobby Doyle, what is his name? Bobby Doyle was Santuccio, was he?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Bobby Santuccio. The first name I don't remember. The first name is a hard name.

The CHAIRMAN. How long was it after that before you joined another gang?

156 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. I would say about the early 1930's or the end of 1929, somewhere around there. I don't remember. I think it was the 1930's.

The CHAIRMAN. What gang did you join?

Mr. VALACHI. I was approached by this, what I am talking about right now, this Cosa Nostra. The Gap asked me to get in. At first I refused.

The CHAIRMAN. To get into what?

Mr. VALACHI. In another mob.

The CHAIRMAN. What mob was it, he was the head of it?

Mr. VALACHI. Tom Gagliano.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. I told the Gap, I said, "I don't want to have nothing to do with these guys. Alexander told me plenty, we didn't have a chance. You are crazy." "Things aren't like they used to be. We got something in mind, we are going to fight some big shots and things like that."

That night I met him up in the Rainbow Gardens with Bobby Doyle. Bobby Doyle convinced me.

The CHAIRMAN. Convinced you that you had to do what?

Mr. VALACHI. Join the gang.

The CHAIRMAN. What gang?

Mr. VALACHI. The Cosa Nostra. But at the time I didn't know it.

The CHAIRMAN. But he convinced you you ought to join that gang?

Mr. VALACHI. He went on to tell me the feelings between Sicilians and the Neapolitans was all passed; that Al Capone is a Neapolitan.

He went on to say things are different today, not like they used to be in the days of Alexander.

I said, "In that case, OK. What happens if we win?"

He said, "Well, I tell you, the odds are a million to one we will never come back."

I said, "If we come back what happens?"

He says, "We will be all right."

I said, "Who are we going to fight?"

He named Ciro. He named Willie Moretti, Dutch Schultz. He gave me names I would recognize, that I thought was big at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Counsel has a question.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, while you were in Sing Sing, you met Alexander Vanero?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. At that time in your conversations with him, did he warn you that the Sicilians and the Neapolitans did not mix because they did not trust each other?

Mr. VALACHI. Alexander is the one who educated me on that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is right.

Now, when you came out of jail and you were approached by Santucci or Bobby Doyle to join up now with a new mob——

Mr. VALACHI. I had that in mind, but Alexander told me.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You were hesitant to do that but they explained to you that that was no longer the case. The old rule had gone and they had a mixed group?

Mr. VALACHI. Alexander told me, he expressed it this way. He said, "If you hang out with a Sicilian 20 years and you have some trouble with another Sicilian, this Sicilian that you hang out with 20 years will turn on you. You can't trust him."

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 157

In other words, I could understand later on what Alexander meant but he himself didn't know.

Alexander knew things like I am explaining to you but they themselves in their time do not know nothing about these Sicilians being organized. So, he took that attitude.

When I got in, myself, I realized why Alexander didn't understand, why he felt if you hang out with one 20 years then he will turn on you. They were organized and Alexander didn't know it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You had this in mind when you were approached to join with Tom Gagliano's mob, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, at the time you were asked to join Gagliano's mob, this was the start of a war between two or three elements of a gang, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. They had to kill Tom Gagliano's boss. They felt that his boss or the boys' boss, Bobby's boss, or Tommy's boss was killed without justice and they wanted to avenge his death.

The CHAIRMAN. Are we getting to the beginning of the war between two gangs of Masseria and Maranzano?

Mr. VALACHI. We are getting to what we call the Castellamarese war.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the same war I am speaking of.

Mr. VALACHI. When we started, we didn't know who they were at this time. When they spoke to me the first time, I don't know anything about Castellamarese.

The CHAIRMAN. At that time, did you become a member of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. I was only proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. You were then in a state where you had been proposed?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. You were under surveillance a bit, I guess, to find out what kind of member you would make.

Mr. VALACHI. Proposed means that I am in line to be a member.

The CHAIRMAN. So you are now operating while you are in line, after you had been proposed?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt?

Senator MUNDT. What inducement did Bobby Doyle give you to get yourself involved with a group which you knew was at war?

Mr. VALACHI. You are stealing; you are bound to get killed. This way it would be settled.

That is why I asked him, "What happens if we bet these odds of a million to one?"

He said, "Well, then, you will be made." He meant to say you will earn money and you are not to steal any more. In other words, well, stealing was getting tough at this time. They were talking about radios in New York. The lights used to go out at 3 o'clock in the morning.

Now they were talking about leaving them on all night.

So, all that was against me in burglarizing. After all, if I am burglarizing and lights are on all night and if I am getting a chase from one car I will draw attention and I will have a hundred cars come after me passing lights.

All that was taken into consideration.

Especially the radio they were talking about.

At this time they only had radio cars up in Westchester County.

The CHAIRMAN. You are talking about traffic lights, now?

Mr. VALACHI. First I was talking about traffic lights.

I was telling the Senator what I was taking into consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, it was more difficult to get away from a burglary?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. The risk was greater?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

They were talking about radio cars. Naturally, that is going to be more tough. With that I had in mind and the proposition I got, I accepted.

Senator MUNDT. In other words, you felt going alone you were not going to get very far, you had to join up with a top outfit, a powerful outfit.

Mr. VALACHI. I felt sooner or later, with these lights on all night and radio cars coming in existence, sure, it was going to be tough.

Senator MUNDT. You said something about Alexander telling you that you didn't have much of a chance because you were not a Sicilian and sooner or later the Sicilians would turn on you.

You said later you found out about it.

What did you find out about it?

Mr. VALACHI. Alexander was right in his way. Then when I found out what it was really about, then I realized that Alexander was never a member.

Can you understand me, Senator?

Senator MUNDT. I see.

Mr. VALACHI. I realized that, myself. Naturally, I thought about Alexander.

Senator MUNDT. What was your experience? Did you find the Sicilians were as trustworthy as the rest of the mob, or what?

Mr. VALACHI. It wasn't like the Alexander days.

In other words, now they were all mixed. So, actually, in their hearts they carried that but they didn't show it outright. In other words, they favored one another but it wasn't broad like in the days of Alexander.

Senator MUNDT. It was a modified version of what Alexander told you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. How about Vito Genovese? Was he Sicilian or Italian?

Mr. VALACHI. He is Naples.

Senator MUNDT. A Neapolitan?

Mr. VALACHI. Neapolitan.

Senator MUNDT. Are you a Neapolitan?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; I am.

Senator MUNDT. So there was not any reason that he would be against you?

Mr. VALACHI. I wasn't with Vito Genovese at this time.

Senator MUNDT. You had trouble with him later?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; that comes later.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 159

Senator MUNDT. I was wondering whether he was Sicilian or Neapolitan?

Mr. VALACHI. Most of the people downtown were Neapolitan.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions at this point?

Senator JAVITS. In going over testimony, there is no question about the fact that some questions will occur to us as occurred to me in going over the testimony the other day.

Would the Chair prefer that we do that immediately at the next session of the committee and clear up anything we have to ask about in the record or would the Chair prefer that we wait until we get to that point, in what I see now is the witness' chronological recital, and then bring up the point?

The CHAIRMAN. I will leave that largely to the discretion of the Senators. I do not know exactly what he has in mind.

The purpose of this is to try to get a chronological story, presented in that way.

I want each Senator to feel free at any time to address the Chair and I will yield to let him ask questions at some point where he wishes to ask them.

I would suggest before we go into the chart which I intend to present here and which will aid us, I think, in following the testimony from now on, I would like the Senator now, if he cares to, to go back and bring himself up to date.

Senator JAVITS. I thank my colleague. I have only two questions that came out of the record. If I could have the witness' attention.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us have order.

Senator JAVITS. I found an answer to a question in the record in your previous testimony in which you said:

Vito Genovese has lots of interests in gambling like Las Vegas and Havana, Cuba, when it was there, and he has legitimate business. He has his hands in lots of enterprises.

As far as you know, is Vito Genovese still in Las Vegas gambling?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. What is his outfit there, do you know?

Mr. VALACHI. Anywhere where Meyer Lansky is, Vito Genovese is.

Senator JAVITS. Do you know what his hotel or establishment is out there?

Mr. VALACHI. I knew in Havana but since they went out of Havana, I know they have places in Las Vegas, but I don't know them. But I knew the ones in Havana.

Senator JAVITS. They are associated, Lansky and Vito Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; they do everything together.

Senator JAVITS. And it persists to this day?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. As far as you know?

Mr. VALACHI. As far as I know.

Senator JAVITS. The other question I want to ask is this: Do you know any tie-ins with Las Vegas by Costa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't know too much about Las Vegas.

As I say, I knew about Havana.

Senator JAVITS. At the appropriate point, I will wish to question you about the connection of the rackets with entertainment, gambling, in Las Vegas, juke boxes, and so forth, but I will pick the time when it is convenient to the Chair and it fits in with the testimony.

I have one other question on the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I will say this will fit in at the proper place. We have not quite gotten to it yet. But anything you wish to do to get in before will be all right.

Senator JAVITS. Now, as to the Abe Relles murder: You testified as follows; that is about the witnesses against Genovese in respect to murdering:

There was another one, Abe Relles, he was also supposed to testify. He fell out of the window.

Senator BREWSTER. How did he fall out of the window, do you know?

Mr. VALACHI. They threw him out.

End of quote.

Who threw him out?

Mr. VALACHI. That was the rumor that they threw him out.

Senator JAVITS. Who is "they"? You used the word.

Mr. VALACHI. Let us put it this way, whoever was in charge.

Senator JAVITS. That is on the gang side; is that right? What was the rumor as you knew it?

Mr. VALACHI. That the police threw him out.

Senator JAVITS. That was the rumor as you knew it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. Do you know any more about it?

Mr. VALACHI. No; that is all.

Senator JAVITS. Did you hear that confirmed in prison or in any way?

Mr. VALACHI. The boys talked about it, that is good enough for me.

Senator JAVITS. The boys in prison?

Mr. VALACHI. No; the boys outside.

Senator JAVITS. The boys in your gang, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. Any particular boy?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, now, I would say in general conversation here and there. When you have a conversation, it is pretty solid.

Senator JAVITS. You believed it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, anything I hear.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Are there any other questions at this point?

Senator McINTYRE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I agree with Senator Javits that in order not to disrupt the continuity of your story, it would be nice or appropriate if at some given time we have a chance to raise questions that occur to us upon reading the record. I am going to reserve that because I know you want to go along with this chart.

The CHAIRMAN. All the Chair wishes is that at some time when we have a break like this, it is perfectly all right. When you are in the middle of developing a point, it makes it a little difficult.

Do you have anything now? While we are in this break, you may proceed with it.

Senator McINTYRE. There is one question that runs along with the testimony here.

I did not hear you, Joe, when did you first learn that there was an Italian secret organization? Did you learn this only when the Gap approached you about joining it or had you known of its existence beforehand?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, you will have to put me as an outsider, too, see.

I heard organization, I heard this, I heard that, but I really didn't know what it was all about up to the time that I will come to and I will explain it to you when I get there.

Senator McINTYRE. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

I wish to, at this time, introduce some charts that have been prepared by the staff after consulting with some witnesses, including the witness who is now testifying.

I would like to have Mr. Duffy, a member of the staff, to be sworn to make this presentation.

You do solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before this subcommittee will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. DUFFY. I do.

TESTIMONY OF LaVERN J. DUFFY

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Duffy, you are a member of the staff of this subcommittee?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have been a member of the staff of this committee for how many years?

Mr. DUFFY. Since 1953, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you actively participated in the investigation and preparation for the investigation of these hearings that are now underway?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir; I have.

The CHAIRMAN. In the course of that preparation, have you had frequent discussions with the witness, Valachi?

Mr. DUFFY. I have had a number of discussions with him.

The CHAIRMAN. And with others?

Mr. DUFFY. And with others.

The CHAIRMAN. From that discussion, and from other information you have gained, have you prepared certain charts depicting the organization as we speak of it, the different organizations, showing those in power, those in authority, and so forth, with respect to these organizations that we have been talking about?

Mr. DUFFY. With respect to the New York organization only at this time, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, with respect to the New York organization. Very well.

You have a chart before you now; do you?

Mr. DUFFY. I have, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the title you have placed on it for the purpose of identification?

Mr. DUFFY. The title of this chart is the "Masseria-Maranzano War and Evolution of Gang Control, 1930 to Present."

The CHAIRMAN. The witness has just testified up to incidents and things that occurred prior thereto, his operation prior to the time that this war began?

Mr. DUFFY. That is correct, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. He called it the war?

Mr. DUFFY. The Castellemerese war. That is another name for the war that took place during 1930, 1931.

The CHAIRMAN. By either name, then, we will know we are talking about the same war?

Mr. DUFFY. The same ganglands war.

The CHAIRMAN. Now you may proceed to describe the chart. I will make this chart—I think it can go in the record all right but I will make it exhibit No. 8 and direct that it be printed in the record if that can be done.

(The chart referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 8" and faces this page.)

(146)

Mr. DUFFY. I will direct your attention, first, to the bottom of the chart. Reading from left to right we have five bosses listed: Vito Genovese, Carlo Gambino, Giuseppe Magliocco, Joseph Bonanno, and Gaetano Lucchese.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they the bosses of the five families operating in the New York area?

Mr. DUFFY. They are.

The CHAIRMAN. Those are all living and the present bosses of those families, is that correct?

Mr. DUFFY. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask you, Mr. Valachi, if you agree that that is correct, according to your knowledge?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. According to your knowledge, that is correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. Is Vito Genovese the only one of the five now in the penitentiary?

Mr. DUFFY. That is correct. As indicated by the chart, the gang is now being run by the three men as indicated on the lower left-hand corner, Thomas Eboli, acting boss; Jerry Catena, underboss; Consigliere Michele Miranda.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that correct, according to your information?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You know much of this from your conversation with Genovese while you were in prison with him?

Mr. VALACHI. I know it from conversation; I knew it myself.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew it before you went in there?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUFFY. I would like to direct your attention upward on the chart tracing the history of these five families.

You can see it evolved directly from a gangland war that took place during the years 1930 and 1931. Now there were two main gangs fighting this war, the Joseph Masseria group made up of a number of gangs. We do not have them all listed here, but there was Ciro Terranova, Dutch Schultz, a number of others, such as Vito Genovese, Al Capone. They are all on the side of Joseph Masseria during the gangland war.

On the Salvatore Maranzano side, we had Salvatore Maranzano, head of the gang; Tom Gagliano, boss of this gang subsequent to Tom Reina being killed.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 163

Now there were two significant dates, Mr. Chairman, on this chart when this war began.

The CHAIRMAN. The war began about what year?

Mr. DUFFY. 1930, Senator. The first significant date on the chart is the death of Tom Reina. He was the boss of this gang. He was murdered on February 26, 1960.

He was murdered, Senator, by a member of the Masseria group over here.

Now, Tom Gagliano wanted revenge for this murder, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not understand you.

Mr. DUFFY. Tom Gagliano, the underboss of this family, wanted to avenge the death of Reina, who was unjustly murdered.

Mr. Valachi, at this point, was proposed in the organization as a member of this gang.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew that a war was on at the time you joined it? They had explained it to you?

Mr. VALACHI. They gave me top names like I said before, but I didn't know everything at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. They gave you the top names of the bosses?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead. Now I will ask you to do this. You follow Mr. Duffy as he testifies. If he makes any error or anything is wrong, I wish you would speak up because we want this testimony correct as you know it to be.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; I want to explain it, the top man I didn't know at the time.

Mr. DUFFY. He is referring to Mr. Reina.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not know him at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Just that they told me they killed their boss, that is all. I learned the name but I didn't know him personally.

The CHAIRMAN. You just learned of the name, you did not know him?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. DUFFY. Following the murder of Mr. Reina, Mr. Valachi became a proposed member. This is an undeclared war.

Will you explain, Mr. Valachi, why this was an undeclared war at this time?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, they were what they call sneaking.

The CHAIRMAN. What?

Mr. VALACHI. In other words, they did not declare any war outright. They were trying to get all they could get before they found out. That was the idea of getting new members. The idea was, they figured the opposite mob wouldn't know us. They wouldn't know us. That is why they thought getting new members was good; besides, there were only about 15 at this time. Therefore, you know, Gagliano has 200, 250 at that time. It wasn't as much as it is today. They couldn't trust everybody.

There was about 15 of them that trust one another.

They felt that if they go further they may find somebody who would betray them. Actually, these 15 went out to get new ones rather than approach more soldiers, as we put it, as we know now. They didn't want to gamble. They only trusted, among themselves, these particular groups.

Mr. DUFFY. What Mr. Valachi is saying at this time, Mr. Gagliano wanted to recruit new individuals in this gang unknown to Joseph Masseria. This way they would be able to avenge the death without being able to trace the actions to this family.

If they traced the actions to this family, then open war would be declared between these two groups. Mr. Gagliano didn't want that to happen. He recruited Mr. Valachi and a number of others.

Mr. Valachi mentioned the ones he brought in at that time to avenge this murder.

Who were the others you brought in?

Mr. VALACHI. Nick Paduana and Salvatore Shillitani.

The CHAIRMAN. He is known as Sally Shields?

Mr. VALACHI. Sally Shields.

Now I also had about five or six more that I did not bring in the same way I brought Nick and Sally Shields.

The CHAIRMAN. You brought two in with you?

Mr. VALACHI. Two in. The other five I used as I will explain later. That is what we call spotters.

The CHAIRMAN. You used them as spotters?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. DUFFY. In other words, they were to carry out a surveillance and keep Mr. Valachi advised of what was going on. These are what you call sneaky-type murders.

On the first killing they sneaked in was the murder of Joseph Pinzolo. Joseph Masseria replaced Mr. Reina with Mr. Pinzolo.

The CHAIRMAN. How did he have—

Mr. VALACHI. Wasn't Peter Morello the first one?

Mr. DUFFY. No.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. They, the Masseria group—Senator, take notice when I say Masseria group, in other words, the opposite mob, is a permanent boss for another Pinzolo.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, Masseria took enough power to go over in another family and they did not like that?

Mr. VALACHI. No. They answered him back by killing Joe Pinzolo.

The CHAIRMAN. They turned around and killed the boss, Masseria appointed?

Mr. VALACHI. Right. They didn't appoint another boss.

The CHAIRMAN. Who then became boss?

Mr. VALACHI. At this time, I will explain that. At this time no one became boss because now, after Pinzolo was killed, they called a meeting.

Mr. DUFFY. Senator, if we could stop here a moment and have Mr. Valachi explain what he knows about this murder.

What do you know about the Pinzolo murder?

Mr. VALACHI. At this time, I was told by Bobby Doyle himself that he got the break of his life. He went down to Pinzolo's office and he found him all alone and he killed him.

Mr. DUFFY. Did you meet Mr. Pinzolo, yourself? Did he come into the bar?

Mr. VALACHI. I met him before that.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 165

Mr. DUFFY. Tell us about that.

Mr. VALACHI. Sometime before he died, I went with the Gap around Seventh Avenue bar downtown. I don't remember the name of the bar. There were a few boys there which I couldn't recall at this time but for sure I know the Gap was there.

There were several more boys. Actually, I don't remember just who was there. They introduced me to Joe Pinzolo.

Now, at the same time, they introduced me he told me to call up the Rainbow Gardens where we were hanging out to get a couple of girls.

When I was with Joe Pinzolo, he had a mustache about this big [indicating], a greasy-looking one.

The CHAIRMAN. What we call a handlebar mustache?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

I read his record when he died. He threw a lot of bombs. I didn't know the man.

Anyway, I went in the phone booth. I might have called Rainbow. I might have asked somebody but I didn't call any girls. The Gap told me, "Are you getting the girls?"

"You are out of your mind. Are you crazy? I have respect for these girls."

"What is the matter with you. Go away and cut it out."

"If the girls come here and see a guy like you, they'll faint."

So he said, "Jesus Christ, they want to look good."

"Are these the kind of people we are going to deal with? I am going to stop."

He says, "Shut up. This guy is going to die."

I said, "Oh." I still ain't going to call nobody.

So we have a few drinks. That night they asked me to drive Pinzolo. I drove him to some hotel, I don't remember where. I don't think we spoke four words.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know at that time he was marked for death?

Mr. VALACHI. I just explained to you the Gap said to me, "Shut up, this guy is going to die."

The CHAIRMAN. You had been told that much up to that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Up to that time.

The CHAIRMAN. That indicated to you he was marked for death by your crowd?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't figure things out; I would not try to figure things out.

The CHAIRMAN. You drove him home. You drove him where he wanted to go.

Mr. DUFFY. The next sequence here following this murder, Mr. Valachi was assigned the duty to keep under surveillance the apartment of Steve Ferrigno. He knew Mr. Ferrigno as Mr. Fennuci, Mr. Alfred Mineo listed here as Manfredi. His duty was to keep this apartment under surveillance.

He will relate to you what occurred during this particular surveillance over a 2-month period.

He learned the details of this war at that time from Joseph Profaci, who often came into the apartment at that time, and he told the details of that war.

166 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Will you tell us what he told about that war?

Mr. VALACHI. Let me understand it again. I didn't understand your question.

Mr. DUFFY. Will you tell us now what you learned from Mr. Profaci as to the details of this gangland war, that the Maranzano force had joined up with Reina and the reason for that?

Mr. VALACHI. At the time that the Gagliano group had intentions of going into war, not knowing there was someone else who had the same intentions.

The CHAIRMAN. So that other gang had the same intention that your gang did about going to war with Masseria?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The reason why Joseph Profaci explained to me when I did meet him. All the Castellammarese were sentenced to death.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Will you explain what the Castellammarese are?

Mr. VALACHI. I can explain in Italian.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is it a hamlet or a little town in Sicily?

Mr. VALACHI. In Sicily.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did Masseria declare or condemn anybody who came from that area, no matter where they were in the United States, to death?

Mr. VALACHI. All Castellammarese. That is the way I was told. I never found out the reason. I never asked for the reason. All I understand is that all the Castellammarese were sentenced to death.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you name some of the Castellammarese in New York?

Mr. VALACHI. That I knew. Joseph Profaci, Joe Bonanno.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Bonanno is the boss of one of the families now?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Joe Profaci was formerly boss of the Gagliano family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who else?

Mr. VALACHI. Buster.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Joe Aiello?

Mr. VALACHI. I never met Joe Aiello. I was told about Joe Aiello.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Any others?

Mr. VALACHI. Nick Capuzzi.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Are there a large group of these in the United States?

Mr. VALACHI. Not too many.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How many would you say?

Mr. VALACHI. I could not even give you an estimate.

Mr. ADLERMAN. All of them were condemned to death whether they lived in New York, Buffalo?

Mr. VALACHI. No matter where they were. One might be in Chicago. A half dozen might be in Buffalo. A couple might be in Brooklyn.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was Gagliano one of the Castellammarese?

Mr. VALACHI. No; he was not.

Which one do you mean? Tom Gagliano?

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is right.

Mr. VALACHI. No; he was not.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 167

Mr. ADLERMAN. But he was taking the side of those people?

Mr. VALACHI. This was something; they had their own reasons, their own troubles.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Let me get straight now on the sequence of what happened.

The first one that was killed was Tommy Reina, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was boss of one of the families?

Mr. VALACHI. The way I understood, yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Following him Peter Morello was killed, I think, August 15, 1930, but he was not killed by the Gagliano group?

Mr. VALACHI. He was killed by the Castellemarese group, put it this way, by the Maranzano group.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was Maranzano a Castellemarese?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who did the killing of Peter Morello?

Mr. VALACHI. Buster.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did the Gagliano group know at that time that Maranzano was also trying to fight Masseria?

Mr. VALACHI. The way they explained it to me was that somebody got killed. The Gagliano group knew that they didn't do it. In this case they sent somebody else going out for those guys. In other words, somebody else is in trouble with these guys. So I understand that Steve Rinelli, which was one of the groups of Gagliano's, found out that it was Salvatore Maranzano. The other one that was going out warring against Masseria.

Mr. ADLERMAN. At that point, when they found out that Maranzano had killed Morello and I think shortly after that Pinzolo was killed by Gagliano's men, the two of them joined forces against Masseria?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I understand that they had given one another a contract. In other words, in order to trust one another and to feel secure with the new friendship, they gave one name, I wouldn't know the name, one gave one name, the other one gave another name.

When these two names are taken care of, then we join together.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Which two names did they pick?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know. I never did know.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did they finally join forces?

Mr. VALACHI. They joined forces.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In the Peter Morello killing, who did that?

Mr. VALACHI. Buster.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Buster of Chicago?

Mr. VALACHI. Buster of Chicago. He originally came from Chicago.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know who he was or where he came from?

Mr. VALACHI. Buster was, the way I understand, he was in trouble in Chicago, himself, fighting a mob like an organization like Cosa Nostra, but Buster didn't know what he was fighting. I understood, I wasn't clear on it, but I tried, I knew who killed his father, something like that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was he on the outs with Capone?

Mr. VALACHI. He was fighting him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He had to leave Chicago because he was fighting him?

168 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. No, after Maranzano, when he was, like after the Castellammarese was sentenced, Maranzano somehow got Buster to join in.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you describe Buster to us, what type of man he was?

Mr. VALACHI. Buster looked like a college boy, a little over 6 feet, light complexion, weighed about 200 pounds. He also would carry a violin case.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What did he carry in the violin case?

Mr. VALACHI. A machinegun.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was quite different from the fellow you were working with at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. He looked collegiatelike.

The CHAIRMAN. He did not look like a hood?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. He was only about 23 years old.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Coming now to the Pinzolo case, who was the killer there?

Mr. VALACHI. Bobby Doyle. That was the Gagliano group.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That killing took place according to the police records on September 9, 1930. Would that be about right, according to your memory?

Mr. VALACHI. Dates I didn't know but that sounds about right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Duffy, do you want to take it up from there?

Mr. DUFFY. As I was saying, they came over here to keep this apartment under surveillance. At this time he learned of this secret pact between Maranzano and Gagliano. They were going to join together after two bosses of the Masseria were killed.

Now, Masseria had condemned to death all the Castellammarese Sicilians. All the Castellammarese in the United States wanted to join up with him to save their lives.

This became a nationwide war after these two men were killed.

Mr. Valachi will tell us what happened concerning these two killings.

He participated in these killings of Alfred Mineo and Ferrigno.

Will you tell us what you know about that killing?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I was told to go to move into this apartment and at this time Buster, the Doc, Nick Capuzzi and Joe Profaci, moved in this apartment with me. Naturally, I would not know who Fennuci was.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were you out to kill then?

Mr. VALACHI. This fellow Fennuci.

The CHAIRMAN. That is one of the bosses there under Masseria?

Mr. ADLERMAN. He is also known as Ferrigno.

Mr. VALACHI. I never knew his right name.

The CHAIRMAN. You were out to get him. Tell us about it.

Mr. VALACHI. It was supposed to be that when they get a chance to shoot him from an automobile.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was to drive the automobile?

Mr. VALACHI. They counted on me driving the automobile.

The CHAIRMAN. They counted on you?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 169

Mr. VALACHI. Right. But at this time I met the doorman as I lived there going in and out of the apartment. I could afford to go in and out of the apartment. Nobody knew me.

So, one day, I was upstairs and they come and got me and they want that I should drive the car. I told them—they were around the block with the car.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were the two who got you?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Palisades and Sally Shields, I think it was. Anyway, Sally Shields was there, and Joe Palisades was there and Buster and I.

So, Fennuci was sitting in front of the apartment. There were benches there, I don't know what you call that, but off the roadway there is a sort of a little bit of a grass here and there with benches, like on a Sunday afternoon people relax. I don't know what you call that.

The CHAIRMAN. Kind of a park bench?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. I went around the block and I told him, I said, "Look, as soon as I pass here, I got to pass in front of the apartment and the doorman is always waving at me. He always sees me."

It was so close. I tried to get one of them to drive the car. Nobody wanted to drive the car, they wouldn't trust themselves.

I said, "OK, I'll drive the car."

Buster, who was always a sharpshooter, he had the shotgun. I told Buster, "Buster, if you see a doorman wave at me," I said, "take your gun down. If you don't I will jerk the car. I will never let you do this. I ain't going to go to jail for this thing."

What, am I going out of my mind?

"I don't care what happens. That is the way I feel."

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, if you passed there and the doorman waved at you, they were not to shoot?

Mr. VALACHI. I told him not to. If he tried to, I will jerk the car.

The CHAIRMAN. If they didn't obey your orders, if they tried to shoot you would jerk the car?

Mr. VALACHI. I would knock his aim off. As soon as I got near the apartment, the doorman waved at me.

The CHAIRMAN. What happened then?

Mr. VALACHI. Buster was a nice boy and put the gun down.

The CHAIRMAN. You drove off?

Mr. VALACHI. I drove off.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the first plan. It failed because the doorman waved at you?

Mr. VALACHI. It failed. I said, "I don't care how you feel about it; that is my attitude." Buster later told me that the old man felt that I had done a wise move. "Why did they need him to drive the car?" Buster said they couldn't drive. He agreed with my move. I yet didn't meet Maranzano. But he agreed with the move, with somebody that he had met, himself.

The CHAIRMAN. He agreed with your judgment, what you did at that time, that you had done the right thing?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Not to risk getting caught?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you had another plan after that?

Mr. VALACHI. It was not long after that before they even got to arranging another plan; it was a few days later that I was out with Buster somewhere and he left me off on the corner of Pelham Parkway in front of this apartment. Buster left and another car pulled up in front of me. Now we had gotten pictures of Masseria.

The CHAIRMAN. You had gotten what?

Mr. VALACHI. Pictures, photographs, because we didn't know who he was.

The CHAIRMAN. You had gotten pictures of the man you were to kill?

Mr. VALACHI. And to recognize him in case we see him. In other words, as the boss we were fighting; that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. So, to my amazement, I saw Masseria get out of the car. I recognized him fast. They gave me a description of him. He was 5 feet 2, and Fennuci and Masseria got out of the car together.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you recognize him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. In this apartment there was a court, two entrances on the right and two entrances on the left. In other words, I got to the right. They were across the way. They had to go to the left. To my amazement, they followed me in my entrance. So I got in the elevator. They got in there with me. So I asked them where they wanted to go. They said, "Punch yours."

The CHAIRMAN. They said what?

Mr. VALACHI. "Punch yours."

The CHAIRMAN. They told you to punch your number first?

Mr. VALACHI. Punch mine. I think I was on the second floor. So I pushed six. So when I got up to six—they were looking me over, see, and I was—we were facing one another. I had my back to the wall. They had their backs to the wall on the other side. I come out of the elevator, I came out slowly, walking like. As soon as I reached one floor, I flew down to the second floor to tell them in the apartment what I saw. They sounded like it was impossible, you know, that I saw something, I saw things.

With that, as we were talking, the one who was looking out the window sees Joe Masseria crossing from one side to the other. He comes rushing over, "He is right; he saw him. Masseria went up to Fennuci's apartment."

The CHAIRMAN. Then what did you do?

Mr. VALACHI. After that—that night I was almost sorry that I told them I saw Masseria. That night they all prepared machineguns ready to shoot him from my apartment. In my apartment I had like—

The CHAIRMAN. You did not like that much?

Mr. VALACHI. I had pictures laying around and I was begging Buster at this time I told Buster to pretend not to see him. I don't know what I was telling. He said, "It is so important, Joe, look—" Well, anyway, I was so worried that they gave me an assignment on the elevator. They told me to go outside and keep the elevator up—stairs all the time. Well, I was hoping and praying he don't come out that night. Sure enough, he don't. So I was happy.

The next morning I was told that they got a new apartment across the way. Then I was happy, I felt good. So, I understand now——

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, you had taken this apartment for 2 months to spy on and watch Fennuci, as you knew him, Fennuci or Ferrigno, who had an office in the building adjacent to yours or in the same building across the courtyard.

Mr. VALACHI. Who.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Fennuci.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, across the way.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You had been using that apartment 2 months. You lived in it. You had spotters in there. You had pictures and photographs. You didn't want them to identify you with the killing if they shot from your apartment.

Mr. VALACHI. Really, the plan was to get him outside; not from the apartment.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The next night after you were relieved by the fact that he didn't come and they didn't shoot him from your apartment, did somebody get another apartment on the ground floor?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I figured I would tell you that later as I go on with the story.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. Anyway, that day, sometime in the afternoon, they caught up with two of them, Manfredi and Fennuci. But that day I left. Right after that I left for Dannemora to visit my brother. This way I will stay away from the apartment at least 10 days.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead and get on down to the second plan as soon as you can.

Mr. VALACHI. We are talking about the apartment now, right? What happened? New guys came in. In other words, most of them were waiting for a couple of months; nothing happened.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the second plan. You waited there a couple of months from your apartment but nothing happened.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't get to kill him from there.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. In fact, you didn't want him shot from your apartment.

Mr. VALACHI. Not from my apartment.

The CHAIRMAN. You were too well known; they would identify you; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Besides that, I had pictures laying around here and there in my apartment.

The CHAIRMAN. So that plan didn't work. Now you went to another plan, the third one.

Mr. VALACHI. They did. They got the apartment across the way. The next morning they got an apartment.

Senator MUNDT. Who do you mean by "they"?

Mr. VALACHI. I wanted to explain that later, see.

Senator MUNDT. You are getting me all confused. It is like a Chinese chess game.

Mr. VALACHI. I have something to tell you, then it fits in. I don't want to tell you ahead of time.

172 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Chick 99, his sister got the apartment the next morning. I wanted to explain to you how I found out after I went away and came back.

Senator MUNDT. I wanted to find out whether by "they" you meant their gang or the one——

Mr. VALACHI. When I say "they" I mean our gang. I went away about 10 days. They got Manfredi and Hampton. You remember, we are still sneaking up to this time. When I got back I was walking up and down 110th and Lexington Avenue where we used to be. I probably was there about 2 hours when Chick 99 blew the horn and was calling me. He was calling me to come into the car. He says, "Jump, we were made." I said, "No kidding." He said, "Yes, they caught up with the furniture." That is what I wanted to tell you, Senator. They caught up with the furniture. You see, my sister got the furniture at 106th and Third Avenue. We used to hang out there, too.

When I say they caught up, Masseria traced the furniture from the Pelham Parkway apartment to 106th and Third Avenue, which is our hangout. "I don't know how you made it on that corner. They caught up with us since you left."

I said, "Oh, my God. I was walking up and down." That is why I wanted to explain to you when the time comes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there another name for this Chick 99?

Mr. VALACHI. He has a hard name, Senator, Frank——

The CHAIRMAN. Callace?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That is Chick 99?

Mr. VALACHI. Chick 99.

Mr. DUFFY. What Mr. Valachi is saying, finally the Masseria group had learned that these two had joined forces. They traced the apartment to this group. Now they found out that this gang was working together in common war against Masseria. Now the war is nationwide; it is a declared, open war.

The CHAIRMAN. At what point was this?

Mr. DUFFY. This was right after the murder. Masseria's group traced the apartment after the murder.

The CHAIRMAN. They have not gotten to the murder of him yet.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, when you talked about the fact that they got Fennuci and Mineo, you meant Alfred Mineo and Steve Ferrigno. You meant they were killed by the group while you were away for a couple of weeks?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I went away after they were killed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You went away after they were killed. Who did the killing of Mineo and Ferrigno?

Mr. VALACHI. Bobby Doyle, Buster and Nick Capuzzi.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you tell us about the killing before this?

Mr. VALACHI. Did I? I did, didn't I?

Senator MUNDT. You told us about two plans that failed.

Mr. DUFFY. He said he got them. He did not go into specifics as to how they were killed. He learned this from Bobby Doyle himself as to how they were killed.

Senator MUNDT. You told us about one plan, shooting at the park bench, that failed. You told us about a second plan to shoot him out of the apartment window, that failed.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 173

Mr. VALACHI. No, that didn't fail. From the new apartment that didn't fail. I said they got him the next day, but they got the apartment in the morning, the new apartment. That day, the way I understand, there were about 20 to 24 men that had a meeting. As they were coming out two by two from Fennuci's apartment, what I am talking about, the ones that were in the apartment waiting to shoot Joe Masseria, Joe, the boss, they were coming out two by two. They were making them pass by waiting for Joe. When these two appeared they didn't want to gamble any more.

He said, "Let us grab what we have. Maybe Joe got out during the night," and they shot these two, which were two bosses. They were just as important as Masseria was.

Do you understand that, Senator?

Senator MUNDT. Vaguely.

Mr. DUFFY. The following day, when Mr. Valachi was in the apartment waiting for them to come out that night, they did not come out of the apartment. The following morning they rented the apartment down the hall, the other group, without Mr. Valachi present. It was at that time when they killed these two men.

After the killing, Mr. Valachi was visiting his brother in Dannemora Prison. He comes back and then he learned about the killing which he is relating to you now.

Mr. VALACHI. Senator do you want to know whether I was around the apartment when the killing came off? No, I went away. I didn't go to Dannemora until I heard about the killing, but I was in another neighborhood. I went somewhere, knowing they had a new apartment, they didn't need me there any more. So new guys came, new guys like Bobby Doyle, which he considered it a break. The first time he comes he gets a break. In other words, he didn't have to waste no time. Where the other fellows were hanging around 2 months and nothing happened, he comes and he gets action. That is the way someone explained it. "I got a break. I didn't have to be around too long."

After the killing, which I knew, and was told that it had come off, later I learned that when Buster ran out of the apartment he ran right into a policeman and the policeman asked him "What is going on?" He said, "I don't know. There is shooting down the block." The policeman ran toward the apartment. All that Buster did was walk off.

I explained I went away. Then I will explain to you when I got back what happened when I didn't know they had made us.

The CHAIRMAN. You were not there that night or the morning of the shooting?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. You had been visiting somebody else that night?

Mr. VALACHI. I went after. In other words, I went to get away from the apartment and to have, like we say, an alibi. Later on I will explain to you what happened when I got back, Senator.

Mr. DUFFY. I can explain.

This was the Pelham Parkway apartments, is that right, Mr. Valachi, where this murder took place?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; 750 Pelham Parkway, in the Bronx, in New York.

174 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. DUFFY. Also, when you had this apartment under surveillance it was at that time you met Buster for the first time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. DUFFY. Then he told you about the fact he had murdered Peter Morello.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. DUFFY. He learned that for the first time when he was at the Pelham Parkway. After the murder of Mineo and Fennuci Mr. Valachi will go into the fact he became a member of Casa Nostra the first time. That was after this murder took place.

This was and is now, nationwide in scope. All the Castelmarese are going to the defense of Mr. Maranzano.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand you then, after these two were killed, this last killing you have talked about, after they were killed and you came back you learned that there was definitely a nationwide war on between the groups.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. DUFFY. Before he goes into that, can we put Mr. Salerno on to give details of the murders from the police files?

The CHAIRMAN. These have all been confirmed?

Mr. DUFFY. They have, sir. We have Mr. Salerno.

The CHAIRMAN. You have been previously sworn. Further identify yourself again for the record.

TESTIMONY OF SGT. RALPH SALERNO—Resumed

Sergeant SALERNO. Sergeant Salerno from the New York Police Department.

The CHAIRMAN. You have heard the testimony given by Mr. Valachi, and also you have followed the testimony with respect to the chart before us, have you?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir; I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, can you give us any confirmation from police records with respect to these crimes?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir; I can.

The CHAIRMAN. Start with Reina.

Sergeant SALERNO. Our records indicate that on February 26—

The CHAIRMAN. Speak a little louder.

Sergeant SALERNO. On February 26, 1930, at 8:10 p.m., one night, Tom Reina, male, white, 40, of 3183 Rochembeau Avenue, Bronx, while leaving premise 1522 Sheridan Avenue, in company of a female, Marie Annise, a resident of that address, was shot and killed by unknown male who fired both barrels of a sawed-off shotgun into Reina's body, causing death.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. What is the next one? This Morello. Do you have anything on him, Peter Morello? He is the boss.

Sergeant SALERNO. Peter Morello was killed at about 3:30 p.m. on August 15, 1930. He was 50 years of age. He resided at that time at 1115 Arcadian Way and Palisades, N.J. He was shot and killed in his office at 362 East 116th Street by persons unknown. The cause of death was multiple gunshot wounds; also killed at that time was a visitor to the office, one Giuseppe Piranio who also died of gunshot wounds.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, one man killed and two people in the office?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now let me ask you, with respect to the Reina murder was anyone ever apprehended? Was that murder ever solved as to who committed the offense?

Sergeant SALERNO. These are both active cases.

The CHAIRMAN. These are still active cases?

Sergeant SALERNO. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. So if this testimony is true that you are hearing now from Valachi, then it does give you a lead as to who committed these crimes?

Sergeant SALERNO. That is right, Senator, the amount of confirmation that we can give you has been limited by the district attorney's offices of the counties concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand. You have much more information than what you are giving?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes. They have asked for this because these cases are active and any new such information is being investigated now.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not asking you to put in any detail at all but you do have now confirmation as to what Valachi is testifying here as to how these killings occurred?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask you, are those who are suspected of the killing, dead or alive?

Sergeant SALERNO. I really don't know individually. You mean the persons that Mr. Valachi has named?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Sergeant SALERNO. Some of them are alive, some are now deceased.

The CHAIRMAN. Some are still alive and some are deceased. Some of those he has named here today with respect to these killings?

Sergeant SALERNO. Let us go to the third one, Joseph Pinzola. That is the one over here that Masseria had put in as boss after Reina was killed. Yes, on September 9, 1930, at 9 p.m., the body of Joseph Pinzola, who was in the fruit business, was found on the floor of his office, which is in suite 1007 in the Brokaw Building at 1487 Broadway, New York City. The name of his firm was the California Dried Fruit Importers. The lessee of these premises was Thomas Lucchese. He was found dead from gunshot wounds of the left chest and the neck. On September 11, two days later, Thomas Lucchese was arraigned in homicide court.

The CHAIRMAN. Who?

Sergeant SALERNO. Tommy Lucchese.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the one who is now the boss of one of the families?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, he was charged with that murder?

Sergeant SALERNO. He was, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What is his other name?

Sergeant SALERNO. Three-Finger Brown, Tommy Brown.

The CHAIRMAN. Lucchese was charged with the killing?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

176 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. What happened in that instance?

Sergeant SALERNO. He was arraigned in court. He was held without bail. The evidence was presented the grand jury which failed to return an indictment.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't have enough evidence against him to return an indictment?

Sergeant SALERNO. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand from Valachi you say it was Bobby Doyle who killed Pinzola.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not Lucchese that killed him but it was Bobby Doyle.

Mr. VALACHI. Bobby Doyle. Santuccio, Bobby Doyle, not Lucchese.

The CHAIRMAN. Santuccio or Bobby Doyle is the one who actually did that killing.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt.

Senator MUNDT. Was the reason you arraigned Tommy Lucchese because he was the lessee of the office?

Sergeant SALERNO. There may have been other evidence other than just that, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. That was the only evidence you gave us?

Sergeant SALERNO. I have indicated that what I have been permitted to say by the district attorney is limited concerning this.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator McIntyre.

Senator MCINTYRE. Is Bobby Doyle still living today?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MCINTYRE. Do you know where?

Mr. VALACHI. Connecticut.

Senator MCINTYRE. What city?

Mr. VALACHI. Stamford, Conn.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Javits?

Senator JAVITS. Is Tommy Lucchese still around?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. Is he supposed to be in the dress business?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. Supposed to be putting up a very respectable front as dress manufacturer.

Sergeant SALERNO. He is owner of record of several dress firms.

Senator JAVITS. He has been arraigned before, has he not been brought in on various occasions in the courts in New York?

Sergeant SALERNO. He has appeared very, very recently in the district attorney's office in Nassau County which is where he resides. He has also appeared before this committee.

Senator JAVITS. Don't I recall some arrests for vagrancy that came to nothing in an effort to tab him as a racketeer, and so forth?

Sergeant SALERNO. A recent one, no, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Isn't there one in the record?

Sergeant SALERNO. He does have a criminal record which I can get for you.

Senator JAVITS. He does have a criminal record?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir, he does.

Senator JAVITS. I think it might be useful, Mr. Chairman—

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 177

The CHAIRMAN. Let the criminal record be presented for the witness' identification and it can be made an exhibit.

Is Lucchese one of those who attended the Apalachin meeting?

Sergeant SALERNO. No, sir, he was not identified as being present.

The CHAIRMAN. He was not?

Sergeant SALERNO. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I present you now a document here and I ask you to examine it and state if you identify it?

Sergeant SALERNO. This is the New York City Police Department Bureau of Criminal Identification record of Thomas Lucchese, also known as Thomas Ara and Three Finger Brown, No. B68834.

In 1921 he was arrested for grand larceny. In 1927 he was arrested as a receiver of stolen property.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, let it be made exhibit No. 9 for reference.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 9" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Senator JAVITS. May I see that record?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. The Senator may proceed while I take a look at it.

Senator JACKSON. I have one question.

Mr. Valachi, what is Bobby Doyle doing now?

Mr. VALACHI. When I left the streets he had juke boxes, a restaurant, and horse booking. That is all I can tell you, Senator. That is when I left the streets in 1960.

Senator JACKSON. He was running the juke boxes?

Mr. VALACHI. Juke boxes, cigarette machines, a restaurant, and he was bookmaking. You know what bookmaking is?

Senator JACKSON. Yes. You have nothing further as to his activities since that time?

Mr. VALACHI. No, not since that time.

Senator MUNDT. Do you know the name of the restaurant that he owns?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator MUNDT. In Connecticut?

Mr. VALACHI. It is in Connecticut.

(Senator Jackson presiding.)

Senator JACKSON. Senator Javits may resume the interrogation.

Senator JAVITS. I see the vagrancy arrest which in my mind came on November 18, 1935. That is 28 years ago.

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. According to this record. In the intervening period of 28 years Lucchese has not been arrested or arraigned so far as the police department records show?

Sergeant SALERNO. Arrested or arraigned, no, sir.

Senator JAVITS. He still operates in New York ostensibly as a respectable dress manufacturer, is that right.

Sergeant SALERNO. He does own several dress firms.

Senator JAVITS. This very day?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. It seems to me that is one of the most important things that we have disclosed in this hearing. I thank the Chair.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Chairman.

Senator JACKSON. Senator Mundt.

178 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator MUNDT. I would like to ask Sergeant Salerno has Bobby Doyle ever been arrested or arraigned in connection with the murder of Pinzola?

Sergeant SALERNO. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, not that I know of.

Senator MUNDT. You didn't get the fact that he was murdered from him?

Mr. VALACHI. He himself told me. He says he got a break when he caught him alone.

Senator JACKSON. You go ahead and proceed, Sergeant.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Will you put in the record about Mineo and Ferrigno, also known as Manfredi and Fennuci?

Sergeant SALERNO. On November 5, 1930, at 2:45 p.m., Stephen Ferrigno, also known as Samuel Ferraro and Funnuci and Manfredi Maineo, while leaving Ferrigno's apartment at 75 Pelham Parkway in Bronx County was fatally shot by shotgun fire by persons unknown who were occupying apartment C-1 at 760 Pelham Parkway South. Shots were fired from a ground floor apartment through closed windows. Three guns were recovered. The case is active.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, in the killing of Minio [Maineo] and Ferrigno as you know them, Manfredi and Funnuci, this occurred on November 5, 1930, according to the record?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who, according to your information, did the actual killing?

Mr. VALACHI. Bobby Doyle, Buster and Nick Capuzzi.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Nick Capuzzi is also "Nick the Thief." Is he alive?

Mr. VALACHI. No, that is not "the" Nick the Thief.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is Nick Capuzzi still alive?

Mr. VALACHI. No, he died.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Buster was killed?

Mr. VALACHI. Buster was killed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Bobby Doyle is still alive?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was anybody else involved in that killing?

Mr. VALACHI. No, not that I know of.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about the people who were spotting with you at the time?

Mr. VALACHI. As I say, they also looked for Buster because Buster was really a sharpshooter. As to what happened, why they were there, how they were there, I can't account for it. In fact I wasn't there, myself.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Even though the Masseria group traced the fact that you had furniture in there and they discovered you were involved in the killing they never told the police about this, did they? As far as you know you were never questioned about this by the police?

Mr. VALACHI. Not that I know of.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Even though Masseria may have known that you or Bobby Doyle or the rest were involved, they would never tell the police?

Mr. VALACHI. They would not tell the police.

Mr. ADLERMAN. No more than you would tell if you know other people were involved?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 179

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. While it was known among the people who were involved in the killing, those who were victims of the killing or their friends, they would not go to the police in any of these cases?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now we come to the point where you came back from Dannemora.

Senator MUNDT. Before we get to another point I would like to ask the witness: Where is Buster now?

Mr. VALACHI. Buster died right after Maranzano died.

Senator MUNDT. He died a natural death?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator MUNDT. What happened to him?

Mr. VALACHI. He was killed in an argument in a crap game.

Senator MUNDT. Not by the other gang?

Mr. VALACHI. No. It was peacetime when he was killed.

Senator MUNDT. Where does Buster's name appear on that chart?

Mr. DUFFY. It is not on this chart. He was killed after peace was declared. We tried to put only bosses on here. The only man who is not a boss on this chart is Joe Baker. All the others on here are bosses.

Senator MUNDT. He does not belong to the Maranzano group?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Buster's name does appear there but only as a killer. We have not been able to identify him further than Buster of Chicago. We have not been able to find out the details of his name.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. Valachi has given information pinpointing the area within three blocks of where Buster was killed, within 6 months of when he was killed. The police department is trying to identify him further. Mr. Valachi will now digress from the chart to go into when he became a full-fledged member after the ceremony. After that he will go back to the chart and discuss the murders of Catena which he participated in, Joe Masseria and Maranzano. He will not discuss what occurred after the Maranzano war at this time. We will go into that when we get into individual New York charts.

The CHAIRMAN. I think this is a good place to recess until 2:30.

(Members present at time of recess: Senators McClellan, McIntyre, and Mundt.)

(Whereupon, at 12:15 p.m. the committee recessed until 2:30 p.m. of the same day.)

(The subcommittee reconvened at 2:35 p.m., Senator John L. McClellan (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.)

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of reconvening: Senators McClellan, Jackson, Muskie, McIntyre, Mundt, and Curtis.)

The CHAIRMAN. The hearing will come to order. We will proceed.

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

The CHAIRMAN. After you came back, you had made a trip out of town, I believe you said.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

180 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. And you came back and you were walking the street and met whom?

Mr. VALACHI. Can you hear me, Senator? It was Frank Callace.

The CHAIRMAN. What conversation did you have with Chick 99?

Mr. VALACHI. Chick 99 called me into the car and told me, "How long are you here?"

The CHAIRMAN. Into the car?

Mr. VALACHI. Into the car, yes, sir; and he waved me in, and he opened the door and waved me in. I told him I was there a couple of hours. He said, "My God," he said, "you are lucky. They caught up with us," and he went to explain.

The CHAIRMAN. That was after those two men were killed?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, and he went out and explained about the furniture that his sister had ordered for 106th and 3d Avenue, and being that we used to hang out in the daytime we would arrive there and be there in the evening and we used to go to 103d and 6th Avenue.

So Masseria knew the hangout, and I wouldn't say I am talking about myself, now. He knew the hangouts of the boys. In that way they got wise who was doing this stinking work.

The CHAIRMAN. That is when all-out war was declared by the other side?

Mr. VALACHI. That is, I would put it, national.

The CHAIRMAN. It was made national.

Mr. VALACHI. It was made in all cities, wherever the members were—in Chicago, and Cleveland, and California.

The CHAIRMAN. That is about the time that you were persuaded to join Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. When, at this time; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, what happened that persuaded you to join, what did you do to join, and where did you go to become a member?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the next day I met Chick 99 and they drove upstate about 90 miles, and we drove, as I, and Cheech, and Nick Padovana and Sally Shields.

The CHAIRMAN. Just three of you?

Mr. VALACHI. And Cheech.

The CHAIRMAN. That made four.

Mr. VALACHI. That is four. And we went to a sort of a private house, upstate, which I can never remember today where it was, but it is about 90 miles from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. You went to a private house?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who lived there? Do you know?

Mr. VALACHI. I really didn't know who lived there.

The CHAIRMAN. They didn't tell you that?

Mr. VALACHI. They didn't tell me; no.

The CHAIRMAN. How many were there when you got there, or how many came?

Mr. VALACHI. There was about 30 to 35.

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty or thirty-five?

Mr. VALACHI. There could have been even 40, and I don't remember, but it was about that much.

The CHAIRMAN. About that many?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 181

The CHAIRMAN. What was the purpose of that meeting?

Mr. VALACHI. The purpose of that meeting was to "make us."

The CHAIRMAN. To "make us" means make you members?

Mr. VALACHI. To make new members and to meet all of them.

The CHAIRMAN. To meet the others that were in that family?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right, for the first time.

The CHAIRMAN. What family was that, then; and what was it known as, and what family?

Mr. VALACHI. The Gagliano-Maranzano family, we will put it that way. In other words, Maranzano was actually boss at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. He was boss of the family?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know that at the time?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, in the room, after I was there about 5 minutes, I learned that.

The CHAIRMAN. You learned that after you got there?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; and—do you want me to continue?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. He was going to continue now being boss throughout the whole trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. He was going to be the boss throughout the whole trouble?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Then what happened?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, then——

The CHAIRMAN. Was he going to be boss for both families?

Mr. VALACHI. At this time; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he to take over the Profaci crowd?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the Gagliano crowd and his crowd, and he was going to be the boss.

The CHAIRMAN. Of those two?

Mr. VALACHI. While the war lasted; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, he was a general in chief to fight the war.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, what happened after you got there and how many were there with you, to become members, to be "made"?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, they excluded three of us.

The CHAIRMAN. Just the three?

Mr. VALACHI. They excluded the three of us out of the room; I, Nick Padovana, and Sally Shields.

The CHAIRMAN. You were excluded out of the room?

Mr. VALACHI. All three of us.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what happened?

Mr. VALACHI. Then they called us in one at a time.

The CHAIRMAN. One at a time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right; proceed.

Mr. VALACHI. When I came in, I don't remember if I was first, second, or third, but let me talk about the time I got into the room.

When I came in, I sat down and they were at the edge of the table, it was a long table, and there was a gun and a knife on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. How many were at the table?

Mr. VALACHI. About 35 or 40.

The CHAIRMAN. A long table.

Mr. VALACHI. It was a big table; it was a big, big room.

The CHAIRMAN. It was a big room.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you have a round table or a long one?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, sort of like the table you have got there, but smaller, you know.

The CHAIRMAN. All right; go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. It was all tight, and they sat me down and made me repeat in Italian.

The CHAIRMAN. They sat you down at the table or in a chair?

Mr. VALACHI. On the edge of the table, with Maranzano doing the talking.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was doing the talking—Maranzano?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That is when you met him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the first time you met him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You met the chief, the boss of the two families.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. The chief that was going to fight the war?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you sat next to him, and then what happened?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, he had a knife and a gun on the table. I repeated some words they told me, but I couldn't explain what he meant. I could repeat the words, but they were in Italian.

The CHAIRMAN. They were in what?

Mr. VALACHI. Sicilian.

The CHAIRMAN. And you repeated them, but you didn't understand what they meant.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right; and then they explained it to me.

The CHAIRMAN. They explained? Who explained? Maranzano?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, he could talk pretty good English, and he talked 12 languages. He went on to explain that they lived by the gun and by the knife and you die by the gun and by the knife.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have a full understanding of what that meant at the time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It meant that you were what?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, expected to die by the gun and by the knife.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, when you took that oath, you expected some day to die either by the gun or by the knife?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what you were dedicating yourself to?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I guess the purpose, that is what the rules were, of Cosa Nostra.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 183

The CHAIRMAN. We will get to the rules in a minute. What kind of a ceremony did you go through in taking that oath?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, then he gave me a piece of paper, and I was to burn it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without burning the paper, just take a piece of paper there and show us how you did it. You don't have to set the paper afire, but give him a piece of paper. Demonstrate just what you did.

Mr. VALACHI. In other words, I took a piece of paper, and the piece of paper is burning, and it is lighted and then in your hand, you say—well, again, they give you words in Italian but I knew what it meant.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, while you were repeating the words, you were burning the paper?

Mr. VALACHI. This is the way I burn if I expose this organization.

The CHAIRMAN. And that was symbolic of the fate that was to befall you if you betrayed the organization.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right; until the piece of paper burned.

The CHAIRMAN. You would be burned to ashes?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. What else did you do in that ceremony?

Mr. VALACHI. After that, they got around the table and they drew numbers.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. Numbers, between 1 to 5.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you mean?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, like this: 3 or 1 or 5, and let us say the way you have the table right there, everybody chose a number.

The CHAIRMAN. We would start down here at the table and someone would hold up a number, each one would hold up some fingers. They can hold up as many as they wanted to?

Mr. VALACHI. Up to five.

The CHAIRMAN. That is about all they can hold on one hand.

Mr. VALACHI. Suppose we start with you, Senator, and let us say it is 35 or 40.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose I put up two and he puts up some.

Mr. VALACHI. You add it all up, and let us say we got a figure about 38, and we start from you, and let us say you go all around and it comes to the Senator next to you.

The CHAIRMAN. That is Senator Mundt.

Mr. VALACHI. He is what you call my godfather.

The CHAIRMAN. He becomes responsible for you?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, who was, in that method? Who was chosen, or who became your godfather?

Mr. VALACHI. The one who the number came to. The Senator next to you; I forget his name.

The CHAIRMAN. When it got back around, and you counted to 38 or whatever the number was, who was the party?

Mr. VALACHI. At that time, you mean?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, I mean there.

Mr. VALACHI. I am sorry.

Senator MUNDT. Keep it there.

184 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Bananas.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, where is he on this chart that we have here?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't think Joe Bananas is on that.

He is down at the bottom; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I didn't understand you.

Mr. VALACHI. He is on the bottom.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he at the head of one of the families now?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; he still is.

The CHAIRMAN. He still is?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He is still alive?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. May I ask a question there? Are you the godfather of any other member "made" since then?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I never was in one of those tables. I never was.

Senator CURTIS. Very well.

Mr. VALACHI. Then he picks your finger, the godfather.

The CHAIRMAN. He picks your finger?

Mr. VALACHI. With a needle, and he makes a little blood come out, and in other words, that is the expression, the blood relationship. It is supposed to be like brothers.

The CHAIRMAN. That is is letting of blood?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, symbolic of the fact that you are willing to spill your blood to give your blood or give your life?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that what it meant?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what happened?

Mr. VALACHI. Then they all shake hands, everybody gets up and shakes hands, and say a few more words together, which I can't recall. They also said it in Sicilian.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know what they meant?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, actually I never asked what it meant. I never did ask what it meant; it meant like sort of the style of an organization, but you don't bother, and I never did bother.

The CHAIRMAN. You never did what?

Mr. VALACHI. I never bothered with finding out what it meant. I had an idea.

The CHAIRMAN. What was your idea?

Mr. VALACHI. We are all tied up.

The CHAIRMAN. You are all together?

Mr. VALACHI. We are all together; that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And you sink together, and hang together, and live together.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Didn't you tell us in executive session—

Mr. VALACHI. Can I say something? As to what I am telling you now, I need go no further to say nothing else but this here, what I am telling you, what I am exposing to you and to the press and everybody. This is my doom. This is the promise I am breaking. Even if I talked, I should never talk about this, and I am doing so. That is my best way to explain it.

Senator MUNDT. That is the highest oath you took. In other words, that was the most sacred in this organization.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. That you would never tell this.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. In executive session you said when you had your hands all clasped together and repeated some words in Italian or Sicilian, that what it meant was, "One for all and all for one."

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; that is the way I explained it.

Senator MUNDT. One for all and all for one.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. But I didn't know the words, Senator. You remember, I didn't know the words.

Senator MUNDT. That is right, but you said that is the reaction you got.

Mr. VALACHI. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, then you became there a full-fledged member.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Now you have already described, I believe, their ranks, and they start with the soldier, and button man, and go on up.

Mr. VALACHI. Do you want me to describe it again?

The CHAIRMAN. We don't need to go over that again, but you became there a soldier or button man. I see. Were any of the rules explained to you there, or were they explained to you later?

Mr. VALACHI. Just two rules at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Just two at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. At this time.

The CHAIRMAN. What were they?

Mr. VALACHI. One was the secret which I was just telling you about, and the other rule was, for instance, a wife, if you violate the law of another member's wife, or sister, or daughter, these two rules were told; in other words, you had no defense.

The CHAIRMAN. You have no defense?

Mr. VALACHI. These two main rules. If you give away the secret or you violate—at this time that is all of the rules I was told.

The CHAIRMAN. Those two.

Mr. VALACHI. At this time.

The CHAIRMAN. If you violated the family relationship of a husband and his wife, and if they were members of Cosa Nostra; is that all?

Mr. VALACHI. If they were members. If they were members of Cosa Nostra.

The CHAIRMAN. You were prohibited from violating the rules of family relationship.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Those two at that time.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. What others did you learn later?

Mr. VALACHI. Later I learned, after the war, because this was a time of war—

The CHAIRMAN. This was a time of war.

186 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. And after the war I learned the rules. For instance, you can't hit another member with your fist. That is a serious charge, not that you die by it, but you have a chance for a trial, which I was involved in one of those.

The CHAIRMAN. You were involved in one charge of hitting another member?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That was later?

Mr. VALACHI. Later; yes, sir. I am talking about later.

The CHAIRMAN. Had you learned about that rule before you committed the offense?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I knew it.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the defense to that?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the defense was that we had a business together and he was stealing.

The CHAIRMAN. He was stealing?

Mr. VALACHI. He was stealing most of the profit.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that against your code, to steal from each other?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, yes; against my code it was.

The CHAIRMAN. You found your partner in business—what kind of business were you in?

Mr. VALACHI. A restaurant business.

The CHAIRMAN. And you found he was stealing from you?

Mr. VALACHI. He put the place behind about $18,000.

The CHAIRMAN. He what?

Mr. VALACHI. He set the place behind about $18,000.

The CHAIRMAN. And you violated the rule and what happened?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I violated the rule, and went from right I got wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. From right, I got wrong by hitting him. I was right if I don't hit him. I mean, if I don't hit him I was right, and by hitting him I got wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, then, you did hit him.

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What was his name?

Mr. VALACHI. Frank Luciano.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he still living?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. When did that occur?

Mr. VALACHI. This occurred about—this was in the late—around 1950 or something like that.

The CHAIRMAN. Around 1950 or something like that?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, as a result of your accusing him of stealing from the business, the partnership, and as a result of your having hit him or struck him, did your organization or your family government take any action?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; I was brought on the carpet.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. I was brought on the carpet.

The CHAIRMAN. On the carpet?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 187

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us what occurred?

Mr. VALACHI. The carpet is a table, and he was represented by his lieutenant, and I was represented by my lieutenant.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that what you call a trial now, in your group?

Mr. VALACHI. This is a small trial.

The CHAIRMAN. A small trial?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. The first meeting we had was postponed, and then we had another meeting. At this time his caporegima was there, his lieutenant, and my lieutenant, which was Tony Bender—Tony Strollo at the time—and also Albert Anastasia was there, which was his boss.

The CHAIRMAN. He had become the boss at that time, had he?

Mr. VALACHI. He was Frank Luciano's boss. Now, I explained that naturally he was lacing it into me, and he said, "After all, a fellow like you, being in 20 years at that time"——

The CHAIRMAN. You had known him for 20 years?

Mr. VALACHI. He said to me, "After all, you have been in this life of ours 20 years."

The CHAIRMAN. You had been in the organization for 20 years?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. At that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, and he said, "You should know better, and you know you could start a war with this kind of thing that you pulled."

The CHAIRMAN. That was Albert Anastasia saying that to you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, he was talking, and Tony is doing no talking. And neither did Charley Brush, the one who represented Frank. His lieutenant was Joe Riccobono, but Joe Riccobono didn't come, and so he sent one acting for him, which was Charley Brush.

So naturally, I didn't answer. And then it came about the business. He said, "Now, you two must split, and you can't be together."

So Frank claimed he had $6,500 coming to him, and so I said I didn't want to pay him no $6,500, considering the money he took out of the place. So Albert said, "I understand that." And he said, "That is why I am trying to tell you. From right you wind up wrong, but anyway," he said, "I am going to allow you, I want you to give him what is ask you to give him."

And I said, "What do you want to give him?" and he said, "Give him," and I don't remember whether it was $3,000 or $3,500, "and you wind up with the place because Frank cannot buy you out."

I have more money coming, you see. So he said, "From now on," he said to Frank, "you see that your son keeps that license up there, because the license was in his son's name, and see that that license stays up there until that place goes down to the ground, as long as Joe wants it."

The CHAIRMAN. As long as what?

Mr. VALACHI. As long as Joe wants it to stay there. In other words, the license was under Frank Luciano's son's name.

The CHAIRMAN. But you were to have the use of the license to operate the place.

Mr. VALACHI. As long as I wanted; yes, sir.

188 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. The reason you couldn't have the license in your name was what?

Mr. VALACHI. Because I have a record.

The CHAIRMAN. You already had a record, and you couldn't get the license in your name?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. So you were able to operate the business, though, by keeping the license in the name of Anthony Luciano?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. Then, I gave him the money, and now I was in the place about 6 more years after that.

The CHAIRMAN. You kept the place 6 years after that?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What was your first contract, and you can tell again if you want to what "contract" means, after you became a member of Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Baker.

The CHAIRMAN. You had a contract to kill Joe Baker?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. What was his other name?

Mr. VALACHI. Catania.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it Cotani?

Mr. VALACHI. Catania.

The CHAIRMAN. But they called him Joe Baker?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you happen to become the possessor of that contract?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, we were assigned to an apartment, but before we got assigned to the apartment, we were looking for him in the neighborhood, you see, where he hung out.

The CHAIRMAN. Why was he condemned, and why was he to be killed?

Mr. VALACHI. The way I understand, that when Maranzano had a personal grudge against Joe Baker.

The CHAIRMAN. That is your boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Maranzano had a personal grudge against him. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And wanted him killed?

Mr. VALACHI. And wanted him killed. I learned, and I don't know when it was, but the time before mine, that Joe Baker was highjacking trucks on Maranzano. In other words, alcohol trucks, or in that line, you see. And he carried a personal grudge, and the remark that he would never make peace unless he gets Joe Baker. Joe Baker was a nephew——

The CHAIRMAN. Was that a condition to getting peace between the groups?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, you see, they were navigating about peace, they were navigating about getting Joe Catania, and that is why there was talk about peace. And as soon as they got Joe Catania, everybody figured the war would have been over, and trouble would have been over, but he said. "If I don't get Joe Baker. I will never make peace."

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, Baker had to be killed, and that was a prerequisite to entering into a peaceful settlement.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. So now one day, Steven Rinell and I were riding through Flatbush Avenue in the neighborhood where Joe Baker hung out, near the office, and on our way over he spots another man, and he tells me to swing around. I said, "Who is that?" And he said, "He is a big boss." And I said, "Yes?" So I swung the car around and I went up and pulled up to the other car, which was, I think, a Lincoln. Let us say it was a Lincoln. So when I pulled up to him and I put him right alongside of the car, and Steve Rinell fired one shot at him and I saw this man go with the shot, and I didn't know him at the time, which I later found out his name was Paolo Gambino.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he killed at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. No; he was not. Half his ear was shot off.

The CHAIRMAN. So he had a narrow escape, you would say?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; and he went with the shot. So I tried to tell Steve, but he got panicky after the first shot, and he started yelling, "Step on it," and "Step on it," and so I pulled away, and as I pulled away, I felt I was pulling something, and my bumper got stuck or my rear bumper got stuck with his front bumper, and so I was pulling and pulling, and about half a block and I broke loose. I let him off around Southern Boulevard some place and I went to Yonkers at this time, where Maranzano was.

So Maranzano was waiting for me in front of the door, and he said to me, as soon as I came, he seemed to know already what happened, and he said, to me, "What did he tell you, who this guy was?" and I said, "He told me he was a big boss," and he started cursing. He said the guy is not even a member. Well, I said, "Look, I don't want to work with him no more."

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't want to work with him any more?

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't want to work with Steve any more. That is Steve Rinell. And so he said, "Well, I will tell you, then, as long as you feel that he wasn't supposed to be touched, don't worry about it, because I don't think that he got hit."

With that, as I am talking, the phone rang, and he said, "Gee, you are right. I just got a telephone call." He said, "He got off the car and he walked away." And I said, "You see," so Steve Rinell was put on the farm about a month or so. He was put on a farm, put out of action, and out of circulation.

The CHAIRMAN. He was suspended?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; but then this thing turned out for the better.

The CHAIRMAN. How did it turn out for the best?

Mr. VALACHI. Because Frank Scalise, at the time I think he was underboss or boss, he was also with Carlo Gambino. Carlo Gambino is Paul Gambino's brother, and Carlo Gambino was a member, and Maranzano explained that that brought this new group in with us, and that is why he said it turned out for the best.

The CHAIRMAN. As a result of the shooting, Gambino came in with you folks?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. What happened to Baker?

190 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Shall I go on with the story of Baker?

The CHAIRMAN. Before you go on with the story of Baker, I would like to find out how these contracts are made. Did Maranzano himself give you the contract to kill Baker, or did he work through some underboss other than that?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, at this time, I was in Maranzano's headquarters.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. I was in Maranzano's headquarters.

The CHAIRMAN. You were in his headquarters?

Mr. VALACHI. And when I say "headquarters" I mean at the house where he was staying.

Senator MUNDT. And he himself told you to go out and get Baker?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, if he didn't tell me he would tell the one in charge. We also have one in charge. He didn't tell it to me but he told it to the one in charge. In other words, a fellow by the name of Nick Capuzzi, who was in charge at this time, what I am going to tell you about.

Senator MUNDT. In charge of what?

Mr. VALACHI. Of this operation.

Senator MUNDT. Maranzano told Nick, "I want you to get somebody to get Baker." Nick told you to do the job.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, no; Nick comes with me, see. In other words, there was an apartment rented at 183d Street. All I know is, they wake me up in the morning, say about 4 o'clock in the morning, and we sneak in this apartment. Nick has the orders. Maranzano need not talk to me. I get up, dress up, there was Nick, Buster and Sally Shields, and myself. They had an apartment. Now who got the apartment, how they got it I don't know. All I know is that we went in an empty apartment. This apartment happened to be on the top floor of this building. Baker was across the street almost a block down. In other words, we were about a block away.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you were a block away from his apartment but from your apartment you can see his apartment?

Mr. VALACHI. No, it was an office. He used to make an appearance every morning for about 5 minutes. I understand that he used to take money to the bank. He used to take money out of the office, whatever business they were in, at this time, and he would make an appearance for 5 or 10 minutes and go away every morning. They never seemed to be satisfied with this arrangement. Now we are going in and out. We go about 4 in the morning and we leave about 9 or 10 like in the evening. And we go to Yonkers where Maranzano was staying. We are going back and forth for about, I would say, at least 2 months. Nothing was happening. So one day we were sitting down, see. We were sitting down in the apartment and we were talking. So, I said to Nick, I said, "You people don't know the neighborhood, I know this neighborhood. One day they are going to bomb us out over here." He said, "What do you mean?" I said, "If we keep going in and out somebody will spot one of us. The first thing you know we will come in here, they will get us." He said, "Well, do you have any idea?" I said, "You know what I would do? This fellow comes here, he appears every day. Why don't we stake out in the apartment on the first floor? If he doesn't show up and you miss him, you ain't losing anyway, you're not going to do anything from here anyway."

The CHAIRMAN. Couldn't you do anything?

Mr. VALACHI. The range is too far. At one time they figured the gun don't reach. Then another time they get a longer gun. Buster was handling all that. In other words, by the time they got aim, and he wanted to take good aim, he would make that little turn he was making, you know, he never was sure, himself. He didn't want to miss. That is the way it was going. Either one thing or another. There was always something. It was too far.

So that morning, that night, the last night that we were in Yonkers, about 3 in the morning Maranzano sent for me. What I mean by that, he sent for me from my room into his room.

The CHAIRMAN. Who?

Mr. VALACHI. Maranzano.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. He sent for me from my room into his room. Bobby Doyle was the one who come and got me. He said, "You know what you are doing?" I said, "What is the matter?" He said, "You are taking responsibility away. What are you doing?" I said, "Bobby, I am going away. Bobby, there is nothing to be done over here, it is too far. I am going there, not you. One of these days they are going to spot us and they will blow us right out of the building." I said, "Is that what he wants to see me about?" He said, "Yes." I said, "OK." I went in and talked to Maranzano. I explained to him the same thing. So, he told me, go ahead. So I told him, "Instead of tapping on the door," I said, "I would like to get some tools. I would like to crash into the apartment instead of walking in. Just like I know how to do it." He told me, "What do you need?" I told him, "I need a spring leaf, you know the spring leaf of a car."

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. I said: "I need one short and one larger. I want the short one to be sharp." They got that all arranged for me. The next time we went, we timed it, we figured we would go about a half hour or three-quarters of an hour before his appearance. He seemed to appear right on time. So, to my amazement, I crashed the doorway, the apartment was empty and there were three painters in there.

The CHAIRMAN. Three painters?

Mr. VALACHI. Three painters.

The CHAIRMAN. There was an empty apartment. You crashed in there and you found three men painting the apartment?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. These painters wanted to give us money. They thought we were sticking them up. We said: "We don't want any money, just keep painting."

The CHAIRMAN. All right, go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. So, we were in about a half hour, Joe Baker makes an appearance. As soon as he made the appearance I left to get the car ready. In other words, to have the motor ready instead of going down there and running down and starting the car. I left about a minute before and I had the motor ready. Within about a minute's time they were right behind me. I left them off——

The CHAIRMAN. Did you hear the shots?

Mr. VALACHI. I tell you, Senator, I don't remember if I heard the shots.

The CHAIRMAN. But they came right after you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Because I had the car in the next block. I don't remember how I got there, but I had it in another block. I really don't remember. But the car was, let us say, for instance, this avenue——

The CHAIRMAN. Who were the two you left there to get Baker?

Mr. VALACHI. I left three there.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were they?

Mr. VALACHI. There was Sally, there was Buster.

The CHAIRMAN. Sally Shields?

Mr. VALACHI. Buster and Nick Capuzzi.

The CHAIRMAN. Those were the three you left there?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Shields still living?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What year was this? Do you remember? Do we have a record of this?

Mr. VALACHI. About 1930, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is after you were a member?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember where this was, what building?

Mr. VALACHI. 183d Street and Crescent Avenue, the Bronx.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask the officer what your record shows regarding this killing.

Sergeant SALERNO. On February 3, 1931, at 11:45 p.m., 15 feet west of 647 Crescent Avenue in the Bronx, one Joseph Catania, alias Joe Baker of 2319 Belmont Avenue, Bronx, male, white, 29, while walking in front of that premise was shot six times in the head and body, causing his death in Fordham Hospital to which he was removed. Before he died, in spite of mortal wounds he could not or would not identify the perpetrators of the crime. The case is active.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. I suppose you read about the killing the next day in the paper, didn't you?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't think I read about it.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you do, get away from there for awhile?

Mr. VALACHI. No; we didn't go out. It was dangerous to go out. We never went out.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't go out, you stayed in?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the first contract you helped carry out?

Mr. VALACHI. Besides the Pelham apartment.

Senator MUSKIE. Will the chairman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, I will be glad to yield.

Senator MUSKIE. You speak of this contract. Was there any quid pro quo? Did you get paid for these jobs?

Mr. VALACHI. I can't hear you.

Senator MUSKIE. You referred to these contracts. Did you get paid for performing these chores?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator MUSKIE. This was part of your obligations as a member of the organization?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUSKIE. This was part of the oath you described earlier this afternoon?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator, if this organization finds out that any member gets paid for any killing, he is in trouble. I must tell you that.

Senator MUSKIE. He is in trouble for getting paid, not for the killing?

Mr. VALACHI. I am telling you the truth.

Senator MUSKIE. Let me ask you this. When you were chosen for this job, did you have any choice? Is this something you had to do when you were asked to do it?

Mr. VALACHI. We are in war, Senator. We feel the sooner we get through with it the sooner we will be back in circulation.

Senator MUSKIE. Were you obeying orders as a soldier?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; we were working as a team, just like any army would, you know.

Senator MUSKIE. This is something you wanted to do, but if you didn't want to do it could they have forced you to do it?

Mr. VALACHI. A thought like that never even entered our mind as to whether you wanted to do it or not. You are there for that purpose, Senator.

Senator MUSKIE. So that doing these things came as naturally as breathing?

Mr. VALACHI. What was that, Senator?

Senator MUSKIE. Doing these things came as naturally as breathing?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right; yes.

Senator MUSKIE. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JACKSON. May I ask one question?

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Jackson?

Senator JACKSON. Following up Senator Muskie's question, would the organization advance money to you if you needed it?

Mr. VALACHI. At this time we were getting along on very little.

Senator JACKSON. You were getting along all right?

Mr. VALACHI. On very little.

Senator JACKSON. On very little?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JACKSON. But did the organization—Maranzano—have money available to help any member?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; there was money coming in, Senator, for instance, after I found out that Tom Gagliano invested $140,000 out of his pocket—are you talking about financing this war?

Senator JACKSON. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. There was $5,000 a week coming in from Buffalo which was Steve Magaddino.

Senator JACKSON. $5,000 a week?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; and there was $5,000 a week coming from Chicago, Joe Aiello. I learned this from being in the house with Maranzano.

Senator JACKSON. Was there a time when the money stopped coming from Chicago?

194 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; when Joe Aiello in Chicago—he was killed in almost the same style as the Pelham apartment—going in what you call a court from the apartment.

Senator JACKSON. So that source of revenue was lost?

Mr. VALACHI. That was cut off.

Senator JACKSON. But after that you still had $5,000 a week coming in?

Mr. VALACHI. And Gagliano's $140,000. Not Gagliano, but throughout the whole trouble it cost him $140,000.

Senator JACKSON. How was that money apportioned?

Mr. VALACHI. For instance—

Senator JACKSON. How was it paid out?

Mr. VALACHI. It was expense, Senator. For instance, in cars. They don't use stolen cars. They buy cars, assumed names, in apartments. Their families were being taken care of.

Senator JACKSON. But they did allocate money?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JACKSON. Was this on the basis of rank in the organization?

Mr. VALACHI. It is on the basis—for instance, it needs financing, it needs guns, it needs machineguns. So, Maranzano was in charge of that.

Senator JACKSON. But he decided how much each one would get, would he?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. We were getting $25 a week.

Senator JACKSON. $25 a week?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; between four of us. In fact, Senator, I went on a couple of burglaries.

Senator JACKSON. A couple of what?

Mr. VALACHI. A couple of burglaries, doing this so we could have some money in our pocket. I went by myself, with the other fellows that I knew, like Buck, Monk.

Senator JACKSON. You were doing a little moonlighting?

Mr. VALACHI. I felt $25 a week was kind of rough.

Senator JACKSON. What was the most you got out of the organization?

Mr. VALACHI. I never got anything.

Senator JACKSON. You never got anything?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator JACKSON. The most you got, you say, was $25 a week?

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, you are talking about the troubles?

Senator JACKSON. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. During the troubles. Naturally you corroborate because you know it is rough. There ain't nobody making any money, you are hiding, so you can't make money.

Senator MUSKIE. In other words, you were simply paid during the war to take care of your living expenses while you were a fighting soldier?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. We have here a record of this man you say was killed in Chicago. Let us place that in the record.

Mr. Duffy, do you identify the document? I present to you the document.

TESTIMONY OF LaVERN J. DUFFY—Resumed

Mr. DUFFY. It is a photostatic copy of a police entry on the books to show the murder of Aiello on October 23, 1930.

The CHAIRMAN. October 23, 1930?

Mr. DUFFY. Would you like me to read the entry?

The CHAIRMAN. No; it can be printed in the record and made exhibit No. 10.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 10" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 10

October 23, 1930. Aiello, Joseph: Age 39, Italy, married, gang leader and partner of "Bugs Moran" was riddled with machinegun bullets in front of 205 N. Kolmar Ave., when he left the home of Pasquale Prestigiocomo, alias Presto to enter a cab. The fire was opened up on him from a "machinegun nest" in a flat across the street, 202 Kolmar Ave., and when he attempted to escape to the rear of the Presto home was felled from fire from a second nest from a window at 4518 West End Ave. Presto, who was his business partner and in whose home he had been rooming (it is believed in hiding) was booked 10-28-30 as accessory, but on 1-29-31 the case was nolle prossed by Padden before the inquest closed.

Mr. DUFFY. It does indicate that they used a machinegun as Mr. Valachi said.

The CHAIRMAN. Did they use machineguns on this man in Chicago?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JACKSON. What was the source of the $5,000 a week? What was the racket in Chicago?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know, Senator.

Senator JACKSON. That is a lot of money.

Mr. VALACHI. How they were making this $5,000 a week?

Senator JACKSON. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know. I didn't even know Joe Aiello.

Senator JACKSON. You don't know how he was getting $5,000 a week?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator JACKSON. But it was out of a racket in Chicago?

Mr. VALACHI. I think so.

Senator MUNDT. You told Senator Muskie that you never even considered not obeying the order to kill this man. It was just as natural as breathing that you do it?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I am being fair. I am telling you how I thought at that time.

Senator MUNDT. This is because you thought it would be a penalty to you if you violated an order of the boss?

Mr. VALACHI. As I say, Senator, I never even thought of that, to be frank with you. We were young, we thought we were doing a duty for these new people. How can I explain to you?

Senator MUNDT. This boss had complete control over your life, didn't he?

Mr. VALACHI. At this time, sure.

Senator MUNDT. Did he take a lieutenant and demote him down to being a common soldier?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, at this time, during the trouble, there is nothing like lieutenant or anything like that. That comes after when you make peace. I go on and explain that to you later on.

196 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator MUNDT. Then you say in peacetime he could demote a lieutenant?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. Promote some other lieutenant?

Mr. VALACHI. In peacetime, yes.

Senator MUNDT. Do you know of any case where that was done?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. It was done I understand in Buffalo after the Apalachin meeting. Do you care to hear that now?

Senator MUNDT. That is Montana?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. Is this the same Montana who was made "Man of the Year" in the city of Buffalo?

Mr. VALACHI. The one who was supposed to run for mayor or something. The one who was at Apalachin.

Senator MUNDT. In the Apalachin hearings, we had a Montana who was made "Man of the Year" by the city of Buffalo.

Mr. VALACHI. That is the one.

Senator MUNDT. The same one you are talking about?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. He was a lieutenant under your boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Not under my boss. Under Magadin.

Senator MUNDT. Some other Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, in Buffalo.

Senator MUNDT. He was demoted because of what?

Mr. VALACHI. He was demoted because he felt—you see, this gets around to us. He felt he did not want the boys to contact him any more. He didn't want to be mixing with them because he was arrested in Apalachin.

He was told by the boss, naturally, that he need not worry about it no more. "From now, you will be a plain soldier," and he was replaced by another lieutenant. I don't know who he was.

Senator MUNDT. The boss had enough authority even over a big shot like Montana to demote him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; he did.

Senator MUNDT. He took the demotion?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. Do you know Montana personally?

Mr. VALACHI. I met him some long time ago. I identified his picture.

Senator MUNDT. Did you meet him as a member of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. But I haven't been in contact with him for a long, long time. Some I recognize from Buffalo. I was in Buffalo, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. Did you meet him before or after he got the award of the city as the Man of the Year?

Mr. VALACHI. Before.

Senator MUNDT. He was a member of Cosa Nostra at the time he was given this salutation by his fellow citizens?

Mr. VALACHI. Later on I will explain that to you, Senator, when I get to that.

Senator MUNDT. All right.

Senator CURTIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to be clear on something.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 197

This making him Man of the Year, was that by the Cosa Nostra government or by the city of Buffalo?

Mr. VALACHI. Not Cosa Nostra. That was, how do you put it—newspapers.

Senator CURTIS. A civic honor?

Mr. VALACHI. Cosa Nostra had nothing to do with what they make him.

Senator CURTIS. This man, Montana, was Man of the Year?

Mr. VALACHI. By the newspapers, put it that way, whatever you want to say, but not Cosa Nostra.

Senator CURTIS. Do you know how that happened?

Mr. VALACHI. No; I don't.

Senator CURTIS. Did any of the members of Cosa Nostra go into politics?

Mr. VALACHI. I'm trying to think now if there is one I can think of. I can't think of one.

Senator CURTIS. Did they contribute to political campaigns?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; that they did.

Senator CURTIS. For what offices?

Mr. VALACHI. I am not acquainted with that, Senator. You know what I mean. But I know they helped. But how it goes, I never was interested in political affairs.

Senator CURTIS. In what offices were they interested, in judges, prosecutors, or Governors, or was the emphasis generally in national activities in their political contributions?

Mr. VALACHI. I would say national, like President, that was their interest.

Senator CURTIS. You know that they did make contributions?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator CURTIS. To whom did they make contributions?

Mr. VALACHI. That I don't know, Senator. That is not my line.

Senator CURTIS. How do you know, does the word go out?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; among us.

Senator CURTIS. The word goes out that they want a certain amount of cash?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know what they go for but we know.

Senator CURTIS. Were you ever asked for money?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator CURTIS. But you do know that some in the organization raise the money?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. They probably laid it out of their own pockets. They got enough money. They don't need me.

Do you understand, Senator?

I don't know just how it works but I know when they do donate they donate, you have to be pretty close to hear it.

Senator CURTIS. Pretty close to what?

Mr. VALACHI. You know, one of the guys that gets in on the know, on anything that goes out.

Senator CURTIS. That is a member that is living off some respectable situation?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, it is a member, like a trusted member, put it that way.

198 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

There is a lot of members that are not active at all, you understand. Being you are around, say, and you get active you hear it. You hear this and you hear that. You hear it by reliable sources.

Senator CURTIS. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Sally Shields still alive? You mentioned him a while ago.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He was just recently paroled, was he not?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He is out on parole now?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know if he is out on parole now. I wouldn't know.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us get down now after this killing in Chicago and after Baker's killing, was there an effort to make peace at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. When did Masseria try to get peace?

Mr. VALACHI. Now you had to wait until they get Joe Masseria.

The CHAIRMAN. Another one killed?

Mr. VALACHI. You see, we got it that there was an understanding that his own guys are going to set him up.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand, but did he try to make peace?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Masseria tried to make peace after these two killings?

Mr. VALACHI. I am sorry, I misunderstood the question.

Yes, he offered himself to be a plain soldier. He will give up anything he had if they leave him alone. Maranzano refused.

The CHAIRMAN. What had the situation developed into at that time? How many people did Masseria have that were fighting for him and how many had come over and were fighting for Maranzano?

Mr. VALACHI. I think Maranzano by this time had about 600, Senator. They were coming over.

The CHAIRMAN. That is because they had all joined forces, what was the name of them—they had come into that group?

Mr. VALACHI. Castelmarese?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. They were coming in, more and more.

The CHAIRMAN. How many did Masseria have left that were fighting for him or apparently loyal to him?

Mr. VALACHI. How many did Masseria have?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Masseria, in the beginning, had his old brigade in the beginning, his whole family.

The CHAIRMAN. I am talking about this time when he is asking for peace.

Mr. VALACHI. He didn't have much then. He didn't have much then.

The CHAIRMAN. He had lost a lot of his following?

Mr. VALACHI. That's right, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How many? You made some estimate a day or two ago. Do you remember what you gave us?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 199

Mr. VALACHI. Are you referring to how many friends did he have?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, he had Charley, he had Vito, he had not too many. He had about five or six, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. That were real close to him?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. That was Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. Genovese.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is now your family boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Lucky Luciano?

Mr. VALACHI. Right. Joe Strasse or Joe Stretch.

The CHAIRMAN. Joe Stretch, we will call him that.

Mr. VALACHI. Ciro Terranova.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Then what happened?

Mr. VALACHI. They finally, after Joe Baker, sometime after Joe Baker, finally got him to come out at Coney Island, in a restaurant.

The CHAIRMAN. I know. But who did it? Did they arrange with Masseria's own men to set him up?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who of his own men set him up for the killing?

Mr. VALACHI. Charley, Lucky, and Vito.

The CHAIRMAN. Vito Genovese and Lucky Luciano?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Those are the two that set up Masseria for his death meal, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Right, with the pretense that they were going to get Maranzano.

The CHAIRMAN. They doublecrossed their own boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. And set him up to be killed?

Mr. VALACHI. The only way they got him out, they pretended that they had Maranzano. In other words, they sent word to him that they were going to get Maranzano, they were going to sit down and talk about it.

(Discussion off the record.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will have to stand in recess until 10:30 in the morning.

(Members of the subcommittee present at the time of the recess were Senators McClellan, Muskie, and Curtis.)

(Whereupon, at 3:30 p.m., the subcommittee recessed, to reconvene at 10:30 a.m., Wednesday, October 2, 1963.)

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will be in order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of convening; Senators McClellan, McIntyre, Muskie, Brewster, Mundt, and Curtis.)

The CHAIRMAN. We will proceed.

We have with us this morning Senator Ribicoff, who is a member of the full Committee on Government Operations, who wishes to make a statement to the committee, and we will now ask Senator Ribicoff to proceed, following which we will interrogate the witness further with respect to the matter.

Senator RIBICOFF. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Yesterday when Mr. Valachi testified, he identified a man by the name of Bobby Doyle, Stamford, Conn. I received a call last night from a Robert Doyle of Stamford. Just by coincidence, there is only one Robert Doyle in Stamford. Robert Doyle of Stamford is 45 years of age. In 1930 he was 12 years old, and he is 6 feet 6 inches tall and he is of Irish extraction, and his father's name was Doyle, also of Irish extraction. He is married, with four children, and he has six brothers and sisters, with an aged mother and father.

Well, once the statement was made that this was Robert Doyle of Stamford, all of the Doyles have been deluged with telephone calls and they have been placed in a very embarrassing position. The mother and father, who are aged, have been caused great concern.

Now, I have checked with the former mayor and the commissioner of State Police in the State of Connecticut, and I am convinced myself that the Robert Doyle of Stamford in no way could be the man referred to as Bobby Doyle of Stamford by the witness.

I think in all fairness to an innocent man in Stamford, the record should be clear so that his friends and neighbors and employers will have no doubt that the Robert Doyle of Stamford, the only Robert Doyle in Stamford, is not the man identified by the witness yesterday before this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator, and we will undertake to clear it up. I regret, of course, and we all do, that any innocent person's name was confused with one about whom the witness was testifying.

I would like to present to the witness at this time a photograph which I understand to be that of the Bobby Doyle he is talking about. Let the witness examine the photograph and see if he identifies it.

(The photograph was handed to the witness.)

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I thought I said Hartford, Conn.

The CHAIRMAN. You thought you said what?

Mr. VALACHI. Hartford, Conn., yesterday. If I said Stamford, I am sure that I said it unconsciously. I meant Hartford, Conn.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew the particular Bobby Doyle you were talking about. Do you know any Bobby Doyle that lives in Stamford?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I don't know anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. You don't know any Bobby Doyle in Stamford?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. So you are talking about the Bobby Doyle in Hartford?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And this is a picture of the Bobby Doyle that you referred to?

Mr. VALACHI. Bobby Doyle is shorter than I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The Bobby Doyle that you are talking about is shorter than you are?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And this is the man? What is the age of this man whose picture I have just shown you?

Mr. VALACHI. Bobby is about, I would say, about 65 at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. About 65 years old at this time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to interrupt the testimony of this witness to hear from Lieutenant Roach. Lieutenant, will you stand up?

You do solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Lieutenant ROACH. I do.

TESTIMONY OF LT. JOHN ROACH

The CHAIRMAN. Let this picture that I have just shown the witness Valachi be made exhibit No. 11.

(Photograph referred to marked exhibit No. 11 for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Lieutenant, will you identify yourself for the record, please?

Lieutenant ROACH. Lt. John Roach, in charge of the Vice Division of Hartford Police, Hartford, Conn.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you been on the force in Hartford, Conn.?

Lieutenant ROACH. Seventeen years.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know a Bobby Doyle in Hartford, Conn.?

Lieutenant ROACH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know about his reputation as a law-abiding citizen?

Lieutenant ROACH. I know he hangs around the streets of Hartford and he has no visible means of support, and I have known him for about 10 years.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't know whether you did, but did you undertake to contact him after this testimony yesterday, or was it someone else?

Lieutenant ROACH. I did contact him after this testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood someone undertook to contact him yesterday and asked him if he was the Bobby Doyle that was referred to here, and he slammed the door in their face and told them to ask Valachi.

Lieutenant ROACH. I talked to him about 6 days ago.

The CHAIRMAN. About 6 days ago?

Lieutenant ROACH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I hand you a photograph here that has just been made exhibit No. 11, and I ask you to examine it and state if you can identify it.

(The photograph was handed to Lieutenant Roach.)

Lieutenant ROACH. This is Robert Doyle, alias James Santuccio, and he lives at 800 New Britain Avenue, Hartford, Conn.

The CHAIRMAN. So that the error here has occurred in the name of the town?

Lieutenant ROACH. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what caused the confusion?

Lieutenant ROACH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So you know this to be the man that is generally referred to as being involved in some of these activities?

Lieutenant ROACH. Yes, sir, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. You know that because he is in your town and you have known him how long?

Lieutenant ROACH. Possibly 10 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Possibly 10 years?

Lieutenant ROACH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have his police record?

Lieutenant ROACH. No, I don't.

The CHAIRMAN. Who can identify it?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Detective Salerno.

The CHAIRMAN. We are very sorry that any mistake occurred. I didn't catch whether the witness said Stamford or Hartford, and I didn't catch it, but evidently he said Stamford, because many understood it that way, and I am awfully sorry that that occurred, and any unpleasantness was caused to the Bobby Doyle and his family of Stamford.

It is just unfortunate when those things happen, and it couldn't be helped, and we will now make it very clear that we are talking about the Bobby Doyle whose photograph here has been identified and he is the Bobby Doyle who has been referred to at all times in this testimony up to now, and he is the one and not anybody at Stamford. We trust this will carry to those who have manifested some interest in it, and had knowledge of it, and had taken some interest in the matter, so that they will now know that the witness, if he said Stamford, made an error, and he meant to say Hartford, and, therefore, the record of Bobby Doyle, of Hartford, will now be placed in the record and I present his record to you.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you examine this and state if you identify it?

Mr. VALACHI. He was an ex-fighter. He used to be a boxer years back, when he was young.

The CHAIRMAN. He used to be a boxer?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You are talking about Bobby Doyle of Hartford, now?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, that was his fighting name.

Sergeant SALERNO. This is the criminal record of James Santuccio, who was also known as Bobby Doyle, and it is B-59749. There are four arrests for felonious assault, one with a gun, two for 1897, which is a gun carrying charge in New York State, and two arrests, one as a material witness in a homicide, and the second one is for the charge of homicide with a gun.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. That will be made exhibit No. 12.

(Document was marked "Exhibit No. 12" and will be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Senator RIBICOFF. I thank you, and the Stamford Doyles thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. We extend you the courtesy here and we will be glad to have you ask any questions.

Senator RIBICOFF. It is cleared up and I am sure that all of the Stamford Doyles are most appreciative.

The CHAIRMAN. We are most regretful that anything like this can happen, but, of course, where there is similarity of names, the same name throughout the country, sometimes I guess it is unavoidable that some confusion might be caused, but we are most happy to clear it up in the record. The record now, I trust, is emphatic, and there can no longer be any misunderstanding or confusion about it.

Senator MUNDT. There is probably one other question that should be asked the officer from Hartford.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 205

How old, approximately, is the Bobby Doyle you talked with 5 or 6 days ago, in Hartford?

Lieutenant ROACH. I would say about 64 or 65 years old, and he is about 5 feet 3 inches.

Senator MUNDT. That corroborates the testimony of the witness and I thought we should have it in the record.

Lieutenant ROACH. That is good.

Mr. VALACHI. I am 5 feet 5½ inches.

The CHAIRMAN. I didn't understand you.

Mr. VALACHI. I am 5 feet 5½ inches.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Senator CURTIS. I would like to ask you, Mr. Valachi, over the years since you were associated with this group, have you worked and traveled in any State other than New York and the surrounding States there?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I visited Buffalo, and I visited Utica, N.Y.

Senator CURTIS. You haven't gone to the Middle West?

Mr. VALACHI. I went to Arkansas years back.

The CHAIRMAN. I didn't understand what you said.

Mr. VALACHI. I was trying to tell him I went to the baths in Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you get cleaned up down there?

Mr. VALACHI. You know, the 21-day baths.

Senator CURTIS. Have you ever been in Chicago and made any contracts with the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. No; I stopped in Chicago on the way to Arkansas.

Senator CURTIS. Did you make any contacts with any of the criminal elements there?

Mr. VALACHI. In Utica; yes.

Senator CURTIS. I mean in Chicago.

Mr. VALACHI. No, no contacts.

Senator CURTIS. Have you ever been in Kansas City?

Mr. VALACHI. No, not that I recall; no.

Senator CURTIS. Have you ever been in Omaha?

Mr. VALACHI. No, sir.

Senator CURTIS. That is in Nebraska.

Mr. VALACHI. No, sir.

Senator CURTIS. Do you know whether or not there are members of the Cosa Nostra operating in Omaha?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I never heard of Omaha, and I never heard anything about Omaha.

Senator CURTIS. Here is what I want to know: Are there assigned areas, or do you have regional offices? For instance, does the family or families in Chicago, do they have certain States under this jurisdiction?

Mr. VALACHI. All I know, Senator, is in Chicago there was one family. Now, where they extend, I wouldn't know.

Senator CURTIS. You do not know how the territory was handled outside of New York State?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator CURTIS. And the States adjacent to it?

Mr. VALACHI. I just know that there is one family there.

206 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator CURTIS. And you have never heard anyone discuss Omaha in connection with the numbers racket, or horse betting?

Mr. VALACHI. Not among us. I never heard anything about Omaha.

Senator CURTIS. Well, now, does the Cosa Nostra deal with people who are not members? In other words, do they put someone in the numbers racket and cooperate with them even though they are not members and haven't been taken in as members?

Mr. VALACHI. They do.

Senator CURTIS. In fact, they use a great many people.

Mr. VALACHI. They do.

Senator CURTIS. And the same would be true on the horse betting?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. And even though you know of no Cosa Nostra members in the Omaha area, do you know of any contracts either in the numbers racket or in the horse betting in Omaha, or heard of them in your discussions?

Mr. VALACHI. I never even remember talking about Omaha.

Senator CURTIS. And how about Kansas City?

Mr. VALACHI. Kansas City the same.

Senator CURTIS. Do you know of any of the contracts of the families or family in Kansas City?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't.

Senator CURTIS. How about Des Moines?

Mr. VALACHI. Where is that, Senator?

Senator CURTIS. That is in Iowa.

Mr. VALACHI. I never even heard of that.

Senator CURTIS. Now, do you know of anyone in the family or families that worked with or through any Teamster Union officials?

Mr. VALACHI. Now, I would like for you to explain that to me.

Senator CURTIS. I am not talking about the rank and file of union members, but this committee in previous hearings has had testimony where a few union leaders have cooperated with organized crime. Do you know of any of those people?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I can answer you in private on that subject.

Senator CURTIS. All right. Very well, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. May I clear up one other thing? Yesterday the witness was testifying about John Montana or something was in the record about him having been presented an award, a citizens' award, the Man of the Year Award by Buffalo, or somebody in the city of Buffalo, is that correct?

You said something yesterday about the newspapers presenting him an award. You meant you saw something in the newspapers about him getting an award?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, but yesterday I was trying to tell you that the Cosa Nostra had nothing to do with that, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand they didn't, but you didn't know who actually presented the award.

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, who gave the award.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What you meant was, you saw in the newspapers an account of it?

Mr. VALACHI. A little of that, and a little somebody talks about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Somebody talking about it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Anyway, when you referred to the newspapers, you didn't mean to imply, I assume you didn't mean to imply that the newspapers of Buffalo presented him with the award.

Mr. VALACHI. No, Senator. If there is something in the newspapers, for instance, we talk about it, and if we give it any credit as to what the newspapers are saying, sometimes we will say, "Jesus, they got that right." And most of the time we say—you know, we talk among ourselves. Now, if somebody among ourselves burglarizes, then I pay attention, but not that I believe the newspapers. It is not that I mean to say the newspapers are doing anything wrong. I feel they have been misled, that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. You feel they have been misled. Well, my purpose in asking you this, my understanding is that it was the Fraternal Organization of the Buffalo Police Department that actually presented the award to Montana, and not the newspapers. That is the Erie Club.

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't know who presented it at all, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't mean to say the newspapers presented it.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. I just wanted to get the record straight.

All right. Are there any questions?

Senator MUNDT. I have a few questions based on the testimony of yesterday dealing with the phase of the gang war that we have been discussing, which is down to that gray line, which goes across the chart.

Mr. VALACHI. Down or up?

Senator MUNDT. I will be talking about something that is up above that line. I understand from the chairman that we are going to go below that line. I wanted to find out where you talked about the declared and undeclared war, and in reviewing your testimony, I am not quite clear how long the undeclared part of the war lasted, and how long the declared part of the war lasted. Do you recall?

Mr. VALACHI. The undeclared war, I say, lasted a couple of months.

Senator MUNDT. How long?

Mr. VALACHI. Four or five months; a few months, anyway.

Senator MUNDT. A couple of months?

Mr. VALACHI. A couple of months.

Senator MUNDT. And how long did the declared war last?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I would say——

Senator MUNDT. Was it longer or shorter?

Mr. VALACHI. The declared war, you mean?

Senator MUNDT. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Longer. I would say about 8 months, 8 or 9 months.

Senator MUNDT. And what is the difference? I just don't understand how you declare a war between two mobs—and you don't meet together and throw the gauntlet down and say, "You have been challenged." So how do you do it?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the idea is, from what I understood at the time, and I didn't understand—the idea was you get the jump on the other one, to get a jump, and let us talk about Masseria.

208 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLEGAL TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

You see, the idea was to try and get a couple of their bosses before they even catch up with them, and they would be that much ahead.

Senator MUNDT. I can understand; that is an undeclared war. Now, what constitutes a declaration of war?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, when they catch up with them, and like when he found out where they come from, that is automatically a declared war.

Senator MUNDT. When they find out that one of their men has been killed by the other gang?

Mr. VALACHI. And when they find out where it comes from, naturally, they are in war with wherever it comes from.

Senator MUNDT. That comprises a declared war?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. You understand what I just said?

Senator MUNDT. And that is when they got these two fellows, Mineo and Ferrigno.

Mr. VALACHI. That is when they found out after that.

Senator MUNDT. They found out that your side had killed two fellows from their side and that was a declaration of war?

Mr. VALACHI. We will put it that way. That is when Masseria found out, as I said yesterday, through the furniture, they way you know about that, and that is when they found out where actually it was coming from.

Senator MUNDT. Now, in your testimony yesterday, and I am talking now just about the part above the gray line, you listed three or four bosses who had been killed, the top people in this gang war. Now, in most of the wars you read about, other people get killed besides generals. How about the soldiers? Were there any soldiers killed in this war, and any of the people in your category—any of the drivers or the spotters or the fingermen, or did you just kill bosses?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, actually, we will come to that when I get to that point.

Senator MUNDT. I am talking about the part that you have come to and gone past, and I am talking about this upper part. We are down to the succession of gang control. I am talking about the part where you killed Morello, and you killed Catania, and you killed these top bosses, and at that stage did any soldiers get killed?

Mr. VALACHI. There is one soldier up there, Senator. I am looking over the names now, to see if I find any more. The only soldier I see up there is Joe Baker. I can't pronounce his name. Joe Baker, and Catania, and that is the only soldier I see up there at this time.

Senator MUNDT. Up to the point we have come to now, regarding the killings that you have discussed, you have mentioned bosses and only one soldier has been killed that far along in the gang war.

Mr. VALACHI. At this point, yes.

Senator MUNDT. That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. How long a period of time has elapsed in the part of the fighting that your testimony has covered so far?

Mr. VALACHI. What is that, Senator?

Senator MUNDT. In point of months, how long in years or months, how long a period did you describe?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 209

Mr. VALACHI. Well, Senator, I say 14 months, and I got it——

Senator MUNDT. Fourteen months?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I want to explain this: When it was over, they would talk about it that they were away 14 months. Now, I never checked myself whether it was 14 months or 10 months. I just got it and took it for granted and I used the expression myself, the 14 months, but naturally, I was single, and it didn't bother me if I was away 10 months or 14 months or 20 months, and naturally they would be talking about it.

Senator MUNDT. It lasted in the neighborhood of a year?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir, and I got in the habit of saying 14 months myself, and naturally, I never stopped to think whether it was 14 months, but I was away, I would say, about 8 months, up to the time of the Merritt Parkway.

I figured I was away about 8 months. As I talk about it, and if I am talking to some member or talking about that, I would say the thing lasted 14 months, because originally when they were sneaking, they would take out from that time, and that is how I mentioned 14 months.

Senator MUNDT. You called it undeclared and declared war. I have one other question out of yesterday's testimony.

You mentioned, I think it was yesterday, that at the time that you left Sing Sing, you were propositioned to join up with Al Capone.

Mr. VALACHI. Alexander wanted to recommend me to Al Capone, because Alexander heard of the trouble I had in 1924, and so I told him, "I will think about it," but I never tried.

Senator MUNDT. Now, I am trying to ask you the question, what was the conclusion of your thinking? You didn't join up with Al Capone?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator MUNDT. Why didn't you? He was a big shot.

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know. Not for any reason; I just didn't bother.

Senator MUNDT. Had you ever met him?

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't meet Al Capone.

Senator MUNDT. Did you know any members of his gang?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I knew one or two; I met a few.

Senator MUNDT. I am trying to find out from you, here you are coming out of prison and you are in bad shape financially, and you had to start in the burglary business to make some money, and you had ultimately to join up with a gang because you weren't getting anywhere, and so you joined up with the Gagliano-Maranzano group. I am wondering why you turned down the proposition to join Capone, if you had any reason.

Mr. VALACHI. There is no reason why I turned it down. I guess I wanted to stay in New York, Senator. When you asked me if I had ever met any members, I was trying to think whether you meant then or later on.

Senator MUNDT. Up to that point.

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't meet anybody.

Senator MUNDT. You hadn't met anybody?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. This was a strange town and a strange man, and you would stick to surroundings that you knew?

210 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. In fact, when I got out on the streets, I actually forgot about it.

Senator MUNDT. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions?

Senator McINTYRE. Joe, have you been to Boston?

Mr. VALACHI. In Boston? Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. Have you ever heard of a man named Patriarca?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. There are just a few questions in my mind. Yesterday when you were discussing contracts, when you get a contract—

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. Is this something that is assigned to you by one of the bosses or lieutenants? Is it given to an individual of the family or is it given to a group of individuals?

Mr. VALACHI. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred it is given to you by a lieutenant, to one who is in charge of that particular contract. It could be I; it could be anybody. But that one particular soldier will get the contract and then he takes, himself, who he wants to take along with him. Is that what you mean?

Senator McINTYRE. And this man who gets the contract is the one who does the actual planning of the operation?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right; he is in charge.

Senator McINTYRE. Did you ever propose anyone for the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I did.

Senator McINTYRE. Were you ever present at any other initiation other than your own?

Mr. VALACHI. Right now I never remember being present, Senator, in any tables.

Senator McINTYRE. So that you have told us all that you know about the actual initiation ceremonies of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, that is right. Let me explain it this way.

You are only made once; that is all. If you live a hundred years, it will be just that once.

Senator McINTYRE. I know, but you were never invited to participate at any other initiation ceremony where someone you may have proposed was admitted to the group?

Mr. VALACHI. Right now I never recall being present in any table.

Senator McINTYRE. So that all you know about the ceremony is what you have already previously described?

Mr. VALACHI. That is the same ceremony today, what I described in 1930.

Senator McINTYRE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions at this time?

Let us proceed now. Yesterday we were approaching, at least leading up to the killing of Masseria. We had just gotten to the point where he had been taken to a restaurant somewhere, is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator; Coney Island.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, who got him over there to the restaurant?

Mr. VALACHI. His friends, Charley Luciano and Vito Genovese and Ciro Terranova.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 211

The CHAIRMAN. Those three persuaded him?

Mr. VALACHI. These were the important ones.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not understand you.

Mr. VALACHI. They were the important ones.

The CHAIRMAN. They were the important ones that got him to go over there to dinner. Prior to that time, had he been staying in pretty closely and not going out much?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I was told that he had three or four dogs before his own brother could get to him.

The CHAIRMAN. He had what?

Mr. VALACHI. Three or four dogs before his own brother could get to him.

The CHAIRMAN. What I was trying to determine is that you had been trying actually, your side, the Maranzano group, had been trying to get to him to kill him for a good while, had they not?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. For some months.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. When you were unable to do it as I understand it, you finally got Genovese and these others to set him up for you.

Mr. VALACHI. They set him up for Maranzano. They came to terms. They came to terms that they will take care—in other words, they didn't want Maranzano's men should have anything to do with it. They wanted to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. They wanted to do it?

Mr. VALACHI. Themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. His own people around him wanted to do it?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. They got him over to this Coney Island restaurant.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I understand it took them 5 or 6 months to get him there.

The CHAIRMAN. That is when it happened?

Mr. VALACHI. That is when it happened.

The CHAIRMAN. The Maranzano crowd did not do that killing?

Mr. VALACHI. No; they did not.

The CHAIRMAN. It was Masseria's own people who killed him at that restaurant?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there very many present? You were not present at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. I wasn't there, but I was told Ciro was there, Vito was there, Charley was there, a fellow named Cheech was there, and Joe Stretch was there.

Somebody described, I don't remember who, how Ciro was so shaky in putting the key in the ignition that they threw him off the wheel. I am talking about Ciro Terranova. They threw him off the wheel. Ever since then Ciro Terranova was getting what was call buckwheats, you know, like he was being stripped, you know, a little at a time he was being taken, his power was being taken away from him. After a while he took it so hard that he died from a broken heart. I am talking about Ciro Terranova.

The CHAIRMAN. He kind of lost face.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. They replaced him at that time with Mike Coppola.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, they felt he didn't have enough nerve?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Sort of put it this way: He disgraced himself.

The CHAIRMAN. Disgraced himself by showing his nervousness?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; he was shaking. I got that from the soldiers as we were going along in life.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Salerno, will you come around, please?

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Valachi, you started to tell us of the details of the killing of Masseria as it was told to you.

Mr. VALACHI. What is that, Senator?

Senator MUNDT. You started to tell us the details of the killing in the Coney Island restaurant. You were not there. He was killed by his own lieutenants. You said you were told what took place.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Will you relate to us what was told to you?

Mr. VALACHI. I was told—naturally, about 5 days after that there was peace. We closed this war. Now, the first story I heard was about Ciro, as I explained to you, about him shaking in putting the key in the ignition. I don't think he lasted any more than about a year—

Senator MUNDT. No, I am trying to find out, was he shot, bombed?

Mr. VALACHI. You are talking about Joe Masseria?

Senator MUNDT. That is correct.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, he was shot.

Senator MUNDT. In the restaurant?

Mr. VALACHI. In the restaurant.

Senator MUNDT. Walking in by surprise?

Mr. VALACHI. No, they were sitting down. They talked a while. In the course of, you know, of having conversation in between maybe a half hour or an hour, I don't know how long it lasted, they shot him in this time.

Senator MUNDT. Were any of them ever caught?

Mr. VALACHI. Not that I know of. No one was caught.

Senator MUNDT. It is an unsolved crime so far as you know?

Mr. VALACHI. As far as I know.

Senator MUNDT. Do you know the name of the restaurant?

Mr. VALACHI. I know it if I hear it, but I have forgotten it, Senator.

TESTIMONY OF SGT. RALPH SALERNO—Resumed

The CHAIRMAN. Sergeant Salerno, do you have the record of Joseph Masseria's murder?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes; I do.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the record of the New York police force show?

Sergeant SALERNO. It shows at 3:30 p.m. on April 15, 1931, Giuseppe Massaria, alias Joe the Boss, last known residence at 65 2d Avenue, New York City, while sitting in a restaurant at 2715 West 15th Street in the Coney Island section of Brooklyn, was shot in the back and head by unknown persons who escaped. Cause of death was six gunshot wounds of the head and body. The case is active.

The CHAIRMAN. He was shot in the back?

Sergeant SALERNO. In the back and in the head.

The CHAIRMAN. In the back and in the head. Obviously he had his back to his assailant.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 213

Sergeant SALERNO. It would appear so.

The CHAIRMAN. It was in a restaurant.

Sergeant SALERNO. In the Coney Island section of Brooklyn.

The CHAIRMAN. Were the police ever able to get any lead on who committed the crime?

Sergeant SALERNO. Not to the point where there was evidence that could be presented to a grand jury.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't get sufficient evidence to present it to a grand jury? Very well.

Is there any question by any Senator on this point?

Senator CURTIS. Were the operators of the restaurant cooperative?

Sergeant SALERNO. I don't know, Senator. I don't have the full case file before me.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Senator Mundt?

Senator MUNDT. You were here yesterday when Mr. Valachi talked about the shooting of Baker, I believe, the fellow you shot while three painters were working. You were here when he described that murder.

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. He said there were three painters in an apartment.

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. I was wondering whether or not you had been able to contact those painters.

Sergeant SALERNO. At this time, sir?

Senator MUNDT. Yes.

Sergeant SALERNO. No.

Senator MUNDT. Because it seems this is a pretty hot lead. Painters go on an assignment. You could find out from the painting company who they were. They would be able to have some kind of identification of the people described by Mr. Valachi.

The painters saw the murder, did they not, Mr. Witness?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. That would be pretty fast work, no doubt.

Sergeant SALERNO. As I explained, these are all active cases. In view of the new leads which have been recently made available these cases are under active investigation now and because of that, the district attorneys in the counties concerned, there are five counties in New York City, they have indicated they would like us to cooperate with the committee to the extent of identifying the homicides which are spoken of, but they prefer that we do not go into any detail concerning the active investigation at this time because it might possibly prejudice the case.

Senator CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Valachi, why weren't these three painters who were eyewitnesses to the murder—why weren't they killed?

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Mr. VALACHI. We never even dreamed about them, Senator.

Senator CURTIS. In other words, the concentration was on the marked man and nothing else.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. On Joe Baker.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the rule about that in the Cosa Nostra where you take a contract to kill somebody? What obligation do you have not to kill others who may be with him at the time?

214 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. As far as I could talk for Maranzano, he was always afraid of hurting innocent people. These painters, we didn't figure they would talk. I must explain to you.

Do you know who rented this empty apartment? I was trying to get that in the other day—I don't remember whether it was yesterday; it must have been yesterday—Joe Baker and his friends rented this apartment. This apartment was rented so that this way the empty apartment wouldn't remain empty. They wanted to occupy the apartment because they were very familiar with these doings at that time. They didn't bother with the top floor apartment, as I explained. That was too far away. In fact, one of the painters was trying to tell me. He said "You know, I am a friend of Joe Baker's."

I said, "All right, just keep painting."

You see, Senator, what I am trying to tell you. They rented that apartment for safekeeping. This way they feel secure. This was one of those coincidences that the people had moved out maybe a day before or 2 days, we don't know. I, thinking about it, it is just one of those things. As I said, I was shocked when I saw the painters in there. I never knew the apartment was empty.

Then after, when troubles like this are over, you find out these things, that they, themselves, Joe Baker and them, rented the apartment, so that, as I explained, they would not be in danger because this was the method they were using at that time, renting apartments.

For instance, I am hanging out, they are hanging out. They know there is an apartment across the way. They figure they will occupy it themselves. This way it won't be empty.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt, I believe, asked you about the soldiers getting killed.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How many were killed during this 14-month period of undeclared war and what you termed "declared war"? Do you know how many people were killed altogether during that time on either side or both sides?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I got the score. The score was, we lost 1 and they lost from 40 to 60.

The CHAIRMAN. From 40 to 60?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. From 40 to 60 people killed as a result of this undeclared war and the declared war that followed after the 2 men were killed who identified your group as the killers? Is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. These would be in the other group, the Masseria group?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, you always have to call it the Masseria group.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the way you pronounce it? Do you know the name of the one of your group who was killed?

Mr. VALACHI. We lost one in Chicago, Joe Aiello.

The CHAIRMAN. He was the one from Chicago.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. They told me Al Capone got him. I only can tell you what they told me at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. You don't know that. That is what they told you. Now, what happened after Masseria's death with respect to peace? You said you had peace after that.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 215

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; we had peace after that, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Who became the boss?

Mr. VALACHI. I will explain it to you.

I went on a meeting. I just remember it was around Washington Avenue in the Bronx. I just was notified, I don't remember how, but I was notified. I got to this address and it was a hall, a big hall, on Washington Avenue. There was about 400 to 500 people in this hall.

After I was there a while, Maranzano was standing on the platform when he got up to speak. He didn't speak just as soon as I got in there. Naturally, he was hanging around the hall until he was ready to speak. Members were coming. When he did get to speak, then he got up there and he started to explain about Masseria and his groups, that they were killing people without just. He mentioned some names, names that I didn't know or never even heard of. He mentioned they had killed Don Antonio without just. They killed another name he mentioned which is on the top on the right, Senator, Reina. I didn't know any of these men.

Then he was explaining how the Masseria group was doing these things. "Now, it is going to be different," he said. "We are going to have—first we have the boss of all bosses, which is myself."

The CHAIRMAN. That is Maranzano, now?

Mr. VALACHI. Maranzano is talking. Then we have the boss and then we have an underboss under the boss. Then we have the caporegima. He was explaining all this. Now, if a soldier wants to talk to a boss, he should not take the privilege for him to try to go direct to the boss. He must speak first to the caporegima, and the caporegima, if it is required and it is important enough, the caporegima will make an appointment for the soldier. He went out and explained the rules. This is what I called second government.

The CHAIRMAN. He was telling you how it was going to operate from now on.

Mr. VALACHI. He was describing how it was going to operate. When it was all over, they was, the boys from Gagliano's group was there, I was there. Then there was the boys from the Castellemarese. He spoke to us and he said, "It is going to be a split. Some of the group will go back to Gagliano and some will remain with me. Now, if there is anybody who wants to remain with me, whether he was with me before or whether he was not, as long as he was with me during this war he is entitled if he wants to, he can come with me now. Anybody who wants to come with me or remain where they originally was and the ones who want to come with me just raise your hands."

So I unconsciously raised my hand. When I raised my hand I didn't know if anybody else was going to raise their hands. I looked around and saw two more hands besides myself. I saw Bobby Doyle and Steve Rinell.

The CHAIRMAN. You had not been with him before?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. But this was indicating you wanted to go with him?

Mr. VALACHI. I wanted to go with Maranzano, that is right. So when I looked around, there was three of us.

Now, I remained with Maranzano, no longer in the Gagliano group. Already I traveled two families.

216 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. You had been in two families?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. You had moved out of the other family, the Gagliano group, you had moved from that family now to Maranzano?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Now after that, naturally, he got an office on 46th Street. We used to go up in the office, say, in a couple of months' time I would go probably one day, another day I don't go. Sometimes I go down.

Now, at the time when I went down there, I had no money. So I would be ashamed to go down there, every time we had coffee or something to be paying for it. So I was making myself scarce.

One day I confided to Buster down there. I said, "Jeez, I don't like to be coming down here because I never got any money." I said, "I think I am going to start burglarizing again."

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you about this meeting that you talked about where you raised your hand indicating you wanted to go with Maranzano. Was that a banquet?

Mr. VALACHI. No; that was not a banquet. That was just a meeting.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it designated there at that meeting who the other bosses would be?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were the other bosses of the other families? You mentioned Gagliano.

Mr. VALACHI. Gagliano, Tommy Brown.

The CHAIRMAN. How many families were designated there? Who were the leaders, if that was done?

Mr. VALACHI. Let me finish.

I forgot to mention he told us who the underboss was, Angelo Caruso was the underboss.

The CHAIRMAN. Is his name on the chart, the underboss?

Mr. VALACHI. I see it right underneath Maranzano's name.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. He was to be the underboss?

Mr. VALACHI. He was to be the underboss.

Charley Lucky was boss, and Vito Genovese underboss. Tom Gagliano, boss, and Tommy Brown underboss.

Vince Mangano—I am trying to think of the underboss there. I think it was Frank Scalise.

The CHAIRMAN. Frank Scalise was the underboss?

Mr. VALACHI. Now, there was a boss at that time in Newark which he told us about. His name was Joe Bonanno, but not the Joe Bonanno in Brooklyn. The name sounds the same but this is a different Bonanno. I don't know how to spell it. I don't want to mix up the names, Senator. Joe Profaci at this time was with us at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that make five families now?

Mr. VALACHI. Did I count five, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. I believe that is correct.

Mr. VALACHI. OK.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there five?

Mr. VALACHI. Five.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is correct. Now, there was occasion for a banquet. When was the banquet held along about this time?

Mr. VALACHI. The banquet came, say, about maybe a month after peace.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 217

The CHAIRMAN. About a month after the peace?

Mr. VALACHI. About a month after the peace.

The CHAIRMAN. Which came first; this meeting, or the banquet?

Mr. VALACHI. This meeting came first.

The CHAIRMAN. The meeting came first?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. This meeting came, the first meeting came about a week or two after the peace and the banquet followed right after this meeting.

The CHAIRMAN. How long did the banquet meeting last?

Mr. VALACHI. The banquet lasted—it was a 5-day banquet, Senator. In other words, I don't mean that it ran continuously for 5 days. For instance, you come in early in the evening and close at 3 or 4 or 5 in the morning. Then reopen again the next day.

The CHAIRMAN. For 5 nights you had a banquet?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. What occurred with respect to that banquet? What was the purpose of it primarily?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the purpose was, the money was supposed to be meant for the original soldiers and for himself. The originals, I mean, which was about 15, there were 12. Now, there was 3 of us there, it makes the 15.

It was supposed to be to give these boys a chance, being they were away, now they are broke, and for himself. This was the purpose. And so he would be recognized as the boss and, naturally, they went to a lot of expense. They understand. That was the reason for the banquet.

The CHAIRMAN. So it was a banquet to raise money and also to acknowledge Maranzano as the boss of bosses?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. They all were paying tribute to him and honoring him?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Recognizing him as the boss of bosses?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. This was to demonstrate, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. What is that, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. This was to demonstrate.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. To let everybody know that he was recognized as the boss of bosses?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. You said it was also to raise money.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Was money raised during that time and, if so, how and from whom?

Mr. VALACHI. I understood it was $115,000. He sent out, for instance, a thousand tickets to Al Capone, and Al Capone sent $6,000. He sent a thousand tickets to Buffalo, and they also sent $6,000.

Charley Lucky, himself, sent $6,000.

Them were the big amounts I know. The rest, as they came in, the guests. Frank Scalise would be at the head of a small table. For instance, like this table I am on now, twice this size.

218 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

As he would greet the guests as they came in, "Have a drink"—you know, in Italian. He would go for his pocket, he would throw money on the table. They would follow suit. That was his duty.

I went every night, seeing I was one of Maranzano's—

The CHAIRMAN. One of the original soldiers, you went every night?

Mr. VALACHI. I used to see piles of money on the table every night. Maranzano used to get it at night.

The CHAIRMAN. After the previous meeting where Maranzano told you how things were going to be hereafter, at the previous meeting where he gave instructions and designated the five families and the five family bosses, where that was discussed, were all of those in attendance at that meeting members of Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. There was members there I never saw. I only knew the ones that I affiliated with during the war. Now there were so many people, I saw so many faces I didn't know where they came from.

The CHAIRMAN. But they all presumably were members of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; they had to be.

The CHAIRMAN. They had to be?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What about at the banquet?

Mr. VALACHI. At the banquet, as I explained, Frank Scalise was at the head of the table. When it was all over we got the score among the boys what they took in. Charley Buffalo was very close to Maranzano. He told me that they took in $115,000. I never got a nickel out of that, Senator.

I used to go down, after that I used to go down to the office, I felt that, you know, some day I might be handed something, but I never did.

So I started agitating like with Buster and I told Buster I was going to start burglarizing again.

Buster said, "Do you want to know the truth? I'll come with you."

I said, "Look, Buster, if you come with me you will put me in trouble."

The CHAIRMAN. Buster is who?

Mr. VALACHI. Buster is the one I was talking about the other day. I don't know his last name.

I said, "If you come with me and he finds out, I'll get in trouble."

He said, "Don't worry. He won't find out." Because I felt he was always Maranzano's close soldier and naturally we just got together.

He said, "Don't worry about it. He won't find out."

Finally, we got into a burglary, Buster, I, and and I took Johnny Dee with me. I don't know who I took with me but we went in a burglary, the next day Bobby Doyle—

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the Bobby Doyle we talked about here this morning?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. The one who lived in Hartford?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. VALACHI. I am sitting in the same hangout, as I told you once before, 110th Street and Lexington Avenue, in the restaurant. Bobby Doyle came over and said, "What did you do last night?"

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 219

I said, "What did I do?"

"Did you go out with Buster?"

"Yes."

"The old man wants to see you."

I said, "You know what I would do, Bobby. You know what you do. Don't say you saw me. I will take a ride. Let us see, I will go and see Steve in Buffalo."

Senator MUNDT. Go where?

Mr. VALACHI. I will go see Steve. I meant Steve Magaddino, in Buffalo.

He says, "Yes; you had better."

"Now don't you go tell him."

He said, "Don't worry about it." So I went with another guy. I don't remember who the other fellow was but he was not a member. I just took somebody along for a ride and I went to Buffalo—

Naturally, after I collected a few hundred dollars.

So when I went to Buffalo I was entertained by Steve Magaddino about 7 or 8 days. He had to go to South America somewhere. Before he left, I asked him to lend me $500, which he did. I stayed another day or two. I came home. I stayed away maybe a little over a week.

When I got back and I went up to the office, Mr. Maranzano was talking with Charley Lucky and Vito Genovese. As I walked in, they were in the middle of the floor talking. He dropped them and he walked right over to me and he kissed me. At that time they used to kiss, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Were those suspicious or friendly kisses?

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, no; that was friendly.

He said, "You know, I sent the check to Buffalo to Steve."

I said, "You already know?"

He said, "That is all right, don't worry about it."

I say, "OK. Thanks."

With that, he went back. I sat down and he went back talking to Vito and Charley. I guess that was all about me being up in the office. He talked nothing about the burglary. Naturally, I went home. It was not long after that—

The CHAIRMAN. Who actually loaned you the money?

Mr. VALACHI. Steve Magaddino. I haven't paid the money back.

The CHAIRMAN. He was the boss in Buffalo?

Mr. VALACHI. At this time.

Senator MUSKIE. You said you never paid the money back?

What was the check that Maranzano sent him?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, he paid it for me.

Senator MUSKIE. Maranzano paid the $500 for you?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator MUSKIE. How did he know that Steve loaned it to you?

Mr. VALACHI. That is what I was wondering, myself, how fast he found out. That is what I was wondering, but he had already sent the check. So, Steve must have called him.

Senator MUSKIE. Must have called him the same day he loaned it to you?

Mr. VALACHI. Who knows?

Senator MUSKIE. He paid the $500 for you?

220 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. He said he had sent the check for $500.

Senator MUSKIE. Is that the only money you ever got out of the family?

Mr. VALACHI. That is about the only money I can recall.

Senator MUSKIE. You never paid Maranzano back?

Mr. VALACHI. I never paid Maranzano back.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt.

Senator MUNDT. Before we get too far away from this $115,000 banquet, you told us this was ostensibly to be held, it was announced it was to be held to raise some money for Maranzano and for the soldiers.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. Who had been out of business for about 14 months and were broke?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. And there were 15 soldiers including the 3 new recruits who joined the day Maranzano took over?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. You never got any of that except this $500 which you got indirectly?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. Did you ever approach anybody and say, "How come, where is my share of the $115,000?"

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, you like to do that but you don't do it.

Senator MUNDT. Why don't you do it?

Mr. VALACHI. You figure they may go tell him.

Senator MUNDT. You mean that you were actually in such fear of Maranzano you could not go to him and say, "Look, I never got some of my $115,000. You forgot something; how about my share?"

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, the way you put it that is the way it has to be. But it ain't actually fear.

Senator MUNDT. All right, what is it?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, you figure maybe he has something in mind, maybe next week, you always think that way. You hate to make yourself believe that he is not going to give you anything.

As I tell you the story, you will see that there wasn't much more time after that even to do more thinking about this.

I will explain about this.

Senator MUNDT. But you kept hoping he was going to give it to you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. Looking back at it now, do you think he stole the money, he kept it to himself?

Mr. VALACHI. As I am telling the story, we talked about this money at his house. When I get to that part I will tell you about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. VALACHI. It wasn't long after that, Senator, after all, it was so many years ago, Senator—I don't remember how long, when I was down at the office. He told me that I should be at his house at Avenue J. I don't remember whether it was that night or the night after, I don't remember. I was at his house about 9 o'clock either that day or the day after.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 221

When I got to his house, he was bandaging his son's foot, I remember. I walked in. He greeted me. I waited until he got through with his son.

He said to me, "You know"—now, Senator, I'm telling you.

"You know why I didn't give you any money? You must have been wondering."

I said, "Yes."

He was referring to the banquet.

"I didn't want to lose you. I didn't want you to get loose. But don't worry about the money." He said, "We have to go to the mattress again."

The "mattress" means we have to go back to war, that is what it means.

Senator MUSKIE. Was he trying to suggest that he would need the money for the new war?

Mr. VALACHI. I'll talk about it, Senator. It was in that line, too.

Naturally, I wasn't too happy to hear that. So he told me that we can't get along. He meant he can't get along with Charley Lucky, Vito. He gave me a list. "We have to get rid of these people."

The CHAIRMAN. You have to get rid of them?

Mr. VALACHI. Got to get rid of them. On the list was, I will try to remember as I go along: Al Capone, Frank Costello, Charley Lucky, Vito Genovese, Vincent Mangano, Joe Adonis, Dutch Schultz. These are all important names at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Some 10 or 12 altogether?

Mr. VALACHI. Ten or twelve.

Now, he tells me—I forgot to tell you, Senator, there was a rumor passed up in the office a little while before, say a week, a few days before—as I am talking now I remember that—not to come up in the office with any guns, nobody come up there with any guns because they expect the police up there.

I got to talking with some of the members and I said I didn't like that order. So he said, this other fellow, whoever it may have been, said, "What do you mean?"

I said, "I don't know. I'm afraid that they are trying to prepare us to be without any guns. I just don't like it." That is the way I talked.

We let it go that way.

Now, when he told me about the mattress, and he told me that he was going to have the last meeting at 2 o'clock in the office tomorrow—

The CHAIRMAN. Now by "mattress," did that mean that you were going to hole up in a house and just sleep on mattresses somewhere? Give us a description of what you mean.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. You see, we were using mattresses, for instance, when they move from one house to another.

Now, the purpose of that is, you never know when you are going to go in a minute's notice. So they used to use mattresses. Naturally, you always had the bedroom. That was when I was at his headquarters. That is the meaning of mattress. That is what I understood.

Did I give it to you clear?

The CHAIRMAN. I think so.

Go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. So I said, "Can I talk to you?"

He was the kind of man you could talk to. He was the kind of man he thought was a gentleman, you can say anything to him.

I said, "Can I talk to you? Look. After all, if I lose you I am out in the street. I got all reasons to worry."

I said, "Must you go on this appointment? Can't you let Angelo Caruso go? If this is your last meeting——"

He said, "No, I got to go."

I am trying to tell him this is your last meeting, why should you go when the other ones, they usually send the underboss. In other words, I am trying to tell him, if you have something in mind why jeopardize yourself, for the last time?

The CHAIRMAN. Who was he to meet with?

Mr. VALACHI. Vito Genovese and Charley Lucky at the office on 46th Street.

The CHAIRMAN. Whose office?

Mr. VALACHI. Maranzano's office.

The CHAIRMAN. He was going to his office to meet them?

Mr. VALACHI. The next day.

The CHAIRMAN. At 2 o'clock?

Mr. VALACHI. At 2 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. He was telling me about what we are going to do, how big we are going to be. I wasn't interested, Senator, at this time. I feel, as I say, I was away, now to back again. I wasn't too happy. I went along. He told me I should call the office at a quarter to 2.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you to be there, to meet him there at 2?

Mr. VALACHI. No, he told me to call the office at quarter to 2. That afternoon I called the office at quarter to 2 and Charley Buffalo answered the phone. He said that everything was all right. He said I need not go down.

So that day, "the Gap" came around and he decided we would go to Brooklyn. We knew a couple of girls in Brooklyn.

I said, "That is a good idea; we have nothing to do." We took a ride to Brooklyn. We were away all that day and we got back in New York about 12:30 or 1 o'clock in the morning. We landed in Charley Jones' restaurant on 14th Street and 3d Avenue. We had the girls with us. When we went in the restaurant, I noticed there was, like some guy walked in and looked us over and walked out again. Then I noticed another guy walking in and looked us over.

I looked at "the Gap" and he looked at me. I said, "I don't know."

So, Charley Jones, which is a sort of a businessman like he ran crap games and he owned dancehalls, he was in that line of business, so he moved over to me. He told me, "Go home."

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, you had brought the girls there and this was about what time in the morning?

Mr. VALACHI. About 12:30.

The CHAIRMAN. About 12:30 in the morning, you had brought the girls to this restaurant?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, we came from Brooklyn.

The CHAIRMAN. You noticed people looking at you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, they were going in and out.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 223

The CHAIRMAN. People going in and out and looking at you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did that arouse your suspicions?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, it did.

The CHAIRMAN. Charley Jones came over?

Mr. VALACHI. And told me to go home.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you do?

Mr. VALACHI. I walked outside. I looked at "the Gap." I said, "Well, what do you think?"

He said, "I don't know." He says, "We'll break it up."

I said, "All right, we'll give the girls some money," and I told them to go home, back to Brooklyn.

I went home alone and I left "the Gap" down there. I rode to Lexington Avenue very slowly. When I reached in Harlem, the same place where we used to hang out, I notice there were about six or seven boys on the avenue. As I passed by, they whistled at me but I didn't stop. I kept going.

So, I went home. I lived about two or three blocks away from there.

About 10 or 15 minutes later, three of the boys, that I proposed and put in, were all shot up, they were not hit, they only had powder marks.

The CHAIRMAN. Powder marks?

Mr. VALACHI. Powder marks all over.

The CHAIRMAN. They did not have bullet marks?

Mr. VALACHI. Just powder marks. It is amazing, all three were missed. I said, "Were you on the corner when you whistled?"

The CHAIRMAN. What are their names?

Mr. VALACHI. Buck Jones.

The CHAIRMAN. That was not Charley Jones, the one at the restaurant?

Mr. VALACHI. No; Buck Jones. Petey Muggins and Johnny Dee.

The CHAIRMAN. Johnny who?

Mr. VALACHI. Johnny De Bellis.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, go ahead.

Mr. VALACHI. I had the newspaper under my arm. I still can't figure it out. All of a sudden—you see, when I went in the house I was laying on the couch trying to figure out these moves. I didn't open up the newspaper.

When they came in, all of a sudden I happened to look. I see a headline, "Park Avenue Murder." I jump at it. I knew we had the office on Park Avenue. That is the first time I read about Maranzano being killed in his office that afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. That was about what time in the morning?

Mr. VALACHI. When I found out?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. I would say it was about, by this time, it must have been 2 or better.

The CHAIRMAN. About 2 o'clock in the morning?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you had not gone to his office at 2 o'clock that afternoon before?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Because you called there as you were instructed to do and Buffalo—who was it?

Mr. VALACHI. Charley Buffalo.

The CHAIRMAN. Charley Buffalo told you everything was all right and not to come.

Mr. VALACHI. Not to come.

The CHAIRMAN. So you went off with your friend and got the girls and spent that day that way. Until you got to the restaurant, you didn't even know there was anything to be suspicious about?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. You had not heard about the killings?

Mr. VALACHI. Actually I had forgotten about the appointment after that.

The CHAIRMAN. Why had you forgotten? The day before you were trying to get him not to go.

Mr. VALACHI. Being he told me not to come down, what I mean is that I was enjoying myself, I didn't think about it any more.

The CHAIRMAN. You thought everything was all right, they had told you not to come.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what occurred?

Mr. VALACHI. Then I opened up the newspaper and I read about Maranzano being killed at his office. I don't remember the time but I remember reading about it.

Now I knew what all the moves was. I didn't go out of the house for a couple of days.

Senator MUNDT. Do you remember what date this was?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I never remember those dates. They looked up the records but I don't remember the dates.

I know it was around 1931, that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Off the record a moment.

(Discussion off the record.)

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any questions before we recess?

Very well.

The committee will stand in recess until 2 o'clock.

(Members of the subcommittee present at the time of recess were Senators McClellan, Muskie, McIntyre, and Mundt.)

(Whereupon, at 11:50 a.m., the subcommittee recessed until 2 p.m., this same day.)

(The subcommittee reconvened at 2:05 p.m., Senator John L. McClellan, chairman of the subcommittee, presiding.)

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will be in order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of reconvening: Senators McClellan and McIntyre.)

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

The CHAIRMAN. When we recessed at noon, you were testifying about the fact you had just returned to your apartment that night, or wherever you were living, and found these other people there who had powder marks on their clothes.

Take up there now and tell us what happened and what conversation you had with them. Who was it that you met there, and who were you talking to?

Mr. VALACHI. I am talking to Buck Jones.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 225

The CHAIRMAN. Buck Jones?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; and Petey Muggins, and John DeBellis. That is Johnny Dee.

The CHAIRMAN. Those were the three. Did all of them have powder marks on them?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What had occurred? Did they tell you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I said, "That whistle, who whistled for me?"

The CHAIRMAN. Had they been on the street as you drove up, do you think?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, they were on the street.

The CHAIRMAN. And they came on up to your place.

Mr. VALACHI. On the corner of Lexington Street and 110th Street.

The CHAIRMAN. In fact, you were all rooming together?

Mr. VALACHI. No, that was my own house. I was living with my mother and father at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. So they came to your apartment where you were living.

Mr. VALACHI. After I passed Lexington Avenue.

The CHAIRMAN. After you had passed them on the street?

Mr. VALACHI. After I passed.

The CHAIRMAN. After they had whistled at you?

Mr. VALACHI. That is what I am asking them. "Were you on the corner when they whistled for me?" and they said, "Yes," and I saw Pete, but I didn't recognize him, and I didn't stop. I said, "How come?" In the meantime, I had read about this.

The CHAIRMAN. You had read about it?

Mr. VALACHI. I said, "How come you guys don't know anything?" And they said, "We didn't even know."

The CHAIRMAN. They claimed they didn't know anything?

Mr. VALACHI. They didn't know anything either. I said, "At least I was in Brooklyn. My God, you guys are in New York and you mean to tell me you don't know anything?" They said they didn't know anything, and I said "How long were you waiting for me?" and all day they had been waiting for me, asking all afternoon, "When is Joe coming around?" And "When is Joe coming around?" and I said, "Who is with you?"

They said Eddie Coco, and Joe Sweet, some fellow named Yap, and that is about all I remember at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Was anything said about the powder burns on their clothing?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I questioned them now. I said, "When did they start shooting at you? Who did they shoot at?" They said each man that was there walked them individually, and, in other words, one man walked with another man, and one walked with another one, and one walked with another one.

Now I said, "Did Eddy Coco do anything?" and they said no, and I said, "Who did the shooting?" and they told me Joe Sweet and Yap.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is that?

Mr. VALACHI. A fellow named Yap, Y-a-p, and I can't remember the third one, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. There were three of them apparently who had done the shooting.

226 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How did that explain the powder marks on their clothing?

Mr. VALACHI. Because they had the shot close to them for their neck, all three of them, and I said, "You mean to tell me the three of them missed?" and they said, "We are here."

"Unbelievable," I said. "Well," I said, "anyway"——

The CHAIRMAN. Were they there with Maranzano?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. They were with his crowd?

Mr. VALACHI. They were with me, and I failed to mention to you, Senator, that Bobby Doyle, you remember, when he said I had spotters, when I was talking about the war?

The CHAIRMAN. You had what?

Mr. VALACHI. Spotters, and now after the war I failed to remember that Bobby Doyle one day took them all to Maranzano and made them. I used that expression, and you understand what I mean by "made them".

The CHAIRMAN. Carried them up and had them made members.

Mr. VALACHI. Made them members of Cosa Nostra. Monk refused. Out of all of the boys I had, the spotters informed me Monk refused.

The CHAIRMAN. The Monk refused?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; so naturally, I still don't find anything else other than what happened to these three boys. Now, when I went uptown, I remember I went to Nick Padovana's house, and I remember Nick remained with Gagliano.

After I went with Maranzano, Nick remained with Tom Gagliano.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. I was waiting about a day, and he found out that Tom Gagliano wanted to talk to me, and there was an appointment made for me up around 225th Street. Then he asked me if I wanted to go and I said, "Sure, I will go," and when I got there, I found Tommy Brown there, and there was quite a few members.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that Lucchese?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, and there were quite a few there, about 15, but they were the old type, you known, in those days they were older. They were like the Italian types and not the Americanized, and just Tommy was there. So he sat me down, and he said he wanted to ask me for some questioning, and he wanted to ask me some questions.

He said they are interested in me. He asked me if ever I knew about Maranzano hijacking alcohol trucks on Charley Luciano, and he asked me if I knew if Maranzano hijacked trucks of piece goods. So I put up my right hand, and I said, "Tommy, I don't know nothing, so help me God."

So he said, "Did you ever see them split money up at the office?" and I said that I did. I said I remember Buster put $50 in my pocket, but I never asked any questions.

He said, "Good." He said, "I know you are telling the truth," and I said, "Why should I lie?" He said, "Well, he had been doing a lot of bad the way I understand it, and I am questioning you to see if you are in the clear, and if this is the way you tell me, you are in the clear." "Now, Tom wants you to come back with us," and he said—

The CHAIRMAN. Come back with the other family?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 227

Mr. VALACHI. Back again where I originally was. He said, "But they do not want Bobby Doyle, and they do not want Buck Jones and them. They are only interested in you."

I said, "I will let you know." It was providing I was telling the truth. I knew I was telling the truth. Now, I am waiting for Bobby Doyle. Bobby Doyle got arrested up in the office on 46th Street. He was slow getting out of the buildings and so he was arrested when they killed Maranzano. So naturally I am waiting for Bobby Doyle to come out on bail. I don't know how long it took for Bobby to get out. It might have taken 4 days, and I don't remember.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand you now, Bobby Doyle was arrested when they left the place, their office where they killed Maranzano?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And he was coming out last, or late?

Mr. VALACHI. The way I found out, after he threw himself on the body, Bobby Doyle did, and the way he told me, he wanted to see if he had a chance. But in the hesitation made, he got himself arrested. So now I am waiting for him, and he comes out. Now, I tell him, "What are we going to do, we're going to fight?" And he said no. He said, "All guns are pointed at us," meaning everybody is against us, and he said, "I will check; I am a good friend of Vito's and give me a few days' time, and I will let you know." I said, "What is on your mind?" And he said, "We may turn and go to Vito." I took that as sort of a shock. So, "OK," I said, "What do you want me to do?" And he said, "Call me up in a couple of days" and I said "OK."

In the meantime, I went looking for "the Gap." Remember "the Gap" was a close friend of mine. When I got in touch with "the Gap," I took a ride and I said, "Look, what will I do?" I understand Maranzano had been doing a lot of dirty work, and well anyway it looks like it is going to be no comeback.

Now, Tom Gagliano wants me to go back with him, and now Bobby tells me we may go with Vito. What should I do? I don't know what to do, and you give me advice. And he said, "Go with Vito." I said, "Is that what you advise?" and he said, "Yes." Well, naturally, I waited a few days and I called up Bobby Doyle.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, proceed.

Mr. VALACHI. So I waited a few days and I gave him a few days' time and I called Bobby, and he said that he has made an appointment to meet Vito Genovese. He said, "You know where to get the other guys?" Well, I said, "They give me a number, and you call them. Well, anyway when is the appointment for?" And he said, "Do you want me to make it for tomorrow, and I can call up." And I said, "OK, make it for tomorrow." So he made an appointment and I met Johnny Dee, I don't know how, but I got in touch with him, and we went at a certain time to 25th Street in the Cornish Arms Hotel. Well, when I got there, I was the last one to go, Johnny and I and the other two were already there and so was Bobby; we met Vito Genovese. Well, after we got there, he was speaking to us, and he said, "I want to take you boys along with me because I want to see the respect due you come to you." In other words, we worked so hard, and now all of a sudden we lost our boss, and there would be no more respect. In other words, we have to provide our way through, and he said "that is the reason why most of all I want to take you," and he went on to say the things that Maranzano had done, about the trucking, and about the alcohol. I should have told you, Senator, and I just come to a story that I remember, and I should have said something which I forgot, which I can tell you now and piece it together.

It would be all right?

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. When Maranzano told me about the mattress, did I say he told me not to tell Bobby Doyle anything?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. VALACHI. Well then I failed to say it. He had warned me not to tell Bobby Doyle anything. And in fact, he told me that night that I belonged to him all of the time, and that Bobby Doyle was acting lieutenant, "but don't feel that he is your lieutenant. You are personally under me. But when you speak with him, let him believe that. But if you tell Bobby Doyle what I told you tonight, you understand." And I said, "Don't worry about it, I never told Bobby Doyle anything." But after Maranzano died, I told Bobby Doyle that, but not before. He said, "Why didn't you tell me that?" And I said, "Why should I tell you and have you go back to him, and I am dead. What are you, kidding, and you are that way." So he wanted to resign as lieutenant and ship the little time that he was lieutenant, and he wanted to turn it over to me. I refused, and I said, "What am I going to do, with nothing in my pocket? Are you kidding?" And he said, "I can tell the old man" and I said, "You tell the old man I will turn it down."

That never came up, and I refused, but then Maranzano gave me a different story which I failed to remember. Now I go back to Vito Genovese. Now when I told Bobby Doyle the story about the mattress and this and that, which I wasn't supposed to tell before, and from the way Vito talked, it looked as though that Bobby already told him, because he was speaking, he goes on to explain. Well, another thing I have to tell you before that, and I am running away with it, Senator. Bobby Doyle explained to me and I said what happened on 46th Street, and he went out to explain to me that there were four Jews went up there, and they posed as policemen and he found out, and how he found out I don't know, but he is telling me the story and they posed as policemen, and I said, "Remember the time they passed someone up there?" And he said, "Yes, and remember I was suspicious," and he said, "Yes." Well, they brought Maranzano in the other room, while the other two stood with the crowd, and there was quite a crowd, and there was quite a crowd up there. They talked business, and in other words, they posed as policemen and showed them a badge and they wanted to talk business with him, and so he agreed. But when they got in the other room, Maranzano seemed to have gotten wise, and then they were only to kill him and not to shoot him, and Maranzano went for a pistol, and he had a pistol, and they were forced to use a shot on him before they cut his throat. So I was running away with it, and now I corrected it.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you said some Jews killed him, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. The Jews, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were dressed as policemen?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 229

Mr. VALACHI. They had dressed as policemen, and they posed as policemen.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they members of Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. How did they get into the picture?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, they were very close with Charley and Vito at that time, and that is an allegiance group. Vito and Charley "Lucky," they were close to them.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you get any information they were employed to commit this murder?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, Senator, they seem to work together at times. You see they had trouble of their own later on, which I will explain, and Vito and Charley helped them when they had trouble among themselves. You see I am talking about Meyer Lansky.

The CHAIRMAN. Kind of like swapping work. They would do something for one crowd and the other crowd then would help them out.

Mr. VALACHI. I go into that later.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it those people who were posing as policemen, that actually did the killing?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is your information?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Did Doyle tell you that?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; one told me, but about 6 years later, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was that?

Mr. VALACHI. One of them told me about 6 years later, and not at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Someone told you at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. That it was just—but I didn't know who was the triggerman.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't know who they were?

Mr. VALACHI. I did not know who the people were.

The CHAIRMAN. Now 6 years later?

Mr. VALACHI. I found out only one guy.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was he?

Mr. VALACHI. Red Lavine. He told me that himself.

The CHAIRMAN. He told you that himself?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I got close to Red on the racetrack, you see.

The CHAIRMAN. When did Red tell you that?

Mr. VALACHI. About 6 years after that.

The CHAIRMAN. Six years afterward Red Lavine?

Mr. VALACHI. Not that he just told me that, I was talking with him and I got close with him, and talking about it and I had heard a little bit, but in my own sense I am wondering if he is one of them, and so I said to him, you know we got a little close and I said to him, "Hey, Red, I am only curious," I said, "I don't know if you were one of the guys who was up there in the office that time, with Maranzano." And I said, "I would like to know if there was any order for anybody else." And he said "No, just for him."

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, they only had orders to kill one?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That was Maranzano?

230 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. In other words, I was always trying to wonder who put him on the spot, in my own mind, and I was always trying to figure the thing out. So I said, "No other order for anybody else," and he said, "No, just him." I said, "I heard you were there" and he said, "Yes, I was up there," and he said, "He is a tough Gee." That is what he said. He said "We had to shoot him."

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know before the name of any of those who had participated in the actual killing?

Mr. VALACHI. No; I just knew that they were just—and as I went along, as time went by, I just heard the name Red Lavine come up, that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know whether they were in civilian clothes?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; civilian clothes.

The CHAIRMAN. They pretended or they posed as detectives?

Mr. VALACHI. As detectives; yes, sir. Now I go back to Vito Genovese and I can understand what he is talking about, and he is telling us—

The CHAIRMAN. Now you are in a meeting with Genovese, in which he is asking you to come back into his organization.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. And he is telling us why he is taking us with him, because due to respect he wants to see us, that we get which he felt now that we lost because we lost Maranzano. In other words, he figured, "By you being with us, you have prestige, and just the same."

The CHAIRMAN. This killing actually you mean that Lucchese and Genovese were taking over? Did they take over after that?

Mr. VALACHI. Charley "Lucky," and Genovese.

The CHAIRMAN. They took over, Luciano?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir. Now, he said, as he is speaking, he said, "We made it by minutes."

The CHAIRMAN. "We made it by minutes." What did that mean?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, that is another thing Bobby told me. You remember I told you Maranzano had an appointment and he never told me what the appointment was about. He had Vincent Coll ready to shoot Charley "Lucky" and Vito Genovese.

The CHAIRMAN. At that meeting?

Mr. VALACHI. At that meeting.

The CHAIRMAN. That is that same 2 o'clock meeting that you didn't attend?

Mr. VALACHI. That is the 2 o'clock meeting.

The CHAIRMAN. And the 2 o'clock meeting—

Mr. VALACHI. I was away.

The CHAIRMAN. At the 2 o'clock meeting where Maranzano was killed?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, that is the day he was killed.

The CHAIRMAN. The same day?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know if it was 2 o'clock, but that was the day.

The CHAIRMAN. It was at the same meeting?

Mr. VALACHI. The meeting that had been set up.

The CHAIRMAN. The meeting that had been set up?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; in the office on 46th Street.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was it told you about the 5 minutes?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 231

Mr. VALACHI. Well, Bobby already had told me that, and he had found out, and now Vito was talking about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Vito is now talking about it?

Mr. VALACHI. Vito is talking about it and as he is talking to the boys, he said, "Joe knows, we made it by minutes," indicating that Bobby Doyle already had told him everything, you see what I mean, and I understood now. So I shook my head. So I said, "If you people felt that he was doing so much wrong, why didn't you approach me?" He said, "We couldn't approach you, you were too 100 percent." And I said, "Well, I would rather be that way than any way else. You are right." In other words, if he would approach me, he feared that I may go and tell Maranzano, which I would have. I would tell the truth. So from then on, they brought us downtown, and they introduced us to Tony Bender and they told us that Tony Bender is the new lieutenant we have.

The CHAIRMAN. Had you ever known Tony Bender before that?

Mr. VALACHI. I never knew him before that.

Now we are with Tony Bender. Where do I go from here? I forget.

(Senator Jackson entered the room.)

The CHAIRMAN. When they came out of the building after having killed Maranzano, who met Coll or where was Coll at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Bobby told me that they met him going out. They were coming out and the other ones were coming in and they waved them away.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You mean Bobby Doyle or Red Levine going out?

Mr. VALACHI. No, Bobby told me, himself. Then Red Levine told me 6 years later.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What did Red Levine tell you about the killing?

Mr. VALACHI. He also said they met the other guys.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Met who?

Mr. VALACHI. Vincent Coll, and they waved them away.

Mr. ADLERMAN. As I understand it, then, Red Levine and two or three others, Jewish gangsters, had gone in there to kill Maranzano. They killed him.

As they were leaving the scene of the killing they met Vincent Coll coming in?

Mr. VALACHI. Coming in as they were going out and they waved them away.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What did they say to Vincent Coll?

Mr. VALACHI. Just like that, "Beat it."

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did they tell them the cops were on the way?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. "Beat it, the cops are on the way."

The CHAIRMAN. What was Coll doing there?

Mr. VALACHI. It came out that Maranzano had hired or got Vincent Coll—I never knew he was contacting Coll—the purpose was that they were going to kill Vito and Charley, which Vito and Charley never showed up.

The CHAIRMAN. Instead of Vito and Charley showing up, the Jews came?

Mr. VALACHI. Now you have it, that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. When they went out they met Coll coming in?

232 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. They were going out and they met Coll coming in, whoever was with Coll they met and they waved them away, "Beat it, the cops are coming."

The CHAIRMAN. I understand you now.

Do you know whether there were any other murders on that same day, any other people killed?

Mr. VALACHI. When I met Nick, he told me that Jim Marino got hit and a couple more in Jersey.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that the same as Jimmy LePore, Jimmy Marino?

Mr. VALACHI. That sounds like his right name. I am not sure of his right name. Jimmy Marino in the barber shop and a couple were killed in New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. How many were killed altogether that day?

Mr. VALACHI. Four or five, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Four or five were killed?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. The other three attempts—

The CHAIRMAN. Three or four others besides Marino?

Mr. VALACHI. The one they found in Passaic, his name was Sam Monica. I knew he was an underboss. That is something I remembered when I was laying on the couch.

There was also a family at that time—I remember when I was laying on the couch this afternoon—when Maranzano made a speech in the hall, I remember another family in Newark, a man by the name of Don Steven was the boss and Sam Monica was the underboss.

The CHAIRMAN. You said Don Steven?

Mr. VALACHI. Don Steven.

The CHAIRMAN. S-t-e-v-e-n? You call it Steven.

Mr. VALACHI. Steve or Steven. Steven would be Italian. I am almost close to his name. It almost sounds like—

The CHAIRMAN. Like Monica?

Mr. VALACHI. No, Monica is another one. Sam—Bonannon, I can pronounce it in Italian.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is it Bandami?

Mr. VALACHI. No, Bonnanon.

The CHAIRMAN. You suspend a moment and let me ask Sergeant Salerno, do you have the police record on the Maranzano killing?

TESTIMONY OF SGT. RALPH SALERNO—Resumed

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, I do. It indicates at 3:50 p.m.—

The CHAIRMAN. On what date?

Sergeant SALERNO. September 10, 1931, Salvatore Maranzano of 2706 Avenue J, Brooklyn, was shot and stabbed to death in the office of the Eagle Building Corp., in a suite of rooms including 925 and 926, at 230 Park Avenue, which is at 46th Street, New York City. Perpetrators were four unknown men posing as police officers.

There were four gunshot wounds and six stab wounds, a knife and two pistols were recovered.

The CHAIRMAN. Were those back wounds or was he shot in the front?

Sergeant SALERNO. It is not clearly indicated.

The four stab wounds were in the abdomen of the body.

The CHAIRMAN. Apparently from the front.

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Was any arrest ever made in that case? Has that murder ever been cleared up?

Sergeant SALERNO. No, it is not. But this is the one where Bobby Doyle was taken into custody as a material witness.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he taken into custody and held for a few days?

Sergeant SALERNO. As a material witness.

The CHAIRMAN. As Mr. Valachi has testified?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes; he was apprehended by the transit officer who caught him coming out of the building.

The CHAIRMAN. Your records show that Maranzano was killed by four people posing as policemen?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, there were a number of witnesses. The room outside of which Maranzano was killed held a number of people, they were waiting to see him on business.

The CHAIRMAN. In your investigation, did they contend they did not know any of the four people?

Sergeant SALERNO. I think they got the description from these witnesses. They did not give any identity.

The CHAIRMAN. What about the other witnesses?

He testified here that there were some other murders that day.

Sergeant SALERNO. On the same day, at 5:45 p.m., James Le Pore, also known as Jimmy Marino, male, white person, who resided at 1518 St. Peter's Avenue in the Bronx, while standing in the doorway of a barbershop at 2400 Arthur Avenue in the Bronx was shot six times in the head and body, causing his death. The case is active.

The CHAIRMAN. This other killing of Maranzano, was that at the address that Valachi has testified to, the same address?

Sergeant SALERNO. It is 230 Park Avenue, which is at 46th Street, as he so indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have any others?

Sergeant SALERNO. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have any record of any other killings that day?

Sergeant SALERNO. No, sir; I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Was this last one ever cleared up, Jimmy Marino or James Le Pore?

Sergeant SALERNO. That is an active case. It has never been solved.

The CHAIRMAN. Neither have you ever found or had any one indicted for the murder of Maranzano?

Sergeant SALERNO. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask, do you know whether Red Levine is still living?

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; he is.

The CHAIRMAN. He told you, himself, he participated in the killing?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what family or gang he belongs to now?

Mr. VALACHI. Meyer Lansky.

The CHAIRMAN. Who?

Mr. VALACHI. Meyer Lansky.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he on the chart?

Mr. VALACHI. No; they don't come on the chart.

The CHAIRMAN. He is not a part of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. I see. That is a different group.

Senator McINTYRE. Will the Chairman yield at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; Senator McIntyre.

Senator McINTYRE. As I get the picture, Mr. Valachi, at this time you decided to go with Vito Genovese and Luciano?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. These people were with the Masseria group?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. You had previous to that been with the Maranzano group?

Mr. VALACHI. Correct.

Senator McINTYRE. You were switching from the Maranzano group to the Masseria group?

Mr. VALACHI. In a couple of months I was with three families.

Senator McINTYRE. This is not unusual?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, in this particular case you could say it was odd, you know, within a few months.

Senator McINTYRE. Caused somewhat by the warring faction, the trouble in gangdom at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. In such short time, less than 4 months, I traveled three families. I was with the family I am today, I am with them 30 years.

Senator McINTYRE. Joe, this morning I mentioned in asking you if you knew in Boston a man named Patriarca.

Mr. VALACHI. You will find him on the chart.

Senator McINTYRE. Do you remember his first name?

Mr. VALACHI. Raymond.

Senator McINTYRE. Have you met him personally?

Mr. VALACHI. I met him personally. That is all I know. I used to race in Boston.

Senator McINTYRE. You what?

Mr. VALACHI. I used to race in Boston. I had horses. That is how I met a lot of the boys in Boston. I raced quite a number of years in Boston. Not particularly in Boston but in the New England States. Suffolk Downs is Boston. I would be there, going back and forth. Then we would go to Narragansett and Rhode Island, from Rhode Island to New Hampshire, back and forth at the New England tracks.

Senator McINTYRE. So it was possibly at the tracks you saw this Raymond Patriarca?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator McINTYRE. Do you know what his business was?

Mr. VALACHI. I was introduced to him. All I know is that they had a crap game. That is all I know. All the boys had a crap game going.

Senator McINTYRE. He did a lot of betting, himself?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. Was he part of the syndicate in Boston?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 235

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. Was he a member of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. I will go into that when I get there.

Senator McINTYRE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

(At this point Senator Jackson entered the hearing room.)

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was Raymond Patriarca introduced to you as a member of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How long ago was that?

Mr. VALACHI. Three years. I would say, since I am going to Boston, let us put it in between the late 1938 and on from there, up to 1947.

Mr. ADLERMAN. There is no doubt in your mind that he is a member of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, 100 percent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further, Senator?

Senator McINTYRE. No; thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Jackson, do you have anything at this point?

Senator JACKSON. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you one or two questions.

Did you agree to join the Genovese family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. When did you agree to do that, at the time you were introduced to Tony Bender?

Mr. VALACHI. Right when the meeting ended.

The CHAIRMAN. When you had that meeting you agreed to join?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. To go into this family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. With him as boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Tony Bender was underboss?

Mr. VALACHI. No, he was lieutenant. Vito was the underboss at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was the boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Charley Lucky.

The CHAIRMAN. Charley Luciano?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Adlerman.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Sergeant Salerno, do you have the record showing—

Sergeant SALERNO. We have what we call a background sheet on a man known as Steve Padami.

Mr. ADLERMAN. P-a-d-a-m-i?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes; he is also known as Don Steven or Don Estaban or Don Stephano.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that the same man you referred to as the boss of the Jersey family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You mentioned before that one of the men who was an underboss was killed. What was his name?

236 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Sam Monica.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you have any records?

Sergeant SALERNO. We show that Don Steven's closest associates were Joseph and Sam Acardi and Sam Monica.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you have any record showing the killing of Sam Monica?

Sergeant SALERNO. No; we don't.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was Sam Monica killed in New York?

Mr. VALACHI. No; in New Jersey. They found him in the Passaic River. That is in Jersey.

Mr. ADLERMAN. We will try to get the record clear. We do not have it at present.

The CHAIRMAN. But you think they were all killed the same day?

Mr. VALACHI. I know, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. You know? Very good.

Proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Following this situation where you joined the Genovese family, did Luciano take over as boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, he did.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did he abolish the boss of bosses system?

Mr. VALACHI. That was abolished. He also put in, you know, a new consiglieri to protect the soldiers.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You mean a group of men?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, a group of six.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was their function?

Mr. VALACHI. For instance, a lieutenant wants to have a soldier killed or something like that in that line, he cannot do it no more. If he has anything he wants to do, anything like that, he must come up and talk to these six and state what he has got, what is his reasons before he is able to carry out, which they never did that before.

That is why the soldiers felt that they have a longer life now than ever, which they did.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was this the result of the fact that there were a great many grudges and feuds going on because of the various killings?

Mr. VALACHI. Actually, it was the result of the way Joe Masseria was working.

Now them things I can't tell you, only what I learned from Joe Profaci, like the meeting of Charley Lucky with Joe Masseria. They knew what they were doing at the time. I don't know. But I learned what it was all about. In other words, they were protecting and trying to say for the other soldiers what was happening to them when they were in the Masseria administration.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did each of the families have a consiglieri?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, at that time.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How many consiglieri?

Mr. VALACHI. They had six. If they need a decision, then a boss makes seven. It could be any boss to make it seven because six is even. It might be three and three. So there would be no decision. So a boss would sit down.

Mr. ADLERMAN. There were six families, five in New York and one in New Jersey?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 237

Mr. ADLERMAN. Each of those had one consiglieri?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. If for any reason a lieutenant, boss or somebody, wished to kill some soldier, they first had to go to the court or the council?

Mr. VALACHI. That is it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And prefer a charge which the council or consiglieri would hear and make a determination whether the boss or lieutenant was justified in killing the soldier?

Mr. VALACHI. Can I describe something to you?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Would you, please?

(At this point, Senators Curtis and Mundt entered the hearing room.)

Mr. VALACHI. For instance, you take the time when I was in New Jersey when Albert Anastasia sat down. You know what I had in mind. If that had not been settled there that would have gone up to the consiglieri. That was the purpose why Albert was there.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This is the situation you told me about that occurred in 1951 which we have not discussed yet?

Mr. VALACHI. We did discuss it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. We did?

Mr. VALACHI. Sure.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This is the incident where you had the fight with your partner. You had struck your partner physically which was against the rules. You were brought into the council in New Jersey, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. If he had saw fit and went to the council, we would have gone to the council, but it ended there, it never got up there.

Mr. ADLERMAN. It did not go up to the appeals court?

Mr. VALACHI. I was waiting for that. I don't think they would have saw me any more.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, the consiglieri is different from the commission, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. That is all together.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The commission is the council of the bosses themselves over the whole United States or wherever the families are in the United States?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So the council you are discussing now, the consiglieri of six, only affects the New York families and the New Jersey family?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, after you joined the Genovese family, were you asked to go to Chicago?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I was asked to go to Chicago.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who asked you to go, and will you explain what happened?

Mr. VALACHI. Bobby told me that I was going to go to Chicago. I said, "Bobby, I don't want to go."

He said, "Well, jeez," —

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was the purpose?

Mr. VALACHI. I will explain. I said, "I don't want to go, Bobby."

He said, "Vito told me."

238 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

"If I have a chance I will ask Vito to try to spare me."

The purpose was, you remember I told Bobby about the mattress. In other words, the purpose was, I will go at this meeting, I will tell the commission what Maranzano told me which makes it like legal——

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who were you supposed to tell this to?

Mr. VALACHI. To the bosses in Chicago at the meeting in Chicago. In other words, I would be justifying or corroborating with Charley Lucky and Vito to show that Maranzano was doing wrong and that he told me about that he intended to kill Charley and the names I mentioned before. In other words, I would be testifying against him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do I understand it this way: That Lucky Luciano and Vito Genovese had to justify before the rest of the bosses the reason why they killed Maranzano and show that they had a bona fide or just reason for killing him?

Mr. VALACHI. Right. And I would have fit good into the picture by testifying, because Maranzano had told me.

Now I met Vito. I didn't go looking for him. I met him like we go downtown.

I said, "If you can spare me that trip to Chicago, I don't care to go, but if I have to go I will go but if you can spare me."

He said, "I'll see what I can do."

Then Bobby told me he was going, that it was all right for me not to go.

I said, "Good." I never went. But Bobby went.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Bobby Doyle went.

Now tell me, who can become a member of this organization if they are selected and elected? What are the qualifications? Who must they be?

Mr. VALACHI. For instance, I am a soldier. I introduce this man Petroni. In other words, I propose him.

He would be in line as to when the books open. In other words, every one I brought, none of them was turned down.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Must you be born in Italy, for example?

Mr. VALACHI. No, you don't have to be born in Italy. You have to be a full Italian.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What do you mean by that?

Mr. VALACHI. By that I mean you can't be half Italian or half something else.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You have to be Italian on both sides of your family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do they still require the rule that you have to be born in Sicily?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is no longer the rule?

Mr. VALACHI. That is no longer the rule.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This has not been the rule for as long as you remember?

Mr. VALACHI. It was not in my time. Whatever rules they had before that, I don't know, but not in my time. Maybe years before that, I don't know, I can't say.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You mentioned something about opening the books and closing the books. Can you explain what you mean by opening the books and closing the books?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 239

Mr. VALACHI. For instance, the books were closed in about 1931. They were reopened around 1954.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Are these books for admission of membership?

Mr. VALACHI. They use the expression "books open" and "books closed." Actually, they mean that no member can get in as long as the books are closed.

When I say they reopen them, that means you could have brought members in, like Frank Scalise, and Albert Anastasia, they brought in a couple of hundred, which some of them they commercialized. Some of them paid up to $40,000 to get in.

The CHAIRMAN. Some of them paid?

Mr. VALACHI. Some of them paid.

The CHAIRMAN. When were these made?

Mr. VALACHI. After 1954.

The CHAIRMAN. About 1954?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Some of them who came in then paid large sums to become members?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. That is one of the charges that Frank Scalise and Albert Anastasia had against them. They closed the books again—in other words, 1954 to around 1958, about 1958 when the books were closed again.

The CHAIRMAN. They kept them open 3 or 4 years?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. During that time Anastasia became a member?

Mr. VALACHI. No; Anastasia was boss right along.

The CHAIRMAN. He was already a boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was it that paid the big money to get in? Name some of them.

Mr. VALACHI. From what I got it was one of these kids there who was with Frank Luciano. You have the name. Jojo.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand you will cover all of this later on, the staff tells me.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. We will get to that later.

Senator JACKSON. I have one question to follow up on yesterday's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, Senator.

Senator JACKSON. Mr. Valachi, yesterday I inquired regarding the compensation to the members of the family. I want to ask you, what was the arrangement when one of the members got in trouble or difficulty, sent to prison, and he had a family to support? How was that handled or was it handled?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, if you ask me the question that way I will answer you. It happened that I never got in trouble.

Senator JACKSON. You say you did not get into trouble.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I didn't get into any kind of trouble—

Senator JACKSON. Where you needed support.

Mr. VALACHI. That I needed support. In other words, that the family was responsible for.

In that case, they helped you all the way and they support your family while you are away. You get that if it is something that they ordered you to do. The money comes from dues.

Senator JACKSON. In other words, if you carried out an order and in the course of that carrying out of that order you should be arrested and serve time or something else happened to you, then under the code of conduct they had an obligation to support your family?

Mr. VALACHI. They help you; yes.

Senator JACKSON. And to assist you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JACKSON. Did they provide legal counsel?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; they would get the lawyers for you.

Senator JACKSON. They would give funds for that purpose?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I want to tell you where the funds came from, Senator.

Senator JACKSON. That is what I want to get to next.

Mr. VALACHI. The funds come from—there was dues being paid of $25 a month.

Senator JACKSON. $25 a month?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JACKSON. From each soldier?

Mr. VALACHI. From each soldier; yes.

Senator JACKSON. How many members, for example, in the Genovese family?

Mr. VALACHI. As I said, from 450 to 500.

Senator JACKSON. So they would pay $25 a month?

Mr. VALACHI. Years ago it was a little cheaper.

Senator JACKSON. What is the current going rate of dues?

Mr. VALACHI. Just dues.

Senator JACKSON. I say, what is the current fee? How much?

Mr. VALACHI. $25.

Senator JACKSON. Is that what it is now?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, but I want to explain to you—

Senator JACKSON. $25 a month?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JACKSON. All right.

Mr. VALACHI. I want to explain to you, like the Vito Genovese family stopped paying those dues around 1959, the early part of 1959. I happened to go down. I wanted to pay my dues. I used to pay, say $100 for 4 months. When I went there, they told me "no more dues."

I said, "What happened?" They said, "There was a beef." That is all I was told. In other words, somebody complained about it. In other words, they were not doing what they were supposed to do.

Senator JACKSON. What about the rest of them; did they keep paying?

Mr. VALACHI. The rest of them are still paying up to today.

Senator JACKSON. The rest of the family?

Mr. VALACHI. The rest of the families.

Senator JACKSON. But the Genovese family stopped paying?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JACKSON. How did they manage to get away with it? By reason of their power and their position?

Mr. VALACHI. If you put it that way, that is right. I asked a couple of members from the other families—we had all kinds of families in Atlanta—I asked and I said, “Are you guys still paying?” They said “yes.” I would say no more.

Senator JACKSON. They were paying while they were in Atlanta?

Mr. VALACHI. In other words, I am telling you in 1960 when I left the street what I find out in Atlanta, I asked those questions.

Senator JACKSON. You left Atlanta how long ago?

Mr. VALACHI. I left Atlanta about 1962.

Senator JACKSON. Up until that time they were still paying dues even though they were incarcerated in prison; is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JACKSON. Now each family was assessed this amount of money, that is $25; I mean each soldier, $25 a month.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JACKSON. Out of their earnings, wherever they would get it?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, later on I will go into details where I will tell you where they were being shaken down, the soldiers, but I am not ready for it yet, not at this time.

Senator JACKSON. One other question I want to ask you with reference to the code of conduct.

If you were ordered to carry out a certain assignment, supposing it was just a plain robbery, and it did not involve any of the rival families, did you have any instructions regarding shoot to kill in the course of that robbery or did you try to avoid it if they were nonrivals?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, you would not get any help if you got arrested for robbery. You were on your own. In fact, they didn't allow that.

Senator JACKSON. I mean, were you instructed to avoid killing other than your own, that is what I am getting at.

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, if they don't allow it—do I have the question right?

Senator JACKSON. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. If they don't allow it, how can they instruct you?

Senator JACKSON. What I want to know is whether you understood that if you were to carry out a certain criminal act and it involved getting money or something else that you needed and did not involve the rival family—

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, give it to me clear as to what you mean. Let me see if I got you right. You mean if I went to steal?

Senator JACKSON. Yes; you are not stealing from the rival groups or families.

Mr. VALACHI. Stealing from anybody, no family; right?

Senator JACKSON. No.

Mr. VALACHI. I ain't supposed to steal.

Senator JACKSON. You were not supposed to steal?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator JACKSON. Would you be ousted from the family?

242 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. No; I would not be ousted but they would not be responsible. In other words, if I go steal, I am on my own.

Senator JACKSON. You are on your own?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator JACKSON. Did they instruct you to avoid killing any one outside of their own group or their own rival group?

Mr. VALACHI. Are you talking about the peace now or are you still talking about robbery? I want to get it straight.

Senator JACKSON. Suppose they knew or had reason to believe that you would be engaged from time to time in burglary or robbery. Were you advised to avoid, in other words getting caught, so that you would sooner or later drag the family into, well, the situation they are in right now.

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, you remember when I told you I went and brought Buster out on a burglary and the old man wanted to see me and I took off. Do you remember my telling you that?

Senator JACKSON. I missed that.

Mr. VALACHI. You missed that. I didn't know.

In other words, it could even involve gambling.

Senator JACKSON. Certainly. Rackets, everything.

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't understand you, Senator. They don't tell you to kill unless they have an order.

Senator JACKSON. Did they give you any instructions to do everything to avoid killing outside of your group?

Mr. VALACHI. Do you mean if you have to beat somebody up?

Senator JACKSON. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; that is right.

Senator JACKSON. Beat them up gently?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; don't kill them; that is right.

Senator JACKSON. That is all.

Senator CURTIS. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Curtis.

Senator CURTIS. In regard to the wives and children of members of the Cosa Nostra, were the facts of how the soldier made his living and what he engaged in generally withheld from his wife and from his children?

Mr. VALACHI. Withheld by whom, Senator?

Senator CURTIS. Beg pardon?

Mr. VALACHI. Withheld by whom, by the wife, you mean?

Senator CURTIS. No. Did the soldier let his wife and children know how he made a living—was that disclosed?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, Senator, you ain't supposed to.

Now, I can't account for someone telling his wife this or that. You are not supposed to tell them anything. I can't say that they don't.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt.

Senator MUNDT. If I understood the witness in response to the question of Senator Jackson, what you were saying is that a soldier is supposed to carry out an execution of death which has been made by the boss, but they discourage any sort of freewheeling killing on your own part except that which you took out under contract; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. I still want to get that more clear, Senator. Let me get it straight.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 243

Senator MUNDT. Your job as a soldier was to carry out death sentences made by your bosses?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator MUNDT. They discouraged you from going into any promiscuous fighting or killing on your own?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; the way you word it, that is right.

Senator MUNDT. Because it would get them in trouble?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

The committee will stand in recess until 10:30, Tuesday morning.
(Whereupon, at 3:05 p.m., the subcommittee recessed to reconvene at 10:30 a.m., Tuesday, October 8, 1963.)

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of convening: Senators McClellan, Muskie, McIntyre, Brewster, and Mundt.)

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Counsel, you may proceed.

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, I think that we left off the other day where we were discussing some of the rules of Cosa Nostra. Now, you have been a member of the organization for some 30-odd years; is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Since 1930.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. Since 1930.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How many families are there in the New York area?

Mr. VALACHI. In the New York area there are five, but Newark is six.

Mr. ADLERMAN. With Newark it is six?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In New York City alone?

246 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. It is like New York.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you name what they are?

Mr. VALACHI. In New York—

The CHAIRMAN. What he means is give the name of the head of the family.

Mr. VALACHI. The bosses. In Brooklyn, Joe Profaci, when I left the streets in 1960.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Joe Profaci is no longer the boss. He died.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was succeeded by who?

Mr. VALACHI. I wouldn't go into that, because I wasn't in the street at that time.

Mr. ADLERMAN. As far as you know—

Mr. VALACHI. As far as I heard, his brother-in-law.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that Magliocco?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Go right ahead and I want to get all of these in the record.

Mr. VALACHI. In the other part of Brooklyn, it is Joe Bonanno.

The CHAIRMAN. How about Manhattan?

Mr. VALACHI. Manhattan, you got—we will start with Vito Genovese, with Jerry Catena, that is my family, and then you have got Carlo Gambino, with Joe Bandy, I call him, and you got Tom Lucchese, Steve LaSalle.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was the last one?

Mr. VALACHI. Steve LaSalle.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Tom Lucchese is the boss; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And his underboss is Steve LaSalle?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me get the underbosses. Who is the underboss under Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. Jerry Catena.

The CHAIRMAN. Under Gambino?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Bandy.

The CHAIRMAN. And Steve LaSalle under Lucchese?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And Bonanno; who is under him?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, Bonanno, I was never sure.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not sure about that?

Mr. VALACHI. I am not sure about that one.

The CHAIRMAN. And Magliocco is Joe who?

Mr. VALACHI. Profaci, his brother-in-law.

The CHAIRMAN. What is his name?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Minneoco, and I can't pronounce it too good—Minneoco.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Mr. Counsel, proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I would like to call now Deputy Inspector Shanley of the Central Intelligence Branch of the New York Police Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you been sworn?

Mr. SHANLEY. I have, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed under your oath.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN F. SHANLEY—Resumed

Mr. ADLERMAN. We still have to have some of those charts.

The CHAIRMAN. For the record, identify yourself again at this point. What is your position in New York, Mr. Shanley?

Mr. SHANLEY. I am Deputy Chief Inspector in the Central Investigations Bureau, which is the intelligence unit concerned with organized crime in the New York City Police Department.

The CHAIRMAN. In that capacity, then, you do have a great responsibility in connection with the character of crime, organized or syndicated crime, about which the committee is now concerned?

Mr. SHANLEY. I do, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In connection with this investigation?

Mr. SHANLEY. I do, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you gone over the information that the committee has obtained and conferred with the staff regarding it, and also with this witness, Joe Valachi?

Mr. SHANLEY. I haven't conferred with the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. You never conferred with the witness?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So what you are going to testify to here is not a result of any conference you have had with Valachi?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, you may proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you, in your discussions, please limit yourself—are you in agreement that there are five families in New York?

Mr. SHANLEY. We are.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Are you in agreement that the five families are the Vito Genovese family, the Tommy Lucchese family, the Carlo Gambino family, the Giuseppe Magliocco family, and the Joe Bonanno family?

Mr. SHANLEY. We are; yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Will you explain how these charts were prepared, or were these charts prepared under your direction?

The CHAIRMAN. You have prepared some charts showing these different families that have been testified to here by the witness, have you?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you prepared charts showing known members in each of these families?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the charts that you are about to present here and testify to are charts showing the families that have been testified to here by the witness, and a number of the members of that family that are known to you in your official position in New York?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I would like to introduce first the Vito Genovese chart.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Shanley, have the charts that are now before you that have been enlarged, that are hanging on the wall to your right, are these the charts that you have helped to prepare and that you identify?

248 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Beginning with the one on the left, will you identify it, the one on the left, and state what you know about it?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, we have it in a different order.

The CHAIRMAN. You have them in a different order? All right, begin on the right, then, the one on the right.

Mr. SHANLEY. This is the Vito Genovese family. To begin with, these charts were prepared on the basis of information that we obtained from the committee, and information that we had in our own files, and information that we got from the Federal Bureau of Narcotics.

The CHAIRMAN. I am going to let these charts be identified as charts A, B, C, D, and E, as you present them.

Miss Clerk, in that order, the Vito Genovese chart will be made chart A, and then letter them thereafter as presented in order, and I will also direct that the charts be printed in the record. Now, the photographs, of course, cannot be printed in the official record, but the charts, as such, insofar as you are able to do so, print the charts in the record exactly as they appear presented to the committee.

(The charts referred to were marked A, B, C, D, and E.)

(147)

Mr. SHANLEY. These charts have a key to activity code. Under each individual name here, figures have been placed, 1A, 2, 3, 5, and 6, in cases of the boss, Vito Genovese, and in the upper left-hand corner there is a code indicating the meaning of these numbers.

For instance, 1A indicates that the subject is currently in jail for narcotics, and 1B, awaiting trial for narcotics, and so on, down to 9 and the asterisk.

Of the total number on this particular chart, which is in excess of 150, there have been 1,064 arrests effected of these individual members. This indicates that there has been an average of seven arrests per man per each person on this chart.

The CHAIRMAN. How many persons are named on the chart?

Mr. SHANLEY. There are 142 on this particular chart. This indicates that there is, in the homicide area, 1 out of every 4 persons on an average on this chart has been arrested for murder in the first degree. And dangerous weapons, on an average there has been 1 arrest for each man on the chart. In narcotics, on an average there has been 1 out of every 2 men arrested. In gambling, on an average there has been 1 out of every 2 men arrested. And assaults, there has been 1 out of every 2 men arrested.

Now, these assaults are not the ordinary type of assaults. Many of these assaults are vicious assaults, with chains, strangulations—assaults which brought the victim to the point of death.

Now, the top man—

The CHAIRMAN. They were in the nature of assaults with intent to kill or to do great bodily harm?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The top man named here is Vito Genovese, alias Don Vitone. Genovese, as you can see from the chart, is currently in jail for narcotics. He has been in gambling and he has been in shylocking, and in vending machines, and he has been in extortion and strong arm and murder. He was born in 1897 in Italy, and first came to this country in 1913. Yet his first arrest was in 1917 when he was arrested for a gun charge. He was naturalized in 1936, denaturalized in 1953, and deportation proceedings were instituted against him. He first came to——

The CHAIRMAN. In 1953, you say the deportation proceedings were instituted?

Mr. SHANLEY. Subsequent to the denaturalization in 1953, deportation proceedings were instituted.

The CHAIRMAN. I wonder if you know what happened to those proceedings?

Mr. SHANLEY. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, they apparently haven't been successful.

Mr. SHANLEY. They have not been successful.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. SHANLEY. In 1935 an informant by the name of Ernie "The Hawk" LaPollo told of a homicide involving Vito Genovese, and at that time he went into detail as to the top men in the organized crime outfits. He named Vito as one of the top men. As a consequence of this, there were a number of indictments. Genovese was one of those indicted, and he fled to Italy, where he became very close to the Italian Government at the time, and he was decorated by Mussolini for his efforts. Allegedly, he ordered the killing of an anti-Fascist editor, Carlo Treshka, in New York, and this was a contract that he was supposed to have given to Mike Miranda, who is also named on the chart.

He came back, and he didn't stand trial, and the case was discharged. In 1949, at a dinner given by Frank Costello in the Copacabana, the manner in which Vito Genovese was treated when he came to the dinner gave every indication that he had emerged firmly as the top man in organized crime throughout the country.

The CHAIRMAN. What date was that?

Mr. SHANLEY. In 1949. This was a dinner that was given by Frank Costello for a very charitable organization, and it was very conspicuous. Vito was met at the door by Costello and he was ushered in and he sat at the best place, and this spread through the city in no time, that Vito had emerged. Subsequent to that, the State also took the same position, that Vito now was the top man.

During the divorce actions which went into great detail as to the sources of his income, she enumerated kickbacks he had through labor connections at a naval base in New York.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. SHANLEY. She also told of his interest in the Italian lottery, which she stated was good for $30,000 to $40,000 a year. He took the position that he was a manager for the Colonial Trading, which was a scrap paper outfit in the lower part of New York.

Now, when we had this under observation, there was never any indication of any activity in the Colonial Trading whatsoever, and on occasion, most times the store would be empty or a few people would be sitting around in there, and occasionally they would rent it out for other purposes during income tax time, and some few accountants would take it over to do income taxes, and so on. There was never any indication that he ever did any work for the Colonial Trading.

250 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

He moved to the Atlantic Highlands shortly around 1954 or 1955, and he went into a venture in an attempt to have a steamboat service from the Atlantic Highlands to New York City, to take people from the city to the racetrack. He was alleged to have lost $175,000 on this venture.

He has been named before a Senate committee previously as a king of the rackets, and he was investigated by the New York State Crime Commission under the same circumstances. His income tax returns have been investigated and he is currently in jail.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley—

Senator MUNDT. For how long? I couldn't hear you.

Mr. SHANLEY. I beg your pardon?

Senator MUNDT. For how long was he sent to jail?

Mr. SHANLEY. Fifteen years.

Senator MUNDT. Because of the confusion in the room, I can't pick up everything you say.

Mr. SHANLEY. Fifteen years.

Senator MUNDT. How much is left of his term?

Mr. SHANLEY. He went in—he has got about 13 to do, 12 or 13 to do.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley, you mentioned the fact that it was noted in 1949 that the amount of respect paid to him indicated to the police department that he had now assumed leadership in the Genovese family.

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true. It was very conspicuous.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Before that, who was the leader?

Mr. SHANLEY. There is every indication that Charley "Lucky" was the leader.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Charley "Lucky" was deported from the United States after he was convicted in 1936.

Mr. SHANLEY. He was deported from jail.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And he was deported from jail to Italy right after the war; is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. While he was away, was there any indication that Costello, Frank Costello, had assumed the leadership of the family?

Mr. SHANLEY. He may have an interim period. There was talk that he was the topman, but still Vito seemed to be strong, too.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, there was an attempt to kill Costello in 1948, was there not?

Mr. SHANLEY. It was 1957.

Mr. ADLERMAN. 1957. That is right. At that time was there any question of the fact that Genovese had then assumed leadership of the family?

Mr. SHANLEY. There was no question.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How many names were there mentioned on the charts in the Genovese family?

Mr. SHANLEY. One hundred forty-two were on these charts.

Mr. ADLERMAN. One hundred forty-two?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, under Genovese, who was the second in command, as far as you were concerned?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, the acting boss apparently is Tommy Eboli.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Tommy Eboli?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir; and he shares authority with Jerry Catena.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is he also known as Tommy Ryan?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. He is known as Tommy Ryan and he lives in Teaneck, N.J.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who did he succeed?

Mr. SHANLEY. He succeeded Tony Bender.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Tony Bender, also known as Anthony Strollo?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The underboss, you say, is Jerry Catena?

Mr. SHANLEY. Jerry Catena; that is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, where does Mike Miranda stand in the organization?

Mr. SHANLEY. Mike Miranda is moving more and more into the position of an elder statesman, and he definitely is consulted on most moves, and, in fact, he may make certain helping decisions for these younger men.

(At this point Senator Jackson entered the hearing room.)

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you consider him to be the counsel now?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Of the organization?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right; on big decisions he is consulted.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, could you tell us any information that you may have on Frank Costello or perhaps we would go to Lucky Luciano first.

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, in relation to Luciano, what would become apparent in these charts is the number of pilgrimages that were made by these various well-situated people to Luciano. Joe Adonis went to see him, and "Patchie" Evelin went to see him, and Tommy Eboli went to see him, and he apparently—even while he was in Europe—he received this great deal of respect. There is no question that his power was so great that even in Europe he could exercise it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So while he was alive, and living in Europe, as a deportee from the United States, he still exercised a great deal of control over this organization?

Mr. SHANLEY. There is no question of it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, Costello, could you tell us what was his place in the organization?

Mr. SHANLEY. Costello—for a time—there was a question whether Costello was a topman. At least he was second in command at one time. Subsequently he has also withdrawn from the picture, and our observations indicate that he still has contact, but it isn't great, and he is not consulted on these things, and, for instance, to the extent that Miranda is consulted.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Does it look as though he still is considered a statesman even after he was shot?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, Tony Bender, or Anthony Strollo, was he important in this organization?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, Strollo was very important, and he was quite operational, and he came in contact with a lot of people who we felt were definitely in the operations; subsequently it turned out to be the case. He was very close, for instance, to a man named Napoli,

Jimmy Nap, who operated a large policy bank. He was close to Vito Maro, and Frankie Baccarosso, who were apprehended in narcotics. He was close to a Jerry Moore who had a great deal to do with the operation of nightclubs in the village behind fronts.

Mr. ADLERMAN. While he was alive, he was a matter of considerable attention. Did he receive considerable attention from the police department?

Mr. SHANLEY. He did.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And was he considered one of the top ranking members of the Genovese family?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir, he was. He was a target of the police.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know anything about his criminal activities?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, as I said, he had connections to policy, strong connections to bigtime gambling, and he had strong connections to narcotics in the form of Benny Maro and Frankie Caruso, and he operated in questionable nightclubs in New York City, behind fronts, and he was supposed to have a piece of the Savannah Club, and which is now out of business, and these were the operations in which we found he was involved.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was he also generally in gambling and in shylocking?

Mr. SHANLEY. He was in shylocking himself, and he was in gambling, as I have said.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And you say—I think you said he was in narcotics.

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, what sort of a record does Eboli have?

Mr. SHANLEY. Tommy Eboli, he has six arrests and two convictions, one for an assault on a fight promoter in Madison Square Garden. He was an associate of Tony Bender and Vito Genovese, and Vincent Gigante, and Rocco Perretti, and he is in the Tyron cigarette business, or was, also in Burger Village, a restaurant in Greenwich Village in New York, and he stated at one time he was a florist, and he is suspected of being in narcotics, gambling, and the operation of nightclubs. In 1961 he went to Italy, also, and spent some time over there, and during an interrogation he admitted that he had spent 3 or 4 days with Lucky at his hotel, in the same hotel room.

Recent observations indicate that he is close to Tony "The Sheik" Corello, and Miranda, and Joe Yacavelli, and Nick Forlono, Sal Silebrano, Pete Fayo, and Domalongo.

He later may have driven the car used in the Costello shooting. In connection with the shooting of Costello, it might be well to mention that Rocco Parroto is a close associate of Tommy Eboli. He is a salesman for the Cross Suclair & Sons, a wholesaler of printing and fine paper.

Now, when it became necessary to get Vincent Gigante out of jail he was held in $100,000 bail.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Gigante was involved in the shooting of Costello.

Mr. SHANLEY. Gigante was accused of the shooting of Costello. He was held in $100,000 bail and in order to secure collateral, the Cross Suclair Co. put up $76,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Gigante was acquitted of that?

Mr. SHANLEY. He was.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 253

Mr. ADLERMAN. You say the printing company, you believe, is owned and operated by this organization?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, I couldn't say that. I will say that Rocco Peretti is associated with the printing company, and the printing company put up the bail, and Eboli and Perretti are considered to be very close.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You have no knowledge of whether or not it is a front organization or whether or not they have an ownership in it?

Mr. SHANLEY. I do not know, and I do know that they put up bail in the Genovese case also.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, are there any other enterprises that Eboli is involved in that you know of?

(At this point Senator Javits entered the hearing room.)

Mr. SHANLEY. Village Toffee, that is a luncheonette, and Eboli was interrogated in the Abanachi murder, and I believe that Eboli has a man at operational level called Tony Mousto, Tony Priest, who was a large-scale bookmaker, recently arrested with a play in excess of $20,000 or $30,000 a day.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I didn't quite get the last part.

Mr. SHANLEY. I believe that Eboli's bookmaking operator is a man named "Tony the Priest" Mousto, and Mousto was recently arrested for bookmaking, and a review of the record indicated that he was doing an excessively large business, $10,000 or $20,000 a day.

The CHAIRMAN. He is on the chart?

Mr. SHANLEY. I don't think that he is. He is at the street level, Senator.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He is one of the associates not on the chart.

Mr. SHANLEY. He is operational, and most of these people are not.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, while Bender was alive, do you know whether he had any legitimate enterprises, or any covers for any enterprises?

Mr. SHANLEY. Bender had a real estate license for years, but we never knew that he sold any real estate. He actually—his story as to how he made his living was that he was very lucky at the racetrack.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know what fronts Jerry Catena uses, if any?

Mr. SHANLEY. He states he is a truckman, and he has a number of businesses. He has been in Peoples Express, Public Service Tobacco, which has a relationship to Longy Zwillman, the deceased Longy Zwillman, and Cool Vent Metals, and he has a piece of that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was that?

Mr. SHANLEY. Cool Vent Metals. This is an awning company, and he was in Marcel Manufacturing, and this is a napkin company, and CPA Truck Rentals, a truck rental company, and we feel or we suspect that he is in the restaurant called the Arch Restaurant, and Runyan Sales in Newark, which has pinball machines and games of that sort.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know what the legitimate fronts are or what the fronts are for Mike Miranda?

Mr. SHANLEY. Mike Miranda is a partner in Local Vending in Queens. This is a jukebox operation.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, coming to the Caporegime on the Vito Genovese chart, do you have any information concerning Vincent Alo, also known as Jimmy Blue Eyes?

Mr. SHANLEY. Vincent Alo is considered to be the representative of this group in policymaking and bookmaking. He has great influence in the Bronx, and he spends a great deal of time out of the city. He is an associate of Mike Coppola, Fat Tony Salerno, and he is definitely a top man, but he is not at an operational level.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He is more on the policy side?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. Inspector Shanley, when you say that Vincent Alo has great influence in the Bronx, that conjures up different types of influence which you might have had in mind. Are you talking about him being a community leader and political influence, or a power in the underworld, or will you make specific what you have in mind?

Mr. SHANLEY. I am referring to his influence with the people on this chart.

Senator MUNDT. With the gang mob he has influence?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. He is not an influential citizen of the Bronx.

Mr. SHANLEY. He doesn't appear too much in the Bronx, actually.

Senator MUNDT. What is that?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is very seldom in the Bronx.

Senator MUNDT. When you say to a Member of the Senate that a man has great influence, that conjures up a little different picture of what you have in mind.

Mr. SHANLEY. I didn't mean that. His influence is with this group here, and he has remote control which is quite an accomplishment.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you tell us anything about Joe Adonis, his predecessor, also known as Joe Doto?

Mr. SHANLEY. Joe Adonis is right in the very burden of this whole situation. Joe Adonis was friendly with Lucky Luciano, Vito Genovese. He was also close to others in this group, close to Bo Weinburg, people who were around at the time of Fink Scott, Meyer Lansky, Dutch Schultz. He was friendly with many.

He was engaged first in bootlegging, then in gambling. He ran a gambling operation in another State for about 10 years. He also had a large auto transport business with a major automobile manufacturer.

He eventually was deported. He accepted voluntary deportation.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was considered a rather important criminal character in the New York area?

Mr. SHANLEY. Definitely. Definitely. He was the prototype. This man used to go horseback riding in full regalia on Shore Road in the Bayshore section of Brookhaven.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Coming along that same time, we have Mike Coppola, also known as Trigger Mike. Can you tell us what information the police department has on him?

Mr. SHANLEY. Trigger Mike lives in Florida for the most part. He comes out of East Harlem. His street representative is a fellow named Jack Sharkey. His name is Cappola, also, although it is a different spelling.

Just below him, below Mike and above Sharkey, is Fat Tony Salerno.

They did have enormous policy operations in East Harlem section of New York City.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Fat Tony Salerno is one of the soldiers underneath Coppola, is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He is mentioned on this chart.

Mr. SHANLEY. He is mentioned on the chart. At one time the New York police effected a raid of what we thought was Sugar Mike's bank.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 255

Mr. ADLERMAN. By "bank," you mean——

Mr. SHANLEY. His numbers bank. Of course, he was not there. It was doing a business of $35,000 a day.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Doing a business of how much?

Mr. SHANLEY. $35,000 a day. He was also supposed to have a close connection with a man named Joe Rivers, who ran floating dice games. Rivers was also connected with Cuba when they had dice games going there. It is reported, although we can't verify it, that Rivers is still trying to get in operation in another State in dice.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is Rivers mentioned on this chart?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, he is; Joe Silesi.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He is a soldier?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, was Trigger Mike Coppola ever arrested on a murder charge?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir. I will have to look that up.

Several times. It has been recorded. We put this in.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, have you any information concerning James Angelina, also known as Jimmy Angelina?

Mr. SHANLEY. Jimmy Angelina has an address in Rye, N.Y. He has 22 arrests. He only has one conviction. He is generally in gambling. He was associated with Little Augie. We feel he is closely associated with a man——

Mr. ADLERMAN. You mean Little Augie Pisano?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Also known as Carfano?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir. Angelo has interests in the upper Bronx and Westchester, gambling interests. He is close to a Mattie Brown.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mattie Fortunato; who is he?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is another part of this group.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In what line of criminality is he engaged?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is shown as a soldier on this chart for Angelina.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is he a gambler?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is a gambler; yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is he under the regime of Angelina as part of his group?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mattie Brown is well known in New York, is he not?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I mean to the police circles.

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, we have Pasquale Eboli also listed as one of the caporegime, known as Patsy Ryan. Is he related to the Tommy Eboli?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is his brother.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you give us any information pertaining to him?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, Patsy Ryan also made a pilgrimage to Italy to see Lucky. Allegedly, he went over there to try and sell kitchen table tops, which is an odd thing, and he didn't succeed in this but he did find time to go and see Lucky. As a matter of fact, he was in Lucky's presence about 2 or 3 hours before he died.

On the way back, Eboli was on the same plane with Caruso and the other defendant they were bringing back from Spain.

256 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. Vinnie Mauro?

Mr. SHANLEY. Vinnie Mauro.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was picked up at the same time; is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. No; he was not picked up. He was on the same plane. He was questioned when he came back but he was not picked up.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was not connected with the Vinnie Mauro setup at all as far as narcotics——

Mr. SHANLEY. Not to our knowledge.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, Ciro Terranova was the predecessor of Mike Coppola; is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was also known by the name of the Artichoke King?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you tell us something about his activity before he died?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, he had connections to unions. He also was strong in the market, produce market. This is where he succeeded in, this is where he got the name, the Artichoke King. He allegedly had cornered the market in such a manner that he could determine exactly what the price would be.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, artichokes, I think, are a particular diet among the East Harlem families there, they consider it an important part of their food supply?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, yes. It is very popular around the holidays.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And he controlled the supply of that in the East Harlem area particularly?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did he exact any payment from the peddlers or the dealers in these artichokes?

Mr. SHANLEY. He did.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was he considered a very important criminal character in New York?

Mr. SHANLEY. He was at one time, yes.

(At this point, Senator Mundt withdrew from the hearing room.)

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, he died a natural death?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, we have next in line Tom Greco, also known as Tommy Palmer. Do you have any information on him or his relative importance?

Mr. SHANLEY. Greco is alleged to have inherited certain of the rackets that Albert Anastasia had after he died. Greco spends a great deal of time out of town. When he is in town he frequents Lancey's Restaurant on First Avenue. He is alleged to have a piece of that. He has connections into unions and labor racketeering. He also has gambling connections. He is up in years, Greco is.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Richard Boiardi, also known as Diamond Richie?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is mostly a New Jersey figure. We don't see him much.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Dominick DeQuatro, or Dom the Sailor?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is another one we don't see too much of. He is a Jersey figure.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 257

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, we have discussed some of the former capo-regime.

John Biello is also known as Foots. Do you have any information on him?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is presently in Florida.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He is out of the organization now?

Mr. SHANLEY. He has retired so far as we know. He does not appear much in recent times, Biello.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Tony Gobels, known as Ricci?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is retired a long time. He does not appear on the local scene.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Anthony Carfano, Little Augie Pisano, has been murdered?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was rather important.

Mr. SHANLEY. He was, indeed. He had 10 arrests. He had been arrested three times for guns; one, for murder. He was close to Frank Costello, Mike Miranda, Frank Ericson. He had strong connections in gambling.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, Dodo Del or Generoso del Luca, is he retired?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is dead.

(At this point Senator Mundt entered the hearing room.)

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was he considered an important character in New York?

Mr. SHANLEY. He had a high position judging from the respect received on a number of occasions where the police had interrogations underway; the demeanor of the men in his presence in the station house. He was an elderly man. He was well thought of.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt wanted to clear up something.

Senator MUNDT. You started out before we got the microphones, so that we could understand you clearly—you gave a little table of the kind of crimes that the members of the Genovese family were convicted of or were guilty of. One out of two was this or that. Will you read that again?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir. There have been a total of 1,064 arrests of the people in this group.

Senator MUNDT. This is all the charts?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, sir; the Genovese chart.

Senator MUNDT. 1,064 arrests? Then you have 142 people on the chart.

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. A lot of them were repeaters?

Mr. SHANLEY. There might be a little discrepancy in the number of people on the chart. One or two have been withdrawn for various things. This showed that there would be an average of seven arrests per man.

Senator MUNDT. Seven arrests per man?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Of those on the chart?

Mr. SHANLEY. Of those on the chart.

Senator MUNDT. What type of arrests? They were pretty serious arrests?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

258 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator MUNDT. Will you give the kind of arrests that were involved?

Mr. SHANLEY. I can go on from there and give you the overall picture.

One out of four of them was arrested for homicide.

Senator MUNDT. One out of four?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. This is on an average, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. Do you have the record of how many were convicted?

Mr. SHANLEY. I do not.

Senator MUNDT. One out of four was arrested for murder?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. One out of four individuals, you are talking about?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. This is what the average would come to.

For dangerous weapons, it would average one arrest per person.

Senator MUNDT. They all carried guns?

Mr. SHANLEY. Right. Narcotics would average one arrest for every two persons.

Senator MUNDT. Half of those people were engaged in the narcotics racket?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right, on the basis of these arrests, not on an average. Gambling would be one out of two.

Senator MUNDT. The same percentage as narcotics?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. Assaults could be one out of two.

Senator MUNDT. You gave a definition of assaults.

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir; these are assaults which fell short of murder. In many instances, the man was shot, didn't die or was beaten badly; chopped up; beaten with a chain; vicious assaults.

Senator MUNDT. Almost attempted murder, would that be?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, it fell short of murder.

Senator MUNDT. They had murder in mind in many instances.

Mr. SHANLEY. In many instances, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have a table showing this?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, we do.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the table be inserted in the record at this point. (The table referred to follows:)

260 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. SHANLEY. In this group one man had 40 arrests whereas another man had only 1 arrest. I am talking of averages here.

Senator MUNDT. Do you have any figures to show how many of these people have served time?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, I do not.

(At this point, Senator Jackson withdrew from the hearing room.)

Senator MUNDT. Could you make an educated guess?

Mr. SHANLEY. In the early days, in their beginning, I would say that most of them have done a little. Many of them have done a little, when they were young men, have been convicted at least.

Senator MUNDT. Of the 142, how many are presently incarcerated?

Mr. SHANLEY. Fifteen are in legal custody or awaiting trial.

Senator MUNDT. Or in jail?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. Awaiting trial or being held, or in the penitentiary?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. Two have been deported.

Senator MUNDT. You have had deportation proceedings against a great many more, I take it?

Mr. SHANLEY. Practically all of these people have had the interest of the Naturalization and Immigration aroused and proceedings were instituted.

Senator MUNDT. Practically all of them?

Mr. SHANLEY. Practically all of them.

Senator MUNDT. Is it very difficult to successfully prosecute a deportation proceeding?

Mr. SHANLEY. It would appear that way, yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Shanley, if I may, I would like to ask Mr. Valachi a question.

According to this chart that we are now testifying from, which has been identified by Mr. Shanley, according to my count, besides yourself there are only 10 persons listed on this chart whom you do not know as members of the family according to the indications you have given to the staff?

Mr. VALACHI. About that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. About that, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you gone over this chart with the staff?

Mr. VALACHI. That chart there?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. The ones there is a star on is the ones I have——

The CHAIRMAN. You have gone over it and identified those who have asterisks, that identifies those whom you know and know to be members of the Genovese family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That means they are members of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All of them as I counted, all but 10 on that chart, you personally know and know them to be members?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 261

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. There are 141 on there, I believe, besides you, according to the count.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be 131 of them you know personally?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Senator JAVITS?

Senator JAVITS. Inspector Shanley, I think it is very important to compare your information with that of the witness.

Will you bear out and give us the number of exceptions which you have as to those listed on the chart as being mobsters, with criminal records, under the general surveillance of the police? In other words, he says he knew everybody but 10. What do you say about this chart?

Mr. SHANLEY. I would say this chart is one of the most accurate we have been able to put together in years. The deeper you go into it the more apparent it becomes that the information is extremely accurate. Previously, we have had cases where the top people were named, the more notorious ones have been named in the various hearings for years. But this is the first time in our experience where a man has gone into the genesis of it, he has given the structure, he has given the succession. He has given the administration, he has given the procedure.

In addition to that, he has given it in depth.

There is something like 356 names mentioned in this overall picture. He has ranked these people with an apparent authenticity that is hard to doubt.

Now, in addition to the specific information that he gave, this will be pursued. But even if this specific information does not pan out, it would not necessarily detract from the effectiveness of the information, because the lapse of time, as you well know, goes for the defendant and what happens in 10, 20, 30 years is that the witness is not available, memories fade, locales change.

In New York, some of the things this man is talking about no longer exist as to locale. The buildings are torn down. Physical evidence has gone.

Senator JAVITS. Nevertheless, you think it is effective in police terms and you can tell us why you think it is effective in police terms?

Mr. SHANLEY. Because this is an intelligence asset that we never have had before. If we had the knowledge we would be able to realine targets, stress emphasis, bring these things to the attention of the public that what exists under these circumstances, to try to focus the attention of the public on situations where these people, in narcotics, for instance, are benefiting from local burglaries which are committed by addicts or are benefiting from the $2 bet that is being made to the local bookmaker.

All of these things are very important to us in trying to get the police problem under control.

Senator JAVITS. Aside from the safeguards which I am sure you would wish, as we would, of just mentioning names in open session without checking back who they are in that connection, assuming that that precaution is taken, you consider public hearings to be desirable in a matter of this kind?

Mr. SHANLEY. I do, sir, yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. One last question. How many of those on the Vito Genovese chart are alive and how many are dead?

Mr. SHANLEY. Twenty-three are dead on this chart.

Senator JAVITS. How many are alive?

Mr. SHANLEY. The remainder would be alive. Actually, we base this on a little higher figure but there were some changes later on. This would be 23 out of the 143 which would make it 119.

Senator JAVITS. Are alive?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Senator JAVITS. How many of those are in New York, so far as you know?

Mr. SHANLEY. I would have to go over that generally. Footso is in Florida. Tony Gobels is in Florida.

Senator JAVITS. I would not expect you to do that orally now. Compute it during recess and let us know how many are in New York if you can. I am interested in your appraisal of the effectiveness of these hearings. I think it is very important in view of the comment and ideas which have been advanced publicly. I am very pleased to note that you have made that statement.

Mr. SHANLEY. Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask you to do this. You have been testifying so far only about the Genovese family. Are your answers that you have given to Senator Javits here the same with respect to the other charts? I mean, are you talking about all of the charts, all of the information that Valachi has given here that you have checked out or are you confining your answers solely to the Genovese family?

Mr. SHANLEY. No. His strength is in the Genovese chart, his greatest strength, but still it is extraordinary in the others, too.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, I assume he is better acquainted with the Genovese family because he is a member of it.

Mr. SHANLEY. There is no question of it.

The CHAIRMAN. You have also made these checks as against his testimony and those he has identified in the other families, the charts of which will be discussed as we go along; is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Muskie, you have a question?

Senator MUSKIE. You testified earlier, Inspector Shanley, that you had not personally talked to Mr. Valachi.

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Senator MUSKIE. Yet these charts are based heavily on his information, am I correct?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

Senator MUSKIE. What was the source of your access to his information?

Mr. SHANLEY. The committee?

Senator MUSKIE. These hearings?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir. We received the information prior to the hearings.

Senator MUSKIE. Would it have been possible for you to reconstruct these charts without his testimony?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt.

Senator MUNDT. While we are talking about the value of the charts, you have been in the hearing room, I think, Inspector, since the very beginning of the Valachi testimony. Is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Do you recall the Masseria-Maranzano gang war charts we had here a few days ago?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Will you comment upon the value of them from the standpoint of police proceedings and intelligence?

Mr. SHANLEY. These are very important. This shows the whole creation of this situation. Without this, you don't get the proper perspective. This has to be put into its proper frame. The appearance that organized crime gives is very deceptive. It is like an iceberg. Much of it is below the surface. In dealing with people who are in organized crime, they frequently have a very beguiling manner. They give the impression of not being as quick as they might be. They are ingratiating frequently in their manner. They are obliging. They go to all efforts to make themselves liked.

It is very difficult to realize what these people are.

Now, when you see where they stem from and how they came up, you have a much better picture of what you are dealing with because most of these people have come above that violence, they are not in it.

Senator MUNDT. Would it be accurate to say that these charts, and including the Masseria and Maranzano gang war chart which shows the interconnection of the five families and the warfare that existed between them, reflect that this is the first time it has been reviewed in chart form so that you could see the evolving situation?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir, that is the first time we have seen that.

Senator MUNDT. That is useful to police intelligence?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator McIntyre.

Senator MCINTYRE. Mr. Shanley, do these charts represent the heart or the core of the criminal element in New York or are there other elements?

Mr. SHANLEY. There are other elements in New York that are in organized crime. There are elements that are strong in the bookmaking field. There are elements that are strong on piers; waterfront, for instance.

This is one specific aspect of organized crime in New York. This is the aspect that he, the witness, is most familiar with. But there are other sections of it.

Senator MCINTYRE. Would it be fair to say that it is a substantial part of the criminal element?

Mr. SHANLEY. It is a substantial part but it is not the criminal element exclusively by any means.

Senator MCINTYRE. Do you feel it has certain areas of operation which are this policy numbers racket? Is this their principal forte?

Mr. SHANLEY. I would say the two principal sources at the moment are gambling and shylocking.

Senator MCINTYRE. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. If I understand, you are not saying that Cosa Nostra or these five families constitute all the criminal element of organized crime that is in New York; you are not saying that?

264 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. SHANLEY. Positively not.

The CHAIRMAN. There are others outside of Cosa Nostra, outside of these families?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. You say these five families, as described and identified by the witness, Valachi, do constitute a substantial part of that organized crime element in New York?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you say whether this group or this Cosa Nostra group, these families, constitute the hard core or the major part of it?

Mr. SHANLEY. I would say that they are the major part of it; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You would think they are the major part?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not discounting the significance of the others at all?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They are there and they are significant?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They are not members of this particular syndicate; is that correct?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Brewster, do you have a question?

Senator BREWSTER. One question, Mr. Chairman.

Inspector, you used the term "policy" in describing criminal activity. What type of activity is this? What is the "policy"?

Mr. SHANLEY. The policy game essentially is a form of betting wherein the person puts up a small amount of money.

There is no limit on what you can put up, in the reverse direction, let us put it that way.

I don't think people would accept $10 or $15 on bets as a rule. But you can put up a quarter or a half dollar and you pick a number. Let us say you pick 196. If this number comes out, you are paid on the odds of 600 to 1 in some cases and 550 to 1 in other cases; the odds being 1,000 to 1 against you. This is played, it does not require much to play it. It has a tremendous value to New York. It is very difficult because of the public interest.

Senator BREWSTER. Policy interest and numbers are the same thing?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true. Different in terms.

Senator BREWSTER. Who picks the number?

Mr. SHANLEY. The number picked in New York is what they call "the New York number," which is picked by taking the total of the third race in the track that is going in New York, the first three races, take the total, and the first digit to the left of the decimal is the first number. Then you take the next two races, which would be fourth and the fifth, and the first digit to the left of the decimal is the second number. Then you take the seventh race and you do the same thing. This gives you your three numbers, 246 as the case may be.

The Brooklyn number is done by taking the total mutuel racehorse handled for the day, the last race and taking the last numbers, three digits to the left of the decimal.

In some places it is done, in the course of investigations it is determined that in other localities where we have been called to give expert testimony, it has been done by spinning a dial of some sort.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 265

There are different ways of doing it.

Senator BREWSTER. Thank you, Inspector.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt.

Senator MUNDT. This shylocking racket, which is an interest-hiking gimmick, is this something that the families practiced only on their own members, or did they go out and try to induce people who are innocent of any crime but who are in bad circumstances financially, to pay these fantastic interest rates?

Mr. SHANLEY. At this level we don't find that, Senator. These people who deal in large sums of money, the funds are solicited for the most part. They take precautions to make certain that they won't lose their money. They are willing to settle for an 80-percent effectiveness.

Now, it is quite possible at a lower level, more operational, that this does occur where you have smaller amounts involved. But none of these people would be engaged in any kind of shylocking that would be less than the thousands.

Senator MUNDT. My question is whether they loaned this thousand dollars for which they charged these fantastic rates to people outside their own racket, outside their own family, or do they prey on each other?

Mr. SHANLEY. No; this is outside the family.

Senator MUNDT. They get somebody who needs money fast?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Who does not have a good credit rating?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. A fellow who is innocent of crime altogether, but they would charge him a rate that would put him into bankruptcy.

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. In many instances this is how they got into business, because the person is hard pressed for money and cannot get a loan from the bank because their credit rating is not the best. They then loan him the money under the table. When the payments cannot be made, they eventually go into business to protect their investment.

Senator MUNDT. This is one of the ways in which some of these racketeers get into what we call legitimate business?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir; that is a very frequent way. This is one thing that will explain partially why they go into so many businesses without any apparent qualification whatsoever.

Senator MUNDT. Is there any evidence that once they get into a legitimate business they use illegitimate means against their competitors?

Mr. SHANLEY. They would if they could but frequently they don't make out in the legitimate business. They have had as many failures as the average.

Senator MUNDT. Not very smart businessmen.

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Counsel.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you name some of the particular types of business that they loan money in; usually it is a sort of fringe business of some kind?

Mr. SHANLEY. There is a great deal of lending money in the garment area.

266 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. I mean where people are operating on, shall we say, with store fronts or something of that sort.

Mr. SHANLEY. The nature of the industry would have an effect on it. In the garment area, the least substantial people can be very fortunate and have one style, one type of dress that is a big hit and they can make a lot of money. Then the next season, they come up with a style that does not go over and they are hard pressed for cash. They go in to these people and then these people work into the business, they have some connections into unions, they can alleviate the demands of certain truckers, and so on. This is one business in which they get into.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Into the type of business where you have a lot of gamble?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They have sometimes a one-shot affair to raise $2,000 with the hope that they will make it go well and do well?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. These are people who are on the fringe. I am not talking about the substantial part of the industry, which is as solid as rock.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is it also true that some of their best business customers in this shylocking are bookmakers, numbers banks, and so on?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true. That is how they get into that frequently, too. It takes a good deal of skill to be a good bookmaker, to make odds, and all this. It is not the easiest thing.

(At this point, Senator Jackson entered the hearing room.)

Mr. ADLERMAN. Sometimes when a bank is hit and needs a lot of money for a payout, they need a lot of money quickly.

Mr. SHANLEY. They do.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So, they manage to, by shylocking, sometimes become a partner of a bank; is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. That may have happened a long time ago but these people have been in the banks a long time and they have the cash. Small banks that come up and find themselves in this difficulty will go to them for cash and then they have a part of it as a result.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Has it also been true that they have been lending money to people, say, in cafes or nightclubs, and so forth?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is another large source of business for them?

Mr. SHANLEY. They have frequently been in concessions, hat checking, the like of that. Frequently they will put up a certain amount of money, $10,000 or thereabouts for the concession before the premise even opens.

A fly-by-night operator will open the premises on the basis of the $10,000 he got from the hat-checking concession.

He hopes he will go over.

These people have an interest in this. If the thing starts to fade, they will step in and try to run it in order to get their return on the concessions.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Are there any other particular businesses where they seem to be able to find a source for their money? How about jukeboxes?

Mr. SHANLEY. Jukeboxes, they are in jukeboxes. This is another situation very similar to concessions. In many instances these people can afford to lay out money to put up to the saloonkeeper which will permit him to open on the grounds that their jukeboxes are going to be in there or their vending machines.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt.

Senator MUNDT. We have had a very helpful description from the inspector of shylocking, on how it operates. I would like to turn to witness Valachi and get a word or two from him on shylocking from the other side.

Have you been in the shylocking business?

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. As a lender or borrower?

Mr. VALACHI. A lender.

Senator MUNDT. Will you tell us how these people contact you, because we have been told by the inspector, these are not underground or underworld people who are borrowing the money. How do they find out you are a "banker"?

Mr. VALACHI. It gets around the neighborhood, Senator. So many people come for money. If you gave to everybody who needed money, you would need the Bank of Rome. Naturally, you give to the ones you feel are more solid. It gets around the neighborhood. I am known in the Bronx, I am known in Harlem. I dealt in the Bronx and I dealt in Harlem. I have loaned money to saloonkeepers, I have loaned money to every field, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. Big money?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I wasn't too big. The most I loaned was about $2,000 or $2,400. I practically was in it about 14 years. I actually was making a living out of it.

Senator MUNDT. What rate of interest did you charge?

Mr. VALACHI. Twenty percent. Sometimes I was stuck, I didn't have money, I went to a shylock and I borrowed for 10 percent. I worked on the extra 10 percent.

Senator MUNDT. You borrowed from another shylock?

Mr. VALACHI. I borrowed from another shylock; yes.

Senator MUNDT. You double the bite.

Mr. VALACHI. He charges me 10 percent. I charge the other guy 20 percent. Now he gives it to me for 10 percent because that is a sold loan when he gives me money.

Senator MUNDT. How long would these loans run at 20 percent?

Mr. VALACHI. I tell you, the biggest profit in it is when they make a reloan. For instance, you give a loan, $500. He has paid you maybe $250 or $300. He comes back. He wants a reloan. All you do is give him the balance and charge him the same interest. For instance, I got a customer and he paid me $250. He owes the balance of $350 because the original $500 is $600. So I would give him $350 and charge him a hundred dollars as though he just borrowed the money. I will have to deduct what he owes. They are the ones that make the more profit for you.

Senator MUNDT. You got your shylock rate on the unpaid balance?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Most of them get into that habit of reborrowing before they pay up. That is the way the business goes. As you go along, like I say, I was in it 14 years. Actually, those are the sweet loans, as we call it, when somebody wants a reloan. Instead of somebody getting $500 you give him the balance of what he owes.

Senator MUNDT. What kind of collection technique do you have? Do you use muscle?

Mr. VALACHI. Truthfully, I did not use any muscle. I wanted to stay in business. I didn't care how the other ones operated. I operated my own business. I was known as the best shylocker all around. I was smart. Instead of getting $20 a week for a $100 loan and $200 loan, I would take $5. What is the difference? The other money is circulating so why should I worry about this particular person that has gotten in trouble, maybe he got hit, or any kind of trouble. So I figured the wisest thing to do was to work and make it for his convenience. That is the way I operated.

Senator MUNDT. Your collection ratio was about 80 percent?

Mr. VALACHI. I tell you, I didn't lose any money, Senator. I collected every loan.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. When you talk about 20 percent, you mean 20 percent a week or 20 percent a month?

Mr. VALACHI. Twenty percent—for instance, if I gave you $1,000, you have to pay me $1,200, for 12 weeks $100 a week.

Mr. ADLERMAN. For how long?

Mr. VALACHI. Twelve weeks. If you pay me $700 and you want a reloan on that, all I have to do is give you back the balance of that $1,000 and I charge you another $200.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This would be a loan extending over a 12-week period?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, it would always be 12 weeks.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But the money you would be paid back on this loan, would you get a weekly installment?

Mr. VALACHI. You deduct that as he pays you as the original loan.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That money you would get back, say you got back $200 a week, you would reloan that money?

Mr. VALACHI. Naturally, I would give it to somebody else. It circulates. By the time it circulates around, I could never figure out how much the percentage is. It would be impossible for me. You would need an accountant to figure that out.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What would you say your capital was that was involved in the loans?

Mr. VALACHI. Most of it?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Most of it I had in the hands of bookmakers and saloons, in that line.

Senator, there are all kinds of bookmakers.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How much money did you have revolving at any one time?

Mr. VALACHI. I was partners with Johnny Roberts. We had 40-some-odd thousand dollars in the street. Johnny financed me. I was partners with Johnny Roberts at one time way back. He put up all the money. I worked and got customers. Actually, you don't want to lend any money to any friends. You want to stay away from them.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You say your principal customers were bookmakers?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 269

Mr. VALACHI. Money, yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you also loan money to other people in gambling like football operators?

Mr. VALACHI. Every type of person, even lawyers borrowed from me.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How big is football getting in this business now?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know much about football. You are talking about football?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Football, baseball.

Mr. VALACHI. I know about baseball more than I know about football. Baseball, that is the most—I can't even rate the action. There are some people who bet $25,000 on one game.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Baseball is a big heavy item?

Mr. VALACHI. That is the biggest, baseball.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about basketball?

Mr. VALACHI. Basketball they have cards which I don't understand. You pick so many teams on the card to win so much and so many to win so much. If you get the whole card, then you get the limit, whatever the limit is. I don't understand that, I can't describe that because I didn't know about that.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Javits.

Senator JAVITS. I believe the testimony that we are getting as to the character of rackets about which the witness just testified to a rate of interest which is 80 percent a year at least is very important publicly. I wonder if the inspector could not undertake to describe for us in respect of jukeboxes, for example, and in respect of the other rackets which are carried on as he did the numbers racket, the precise details of how they operate.

I think this element of public disclosure could be very helpful.

Counsel can develop that in due course, but I hope the inspector will be thinking in giving us in the case of each racket precisely how, in the experience of the police department, it works and how the public gets taken, because I think that is a very important part of this record.

Senator JACKSON. I have one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Jackson.

Senator JACKSON. I understood at one time that the mob was engaged in the pinball and the slot machine business. Is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JACKSON. Would you say that the Federal legislation that we have passed, making it unlawful to ship pinball machines and slot machines in interstate commerce, or parts thereof, has had an effect on this business?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JACKSON. So this is an example, then, where the Congress has passed legislation that has helped at least to a substantial extent to get this phase of gambling outside or away from the mob?

Mr. SHANLEY. Definitely.

Senator JACKSON. No question about that?

Mr. SHANLEY. No question about it.

Senator JACKSON. It is true that a lot of these people who are in the pinball machine and the slot machine business were involved in the mob?

270 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, proceed, Mr. Counsel.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley, I notice that the chart shows there are seven regimes.

We have the Caporegima people, and they list the number of soldiers under each one of them.

Were you somewhat surprised to find the ranking of the soldiers as compared to the ranking of some of these lieutenants from the testimony of Valachi?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, we were surprised.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you give us some examples of some of the people you thought were much more important than they were actually or some that you considered less important and now consider more important?

Mr. SHANLEY. Anthony Salerno; I always thought he was much more important.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What family is he in?

Mr. SHANLEY. In Mike Coppola's regime.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Fat Tony?

Mr. SHANLEY. Fat Tony, because he has a great deal of insulation. He has been removed from this picture for quite some time. He still has a great deal of influence in the gambling picture. Money flows to him, we believe. I am surprised to see the other man who is with him, Albert Cappola placed so high, that is Sharkey. This one was not particularly identified.

The CHAIRMAN. Michael Coppola?

Mr. SHANLEY. Michael Coppola; I did consider him to be at least a level above what he shows here.

The CHAIRMAN. You thought he was higher than he is?

Mr. SHANLEY. We thought he was higher than he is.

The CHAIRMAN. I see.

Mr. SHANLEY. Also, we were surprised at Eboli's position. We didn't think he was that high.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not think he was acting boss in Genovese's absence?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Angelina?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, we have a pretty good idea of Angelina.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Joe Stretch?

Mr. SHANLEY. Joe Stretch is one we thought was much higher than here. He has influence in other areas and great deal of insulation.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That shows that even though they are soldiers they are high up in the ranks of criminality.

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir, this should not be construed to indicate that this is the extent of this operation because all of these people he designates as soldiers, which are actually group leaders, they have people working for them at an operational level. Some of them have a great many, some would only have a few, but they definitely have somebody beneath them.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, along those lines, how many active members do you feel there are in the New York area that belong to the various families?

The CHAIRMAN. You mean all of the five families?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 271

Mr. ADLERMAN. All of the five families.

Mr. VALACHI. About 2,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Those whom you have been able to identify in the five families, you have marked with stars on these charts?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But they do not represent all of the members of the families?

Mr. VALACHI. One family, you mean?

Mr. ADLERMAN. I mean in any family you don't know all of the members of the family?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I tell you, I am off the streets for about 4 years. I am sure I know more than what I have got up there.

Mr. ADLERMAN. These charts portray something over 400 names.

Mr. VALACHI. Something like that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You say there are 2,000 members. So there are quite a number of members whom you do not know.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, there is quite a number, yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How many inactive members are there?

Mr. VALACHI. I would say about 2,500 or 3,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You are just talking about New York City alone?

Mr. VALACHI. I am talking about New York, including Newark.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley, could you just pick out some of those you consider rather important in the line of soldiers? I don't think we want to go through all the list. If you could just pick out a selected few and show how important they are in the ranks of criminality.

Mr. SHANLEY. I think Joe Stretch that we mentioned before was a very important man. As I said, he has a great deal of insulation, has a great deal of connections. He is in labor, he is in gambling, he is very strong.

(At this point, Senator Jackson withdrew from the hearing room.)

Mr. SHANLEY. Matty Brown is another one, a very important man who has been in the rackets for quite some time.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about "Socks" Lanza?

Mr. SHANLEY. Socks Lanza is another man who has contact with Frank Costello, was long in control of large portions of the waterfront in New York prior to, at the time of the hearings, public hearings on waterfront conditions. He still has a great deal of influence.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Are there any others of any particular merit—when I say merit, I mean particular importance from the criminal point of view or police point of view.

Mr. SHANLEY. We have one here, Anthony Corillo, Tony the Sheik. He is a buffer in a sense for Mike Miranda. You observe Tony the Sheik. You are going to see Mike Miranda during the course of the day, he usually is in his company. He will visit at Local Vending. Take him to work in the morning, then he leaves, then goes over to downtown Manhattan where various people shown on this chart would show up and have a brief conversation with him.

We feel that they are discussing business, that they are getting advice. At the end of the day Tony the Sheik will go back and pick up Miranda and then they have a conversation in the car on the way home.

We feel this is the way business is discussed.

272 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. Miranda will not speak to the soldiers down the line. They have to go, according to your observations, through Corillo?

Mr. SHANLEY. For the most part. In some cases, there is very close personal relationship with these people. They have known each other for years.

Mr. ADLERMAN. As a matter of insulation, the average soldier can't do business directly with Miranda?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. That is what we see.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you find, for example, Vito Genovese or Jerry Catina or Mike Miranda, any of the top-ranking underbosses or acting bosses of the consiglieri, do they deal directly with the soldiers as a usual thing when discussing business?

Mr. SHANLEY. No; they do not.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They have to have means of communication. They have people that they deal with who, in turn, deal with the capo-regime, perhaps, or the soldiers themselves?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. These people here have a great deal of insulation themselves. Very few of these people are in operations. They are insulated against themselves.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, you take a fellow like Joe Stretch, he may not be involved, himself, but he will have a group of men who work for him?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He keeps out of it, they work for him, he gets the profit?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The same is true with many of the others like Corillo, and so on?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. Like Larry Black. He is in gambling. He is also in shylocking, but you will never see him close to the operation that they will be able to arrest him. Viscotese, he is deceased, but he ran a large crap game for years. He never showed up. There is a question of whether he knew how to play dice.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Are any of them in the bonding business or have any association with bondsmen?

Mr. SHANLEY. Carillo was associated with bondsmen.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Tony the Sheik?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Anthony Carillo?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Does he seem to be a silent partner of some of the bondsmen?

Mr. SHANLEY. It is quite possible. There was a story we weren't able to verify that the bail which was lost in the Mauro case initially might have been his.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How much was that bail?

Mr. SHANLEY. $50,000 apiece.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Does it seem that most of the bail bondsmen, most of the times when these people are arrested, they use the same bondsmen?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, they use the same bondsmen frequently; yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They have a monopoly on any particular one or two or three bondsmen—they have a monopoly on this business?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 273

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, I couldn't say that offhand.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask a question here of Valachi.

To get these charts straight now, these are not all of the people you know? You know other people in the organization besides those on the chart?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Some of them you know by aliases?

Mr. VALACHI. Most of them by aliases.

The CHAIRMAN. The others who are not on the chart, you know them by aliases and you did not know their other name?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, you did not undertake to name them except you could get their real name along with their alias?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know how many? There is one known as the "Yap."

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know his real name.

The CHAIRMAN. You know him but you do not know his real name?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Another name, Emanuel.

Mr. VALACHI. That is another one.

The CHAIRMAN. That is an alias, you do not know his real name?

Mr. VALACHI. No; I don't.

The CHAIRMAN. And Buster of Chicago, did you ever know his real name?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. They are not on the chart.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. There are quite a number like that whom you know, whom you could identify if you saw them but you would not know their real name?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Go ahead. I wanted to clear that chart up. It does not represent all of them that you know?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I wonder if we can go to one of the other charts?

The CHAIRMAN. Go to the next chart. We can get the next chart in and talk about it.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, could the inspector supply the information about those who are living and how many are in New York with respect to this chart?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The information that Senator Javits required a moment ago with respect to the Genovese family—how many are dead and so forth—we would like you to provide that for each of the families at your convenience. If you do not get it today at noon during the recess, you may supply it by memorandum. We will then place it in the record in the proper place.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you have copies of the criminal records on all the soldiers and also the others on the chart?

Mr. SHANLEY. I do.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can I ask that they be placed in evidence?

274 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. We will receive them in bulk and make them exhibit No. 13. They will be made exhibits for reference; if any of them become important we can have them printed in the record.

(The documents referred to were marked exhibit No. 13A and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector, before we leave the Genovese family, in the charts are there any people named on the charts who do not have either an FBI number or police department number?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can we go now to the Lucchese family?

Inspector Shanley, this chart on the Lucchese family was prepared in the same manner as the chart prepared on the Genovese family?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you supply who the boss is and the underboss is and the caporegime and so forth?

Mr. SHANLEY. We broke figures down on this chart also. It shows that in this group the average arrests were six per man; one out of four arrested for homicide; four out of five, on an average, had arrests for dangerous weapons; three out of five for narcotics; four out of five for gambling; one out of two arrests for assaults.

On this group, the range ran from 1 man with 36 arrests to 1 man with 1 arrest.

The CHAIRMAN. On this chart (chart B) there are 53 names. Is that correct?

(148)

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Of the 53, Valachi has identified 52 of them; am I correct?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that correct, Mr. Valachi?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHANLEY. He left off one name, a young man, Migliori, 26 or 27 years old. He is the youngest man mentioned in the whole group.

Senator JAVITS. That is an interesting point, if I may say so, Inspector. Do you make any connection between the age of these people and their eligibility and your previous statement that these were pretty high up criminals and that they had a lot of people working for them? In other words, do you see a period of maturity before anybody really rates being named even in this family?

Mr. SHANLEY. I would say there has to be some period when they are proving themselves. There may be some more significance to these age ranges actually.

We haven't been able to go into it in detail to make such determination. But the fact is that the average age of these leaders runs 62. The average age of the lieutenants runs around 56 years old.

It is peculiar that most of these people had to achieve a certain degree of prominence in this field in their early twenties and thirties. Some of them were up there when they were 29 or 30. They were at second levels, and so on.

It offers the possibility that this thing might be nondynastic in character and it might be a question of strong personalities.

This is something we will have to control a little deeper on. There is definitely a question of age as you brought out.

Senator MUSKIE. In other words, seniority is important in this family?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 275

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I think you said the total number of arrests was 387 and the average arrests in this family totaled one out of six?

Mr. SHANLEY. No; six per man.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Thirty-six arrests were for narcotics?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes. Thirty-six arrests for narcotics which makes an average of three out of every five. Three men out of every five had been arrested.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Out of the 54 mentioned, there were 15 arrests for homicide?

Mr. SHANLEY. There are 15 arrests, 1 out of every 4 on an average.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How many arrests for gambling?

Mr. SHANLEY. Gambling shows 53, which gives 4 out of 5 on an average.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And then dangerous weapons?

Mr. SHANLEY. Fifty, with four out of five on an average.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Aggravated assault, there were how many?

Mr. SHANLEY. Twenty-nine, one out of every two.

Senator MUNDT. Which one of these characters had 36 arrests? You said one of them was arrested 36 times.

Mr. SHANLEY. I will have to go through that, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. Is he still on the loose or is he in the penitentiary?

Mr. SHANLEY. You will have to go through each one of them individually. Do you want me to do that?

Senator MUNDT. No, I was curious about whether the fellow who had been arrested 36 times, was he put away for keeps or is he still on the loose?

Mr. SHANLEY. This I can't say offhand.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, who is the boss of this family?

Mr. SHANLEY. This is Gaetano Lucchese, also known as Tommy Lucchese, born in 1899, in Italy. Lives in Lido Beach, Nassau, came to the United States in 1911, naturalized in 1943, in Newark, got the right to vote in 1949 with a certificate of good conduct issued by the New York City police, removing a conviction, 1921. Denaturalization proceedings were instituted. Twenty-one arrests for grand larceny. Four other arrests, two for homicide, all dismissed.

He was arrested in the case of Joe Pisuolo, the case the witness mentioned, California Dried Fruit Co. He was questioned in the Marsano killing. He has a host of additional arrests, grand larceny, of automobile, receiving stolen goods in 1923.

In 1931, he was arrested in Cleveland while attending a championship prize fight out there and he was in the company at that time of Charley Lucky and Joe Bianco.

He was supposed to have acquired Jimmy Valentori's interest in the Fort Hurst Co. around early 1940.

He was alleged to have gambling interests in Saratoga. He took Frank Costello's place at the time Costello went to jail for contempt of Congress.

He has long been considered a power in crime from that time forward. He had an income tax levied against him of $162,000 by the U.S. Government for unpaid taxes in 1947, 1948, 1949, 1950, 1951. He has been investigated by the State Crime Commission, Waterfront Commission.

Our information is that he offered a prominent entertainer $150,000 for 10 percent of him when the entertainer was in financial straits.

In 1952, the Federal Narcotics got an informer who had a pretty accurate picture. He mentioned that Lucchese was supposed to be a supervisor in the organized crime. He named people who were also in there at that time as Steve LaSalle, who is mentioned in here.

He was investigated by a Federal grand jury in the Southern District. He was before the Senate Committee in 1958.

He is in the following firms:

Turbo Co., Gaucho LaForta Dresses; he either has one-third interest here or interest which we feel are fronts, in Amy DeFashion, Laurie Sportswear, Bewood Contracting, Debbie Petites, Budget Dress, Sherwood Fashions.

He also has holdings in Scranton, Pa.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the witness a question about Lucchese? It is of considerable interest to us in New York. He is in the dress business. Do you know whether his shops are unionized?

Mr. SHANLEY. They had a prolonged strike, the ones in Pennsylvania. The ones in New York are not.

Senator JAVITS. Nonunion?

Mr. SHANLEY. Nonunion.

Senator JAVITS. Do you know of any connections he might have with unions if that is part of his record?

Mr. SHANLEY. His position is that this occurs because he is a generous employer.

Senator JAVITS. That is what he says?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is what he says. Now, in the strike in Pennsylvania, the people who were employed there, didn't seem to think that. They struck. It is quite possible that there are other reasons. He is very close to Patsy Crapasano, trustee in the Local Council No. 271, the IBT. He was at his wedding. They had a wedding in the family.

Senator JAVITS. IBT meaning what?

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was that?

Mr. SHANLEY. 271 Local.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What union?

Mr. SHANLEY. Teamsters, IBT.

Senator JAVITS. The ILGWU pursues a very aggressive organizing policy, does it not?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. But it has been unable to organize Lucchese's plants?

Mr. SHANLEY. That appears to be the case.

Senator JAVITS. I notice he lives in Lido Beach, Nassau. I am indebted to the District Attorney of Nassau County, William Kahn, for information that 40 or 50 of those named by the committee as Costa Nostra members or racketeers are living in Nassau.

Would you have any idea why this migration, and with the Chair's permission, I would like to ask the same question of the principal witness.

Mr. SHANLEY. To begin with, we feel that there actually was a change some 10 or 15 years ago in the policies. There was a time when most of these people did live in the areas where they had a great deal of influence. Now this has been changed. Most of these people are moving out largely because for the same reason that everybody else moves, their position has improved, they go into a better neighborhood. They keep their children severed from their own operations. They send them to fine schools. It is all in keeping with the background of respectability which they strive so hard to achieve.

I don't see anything sinister in it. It makes the police problem a little more difficult.

I believe it is a pretty natural development.

Senator JAVITS. The District Attorney in Suffolk tells me he has information that there are 50 in Suffolk as well which means a rather large proportion of those named.

With the Chair's permission, may we ask the principal witness if he has any explanation for the move to Nassau and Suffolk, New York suburbs, by these leading racketeers?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, if I don't hear the names, I can't say anything.

Senator JAVITS. People like Lucchese, for example, and others of the same character.

Mr. VALACHI. What do you want to know, Senator?

Senator JAVITS. I want to know if there is any reason for their moving to Nassau and Suffolk out of New York City, if you know?

Mr. VALACHI. The only way I can answer is this way. I lived in Yonkers. I had no reason to go to Yonkers other than to be in a nice neighborhood. I was in what you call a community.

Senator JAVITS. You believe, as the inspector stated, that they moved for personal reasons and without any relation to what they were engaged in?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I am in no position to believe or not believe. I can only say what I know, Senator.

Senator JAVITS. Now, about Lucchese, while you are testifying, do you wish to add anything to the answers given by Inspector Shanley about the nonunion character of Lucchese's dress shop operations in New York?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I had a dress shop, a negligee and dress contract, on Prospect Avenue. I never belonged in any union. If I got in trouble, any union organizer came around, all I had to do was call up John Dio or Tommy Dio and all my troubles were straightened out.

Senator JAVITS. You actually did that in your business?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. You actually did that?

Mr. VALACHI. I had been in the dress business for quite many years. He was a legitimate man. I never butted in and got work for him. I made him do everything. I think we lasted 11 or 12 years.

I was a member of the local 25 committee. They tried to pull what you call the switch. In other words, that is how they shut you down. I ran them out of the place. Then he went down and complained about me.

By the time he got there, I had already called, and nothing came out of it.

Senator JAVITS. Whom did you call in that case?

278 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. I call the Dios.

Senator JAVITS. Johnny Dio?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. That was the end of it?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I think the record will show that previous hearings we have had with this committee and with the select committee showed that Johnny Dio was very heavily involved in the labor rackets, and we had a considerable amount of hearings about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to make an announcement.

I am going to request all spectators present to remain where you are for the moment until the witness, Valachi, can be taken from the room.

The committee will resume this afternoon at 2 o'clock instead of 2:30.

The committee stands in recess until 2 o'clock.

(Members of the committee present at the time of recess were Senators McClellan, Javits, and Muskie.)

(The subcommittee reconvened at 2:10 p.m., Senator John L. McClellan, chairman of the subcommittee, presiding.)

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will be in order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of reconvening: Senators McClellan, Muskie, and McIntyre.)

The CHAIRMAN. Will you go ahead, Mr. Counsel?

There is a matter that I want to interrogate the witness about, but I want to check on it first.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN F. SHANLEY—Resumed

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley, I think that we left off just about where we were beginning to discuss the Lucchese family, and you were describing some of the operations of Gaetano Lucchese, or Tommy Lucchese. Is he also known as Three Finger Brown?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, he is known as Three Finger Brown.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And Tommy Brown?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir; Tommy Brown.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Have you finished your discussion of Tommy Brown?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you discuss Stefano LaSalle, and how well do you know him?

Mr. SHANLEY. Here is a good example of the value of the testimony of this witness. Steve LaSalle was not too well known to us. We had observed him on infrequent occasions with groups. We had a prolonged investigation into this group, and LaSalle showed up on only one occasion, but the manner in which he was treated and the authority with which he appeared to be speaking led us to believe that he was a man of some consequence. Sergeant Salerno took that position.

We contacted other agencies, and nobody could see him at this level. He is an elderly man, and he lives in a very modest home, and he doesn't have an automobile, somebody picks him up in the morning and takes him to where his place of business is and then he comes back. He is only in one business that we know of, and nonetheless, with the witness' information, plus these other observations, we go along with this rating of LaSalle as an underboss, although we have very little information on him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He would be considered something of a "sleeper"?

Mr. SHANLEY. He definitely is a sleeper, and we have referred to him as a sleeper in this chart here.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And both of the other Government agencies that you have had to deal with failed to recognize his importance in this organization?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true, and within our own organization we questioned it, and Sergeant Salerno believes that LaSalle has this position, and when Valachi came along he substantiated him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You were conducting an investigation of this organization, of the Lucchese family, for how many years?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, this particular one was 2 years.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And during the 2 years that you had them under constant observation, you did notice that LaSalle—or rather, Sergeant Salerno noticed LaSalle was given a definite amount of respect?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true. He didn't show up in the groups very frequently, but when he did, he was the top man.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, you have confirmation from Valachi's testimony.

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Valachi, of course, had no way of knowing what your appraisal was on LaSalle.

Mr. SHANLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, how about Vincent John Rao?

Incidentally, could you tell us—I notice that LaSalle according to your activity code, has been in gambling and in shylocking.

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. LaSalle has three arrests and one conviction, and he was arrested once for murder and he was born in 1889, and he is an associate of Willy Moretti, and he has garment area influence.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He has influence in the garment area?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Vincent John Rao?

Mr. SHANLEY. Vincent Rao was born in 1898. He has real estate holdings in East Harlem, and he currently lives in Yonkers. He is in Vincent Paints; Real Estate, Ltd.; Court Manor, Inc.; and he was the owner of the Five Borough Hoisting Co., which is now out of business, and interested in Rao's Garage, and interested in a parking lot, and he was interested in and he is the owner or has an interest in the Parkway Motel at Elmsford, N.Y.

He testified before the New York State Crime Commission in 1952 by deposition, and he was sick at the time. He has five arrests and has never been convicted, and he has one arrest for homicide. He is an associate of Mike Coppola, Joey Rao, who is not a relative, Charley Attenis, John Armento, and he was very close to Willy Moretti when he was alive, Willy Moore, and his wife holds the mortgage on a house owned by the children of the Luccheses.

His manner of operation is that he leaves the house around late afternoon, 4 p.m. generally, and doesn't come home until the early hours of the morning. He has wide connections in every direction. He was in the bowling alleys, and he is very close to the Arra family. Nunzio Arra is an underling of his, and Arra has handled gambling operations for him, and he recently has been arrested in a large policy bank in the Bronx, which comes out of East Harlem.

He is close to Jimmy "The Sniff" Vintalora, and Vintalora has a history of narcotics, and he has been arrested a number of times for narcotics and suspected of being deep in them.

At the time of the SIC hearings in New York, we spent a year trying to catch up to Rao, and he was not available for subpoena, and when they did locate him he maintained that he didn't know that they were looking for him.

He took the fifth any number of times in the investigations relative to his attendance at the Apalachin meeting, in which he stated, when he did make statements, that he went to visit a sick friend, and as to the other people that were there, he was of a shy nature, and couldn't bring it upon himself to talk to these strangers, so he couldn't identify anybody.

He has been investigated by the Internal Revenue, and he once was in partnership in a dancehall in the East Harlem area with Jack Arra, and the license was revoked, and he lost out there. Nunzio Arra, who is close to him, at one time was the business agent of the Lath Hoisters Union. He was in Ace Lathing, and there was a large investigation into the position of Ace Lathing in relation to certain profits that were made in the Yonkers Raceway, and that is about the size of them.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, would you rate the Lucchese family rather important from the criminal point of view?

Mr. SHANLEY. Very definitely.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I noticed in the Caporegime they have nine members of the Caporegime, although the number of buttons appears to be rather small that have been identified. Do you feel that this is a potent or it is much larger than it is shown?

Mr. SHANLEY. We feel it is a much larger family here.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you give me an appraisal of the importance of, say, the Caporegime members when you consider, for example, Johnny Dio is only a soldier?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true. Dio has long held a relatively high position in this type of crime, in our opinion, and in view of these ratings here, we must consider how much higher the position of Johnny Laratro and Joe Lucchese and John Amento and James Doyle—these people must be at least a level above Dio, and as a consequence, it must be pretty important. There is no question that if we ever put this together in a longer study we would be able to do a great deal with it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. From the placement in the organization of people like Dio, it is apparent that the Caporegime members must be of a pretty high level, much higher level than Johnny Dio, and at the same time it gives a relative sense of importance, and how important this group is in the area of criminality.

Mr. SHANLEY. This ranks in the order of their importance, essentially, and, of course, Dio would be below the other men.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 281

Mr. ADLERMAN. I notice that you have people like Carmine Tramunti as members of the Caporegime right over on the right-hand side, and is he considered an important character in the field of criminality?

Mr. SHANLEY. Definitely. Tramunti has 15 arrests and he has been convicted 6 times, and the type of arrests, robbery and gun, and he is very friendly with Joe Strasse, and Jimmy Doyle, and he has been in trucking and he has been in gambling, and he had strong connections to the paper unions.

"Gribs" as he is called runs floating dice games, and he has a piece of a numbers operation, and he is widespread in union racketeering and gambling.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know who he uses as his underling, to insulate him from the crimes? Is there any indication who his insulation is?

Mr. SHANLEY. His position is such that it is hard to say just who is insulating him. He does have one operation which is relatively low level, the Block brothers, that have engaged in gambling at an operational level and they are fairly well insulated and we believe that they eventually go to Gribs.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Joe Palisades, or Joe Rosato?

Mr. SHANLEY. Joe Rosato—

Mr. ADLERMAN. Would you rather I start off on the lefthand side?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is all right.

Joe Rosato is related to Lucchese and he is in S. & R. Trucking, and related to Lucchese by marriage, and he is in gambling and he is in labor, and he goes under the name of Joe Palisades. He was born in 1904, and he has one arrest for a gun. Our information is that in the garment area Joe Rosato is the power in the sense that he will talk to the people who are having difficulties, and they come to him with their problems and he has a small place where he usually can be found on a daily basis. He talks the problems over and straightens out whatever has to be straightened out.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, how about Big John Ormento?

Mr. SHANLEY. Big John Ormento is currently in jail.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is he charged with?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is in the narcotics conspiracy. He was born in 1912, and he got 40 years on the last one.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that, a Federal narcotics violation?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. A good part of these narcotics violations or convictions that show up on these charts, they are Federal narcotics violations?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right; especially in the later years, nearly all of these are Federal conspiracy violations or Federal narcotics violations.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And those particularly in the upper area groups; is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you go along?

Mr. SHANLEY. John Ormento, he is an associate of Carmine Galente, Tony Mirro, and he is in shylocking, and gambling, drugs, and he was at Apalachin, and he made a number of telephone calls, or they were made from there to people outside of the State, and he went into Joe

Salardina in Canyon City, Colo., and Joe Civillo, in Dallas, Tex., and Mike Polizzi in Detroit, and he is related to Frank Livorsi by marriage.

He had a very unusual arrest concerning some guns where he was apprehended by the police in an automobile, and when the automobile was searched, if you turned on the heater first, and then you turned on the ignition, a compartment in the back would drop down in the back seat, and in there he had two or three guns stashed. This was a very clever device to prevent apprehension while he was carrying these weapons.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, you had a sequence of which knobs to turn before the compartment would open.

Mr. SHANLEY. You had to turn the heater on first, and after you turned the heater on, you turned the ignition, and this compartment would drop.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, do you know what he has been in besides narcotics here, and the gambling? Has he been in extortion rackets?

Mr. SHANLEY. He has been in extortion, and he has been in black market, and he was very close to La Cheech Livorsi, where they took over a firm and secured an allotment of 14 million pounds of sugar during the war shortly after the war when sugar was very scarce. Ormento was put in there typically without any qualifications as an officer. Apparently he was to protect the interests of these people, but his attitude and his actions within the firm were such that they had to ask him to leave, but he continued on the payroll at $100 a week.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Has he also been in the field of receiving stolen goods?

Mr. SHANLEY. He has.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Joe Larratro?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is Joey Narrow. Joey Narrow was considered to be overseer of gambling operations for Tommy "Three Finger Brown" in Queens. He handled bookmaking, and policy operations, and large telephone setups, and he also has a place called the Forest Gardening. I am wrong on that. It is Lo Bosco Metals.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is Lo Bosco Metals, in Queens.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that?

Mr. SHANLEY. It is a scrap metal firm.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is it?

Mr. SHANLEY. A scrap metal firm.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, I noticed, has he been in the extortion rackets, too?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is reported to be in that, yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Eddie Coco?

Mr. SHANLEY. Coco was a representative of this outfit in the fight game, and he currently is in prison serving a life term for a shooting.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I see according to the code he has been in gambling and also in extortion, strong arm?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is suspected of being in narcotics, also.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Tony Ducks, or Anthony Corrolo, who we have had before the committee on a previous occasion?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, of course, he is suspected of being active in narcotics. He is in gambling, labor racketeering, extortion, strong arm, and murder. He was a subject of a prolonged investigation in which we had an electronic device which was very revealing. Some of the information couldn't be related, but there is no question that this man had strong connections to high labor figures.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Labor officials?

Mr. SHANLEY. I beg your pardon?

Mr. ADLERMAN. High labor officials?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And which union was that?

Mr. SHANLEY. Hoffa's union.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is in the Teamsters Union?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you be prepared to name those officials?

Mr. SHANLEY. I couldn't name them offhand.

The CHAIRMAN. I beg your pardon?

Mr. SHANLEY. I couldn't name them offhand.

The CHAIRMAN. Could you name them in an executive session?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, he has been involved in gambling, and labor racketeering and extortion; is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know of any of his fronts that he is using now?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is in jail at the moment. He was in an Oldsmobile outfit in Queens, but I don't know what his connection is now. He is in jail at the moment.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He had an automobile agency?

Mr. SHANLEY. Paragon Oldsmobile, yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know whether he still retains his interest in that organization or agency?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, he does not.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, Joe Brown—

The CHAIRMAN. We will have to suspend. That is a vote, and I wanted to ask this witness a question or two before we go, hurriedly.

Do you know Raymond Patriarca?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the way you pronounce it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you known him?

Mr. VALACHI. Since the days away back, and I met him around 1939 or 1940.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he on any of these charts?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't see him on the charts.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand he is on another one we have.

Mr. VALACHI. He is in Boston.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is he?

Mr. VALACHI. In Boston, and Rhode Island.

The CHAIRMAN. And Rhode Island?

Mr. VALACHI. But actually in Boston, and I believe he lives in Rhode Island. I don't know where he lives but he is in Boston.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he a member of Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; he is.

284 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. Is he known as a king of the New England underworld? What is his status, or the boss of Providence, or what is his status?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, when I left the streets he was not boss, but since I have been away, I learned he was made boss.

The CHAIRMAN. Since you left?

Mr. VALACHI. Since I left, through members coming in and out.

The CHAIRMAN. But he does operate there as a member of Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you know him to be a member?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; I was introduced to him.

The CHAIRMAN. You what?

Mr. VALACHI. I was introduced to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Introduced to him as a member?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he acknowledge being one; is that correct? I mean you had the conversations with him that made you know?

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You would not be mistaken about that?

Mr. VALACHI. I was introduced to him as a member.

The CHAIRMAN. You would not be mistaken about it?

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you known him?

Mr. VALACHI. Going up and down Boston, and I owned horses, Senator, I have been raising in the New England States. I started about 1938 and I earned——

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you known him?

Mr. VALACHI. Since around 1938.

The CHAIRMAN. Since 1938?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will stand in recess for a few moments, and we have to go and vote and then we will return. Everybody at ease.

(Brief recess.)

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, Mr. Counsel.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Shanley, I believe that we left off at the point where we were discussing Joe Brown or Joe Lucchese?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He is the brother of——

Mr. SHANLEY. Joe is the brother of Tom. Joe is in gambling. He represents Tom in gambling. He is also suspected of being in shylocking, labor racketeering, and extortion strong arm.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Tom in another family?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, Tom is in the same family.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about James Plumeri?

Mr. SHANLEY. "Jimmy Doyle." He is also a strong figure in the garment area. He can be frequently seen in various trucking places in that locality. He is in gambling. In addition to that he is in shylocking, labor racketeering, and extortion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this a different Doyle than the Bobby Doyle?

Mr. SHANLEY. This fellow's name is Plumeri, the other's name is Santuccio.

The CHAIRMAN. Both have aliases of Doyle?

Mr. SHANLEY. They both have the same sir name; yes, sir. Doyle's partner incidentally was a homicide victim.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was his name?

Mr. SHANLEY. Nat Nelson.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Has Plumeri been heavily engaged in the garment area in the trucking field?

Mr. SHANLEY. He has.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Does he own any companies in that area that you know of?

Mr. SHANLEY. No, not right now.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is he related in any way to Johnny Dioguardi?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, they are his nephews. He is their uncle.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Johnny and Tommy Dioguardi are nephews of Jimmy Doyle?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is he considered a power in this area, in the area of criminal organization?

Mr. SHANLEY. He definitely is.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Salvatore Santoro, also known as Tom Mix?

Mr. SHANLEY. He has an east Harlem background. He is currently in jail on a narcotics charge.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that a Federal narcotics charge?

Mr. SHANLEY. Federal narcotics. He was suspected of being in strong arm and extortion. He had seven arrests, five convictions. He was in drugs right along. He has a gun conviction. He was very close to Vito Genovese and Rocca Massie. He was a defendant with Genovese.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Natale Evola?

Mr. SHANLEY. "Joe Diamond" he is known as.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SHANLEY. He is also in jail on a similar charge. He was strong in trucking in the garment area. He went to jail on February 10, 1961, Federal narcotics. He was associated with Carmen Lombosi, Ervin Sherman, and Doyle. He has two arrests, one gun.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you tell us how many of these 53 on this chart, I believe it is 53, are now in jail?

Mr. SHANLEY. Nine are in custody, seven are dead, one is awaiting trial.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, could you tell us anything about this family, what business is "Three Finger Brown" in, what sort of racket is he in?

Mr. VALACHI. Three Finger Brown has been in the garment center as we use the expression.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mostly union activity?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. That includes everything.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Vincent Rao?

Mr. VALACHI. Vincent Rao has his hands in everything.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I cannot hear you.

Mr. VALACHI. He has his hand in numbers, a partner with Big John, Tom Mix, all sorts of shylocking through the years, everything. He has had his hand in anything.

286 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. Has he owned any dine or dance clubs?

Mr. VALACHI. He used to own the Rainbow Gardens, Broadway Gardens, and one on 14th Street, I have forgot the name. He had about three at one time, owned together.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were these hangouts of the mob, too?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, we hung out in the Rainbow Gardens at that time. Today, through the years after that we did not go to dance-halls any more. So I don't know who has been going up there. I only can talk of the time when we used to hang out at the Rainbow.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know John Ormento?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Salvatore Santora?

Mr. VALACHI. That is Tom Mix.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What activity were they engaged in?

Mr. VALACHI. They were engaged—they are fourth offenders in narcotics.

Mr. ADLERMAN. When you are talking about offenders in narcotics—

Mr. VALACHI. All convictions.

Mr. ADLERMAN (continuing). You are talking about Federal offense?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is on a large scale?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You are not talking about just selling to people on the street?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They are wholesalers?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is he in any other business?

Mr. VALACHI. I knew they had some trucking business but I don't know their name.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that also located in the garment center?

Mr. VALACHI. That is in the garment center. They have about $8,000-a-day business, $8,000- to $10,000-a-day business.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were they in any of the gambling enterprises?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, the number business.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who were they with at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Their bank got pinched maybe a year ago, 10 months ago, I heard in the papers.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. About 10 months ago or a year ago, somewhere around there, their bank was arrested.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who was with them?

Mr. VALACHI. They did not get arrested but the people in the office. Vince Rao's nephew was arrested; Nunzie Rao.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was the handle in that?

Mr. VALACHI. They had a big bank at one time. Then I understand business went down. The last I heard they had about $10,000 a day. It could have been more, but that is what I heard.

Mr. ADLERMAN. $100,000 a day?

Mr. VALACHI. When I was on the street.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were they engaged in this for a long time?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 287

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was their handle ever bigger than $10,000 a day?

Mr. VALACHI. One time, yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How much was it?

Mr. VALACHI. About $30,000 a day.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Would that be a 7-day week handle or 6-day week handle?

Mr. VALACHI. That is 6 days a week.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Eddie Coco?

Mr. VALACHI. Eddie Coco has been shylocking and in the number business, horse business, everything in the line of gambling so far as I knew about Eddie Coco up to the time he went away.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Eddie is a lieutenant, one of the caporegime.

Mr. VALACHI. One of the caporegime; yes, he was. He did not get life on that sentence. Twenty-five years he got.

Mr. ADLERMAN. For what?

Mr. VALACHI. On that killing in Florida.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Killing in Florida?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was that about?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, a colored fellow. He killed a colored fellow, a carwasher.

Mr. ADLERMAN. A what?

Mr. VALACHI. A carwasher.

The CHAIRMAN. That had nothing to do with the syndicate, any operations of the syndicate?

Mr. VALACHI. No, Senator. It was an argument.

The CHAIRMAN. It was something personal?

Mr. VALACHI. Personal; yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about another lieutenant, Joe Palisades, Joe Rosato?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Palisades has been in the garment center, partners with Gribbs, "Big Sam." He also is very active in every field.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. He also is very active.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is he in the trucking business, too?

Mr. VALACHI. He is in the trucking business.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Where?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know the companies. I just know they are in the trucking business.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You don't know whether it is under his name or anybody else's name?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Does he control any crap games?

Mr. VALACHI. He always has his hands on, he had something to do with the crap game on—

Mr. ADLERMAN. How big are these crap games?

Mr. VALACHI. Very big games.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How many people would attend these games?

Mr. VALACHI. You can get 60 people in there.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How much money was passed over in a night?

Mr. VALACHI. Sometimes quite a bit. It is according to who is the money people who come in. You get slow nights and you get big nights. Maybe one night you go through $20,000, the following night you might go through $150,000. You can't just say what it will be.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Would these be floating crap games or crap games in one location?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I would say they would be in one location—

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who did he use as his street partner?

Mr. VALACHI. What?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who did Palisades use as his street partner?

Mr. VALACHI. "Big Sam."

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is "Big Sam" Cavalieri?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know their name.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Cavalieri?

Mr. VALACHI. I just know him as "Big Sam," but I identified him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, then, anybody else?

Mr. VALACHI. Gribbs.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is Carmine Tramunti?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; is that the name?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes, Carmine Tramunti, Mr. Gribbs?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Jimmie Doyle?

Mr. VALACHI. Jimmie Doyle from downtown?

Mr. ADLERMAN. James Plumeri.

Mr. VALACHI. That is Thomas' uncle.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. All through the years I have known about him and his garment center.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Johnny Dio, his nephew?

Mr. VALACHI. He is an organizer, strong arm organizer.

Senator JAVITS. Would counsel yield at this point?

Are these the Dios, Thomas Dioguardi, whom you referred to this morning?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. When you said they would fix up all your labor problems?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. Those are the fellows you called when you had a labor problem?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. Do you know anything about how they operated?

Mr. VALACHI. I am not familiar with that operation, Senator.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Joe Brown, Joe Lucchese, he is a lieutenant? What racket was he running?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Brown has been having horses for years. He had fellows like Whitie working for him, Demsey working for him. They all moved out to Long Island. I lost track of them since.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was he in mostly?

Mr. VALACHI. Horses.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Bookmaking?

Mr. VALACHI. Bookmaking.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Or did you mean that he raced horses?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, he had some racehorses too at one time. But I meant bookmaking.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 289

Mr. ADLERMAN. You yourself were in the horseracing business, weren't you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I was.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You were in there for how many years?

Mr. VALACHI. I was in there since 1938.

Mr. ADLERMAN. 1938?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. During that time you say you met Raymond Patriarca through your horseracing?

Mr. VALACHI. Going back and forth in Boston; yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were you racing your horses up in Massachusetts at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; I raced in Lincoln Downs. I raced in Narragansett, Suffolk Downs, and New Hampshire at Rockingham Park.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What were the principal horses that you had at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. The good ones I have was Knight's Duchess and Son of Tarra.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That was your best horse?

Mr. VALACHI. That was one good horse.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you make money with him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; I lost him during the war when they banned racing. Lots of poor stables, they could not stand being idle, in other words, it would break them. So they went to Mexico. When they resumed racing they brought back a disease, what we called, what was it, swamp fever, and it killed about 500 horses in the New England States. If you were stuck, for instance, in Narragansett, you could not ship from Narragansett to Rockingham, you had to stay in Narragansett and you were stuck for the whole duration of racing. During that time my horse caught this swamp fever and I lost him at 4 years old. I refused $23,000 for him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. It was through your horseracing really that you became interested in the Boston area?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Why did you meet Patriarca?

Mr. VALACHI. There used to be a boss in Boston around that time, his name was Joe Bruno. I was recommended to him through my lieutenant, Tony Bender, when I first went up there. In fact, he gave me the first ride up. Ten, twelve or fifteen years Joe Bruno died. Then he was replaced by another fellow which I know as Phil Bubona. Since then, since I have been away I have heard that Phil Bubona retired. I also heard about Raymond being the new boss in Boston. I heard that in prison.

Mr. ADLERMAN. When you were racing your horses up around Massachusetts or in the New England area did you have to touch base with the people up there in Boston, like Patriarca or Bruno or anybody else?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, no; they did not interfere in any way with my racing. Like, for instance, I went over to the whole crowd in this particular race. My horse was opened up at 30 to 1. I told them I did not want money. If they bet on the horse, the more they bet on the horse the more his price goes down. In other words, I wanted to let them know that the horse was going to win, not that I should worry about money, instead of getting a mutual of $30, I get a mutual of $10. I wanted them to understand that did not bother me. I went to the whole crowd. I told them that this horse was going to win. They thought the horse did not have a chance. But the horse won and paid about $38. I remember I talked to the whole group there. When I catch them like that we usually introduce one another. For instance, I am in a spot where I met some more.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean more members of Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I would go back and forth. They had a crap game going there for years.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was there a time when you tried to meet him, you were not able to keep the appointment? He was disappointed?

Mr. VALACHI. You are talking about Johnny Williams.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. I was very close to Johnny Williams. He always told me when you come, when I come to Boston I should call him. Well, I called him at this time. But I was running, they were running in New Hampshire at this time. I only stopped in Boston. But he took a long time to show up and I was getting late for the race. So, I left before I met him. Then when I met him in the Gold Key Club he kept reminding me that I kept him waiting. One word led to another. I told him, "I am trying to explain to you that it was getting late for the race." He kept insisting and I got pretty sore with him. I said, "If you don't care to accept an explanation," I said, "good night" and walked out of the Gold Key Club on him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Had you had any fixed races when you raced horses?

Mr. VALACHI. In New England?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. I never was on any fixed race.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know of any fixed races?

Mr. VALACHI. I have heard of stories years back. In fact, Sammy Bartman had nine horses under his name.

The CHAIRMAN. Who?

Mr. VALACHI. Freddy Bartman, an oldtimer. In other words, what I am trying to tell you—there is no such thing as a sure race. He, Freddy Bartman, himself, told me the story. He had nine horses under different names. For instance, if you know, you see, you have a book, the entries of the week. In other words, you pick a race 4 or 5 days in advance. So he called up these owners which he had and which were fictitious names, enter on Friday in the sixth race. They all entered on Friday in the sixth race. Maybe there are 13 or 14 horses entered that day.

Well, he would buy them all out to make them scratch out so that he would have only his nine horses going. Now, he told me, himself, everybody in my time, years ago, knew all about this. It was rumored but I happened to meet him personally and I asked him. "Tell me all about what happened to you when you bet a couple hundred thousand on your horse." He explained to me. He bet $200,000, these nine horses, one of them—I don't remember the name, I don't remember what it was, but the one he bet on and about 30 feet from the wire he saw his horse leading by himself. I mean he had a big lead. He trips and breaks his leg. Well, I told him. I said, why didn't you pick another horse for a saver and be sure you have $30,000 on him or $25,000. He said, "I never thought of that."

It is one of those things. That is the reason why in those days, like there would be a conversation about betting on horses and somebody would come up and say, "Did you see what happened to Freddie Bartman?" It circulated around pretty good. This was about the 1920's.

When I met Freddie Bartman, I asked him to tell me the whole story.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Getting back to the charts here on the Lucchese case family, you say Joe Brown did run a horse operation, he did race horses?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I remember they had some horses. I forget their names. But they didn't do so good.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Most of his operations were in bookmaking?

Mr. VALACHI. Bookmaking.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Then in the numbers game, what counties was he working in?

Mr. VALACHI. I know they were in Long Island. They had a restaurant some years ago called Tasser's. I didn't really keep up with them. I didn't know what they were doing.

I knew they were all in Long Island. There was quite a bit of them out in Long Island. What part of Long Island, I didn't know. Long Island is all the same.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know some of the other operations of some of the soldiers, like, for example, Joe Rivers?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Rivers was strictly dice games.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Dice games?

Mr. VALACHI. Dice games, here and there, upstate New York. He would go anywhere. As long as I know Joe Rivers, that is all I know what he ever did.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Anthony Grio?

Mr. VALACHI. Grio is——

Mr. ADLERMAN. Vidalia.

Mr. VALACHI. That is Tommy's uncle?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. He used to print, the last I know he had an office printing lottery numbers. Italian lottery, winning numbers.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This was run by the oldtimers?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. That used to be the biggest thing years ago. It has sort of died out but it is still going.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Coming to the Genovese family, Tommy Ryan or Tommy Eboli, what did he have a piece of?

Mr. VALACHI. Tommy Eboli——

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was he in mostly?

Mr. VALACHI. You mean after or before Genovese went to jail?

Mr. ADLERMAN. After.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, Tommy Eboli has won everything from Vito Genovese. Everything that Vito Genovese would have Tommy Eboli or Tommy Ryan is in today.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What would that be?

Mr. VALACHI. That covers up horses, that covers up machines, cigarette machines, jukeboxes. For instance—I don't know—Vito hasn't got the Savannah Club any more. I don't know about the

Moroccan Village, the 181 Club, 82 Club. These always belonged to Vito Genovese. Besides that, lottery, whatever Vito has or interests in Las Vegas, you can rest assured that Tommy Ryan is there.

Senator JAVITS. Could we ask something about Las Vegas? What interest does Genovese have in Las Vegas so far as you know?

Mr. VALACHI. I know he has an interest but I don't know the name of the places.

Senator JAVITS. Like a hotel?

Mr. VALACHI. Gambling casinos.

Senator JAVITS. Is that all he has now?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know what Vito has. Vito has so many things I can't keep up with Vito. He has legitimate factories. I wouldn't know how to explain it to you, Senator. Lots of business, I know he has, but I can't describe them to you, Senator.

Senator JAVITS. You said one of his businesses was the jukeboxes, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, he is partner with Tommy Ryan.

Senator JAVITS. In the jukebox business, does the operator like Genovese or Ryan pick the records that go into the jukeboxes, does he do that, too?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I tell you, I don't know about him but I heard something about it. Anything I can't tell you about I wouldn't even start. I heard about it but I don't know—

Senator JAVITS. You did not actually operate in that field?

Mr. VALACHI. No, not with records. I bought my records. I had jukeboxes, myself. I bought the records.

Senator JAVITS. You bought the records and supplied them?

Mr. VALACHI. For instance, I bought them from, say like Charley Richmond or any record, like there was another fellow I used to buy from, all along 10th Avenue I bought my records, Senator.

Senator JAVITS. Did any member of your group or your family tell you whom to buy records from or what records to buy?

Mr. VALACHI. No, sir.

Senator JAVITS. In other words, you had to use your own discretion?

Mr. VALACHI. There was no question about it. You just buy. You don't think who owns them, you take care of your business. You don't buy many records. I didn't have many machines. I would buy maybe 15 records 1 week, maybe another week. You put the average of two or three changes, that is all, maybe one, maybe some places are slow, you change every 2 weeks. Actually, I had a small business.

Senator JAVITS. There is no connection between the record purchases or the records you would pick and the operations of these rackets so far as you know?

Mr. VALACHI. As far as I know, I can't say.

Senator JAVITS. Are there any record companies which are fronts for these operations?

Mr. VALACHI. It could be, but I can't say.

Senator JAVITS. Not of your knowledge?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JAVITS. Do any of these racketeers have any interest in any entertainers?

Mr. VALACHI. You mean racket fellows?

Senator JAVITS. Do they have interest in any of the entertainers, like they do in prizefighting?

Mr. VALACHI. I know one fellow has an entertainer. I know some kid named Frank in the Bronx. He is on the Gambino chart there. He has a girl that sings, but I don't know who she is, but I have heard about it.

Senator JAVITS. It is not a racket enterprise that you are acquainted with?

Mr. VALACHI. I am not acquainted with that.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley, I wonder if we could proceed now to the introduction of the Gambino family chart?

(At this point Senator Mundt entered the hearing room.)

The CHAIRMAN. Are you ready to proceed?

Mr. ADLERMAN. May I ask one question of Mr. Valachi before we go to that?

Mr. Valachi, you testified earlier that you were the cellmate of Vito Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, in the Genovese family, you will notice on the chart that his brother is listed as a messenger. What is his brother's name?

Mr. VALACHI. Mike Genovese.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Does Vito Genovese still control the Genovese family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How does he do that while he is in jail?

Mr. VALACHI. He gets the messages out to his brother; and his brother goes see Tom, then they go see Mike. It has been running that way.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, in your conversations with Genovese, did he tell you he was still running the family?

Mr. VALACHI. Naturally, for instance, I had to find out something—

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who was his principal lieutenant that he gives his orders to in the family?

Mr. VALACHI. You mean Mike, or Vito?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Vito.

Mr. VALACHI. He sends them to Tommy Ryan.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, he is using Tommy Ryan?

Mr. VALACHI. Tommy Ryan represents Vito Genovese.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But Miranda is the counsel?

Mr. VALACHI. Miranda is counsel. I don't know what it would be, Mr. Adlerman, if Vito Genovese should remain in jail. I don't know what to tell you.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Which one do you think will take over?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Will it be between Tommy Ryan and—

Mr. VALACHI. I think that Mike will be there.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Jerry Catena?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know. I think Mike Miranda.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You think Mike Miranda will be the power guy?

294 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. I think so, in my opinion.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Thank you.

Can we proceed now—

Senator JAVITS. Can we ask the question before he leaves the jail and Genovese—I do not think you ever told us how you got into Genovese's cell.

How did you get to be his cellmate? What did you do and what did he do?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, can we leave that off—I made the request and I went to the routine channel and I got into his cell.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley, could you proceed now with the Gambino chart? Was that drawn up in the same manner that the other charts were drawn up, based on the same type of information?

Mr. SHANLEY. It was.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you describe what the chart is, who is the head of it?

Mr. SHANLEY. This chart (chart C). We made a breakdown in connection with the number of arrests and this chart shows that there are six arrests for each man mentioned. There is one arrest out of every five men for homicide on an average. Three out of every four have been arrested at least once for dangerous weapons. One out of every three has been arrested at least once on an average for narcotics. One out of one has been arrested for gambling. Two out of five have been arrested for felonious assault.

The total number of arrests, 476. One man has 31 arrests. Carlo Gambino is considered to be the boss. He is suspected of being active in narcotics. He is in gambling, shylocking, labor racketeering, vending machines, extortion, criminally receiving, and alcohol tax violations. He has been arrested 16 times. He has six convictions. He is related to Tom Lucchese through marriage.

The CHAIRMAN. This is Gambino?

Mr. SHANLEY. Carlo Gambino.

He was born in 1902. He entered the country sometime around 1921 as a stowaway at Norfolk, Va. He has conviction for income tax in the 1940's. He was delegate to the Apalachin meeting.

He was given a deportation warrant, posted bond for $10,000. He had a heart attack at the time of the hearing. He was suspected at one time of being involved in smuggling immigrants. He has been associated with Max Block, the Butchers' Union, Paul Catellano and John Montana in Buffalo.

The CHAIRMAN. I notice on that chart you have how many names, how many in the Gambino family?

Mr. SHANLEY. There are 80.

The CHAIRMAN. I have 82 here. Which is correct?

Mr. SHANLEY. There are two that have been knocked out there.

The CHAIRMAN. Two have been taken out?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Two have been blocked out, is that what you mean?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. There are 80 left?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 295

The CHAIRMAN. Of those, how many did Valachi identify. I have it here 64. But that might be 62.

Mr. SHANLEY. It is in excess of 60.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know Mr. Valachi, how many of those on the Gambino chart that you identified?

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't count them, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you examined the chart?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; I examined the chart, but I didn't count them. Do you want me to count them?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Are there any on the chart that you indicated, that were identified that are in error?

Mr. VALACHI. It is up there.

The CHAIRMAN. Those that have the asterisks by them, you did identify all of them?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. This shows that there are about 16 or 18 that you did not identify?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, this was in another family?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. You wouldn't know necessarily as many in that family proportionately as you would in your own family?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Mr. SHANLEY. Of this group, 6 are in jail, 11 dead, 4 are awaiting legal action, 1 has been deported, 1 is a fugitive. Of the 11 dead, 4 were murdered and 4 were believed murdered. The underboss is mentioned as Joe Biondo.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Before we go to Joe Biondo, the predecessors of Carlo Gambino and his family were Philip and Vincent Mangano?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were they both murdered?

Mr. SHANLEY. Vincent Mangano has been missing since 1951. He was declared dead in 1961. He is believed to have been murdered. Philip was found dead with gunshot wounds in a swamp in Brooklyn.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And Albert Anastasia was the last predecessor to Gambino?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct. He was shot to death in a barber shop in 1957 in New York.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Following his death, Gambino took over the reins?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, the underboss is named Joseph Biando?

Mr. SHANLEY. Joseph Biando.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is his alias?

Mr. SHANLEY. Joe Banti.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Does he have another one there?

Mr. SHANLEY. He has one there, yes. They don't call him that much.

Mr. ADLERMAN. It becomes important perhaps in another case.

Mr. SHANLEY. Cunnigieddu.

296 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that, do you know?

Mr. SHANLEY. Little Rabbit.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you tell us something about his activity?

Mr. SHANLEY. He was born in 1897. In 1918, a partner of his, Albert Vanlenti, who was supposed to be in alcohol with him was killed.

In 1930, he was arrested in Cleveland in the same arrest that Tom Lucchese was attending a prize fight out there, on suspicion. He was suspected of supplying narcotics to Steve Armoni.

In 1935, an investigation in Syracuse where the police were making an effort to locate members of the Dutch Schultz mob, he became a large suspect who was found in a hotel up there.

In 1936 through 1942, he was a prime mover in a taxicab racket in New York City. They had a very violent strike around 1934, 1935, during which there was a great deal of damage to property and personal injury.

The following year they approached the fleets and succeeded in having them pay a certain amount for each cab on a weekly basis. They started with 30 cents and then eventually went to 50 cents. They were to supply inspection of the cabs and supervision of the drivers. This ran into millions of dollars.

Eventually there was an extensive investigation. The matter was put before the grand jury. Many of them were convicted but this subject was not. He frequented the Duke restaurant in New Jersey in the early—in the late 1940's when it was a hangout for Joe Adonis and Willie Moore, Moretti. He also was seen in the Public Service Tobacco Co., which was a part of the business owned by Loggie Swillin and in a notebook which was seized from Lucky Luciano during the 1950's, his name appeared in it along with Moretti, Cap-polo, Profaci, and Anthony "The Chief" Bonzera.

In accounting for his income in the 1950's, he gave as a source the Select Coke Co. When an interview was made there, it is quite evident that the manager was forced to put him on the payroll for one reason or another.

In 1951 or 1952, he secured a visa to go to Italy and he gave as the reason that he was going to represent a number of companies.

When the people in the companies were interviewed, for the most part nobody knew the man at all and, in the one instance where they did know him, they stated that he had volunteered to represent them to secure some metal and said that he would pay his own expenses. But when he got there, he also made the pilgrimage to Lucky Luciano.

He was before the Kefauver examination, his occupation at various times has been given as real estate. The investigation into the activity, the real estate activity that was supposed to have taken place in his office indicated that in an 18-month period, he had received possibly four calls that pertained to real estate.

The CHAIRMAN. In 18 months, he had received four calls regarding real estate?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Had he received many other calls?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was the successor to Frank Scalice, is that right?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 297

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Also known as Cheech?

Mr. SHANLEY. Don Cheech.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Cheech was murdered, was he not?

Mr. SHANLEY. He was a homicide victim in the Bronx; yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is there evidence to show who killed him?

Mr. SHANLEY. No; there is not. He was suspected of being in narcotics. He was close to Rocco Mazzie and Ventori, Squillanti.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, can you tell us something about Frank Scalice? Was he underboss of the Gambino family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What part did he play in bringing members into the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Frank Scalice was accused, which was true, of commercializing this Cosa Nostra. It was rumored amongst us boys that he received about 40,000 boys from Frank Luciano due to Jojo.

For instance, like Jimmy Ward and Danny Lee, they had about $50,000 business, individual, and Frank Scalice went partners with them and that was the end of the business then, Danny Lee and Jimmy Ward.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The books have been opened up in 1953 or 1954; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Around 1954.

Mr. ADLERMAN. To bring in members?

Mr. VALACHI. To bring in members.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Scalice was instrumental in bringing in lots of members?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you name these members?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I can name, we start in with Jimmy Squillante.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Jimmy Jerome?

Mr. VALACHI. I want to take one neighborhood, then I go to another, Jimmy Jerome. Jerry Mancuso. Another kid I know just by Wahoo. His name was identified for him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is Aniello Mancuso "Wahoo"?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. "Chink" Leo.

Then I will take Harlem, then I will go up to the Bronx.

Well, I may have left a name or two out now but I will go to the Bronx. Frank Rocci, Tony the Geep, Mike the Geep.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What were their names again?

Mr. VALACHI. Tony the Geep, Mike the Geep, brothers.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Tony and Mike?

Mr. VALACHI. The Geep. They are brothers. Sedotto is the last name. Blanka brothers. Carmine Camarado, Lutoni. Jimmy Ward.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know Peter Baratta?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know his last name.

Mr. ADLERMAN. "Bull."

Mr. VALACHI. "Bull," that is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Bonfrisco.

Mr. VALACHI. Salvatore Bonfrisco. Jojo and Dudu, which I have already told you.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How much did some of these fellows pay to get into the organization?

Mr. VALACHI. About $40,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How much did Manfredi pay Jojo?

Mr. VALACHI. Them's are the ones I am talking about.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did he pay $40,000?

Mr. VALACHI. Between them $40,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How much did James Mazzie pay?

Mr. VALACHI. That is Jimmy Ward?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. They paid with their business.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They gave him a share of the business?

Mr. VALACHI. That is all. They never saw the business again.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was Scalice murdered?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; he was.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know who murdered him?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, one of these names bears on some other case.

Mr. ADLERMAN. We won't ask you about that. They did pay to get into the organization?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Why would they pay money to come in an organization and become soldiers in an organization?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I am going to tell you. We were stunned. I really can't answer that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You don't know?

Mr. VALACHI. I really can't. Just that they wanted to be recognized. That is the only way I can describe it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were they getting protection?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, once they feel, you know, the word "button men," got around so loose especially in the Bronx and Harlem, well, "They are filthy button men," those are the only descriptions I can give you. They felt they were equal to the tough guys. How else would you explain it?

The CHAIRMAN. They were equal to a tough guy?

Mr. VALACHI. Once they get in, that is the way they feel.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, if they are mobsters they would like to be in the organization?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley—

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I never want to interrupt the counsel if he is moving into something in which he feels he does not wish to be interrupted. Just tell me any time and I will wait.

As you were leaving the top names of the Gambino family, I would like to ask the inspector a question.

Inspector, you said something about an association between Gambino and a man named Montana. This ties in with something which this witness testified to; that is, Valachi, with respect to the fact that in New York he did travel to Buffalo, Utica, we do not know about Rochester, Buffalo and Utica certainly. Now, from your records, what is the relationship that you have between the Gambino family and Montana?

Then we will turn to this witness to see what we can find out about that.

Mr. SHANLEY. It is just confined to observations, Senator, where they have been seen together.

Senator JAVITS. That is a fact, they were seen together?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. May we ask you, sir, about this matter? What do you know about any connection between Montana and one of these families?

Mr. VALACHI. Montana?

Senator JAVITS. John C. Montana.

Mr. VALACHI. And the family?

Senator JAVITS. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, he has been in this family as far back as I can remember, through the years.

Senator JAVITS. Did you perform any of your operations in Buffalo, yourself?

Mr. VALACHI. No, Senator. I am very close with Magaddino in Buffalo. You remember they were, Steve fought with me side by side in the 1930's.

Senator JAVITS. Is Magaddino still in Buffalo?

Mr. VALACHI. He still is in Buffalo.

Senator JAVITS. Is he the boss of Buffalo?

Mr. VALACHI. He still is.

Senator JAVITS. What is his connection with Montana?

Mr. VALACHI. He is the boss. Montana originally was a lieutenant under him.

Senator JAVITS. What do you know about the situation in Utica?

Mr. VALACHI. I met Salvatore Valconi. I went there to straighten out a dispute way back in 1930. I went along with Bobby Doyle. Two of the boys, one is dead and one is with us today, Mike Maione, had some game somewhere near Utica, I don't remember the towns. They had chased them out of the town. When they brought the complaint to us, I and Bobby Doyle went out to Utica and Bobby Doyle knew Vacone. We met a fellow there, the other fellow that there was the dispute about, all I remember his name is Dumiwan. I understand Dumiwan is still out in Utica. You hear that here and there.

Everything was straightened out. They spent 2 weeks entertaining us. They brought us to cabarets. They took care of our cars, they would not let us spend a nickel. They gave us the best of attention.

Senator JAVITS. What kind of racket was being run there that was straightened out?

Mr. VALACHI. It was a crap game.

Senator JAVITS. You did straighten it out?

Mr. VALACHI. We straightened it out, they allowed these kids to have a certain percentage of the game.

Senator JAVITS. Did they take the rest of the percentage?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, they were partners.

Senator JAVITS. No strong-arm stuff was necessary?

Mr. VALACHI. No, these are all friends.

Senator JAVITS. What about Rochester? Did you have any business in Rochester?

Mr. VALACHI. I had nothing in Rochester.

Senator JAVITS. You told us also you were in Binghamton. Did you have any business in Binghamton?

300 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. I was not in Binghamton, Senator. Mike Maione was in Binghamton.

Senator JAVITS. You know nothing about the Binghamton situation?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator JAVITS. There are a number of killings in Binghamton running back to 1942. James Defillo, Grecola, Lampo, Tony Gants. Anything ring a bell?

Mr. VALACHI. No, sir.

Senator JAVITS. One last question. Would you put Montana in any one of these families?

Mr. VALACHI. The Buffalo family.

Senator JAVITS. Mike Leno?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. We have no chart for that.

Mr. VALACHI. No.

The CHAIRMAN. We will have a chart later on.

Senator JAVITS. Is there anything that the witness has stated that you wish to comment on?

Can you confirm any of these facts?

Mr. SHANLEY. In what respect?

Senator JAVITS. The facts he just testified to, with respect to Utica and Buffalo.

Mr. SHANLEY. We have no information on that.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt.

Senator MUNDT. I have a call and have to go to the floor so I would like to ask one question deriving from the fact that when you were taken into the family, Cosa Nostra, you paid nothing to get in and you got nothing out of it much except protection. Is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, in private I will speak to you and tell you how much they took from me.

Senator MUNDT. All right. I would like to get that.

Mr. VALACHI. I will give you that.

Senator MUNDT. The difference being some of these other fellows paid $40,000 to get in?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; in the thirties it was a different story, Senator, not this kind of stuff in the thirties.

Senator MUNDT. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. None of this kind of stuff was ever pulled in the thirties.

Senator MUNDT. I see. in the 1930's. I did not get the word "thirties." Now, this is more up to date.

Mr. VALACHI. As I say, Frank Scalice started commercializing it. He really was the one and everybody in the Cosa Nostra knew that he really started this kind of business.

Senator MUNDT. In other words, the day you are talking about now, this had become a more profitable racket?

Mr. VALACHI. You see, we used the expression "they commercialized it." That is the way we used our expression.

Senator MUNDT. What does that mean?

Mr. VALACHI. That means that they are making a money deal out of it, rather than the way it used to be. Like in the old days, a man had to prove himself to get in. But today if half of them guys have to do something they are liable to drop dead, too. Believe me when I tell you that.

Senator MUNDT. Now, these names of these big families you mentioned here.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. These fellows at the top made a lot of money? Are they pretty wealthy, are they up in the hundreds of thousands, the millionaire class? Take the Genovese family.

Mr. VALACHI. There is lots of wealthy ones there. I would say, I was looking it over. There is about 40 to 50 wealthy ones.

Senator MUNDT. Forty or fifty?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. When you use the word "wealthy," how many dollars are you talking about?

Mr. VALACHI. Close to the million dollar or past the million dollar or half the million dollars.

Senator MUNDT. Close to 40 or 50 of them are close to millionaires?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. On all five families?

Mr. VALACHI. Did you say the whole five families?

Senator MUNDT. I am talking of the Genovese family.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the other ones—no, I didn't look them over. I was looking at the Genovese.

Senator MUNDT. How many in the Genovese family are up in this millionaire class?

Mr. VALACHI. You have about 40 to 50 wealthy ones.

Senator MUNDT. Made it out of racketeering?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. How about the lieutenants? Do they make big money, too?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, lieutenants automatically make money, you know, through different soldiers give them different propositions they have all the chance of making money. They have a hundred percent edge over the soldier. The soldier has to do it, himself, whereas the lieutenant, they bring it to him.

Senator MUNDT. From lieutenant on up, this was a pretty plush business, making a lot of money.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. Soldiers not so good.

Mr. VALACHI. No; a soldier has to build himself up and then if he builds himself up, no matter how big he is, he is still a soldier, but he could be wealthy because they don't change caporegimes every month or every 5 years. No matter how much money he makes, he is still a soldier, but he has the weight. We have an expression, you have money, you have weight. Weight works men's strength.

Senator MUNDT. I thought you were saying "work." It is that Brooklyn accent.

Mr. VALACHI. It is this throat of mine.

Senator MUNDT. Plenty of soldiers were in the chips?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, plenty of soldiers.

Senator MUNDT. You would not know the degree of wealth that came to these other families so much because you were not in them?

302 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. I would know, I could come up with them as I looked them over. You know, look over the charts.

Senator MUNDT. Then I can begin to understand why a man would pay $40,000 to get on in the racket if he has a chance to become a millionaire maybe.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, in this particular case, these two boys I was talking about, they could never make, I mean on their ability, Senator.

My opinion was that Frank made a lot of money with these kids. Frank was thinking maybe these kids will get arrested and they may talk. Frank is a pretty smart fellow, figuring if these fellows know the right and wrong, his chances are better for him that they would not talk. That is my opinion.

Knowing Frank Luciano, you remember I was partners with him. That is why I am telling you now as I am telling you, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I think we were talking about Joe Riccobono. Can you tell us what status he had?

Mr. SHANLEY. Joe Riccobono is called "Staten Island Joe." He has three arrests, one conviction. He was born in 1894 in Italy. He has one weapon arrest. He is very close to Carlo Gambino, Carmine Lombardozi, Joe Profaci, John Oddo. He is in the garment area and he is in narcotics. He recently attempted suicide. He is a person who was treated with great deference by some of these soldiers. He is a kind of sleeper. The fact that he was treated with such respect is what drew our attention to him on this particular occasion. But at the moment, he is sort of retired. He is still in a position of an elderly statesman. He gives advice but we don't see him too much.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In the caporegime of this Gambino family, I notice there are 12 members who are in the caporegime. Do all of them have police records? Are all of them well known to the police?

Mr. SHANLEY. Paul Castellano has two arrests, one conviction, one for robbery. He is in the meat business. He has a meat market. He is related to Carlo Gambino. He is also in the fat rendering business. He was in alcohol. He was a shylock. He is associated with Carmine Valenti. His brother, Peter, is presently arrested for a rather complicated bankruptcy fraud.

Paul Gambino recently was arrested by officers who had him under observation. He attempted to flee from them on the grounds that he thought the officers were assailants who were going to kill him.

Carmine Lombardozi, known as the Doctor, he recently was returned for violation of parole in connection with an assault on an FBI agent. At a gathering, an agent was assaulted by members of the Lombardozi family and father Lombardozi was interrogated in connection therewith.

At the conclusion of the investigation, he was returned for violation of parole.

Art Leo, known as Al Rocco, has 11 arrests and 7 convictions. He is in the drug business. He is 250 on the national narcotic violators list. He is an associate of Mancuso.

Rocco Mazzi, it indicates that he is currently in jail for narcotics. He also was in gambling. He has nine arrests with five convictions.

He has one for gun, one for robbery. He got 12 years in 1959. He is also an associate of John Ormento, "Big John."

Anthony Sedotto, known as "The Geep," he is in gambling, shylocking, and extortion. He has three arrests, one conviction, one of his is for robbery. He was born in 1913 in Italy. Gives his occupation as salesman. He is very strong in bookmaking.

Joe Colazzo, "Gus," he has five arrests, one conviction. One of the arrests was for murder. He is in gambling, labor racketeering, extortion.

The CHAIRMAN. When you speak of labor racketeering, what do you mean by that? What are we to understand?

Mr. SHANLEY. These are situations where either they have sweetheart contracts given out, unions are created—

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, they have contact with labor unions where they enter into agreements with them or with their leaders and get accommodations from them with respect to contracts, working conditions, and so forth?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right, or with respect to nonunion labor.

The CHAIRMAN. I beg your pardon?

Mr. SHANLEY. Or with respect to nonunion labor where they won't have any union.

The CHAIRMAN. Or to prevent a shop from being unionized?

Mr. SHANLEY. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that one racket where they have a shop maybe with protection from unionism, pay some of these folks to prevent the shop from becoming unionized?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. So that is a racket?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. When you say in labor racketeering, they could be engaged in that kind of service?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Would that also apply to strikes, where a strike is threatened?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They might get paid off in order to prevent the strike?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right, or else they will approach the man and tell him if he does not pay off there will be a strike.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, it is a racket of extortion, if they do not pay off there will be a strike. If the strike is on and if you pay off enough, they will stop it?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Carlo Gambino is in a firm which is supposed to be in the labor consulting business. This is his occupation. I don't know what his qualifications are but he is supposed to be able to advise you on your labor problems.

The CHAIRMAN. At least he gets pretty good results.

Mr. SHANLEY. Apparently.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that the STS Co.?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that a labor relations outfit?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is a labor relations outfit.

304 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. They are retained by management to iron out labor disputes?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is it true that some of these operations may be legitimate but some of them you feel may not be legitimate?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Johnny Dio, incidentally, was also in the same business, was he not, a labor relations expert?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Hired by management sometimes to straighten out difficulties with the union?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So, Gambino is doing the same thing, in effect, that Johnny Dio was doing?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right, he is in the same business.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I don't know whether you completed the caporegime. I think you got as far as Joe Colazzo.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Adlerman, could we ask Valachi whether he paid anything to the Dios for helping him out of the labor situation he testified to?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I didn't.

Senator JAVITS. Just as a favor. Did you return the favor to them?

Mr. VALACHI. No, sir, it was just a matter of doing something to help me.

Senator JAVITS. In other words, you felt you had a right to call on him because you were members of the same family?

Mr. VALACHI. He had told me to call him in case I had difficulties.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, isn't that one of the benefits you got out of being in this organization?

Mr. VALACHI. That is the only thing.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Well, and a few other things.

Could you proceed, now?

Mr. SHANLEY. Aniello Dellacroce, he is known as O'Neil. He is in gambling, shylocking, and extortion, and strong arm. He has 10 arrests, 5 convictions. He has one arrest for weapons. He was born in New York City, an associate of Meyer Lansky, and Joe Silesi. He has been involved in floating dice games, gambling, shylocking. He was involved with Al Anastasia in Cuba in gambling and dice.

I would like to point out in these floating dice games that numerous arrests are made in connection with them and the conditions that existed maybe 4 or 5 years ago where money people were found in them is not true today.

Frequently in these arrests years ago, you would find manufacturers and airplane pilots and doctors and like that. But today, as a result of constant activity, thousands of these people have been arrested in games and today there is scruff in them, low-level hoodlums. The large bulk of them is what we classify as common gamblers.

The CHAIRMAN. Sort of professional gamblers?

Mr. SHANLEY. These are professional gamblers.

The CHAIRMAN. As differentiated from money people who would occasionally go in and gamble?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Charles Dongarro, "Rosario"?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 305

Mr. SHANLEY. He has cataracts on his eyes. He is in Windham, N.Y., at the moment. We don't see him much.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about "Petey Pumps," Peter Ferrara?

Mr. SHANLEY. Peter Ferrara is awaiting trial. He is in gambling.

Mr. ADLERMAN. If he is awaiting trial, perhaps we had better not—

Mr. SHANLEY. It is a different case. It would indicate the nature of his activity, he was arrested for gambling. As the officer approached him, he threw some money to the ground, $10,000. He is in policy in Brooklyn. He is also in shylocking, labor racketeering. He had some interest in vending machines.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The last one I think we haven't mentioned is Zappi, Ettore Zappi.

Mr. SHANLEY. Zappi is in shylocking and labor racketeering. He is a neighbor and close associate of Carlo. They handle the unions of the Castro Convertible Co. He has influence in these unions.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I notice among the former caporegime there are people like Jimmy Derone, Vincent Squillante, John Rivolotti or Johnny Roberts, and Armand Raba.

Were these three murdered?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, James Squillante is missing. John Roberts was shot and killed in Brooklyn. Raba is also missing, believed murdered.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, could you tell us something about the Gambino family? In Europe, what is the principal means of the acquisition of wealth by Carlo Gambino?

Mr. VALACHI. He has enough wealth in that family.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How did he make his money?

Mr. VALACHI. Carlo?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Carlo originally, he used to tie up the alcohol years back, every still that operated he would buy off, see, and stack it all up in the warehouse and then make his own price. For instance, say we bought $15 a tin, a tin consists of 5 gallons. By the time he gets through with it and ties it up so, he dries it up, he can sell it for $50 a tin when he is ready to release it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was he also in the World War II with the OPA ration stamps?

Mr. VALACHI. From there, when the ration stamps became a money making proposition, he was one of the wealthiest and they made, between him, Sam Accardi, Sam Stefman from Newark, and his brother Paul, on one deal alone Sam, himself, told me that they made over a million dollars, on one deal alone.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Sam Accardi was in the Genovese family?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, Sam Accardi, the last I knew Sam Accardi was in the Newark family. All of a sudden changes like that were made, too.

The CHAIRMAN. You told us you made some money out of ration stamps.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I made some money. I made about $150,000, myself.

The CHAIRMAN. You said they were genuine stamps.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

306 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. They were not counterfeits?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. How were you able to get genuine stamps?

Mr. VALACHI. You see, Senator, they had a lamp, like, for instance, the gasoline stations or the garages, the fake ones—in the real ones there was an eagle in the paper, a certain lamp will bring out the eagle. In other words, just like the money.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand. You had a way of identifying them to know they were genuine?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not asking that. I am asking how were you able to get them, how did you procure them?

Mr. VALACHI. Really, they came out of the OPA offices. In the beginning, they were robbing safes, the burglars.

The CHAIRMAN. They robbed them and got them by burglarizing?

Mr. VALACHI. In the beginning, yes.

When they caught up with that, they stuck with them in the bank overnight, the OPA offices. Then the OPA members, themselves, was sneaking them out and selling them to individuals.

The CHAIRMAN. Some OPA members were selling them?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Maybe we will ask you more about that in an executive session, but you do know and can testify of your own knowledge, can you, that OPA members did themselves sell them?

Mr. VALACHI. Definitely.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. We will talk about that later. Proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was Gambino in any other businesses?

Mr. VALACHI. Gambino has been in every kind of business, butcher business, lottery, Italian lottery, shylocking business.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Has he been in any legitimate business?

Mr. VALACHI. Legitimate business, I don't know much about.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was he ever in the wholesale meat business?

Mr. VALACHI. I said the butcher's.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know what his operations were in that field?

Mr. VALACHI. All I know is that they were wholesale in meat business. Actually, I don't understand it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you have any information about his operations in the wholesale and retail?

Mr. SHANLEY. Through the Castellanos. They are related to him and they are in the wholesale meat business in a number of cases. They were in fried meat, they were in the Murray Meat. That is the one, I believe, the bankruptcy fraud was perpetrated on.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you give us some details of the operation? Did they commit any frauds in connection with wholesale meat operations?

Mr. SHANLEY. Paul's brother has been arrested for it, among others. The fraud consisted of buying, getting into a firm that supplied meats.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Which had a good reputation?

Mr. SHANLEY. Had a good reputation.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is there a question on it?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 307

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. We will take that up in executive session.

Proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, do you know anything of the activities of Riccobono?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe Riccobono?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. I know that Joe Riccobono is in the garment center, too. Actually, I don't know too much about Joe Riccobono. He is from downtown. He was a lieutenant. Why I say "he was," I understand he is sick now.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Arthur Leo, what was his business interest?

Mr. VALACHI. Is that "Chink" Leo?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. He had some kind of card game, it is sort of a Spanish game. I forget the name.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. A Spanish game. I forget the name. In other words, they cut, they don't gamble.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that Barbutz?

Mr. VALACHI. It sounds like that. I was not too familiar with it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Where is that run, in Harlem?

Mr. VALACHI. They were running that in Harlem, Yorkville, wherever they could get a place. They moved it around.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is there a lot of money made in that game?

Mr. VALACHI. There is lots and lots of money. Cutting, without any chances, you know. They take a certain percentage out of the jackpot. I don't even know how it operates.

I have been up there watching play but I never did understand the game.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Rocco Mazzi?

Mr. VALACHI. Rocco Mazzi?

Mr. ADLERMAN. He is a lieutenant.

Mr. VALACHI. A lieutenant, yes. He was fooling around with junk in narcotics. Junk. I don't know of any business.

Mr. ADLERMAN. His field was mostly narcotics?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did some of these soldiers make a lot of money?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Anthony Plate?

Mr. VALACHI. Anthony Plate has a different numbers business that is altogether different from the regular number business. You see, he has what you call, or he builds them up. He puts up a store on the West Side. You see, the West Side now is a colored neighborhood. He puts them in business and he has maybe about eight or nine of these stores. When they go to playing in these stores, the banker collects dollar for dollar. In other words, if it is a hundred dollar play, they get all of the hundred dollars. They have no runners they give 20 percent or 30 percent. That is the strength.

He would put on a salary, you see. And he said, himself, he was making $5,000 a week.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I wonder if we could go to the next chart, the Magliocco chart—chart D?

(150)

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley, on the Magliocco chart, this was known originally as the Profaci family; is that correct?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was this prepared in the same manner, in the same form as the other charts were prepared, based on very much the same information?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, Mr. Profaci, Giuseppe Profaci died a natural death?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is there any indication to you who the successor has been?

Mr. SHANLEY. It appears to be Joseph Magliocco.

The CHAIRMAN. How long since Profaci died?

Mr. SHANLEY. In 1959, I believe—1962.

The CHAIRMAN. A year or two ago?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you tell us something about the background or the activities of Giuseppe Magliocco, "Joe Malyak"?

Mr. SHANLEY. The overall group shows 319 arrests overall. They have an average arrest here of nine per man; one out of three have been arrested for homicide; one out of one have been arrested for dangerous weapons; one out of three have been arrested for narcotics; one out of one arrested for gambling; two out of three arrested for felonious assault.

The high man has 29 arrests. The low man has one arrest.

Joseph Magliocco attended the meeting in Cleveland. There was a meeting in Cleveland which had great significance in organized crime about 1928 or 1929.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Similar to the Apalachin meeting?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes. Some 23 people were apprehended there with guns, arrested on suspicion. I believe they were convicted and fined. Joe Magliocco was there and Joe Profaci.

Magliocco was born in Italy in 1898. Entered the United States in 1914. He was naturalized in 1926. He has three arrests and two convictions. He lives in East Islip. He has a residence also in Brooklyn. He was associated years ago in the bootlegging business. He has arrests for bootlegging. He since then has gone into the liquor business. He was in Sunland Beverages. As a consequence of the Apalachin meeting, he lost his license in the alcohol beverage business.

He is a stockholder in Ward Trading, which is a rather large complex holding company. It has a number of very worthwhile wholesale liquor companies.

We believe that Magliocco still maintains an interest in these companies, Alpine Wine, Peelers. These are some of the biggest companies in the State in regard to the liquor distribution and numerous investigations have been conducted with vigor by the State authorities but it is very difficult to prove this with the complex holdings that they have set up.

The CHAIRMAN. In this family, I believe there are 37 on the chart; is that correct?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Eighteen of the 37 are identified by Valachi and 19 of them are not identified by him. Is that correct?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Senator JAVITS. Could we ask a question about this family? Witness Valachi has testified to the effect that this seems to be a separate empire, Brooklyn and Long Island. What does the New York Police Department say about that so far as this particular situation of family?

He testified, as I recall it, that they were left alone, to operate for themselves.

Is this the family who, according to your record, are the people who run the rackets in Brooklyn and Long Island?

Mr. SHANLEY. We feel that basically there are some indications that by reason of geography, they would have control of certain areas, but we would not go so far as to say this is absolute. We feel they operate more in areas. I believe that the witness substantiated our feeling along these lines when he stated they would not interfere with each other particularly.

I don't think there is any absolute control, that the Maglioccos have Brooklyn or some other family has New York or Queens or like that.

It is operation more in areas, that these people appear to be very strong in the beverage business more so than anybody else, whereas other groups seem to be quite strong in the garment business, or businesses that come from clothing or trucking.

These, of course, will touch all five boroughs and the metropolitan area generally. I don't think it is done strictly on a territorial jurisdiction proposition, it is more a question of area.

Senator JAVITS. Are there any particular major companies that this is tied up with or not? I do not want you to give any names because that would not be fair at all.

Mr. SHANLEY. These people are in the major companies in New York State. It is a well known situation, it has been investigated any number of times.

Senator JAVITS. May we ask the witness, Valachi, Mr. Chairman, about that?

Will you relate, Mr. Valachi, your testimony which you have been giving here as to Magliocco? Is that the one you referred to as being let alone in Brooklyn and Long Island?

Mr. VALACHI. What I said let alone, I am talking about the Gallos.

Senator JAVITS. You gave testimony on this point.

Mr. VALACHI. In plain English, they had a war between themselves. Being Profaci, himself, was deadly wrong, in the wrong by shaking down soldiers, is what caused this trouble to develop. In that case, the commission is not backing them up. It is letting them handle their own affairs.

For instance, Profaci did not practice what he preached as he preached to me in the thirties.

In the Pelham Parkway apartment, he used to tell me about the master crowd, how they used to shake down the soldiers. I find out to my amazement at West Street, I mean the house of detention, that he was shaking these soldiers down up to $1,800, even if they went out to commit a burglary he shook them down. That is what caused all this.

Senator JAVITS. The Profaci you are talking about is the same group?

Mr. VALACHI. The same. He only died less than a year ago. I don't know that it is a year. I know he died while I was——

Senator JAVITS. What was the date that you were in the house of detention, the one you are just testifying to?

Mr. VALACHI. Around 1961 is when I met the boys there.

Senator JAVITS. 1961?

Mr. VALACHI. 1961.

Senator JAVITS. Is that the latest date of your information on this particular family, 1961?

Mr. VALACHI. At the time, what I am referring to, there were 125 of them pulled away, since Frank Costello got talking to Junior, I forget his name all the time, I know him as Junior—I don't know if this is 1961 or 1962, I don't remember, but I think most likely it was 1961, since I saw them together I predicted that Frank is going to talk Junior into pulling away from the Gallo boys. Sure enough, when Junior got out on bail the first time he was away from Profaci together with the Gallo boys.

The second time he goes out on bail and he comes back in jail again, he didn't tell me but other members told me, he had pulled away from the Gallos.

Is that what you are referring to, Senator?

Senator JAVITS. I do not know all the details.

Mr. VALACHI. I will come to that pretty soon, not now. Maybe by tomorrow I will be in that subject, sir.

Senator JAVITS. I wanted you to identify your testimony here to have the beginning with the family which is now being testified to by Inspector Shanley. You have done that. I would just like to ask Inspector Shanley if there is anything he wishes to add in view of this explanation.

Mr. SHANLEY. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Mr. ADLERMAN. In the caporegime of the Magliocco family and the underbosses, could you quickly cover who they are and briefly state their record?

The CHAIRMAN. Quickly if you can.

Mr. SHANLEY. Salvator Mussachio, known as "Sally the Shiek," he has 22 arrests and 1 conviction. He is related by marriage to the Maglioccos. He was in the fish business—claimed to be in the fish business. He also claimed to be a barber. He uses an automobile that is registered to a bakery. We have never been able to ascertain what his duties are in the bakery. He has arrests as a bookmaker at the track. He was a suspect in the slaying of two people in 1938. He has been in the company of Frank "Cheech" Livorsi and Chantz Segal. He had two tables at the Tacco-Profaci wedding.

His initial history would indicate he was in bootlegging. It does appear while under observation at the Magliocco's home and the Profaci house, he was arrested on May 6, 1963, for a gun. This occurred when there was information that there might be some sort of a shooting in the area. The police had the place under observation. They observed that car which is registered to a bakery. They knew that Mussachio was using it. They went over there. They could see there was a gun on the floor of the car. They waited until he came back. He was arrested and he is awaiting trial on the gun.

Sebastiano Aloï, "Buster," he has 12 arrests and 3 convictions. He was arrested for guns and for murder. He is in gambling. He is the owner of, at least he is an owner of record, I believe, of the Duke Demolition, a firm that deals in tearing down buildings. He is the operator of a large policy bank. This is an interesting bank. He was recently arrested by the police. It is actually an office, the witness refers to it as an office.

We made a chart to find out how far the lower echelon would be away from a man like Aloï. We figured in order to reach Aloï, you would have to penetrate 13 levels to get to Aloï.

To get to the man who would talk to Aloï about his account in this policy operation, you would have to go through 12 levels. This is the difficulty in it.

When I speak of these men being in gambling, they are well removed from it and insulated in this instance by 13 or 14 levels.

Simone Andolino, he has three arrests, one conviction. He appears to be in policy also, gambling.

Salvatore Badalamenti, he has four arrests and three convictions. He was a partner in a trucking company in the garment area. He was also in a music company. He is close to Tony Bender and Vince Mauro now in jail. He is suspected of gambling and the garment area rackets.

Senator JAVITS. Before you leave that name, Inspector, what do you mean he was in a music company? This is something I have asked about before.

Mr. SHANLEY. He showed as a partner in the Caruso Music. They were record distributors.

Senator JAVITS. Do you know anything about that, Valachi?

Mr. VALACHI. No; I don't, Senator.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Allright.

Mr. SHANLEY. Leo Carlino. He was born in 1897 in Italy. He has two arrests, one for gun. He is in the dress business, also in produce. He is a close associate of Joe Profaci, John Oddo, Anthony Carafola. He also is in shylocking.

Joe Colombo, also known as Joseph Lefore, he is a close associate of John Frances and Johnny Oddo. He has three arrests. He operates floating dice games.

John Franzese, he has used the name "John Collalo." He has 12 arrests, 2 convictions. He is suspected of being in gambling, shylocking, being strong arm, counterfeiting, extortion. This man is considered a very strong comer in this particular family, very aggressive. He has a crew around him which includes Freddie Nonnos, Deluca, Johnny Irish Matera, they are not mentioned on these charts but they are part of the group below the level of a soldier.

Nicholas Forlano is known as "Jiggs." He is also a very important personage in this particular operation. He is a notorious shylock.

He has been in gambling. He has eight arrests, three convictions. He did time for drugs. He is supposed to have holdings in Florida. He was associated with Carmine Forseco and Domishacks and Monreno in an assault 6 months later in the Copacabana. He is estimated to have almost a million dollars out in shylocking. The brains behind him, although he does not let them know, is considered to be a fellow named Ruby Stein. He is also associated with Billy Masca, William Shepherd, Mickey Weeka. These people are in gambling.

Johnny Oddo, "Johnny Bath Beach," he has 20 arrests, 7 convictions. Arrested twice for murder. He has a business of records, the Valloflocks in Brooklyn. He is in gambling and shylocking. He is currently under deportation order. He is closely associated with Joe Levote and Bonzera.

"The Chief," who is mentioned here, has 29 arrests, 3 convictions. He was born in 1897 in Italy. He is a close associate of Carmine Laclose, Joe Oddo. He is in bookmaking, loan sharking. In 1933 he was involved in a murder interrogation. He was questioned in the death of James Bianco in 1958.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector, I don't want to get into the Gallo fight, the Gallo-Profaci fight at this time, we will probably cover that tomorrow. I just want to make note that in this chart the soldiers in there include "Kid Blast", Albert Gallo, Jr., "Crazy Joey," Joe Gallo and Lawrence "Larry" Gallo.

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You are familiar with their rackets, are you not?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Forlano is also involved in this Gallo war, is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The others, of course, all are?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. We can probably get into that tomorrow. I would like now to go into the Bonanno family.

Senator JAVITS. Before we go into that, can we clear up something about Utica with the witness Valachi?

He mentioned two names. I would like to be sure that they are correct because it is most important that identities be very clear.

According to my assistant here, you mentioned the names of Salvatore Falcone, is that right? Will you give us the other name you mentioned?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, all I know is Damiani.

Senator JAVITS. Can you spell that for us?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I can't.

Senator JAVITS. D-a-m-i-a-n-i?

Mr. VALACHI. That sounds right. Damiani. That is the way it is expressed in Italian.

Senator JAVITS. What does it mean in Italian?

Mr. VALACHI. That is his name in Italian.

Senator JAVITS. But no other name?

Mr. VALACHI. That is the way I met him.

Senator JAVITS. Falcone and Damiani?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JAVITS. You are sure about Falcone?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 313

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. And you are sure about Damiani?

Mr. VALACHI. They called him Tontera. That means Salvatore in Italian.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further on this family?

We have one more family to cover. Let us see if we can cover it rather expeditiously.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This family chart, was prepared in the same manner, the same form on the basis of the same manner in which the other charts were prepared?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Will you proceed, then to describe the activity of Joe Bonanno nad the lieutenants of the family? (Chart E.)

(151)

Mr. SHANLEY. The overall arrests in this group amounts to 11. This comes out to an average of five per man. One out of every four has been arrested for homicide, one out of every two for dangerous weapons, one out of three for narcotics, one out of seven for gambling, one out of two for assault.

The top man has 13 arrests. The low man has one arrest.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe there are 21 on the chart, is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-one names?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Of those Valachi has identified 17 and 4 he has failed to identify, is that correct?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. SHANLEY. Joe Bonanno was born in Italy in 1905. He currently has an address in Tucson, Ariz. He was vice president of the Hilltop Hotel in Fort Lee. He is alleged to own a parking lot in Tucson. He started out in the early years in 1933-34. He was part owner of an undertaking shop.

In 1934, he was the vice president of the Brunswick Laundry. In 1937, he was a partner in the Morgan Coke Co.

The other partner, Philip Rapper, was DOA in the gutter in Brooklyn with a scalp wound.

In 1940-42, he was in the B. & D. Coke Co.

In 1952 and 1953 he went into Colorado Cheese in Arizona.

He was a suspect in the Carol Fresco homicide with Frank Galante and Larry Folme.

He entered the country illegally in Florida from Cuba in 1924. He left the country in 1938 to legalize his entry.

In 1935, he made petition for citizenship. He has been described as a member of the hierarchy of the underworld.

In 1924, he resided with Pietre Bonventre. Bonventre was described as a member of the underworld at that time.

In 1952, he was questioned about the Mangano murder and disappearance of the other man, Gano.

In 1950, we had an arrest of a man named Adomo in California. They found on the person of this man an address book containing the names of Joe Bananas, Tony Accardi, Murphy Humphries, Charles Shavelle, Profaci, and others.

(151) Fra le pagine 312-313 del documento originale è inserita una carta che — contrassegnata con la lettera I — è pubblicata, insieme alle altre carte, nella Parte Terza del presente tomo. (N.d.r.)

314 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. Those people are located in Tampa and in Chicago, is that right?

Mr. SHANLEY. I believe Blackwell Tucco is in Detroit.

The Colorado Cheese Co. was investigated for fraud against the Government in 1953.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you take the under bosses and the consiglieri?

Mr. SHANLEY. Carmine Galante was born in the United States in 1912. He has eight arrests, two for homicide.

He was very strong in the gambling syndicate in Canada. They had an American operation up there.

Galante was supposed to make policy there. He was connected in this particular operation with the Reed Cortner combine. He was proprietor of the Bonfine Restaurants in Montreal at that time. They had jukebox interests. He also was in vending.

He was arrested—at the age of 20 he was arrested as a result of a gunfight following a stickup in which a patrolman was killed.

Four months later, police interrupted another stickup under the same circumstances, and this time another gunfight ensued. One of the officers was shot but Galante was apprehended. He got 12 years for that.

He was a fugitive after the indictment of Vito Genovese and 35 others. He was found hiding out in Barnegat Bay. He is currently in jail for violation of the narcotics laws.

Joseph Notaro, "Little Joe," has two arrests, one for transporting stolen property. He is an associate of Carmine Galante, Mike Angelina. He is in gambling, criminally receiving, and alcohol. Mike Angelina is deceased. He was considered to run a message center in a jewelry shop he had.

James Colletti, alias "Black Jim," is in criminal receiving and alcohol tax. He is a Colorado representative.

Mike Consolo, "Michael Bruno," is suspected of being active in narcotics. He was suspected, also, of being a courier to Canada in connection with narcotics.

Nicholas Marangello, also known as "Eye Glasses"—he frequently drove Joe Bonanno. Michael Sabella, he is suspected of being in narcotics. We have two from Rochester here, the two Valentes, Frank and Costenze.

Senator JAVITS. I would like to ask him a question about those last two, if I may, Mr. Chairman, at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. You might ask him now.

Senator JAVITS. Can I have Valachi's attention?

You identified Costenze and Frank Valenti. They are both in Rochester. You said you had not been to Rochester. Will you tell us how you made that identification?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know the difference between Rochester and Buffalo. I call Rochester "Buffalo." To me it is the same. I know that Rochester is right next to Buffalo.

Senator JAVITS. Do you know these two Valentes?

Mr. VALACHI. Tom Valente?

Senator JAVITS. Frank Valente and Costenze Valente. You identified them both as being members of the Bonanno family.

Mr. VALACHI. I met them one time or another. This is some of these are identified. If you know anything about them, I would not know anything like I met the under boss when I was in Canada in 1960.

Senator JAVITS. Who was the under boss?

Mr. VALACHI. He has a big name. He is a short fellow. I would have to see the name to remember.

Senator JAVITS. The one underboss there is named Galente.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Carmine Galente.

Mr. VALACHI. Are you talking about Buffalo or New York?

Senator JAVITS. I am talking about the Bonanno family. Do you know whom you met the two Valentines with in Rochester?

Mr. VALACHI. I am pretty sure it was through Albert Agueci.

Senator JAVITS. That is all you know, you met them and they were a member of this family?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator JAVITS. Tell us one other thing. Do you know anything about Bonanno's relationship to the Carlo Tresca killing?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't, Senator.

Senator JAVITS. Do you know anything about that killing at all?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't.

Senator JAVITS. I note that there is considerable talk about narcotics here. One out of three, for example, the inspector said, was charged with narcotics violations. As far as you know among these, the narcotics end of this racket, was that as dealers or users or in what capacity were these people involved in narcotics?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, it would always be as dealer, never as user.

Senator JAVITS. Always a dealer?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. Always at a top level with other people?

Mr. VALACHI. A man in between but never a user.

Senator JAVITS. You used the expression a while ago, when you were "on the streets," do you remember using that expression?

Mr. VALACHI. When I was on the streets?

Senator JAVITS. You used that expression?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. To what extent did you use the telephone in your business?

Mr. VALACHI. What kind of business, Senator?

Senator JAVITS. In the particular enterprise you were engaged in, shylocking, various other enterprises you were engaged in, gambling, et cetera.

Mr. VALACHI. Quite often, Senator, abbreviated all the time the best way we can.

Senator JAVITS. In other words, there was some code with the other partner?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. You used the telephone often?

Mr. VALACHI. Quite often.

Senator JAVITS. Were you worried about the wires being tapped?

Mr. VALACHI. We had a way of checking.

Senator JAVITS. What way did you have to check?

Mr. VALACHI. We had somebody that knows somebody check. I give my number to somebody and somebody would have a check. I would not even know he was getting it checked by. He would tell me, "Your phone is OK," or "You had a tap for 40 days," or in that way.

Senator JAVITS. So that you would be very aware of taps?

Mr. VALACHI. As I say, we would talk in abbreviation. You can never make out what we were talking about.

Senator JAVITS. You would also be very much aware that the wire could be tapped at times?

Mr. VALACHI. Sometimes yes, and sometimes no.

Senator JAVITS. Well, do you know of any times—

Mr. VALACHI. Most of the time there was no tap.

Senator JAVITS. But you took precautions against tapping?

Mr. VALACHI. Always did.

Senator JAVITS. Both in what you said and in trying to find out whether the wires were tapped?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further on this man?

Mr. ADLERMAN. No. I would like to have Inspector Shanley offer into the record the police records on, I think the Genovese chart.

The CHAIRMAN. You put them in on the Genovese family, I believe. We have none on the others.

Will you submit the police records of the other families?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Mrs. Clerk, let them be identified as exhibit Nos. 13 A, B, C, D, so as to identify them with the particular family.

They will be received and so marked for identification for reference only.

(Documents were marked "Exhibit Nos. 13 A, B, C, D, and E" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. ADLERMAN. I would like to offer the FBI records through Mr. Donald O'Donnell.

The CHAIRMAN. You do solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before this subcommittee will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. State your name and identify yourself with respect to this committee.

TESTIMONY OF DONALD F. O'DONNELL

Mr. O'DONNELL. Donald F. O'Donnell, chief counsel, for this subcommittee.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you the FBI records of those who have been identified as members of these different families?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Senator, I have most of the FBI records that have been furnished to the subcommittee upon specific request by us.

The CHAIRMAN. By the FBI?

Mr. O'DONNELL. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. You have those records here?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have them separated as to families?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I have them separated as to families as has been testified to and on the Genovese family we have 124 FBI records of the 143 on the chart.

Of the Lucchese family, we have 43 records of the 47 who are on the chart.

Of the Gambino family, we have 69 records of the 80 who are on the chart.

Of the Magliocco family, we have 32 of the 37 on the chart.

Of the Bonanno family, we have 16 of the 21 who are on the chart.

The CHAIRMAN. Let these be received and be made exhibit No. 14 for reference, and identified as 14A, 14B, 14C, 14D, and so on, so that they will relate to the charts.

(Documents referred to were marked "Exhibit Nos. 14A, 14B, 14C, 14D, 14E" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further? If not, that will conclude our testimony for today but Senator Mundt wishes to make a statement.

Senator MUNDT. First, I have a question, then I will make a statement.

The percentages of the members of this family, all five families, who have been involved in the narcotics racket, because primarily and basically the main thrust of these hearings is in the field of narcotics—one out of two of the Genovese family have been in the narcotics business, one out of three in the Gambino family, and these are the people who have been arrested, there probably have been more. Three out of five of the Lucchese family have been arrested for narcotics. One out of three of the Profaci family, and one out of three of the Bonanno family.

Now, you have told us that the big bosses are always a little bit reluctant about having these families get into the narcotics business because they had some kind of dread or fear that they might be picked up, get a pretty severe sentence. It would indicate that the fact so many did—there was quite an army of narcotics racketeers—the fact that so many did go in must indicate that it was in this field that they could make the biggest profit if they got by with it. Is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. The appeal was there?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the statement, I have a telegram here from the president of the United Italian-American League of New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, the telegram will be read and received as a statement, not as evidence.

Senator MUNDT. This grew out of some complaints in some areas that the hearings were casting reflections upon Americans of Italian ancestry. This telegram is signed by the New York County assistant district attorney, formerly New York County assistant district attorney, and president of the New York City Tax Division, Paul P. Rao, Jr.

DEAR SENATOR: I thought that you and the other Senators on the subcommittee should be informed of our league's statement prior to its release to the press. A copy of this statement is being sent by mail to you.

New York City Tax Commissioner Paul P. Rao, Jr., former New York County assistant district attorney, issued a statement following special meeting of the executive committee of the United Italian-American League, Inc., of which he is the national president. Commissioner Rao stated, "We regret that there have been some who have irresponsibly accused the Justice Department and the U.S. Senate subcommittee of maintaining a political smear against Italo-Americans." "This attitude," he said, "presumptuously questions the intention and integrity of the Senators of the committee, both Democrats and Republicans alike, as well as recklessly shows distrust of our legislative system."

Commissioner Rao asserted, "They who consider an exposé of racketeers dealing in narcotics, illegal, gambling, prostitution, and murder, as being ethnically prejudicial, are either arguing illogically or are selfishly being motivated by their desire for personal publicity." He added, "We should not peremptorily dismiss the functions of the committee with diversionary cries of persecution and thereby mislead the millions of decent Americans of Italian origin who sincerely feel a personal obligation over the recent revelations, because of the coincidence of racial identification."

Commissioner Rao referred to the "enormous cultural contribution of Italy, from ancient Rome to the giants of the Renaissance, as well as the individual accomplishments of countless Italo-Americans in all fields of endeavor." "We welcome," he observed, "the efforts of the committee to eliminate gangsterism, especially when involving individuals of Italian extraction." He noted, "The public, however, fully realizes that other notorious names in the annals of the underworld clearly indicate that no ethnic group has a monopoly on crime."

Commissioner Rao asked, "How can we eliminate criminal elements from our society if we are unenlightened as to their evil activities?" He remarked, "As a prosecutor I learned that full disclosure deprives the underworld of two of their greatest assets, individual anonymity and collective secrecy." Rao emphasizes, "that the intent and effect of these hearings are obviously to be distinguished from the TV programs and movies which create stereotypes of Italo-Americans as criminals."

Commissioner Rao concluded, "These hearings are rendering the valuable public service of demonstrating the need for new legislation to facilitate Federal and local prosecution."

Respectfully, Commissioner Paul P. Rao, Jr., Oxford 52285, 33 West 42d Street, New York City.

As a member of the committee, I wanted to commend the Commissioner for his constructive and patriotic statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Very good.

Any further statement? If not, the committee will stand in recess until 10:30 in the morning.

(Members of the subcommittee present at the time of the recess were Senators McClellan and Mundt.)

(Whereupon, at 4:40 p.m., the subcommittee recessed to reconvene at 10:30 a.m., Wednesday, October 9, 1963.)

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, there had been considerable dealing in narcotics among the members of the five families, or the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And it reached a point where the heat of the narcotics prosecutions, and the investigations and the publicity, caused a rule to be laid down by Frank Costello while he was boss of one of the families?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; in 1948.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was the rule that he laid down?

Mr. VALACHI. No narcotics. You are in serious trouble if you were arrested for narcotics. You had to prove to them—you have another trial after having a trial with the Government.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You would have a trial by the Cosa Nostra or the family. Now, this related to Frank Costello's rule, and that was what is now the Genovese family at that time, the Luciano or Costello family.

Mr. VALACHI. In 1948; yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, did this apply to the other families at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. No, it did not.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, did there come a time when the other families laid down the rule?

Mr. VALACHI. After Anastasia died in 1957, all families were notified—no narcotics.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who laid down that rule?

Mr. VALACHI. That was a rule that was discussed by the bosses themselves.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was that the consigliere and the bosses themselves made that rule?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right; that covered all families.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was the narcotics one of the principal money-makers for the members of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, it was.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And was this rule disregarded to a large extent?

Mr. VALACHI. You mean there were lots of people in business?

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is right.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did even some of the bosses violate the rule?

Mr. VALACHI. Well certainly, especially Albert Anastasia.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And how about some of the bosses? Did they get the profits of the narcotic trade even though they, themselves, may not have been involved directly?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, they were involved with their soldiers.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, they entered into an arrangement, the soldiers would handle the narcotics, and make the purchases, and have the deal, and they would get the profits?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who were some of the bosses that were involved in that?

Mr. VALACHI. Vito Genovese and Albert Anastasia, as far as I know.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was the reason why the members, the soldiers and so forth, and even some of the bosses, disregarded the rule?

Mr. VALACHI. Because of the moneymaking, the profit in it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. There was big money?

Mr. VALACHI. They would chance their own lives.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And there was a conflict between the desire to make money and the desire to obey the rules; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, they just defied the rules.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They defied the rules?

Mr. VALACHI. That is the way I can explain it that way.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, do you know what happened in Chicago?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What happened in Chicago?

Mr. VALACHI. They had made a rule around that same time, but they gave their soldiers $200 a week to stop selling narcotics, and that is what the soldiers in New York were mumbling about. At least in Chicago they gave you $200 a week; over here they wanted you to stop. That is the attitude the soldiers in New York took at that time.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, if they had subsidized the soldiers in New York, and given them $200 a week, they would have stopped the traffic?

Mr. VALACHI. They would have accomplished something like Chicago did.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But in Chicago they do pay them $200 a week to keep them out of the traffic?

Mr. VALACHI. While I was in jail I heard that they raised it to $250.

Senator MUSKIE. May I ask a question there?

Now, as I understand your testimony yesterday or the day before, there were 2,000 to 2,500 members of Cosa Nostra in New York; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUSKIE. Do you have any knowledge as to whether the membership in Chicago is similar in size?

Mr. VALACHI. No. I say in Chicago, I estimated to the best of my knowledge about 150.

Senator MUSKIE. About 150?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUSKIE. So the $200 a week, then——

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, that wasn't for all of the soldiers, Senator. That was for the ones who were dealing in narcotics, and they knew who was dealing in narcotics. I didn't mean to say it was for all of the members. They knew who was dealing before they made the law. Among themselves they knew.

Senator MUSKIE. Well, how did they decide which members should get paid and which members should not?

Mr. VALACHI. Because the ones that were dealing in it were told to stop.

Senator MUSKIE. But if this were to be applied to New York, for example, as I understand it, the rule that was imposed by Mr. Costello in 1948 affected only the Vito Genovese family.

Mr. VALACHI. At that time; yes, sir.

Senator MUSKIE. How many members of that family were there at the time?

Mr. VALACHI. About 450.

Senator MUSKIE. So that before that time, had all soldiers been involved in the narcotics traffic?

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, no; I didn't say all of the soldiers.

Senator MUSKIE. How many of them were?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I can't estimate, but I would say there were no more than about 75 tops, maybe 100.

Senator MUSKIE. And they felt that they ought to get reimbursed as the Chicago soldiers were?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, naturally, once they heard Chicago was doing it that way, how was a soldier going to feel? It was a natural reaction. After all, they do collect about $11,000 a month from the dues.

Senator MUSKIE. If the soldiers who had previously dealt in narcotics had been paid, how would the other soldiers have felt about it?

322 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Well——

Senator MUSKIE. Wouldn't they have been tempted to get in the narcotics racket?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't think Chicago had any trouble at all. I don't think that they tried any phoney business. They are pretty honorable. You know, you can't lie to these people, Senator. You can't go over there and declare yourself you are doing something that they know you are not doing. As I say, they knew who was operating, and they knew who was not.

Senator MUSKIE. Now, let us get back to New York. The other four families did not adopt the rule at the same time?

Mr. VALACHI. No, they did not.

Senator MUSKIE. How long before they adopted the rule?

Mr. VALACHI. In 1957, Albert Anastasia—nobody could talk to him.

Senator MUSKIE. How did the soldiers in the Genovese family feel about the fact that the other families could deal in narcotics?

Mr. VALACHI. We felt like they were making all of the money. Yes, sir; I am giving you the reaction as we took it from the street.

Senator MUSKIE. And you didn't like that?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, naturally we didn't like it.

Senator MUSKIE. If the Chicago practice had been adopted in New York, what would have been the source of money to pay the soldiers as much as $200 a week?

Mr. VALACHI. If I am on the right question that you asked me, I was told, and this is from reliable sources, that Chicago was taxing some certain businesses that they have in Chicago, and I wouldn't know just which businesses, and that helped to pay these members to keep them out of the narcotics. Now, if they were caught after getting that kind of payment, there was no chance at all for them. They would pay with their lives.

Now, up to the time when I left the street, I heard a couple were caught, and taken care of, Senator. I could tell you what I know from my experience.

Senator MUSKIE. When you say "a couple were caught," you mean in Chicago?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, even after that $250 or $200 was issued, a few were caught, and they paid with their lives. Now, I could tell you what circulated between us, Senator. That is all I can tell you.

Senator MUSKIE. In the Genovese family, what was the penalty for breaking the rule?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the Genovese family was the same penalty. If you were caught and they had the evidence on you, you were dead. For instance, like Joe DeMaca, that was the main reason why he was eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. Who?

Mr. VALACHI. Joe DeMaca.

Senator MUSKIE. He paid the penalty for violating the narcotics rule?

Mr. VALACHI. As far as I know, that is the only one I know of.

Senator MUSKIE. Do you know whether the rule is still in effect?

Mr. VALACHI. Up to the time I left Atlanta, yes, sir; it is still in effect.

Senator MUSKIE. Is it observed?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 323

Mr. VALACHI. Is it what?

Senator MUSKIE. Is it carried out?

Mr. VALACHI. Is it carried out? Well, it is supposed to be carried out, but there is always somebody sneaking.

Senator MUSKIE. But the penalty hasn't been imposed, or applied, to anybody else?

Mr. VALACHI. Most of them are in jail themselves, and I don't know really what is going on anymore now. There are so many indictments, everything is upside down nowadays.

Senator MUSKIE. You broke the rule, didn't you? That is why you went—this is why you brought all of this trouble down on your head?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUSKIE. Others were breaking the rule at the same time?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUSKIE. With respect to this one rule, the family wasn't very effective in imposing discipline, was it?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. No.

Senator JAVITS. Would the Senator yield for one question arising out of his questions? I have others that I want to ask a little later in the morning, but you spoke, Mr. Valachi, of $11,000 in dues. That is the first time I have heard that and perhaps you have testified to it before.

Mr. VALACHI. That applies to the $25 a month.

Senator JAVITS. Which who pays?

Mr. VALACHI. The soldiers, and everybody else.

Senator JAVITS. In the Genovese family?

Mr. VALACHI. That is my family.

Senator JAVITS. And you pay $25 a month, too?

Mr. VALACHI. Up to 1959.

Senator JAVITS. Who was it paid to?

Mr. VALACHI. My lieutenant.

Senator JAVITS. What was that?

Mr. VALACHI. Tony Bender.

Senator JAVITS. As far as you know, everybody paid $25 a month as dues?

Mr. VALACHI. I know positively.

(At this point Senator Mundt entered the hearing room.)

Senator JAVITS. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. When Genovese came back in 1946, he came back to stand trial; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, he stood trial for that murder.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He was released. I think we went over that testimony before, and he was arrested after the witness La Tempa died; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. You mean Peter La Tempa. I don't remember just how long it was, but I don't remember any trial, Mr. Adlerman. I don't remember any trial at all. It was just dismissed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Well, now, when he came back, he had been underboss, hadn't he?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Before that?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

324 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. Costello was then boss of the family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, the boss.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And did he find when he came back that the men that he had been associated with on the lower level were not doing well financially, and that the big bosses were doing well?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, when he came back, he was mumbling and grumbling and he was giving hell to Tony Bender, as "You allow these people to sew up everything and tie up everything," but Tony told him, well, he told him to take the worst of things, so that is what I have been doing. Well, he said, "I didn't tell you to get chased out of Duke's." In other words, they hang out at that time in Palisades, across the way from Palisades Park, a restaurant called Duke's, and that is where Willie Moretti hung out and where they all used to hang out. The only time I went there was when I was put on the carpet.

I would meet up to 100 members and there was a restaurant downstairs and there was a room upstairs, and another room upstairs.

Mr. ADLERMAN. At that point, did Genovese feel that Moretti was blocking his rise to power?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, he felt that Moretti, Albert, and Frank—and I don't remember whether Joe Adonis was included in this, but he felt that they had everything sewed up.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did he advocate or did he have anything to do to agitate the murder of Moretti?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I would say around about 1949, in around that time, we, us, you see us boys in the village actually belonged with Vito Genovese. In other words, what I want to explain to you, if Vito Genovese had any trouble, he depended on Tony Bender and his crew, which is us. Second, Mike Miranda, and third, Richy Nowak. That was his stronghold. Willie Moretti had lots of men, about 40 or 50 men in Jersey, throughout Jersey. Some of them were members and some of them were not, but they still were with Willie Moretti. He was like independent, and he had his own little army, and we expressed it that way, the way we thought.

Rumors started getting around between us that Vito is sore, and there is no money, and the agitating about Willie losing his mind, with syphilitic, but remember that he also lost his mind some years before that, and it even came out on the Kefauver committee. Costello was asked about it, and Costello explained how they took care of Willie Moretti, at the time before. But now they are talking about hitting him. That is about 2 years before the talk like that was getting around, only in our regime, our group.

Mr. ADLERMAN. If I understand you correctly, he became talkative?

Mr. VALACHI. Only to Tony Bender, and his close ones. In other words, it was between us. One time he was known to say, "What are we, men or mouse?" and in that line, you see, and well, it finally happened around 1951 that Willie Moretti was killed and they expressed it that he was a stick man, and once Vito even told us, and he said, "Lord have mercy on his soul," and he said he has lost his mind, and that is the way that life is. "If tomorrow I go wrong, I want you to hit me in the head, too," he said. You know, like he was making us understand that he was hit because he was not well. But naturally I formed by own conclusions.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who do you think ordered the killing?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 325

Mr. VALACHI. Well, in that case, with Willie Moretti, as long as they made it official that he was sick, that you could say was by "commissione." It means they all agreed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, this was a rule that came from above?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And they all agreed that he should be killed?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; for instance, the funeral itself came from it. He had lots and lots of automobiles, with flowers, and usually when a boss like Anastasia or even Moranzano, they were deserted, but Willie was not deserted, because it was sort of, as we put it, he was supposed to be a mercy killing because he was sick, and he was supposed to be talking, and he was going to go to radio, and all of that kind of talk got around.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now who was assigned to do his killing, do you know?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the way I understand, the way I understand it was like, it wasn't a special anybody assigned, whoever by coincidence, for instance, like the meeting that they had that morning, and not in Duke's Restaurant, about seven stories away from Duke's Restaurant, and I don't remember the name of the restaurant.

For instance, it was an honest appointment that they had with him, and not planned, and whoever would have a chance would have to speak to Willie one time or another. Of course, you know, they take their time, and they are not going to worry about this week or next week.

It happened to be, now Johnny Roberts and some other people which I don't know, happened to have an appointment with Willie early in the morning, in and around 1951, and I don't remember the date. And I would tell you how I knew this: I was in my place in the Lido at the time, on this particular day, and I got this news from the radio, and when I got the news through the radio, I was in some apartment. And I quickly went downstairs and called up Tony, my lieutenant, and he told me, "Go about your business." In other words, I wanted to find out if there was any trouble.

So now, that night I wasn't in my restaurant, and when I got to my restaurant that particular night, I was told that Johnny Roberts was there and he waited a couple of hours for me, and then he was there to celebrate. I understood what that meant, and he left word by the waiter.

Well, the next time I saw Johnny would be maybe a few months later, and by this time Johnny was arrested. There was a couple of hats left in the restaurant, and naturally I ain't going to talk to Johnny in plain English, or in plain talk, and I got to curb a little. I didn't want to put him on the spot and he ain't supposed to tell me nothing. So I asked him how did he stand with the hats, because I read they were talking about the hat fits this one and the hat fits that one, and he said, "Don't worry about it, it ain't my hat, and it belonged to the other guys."

I said, "I am sorry I missed you up at the restaurant," and he said, "Yes," he came up there to celebrate because he knew that Willie and I never got along.

326 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you understand from the nature of your conversation with Roberts or Robilotto that he was the one that did the killing?

Mr. VALACHI. He was one of them.

Mr. ADLERMAN. One of them that did it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You were a partner of Robilotto for a while?

Mr. VALACHI. I was partners with Johnny Roberts a few years before that. I don't remember the year. And we were shylocking together, which I mentioned here yesterday, and one time Johnny gave me a hint, and he said Tony was asking him questions, meaning my lieutenant, and Johnny Roberts at this time was not a member, and so it must have been quite a few years before that. And then I told Johnny, "Well, look, if Tony is asking you questions, and you are thinking of giving him some part of interest of this business, you talk for yourself, because I don't want to give anybody any part of this business." I mean I am talking about the shylocking business.

The next thing I know is that Tony Bender sent for me in Duke's Restaurant and told me to collect all of the money, that the partnership was going to be broken up. So I did. And I broke up that. I would rather break it up than give him any money, in plain English.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Let me ask you this. You referred to the fact that Moretti had a group of men over him in New York, some who were members and some not members.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, all through the years.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know some of the principal names? Was Frank Majuri one of them?

Mr. VALACHI. You see, lots of these people I know by looking at them. But, actually, calling the names off that way, I would have to look at their pictures. Like Peter LaPlaca, himself, I was not too sure when I met him in Atlanta how often I met him in Atlanta, how often I met him. He told me sometimes I met him. I only used to shake hands with him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you know Nick Delmore?

Mr. VALACHI. I remember the name. I can't say seriously.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know any of the members in the New Jersey family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; the members I knew weren't affiliated with Willie Moretti. Like the Richie group, that kind of boys. All the years it has been known about.

Do you know what they used to call Willie Moretti in the 1920's? They used to call him "Chick" Meyers. He is also the one who straightened out the Irish trouble.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Let me ask you this: This Diamond Richie you are talking about, that is Richard Boiardi?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, he has a son named Sonny Boy, Richard Boiardi.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did he take over most of the members of the Moretti group?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, most of them went that way.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They are in what you call the Boiardi group now?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. A little earlier, a couple of days ago, you testified about two killings that happened over in New Jersey, one was Monaco.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 327

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, that was during the war of the thirties.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes. The other one was Don Steven.

Mr. VALACHI. No, Don Steven was not killed in the thirties. He was only killed about—in fact, I don't know where I was, West Street or Atlanta, I don't know where I was when I read about him. He was killed at the age of 71 years old in back of a candy store, that is all I know. He was stabbed to death.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I would like to call the assistant attorney general of New Jersey. Mr. Bergin, please.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you gentlemen be sworn, please?

Do each of you solemnly swear the evidence you will give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

Mr. BERGIN. I do.

Mr. FITZSIMMONS. I do.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN J. BERGIN, JOHN A. FITZSIMMONS AND JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

The CHAIRMAN. Will you identify yourself for the record?

Mr. BERGIN. My name is John J. Bergin, assistant attorney general, director of criminal investigations, New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. The other gentleman, will you identify yourself?

Mr. FITZSIMMONS. John A. Fitzsimmons, captain, New Jersey State Police, Trenton, N.J.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I would like to direct my questions to Mr. Bergin and, in the event you need some help, maybe Captain Fitzsimmons can help you.

You were a prosecutor in Bergen County?

Mr. BERGIN. Passaic County.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You are now assistant attorney general in the State of New Jersey?

Mr. BERGIN. That is correct, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You have some familiarity with the people that we have been discussing, the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. As it affects New Jersey?

Mr. BERGIN. I do.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you describe in general what the situation is in Jersey as it is affected by the organized crime groups?

Mr. BERGIN. New Jersey is sort of a corridor State between Philadelphia and New York City. As a consequence, not only members of the groups listed on the chart here but business executives from New York and Philadelphia make New Jersey a bedroom State. As a consequence, I think there are some 37 members who are listed on your charts here, including Vito Genovese, Gerardo Catena, some of the higher echelon, have been at one time or another residents or connected with the State of New Jersey.

Many of them do no business in the State of New Jersey. They live there. They live what appears to be an exemplary life. They live in these small communities. Many of these names, some 15 of them, are people whom we are familiar with as actually operating in the State of New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask you, Mr. Bergin, many of the names that appear on these charts and that have been referred to here in testimony, in your official capacity are you acquainted with them as known hoodlums or law violators?

Mr. BERGIN. That is correct, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you identify those which are members of the Cosa Nostra or can you just identify them generally as members of an organized crime group?

Mr. BERGIN. Well, I can identify these people who have been associated with New Jersey and from our information have been identified with an organized crime group.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you name them?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir. Vito Genovese, Monmouth County, N.J.

Thomas Eboli, Bergen County; Anthony Catena, Essex County; Joseph Doto, also known as Joe Adonis, Bergen County; Richard Boiardi, Essex County; the late Willie Moretti, Bergen County; John DeNoia, Bergen County; Settimo Accardi, Essex County; Francesco Eucola, also known as Frank Casino, Ocean County; Anthony Boiardi, also known as Tony Boyd, Essex County; Paul Bonadio, Bergen County; Thomas Campisi, Essex County; Anthony Caponigio, also known as Toney Bananas, Essex County; Charley Teren, Monmouth and Hudson; Peter LaPlaca, Bergen; Ernest Lassara, Passaic, Essex, and Middlesex; Andrew Lombardino, Hudson; Anthony Riello, Essex; Salvatore Chiri, Bergen; and Michael Spinella, Bergen.

In the Lucchese family, Salvatore Santora, Bergen County. Paul John Carbo was in Camden County, and was arrested at one time. Whether he was a resident or not, we are not sure.

Carmine Gallenta has been associated with Hudson and Ocean County in New Jersey. Michael Consalo, also known as Michael Bruno, was arrested in Hudson County.

In the Magliocco family, Joseph Profaci had a lodge in either Monmouth or Mercer County, a hunting lodge. Salvatore Badamente in Bergen County.

In the Gambino family, we had Albert Anastasia, John Robilotto, Sebastian Belanga, those three were Bergen.

Michael Scondefia, Union. James Stassi, and Joseph Stassi, formerly of Union.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Many of those names, many of those people you mentioned, are already named as part of the families in New York.

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Many of them reside in the State of New Jersey?

Mr. BERGIN. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do they operate in the State of New Jersey as well?

Mr. BERGIN. Some do. Many of them operate or most of them operate in New York City or in Philadelphia.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you have any particular ones that you can single out as operating in the State of New Jersey?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes; Gerado Catena, Sam Accardi. I have a list here. Richard Boiardi, Anthony Boiardi, Paul Bonadio has no criminal record but he was president of the Automotive Conveying, and then was associated with Joseph Doto, alias Joe Adonis; Thomas Campisi, Anthony Caponigio, also known as Tony Bananas, Ernest Lassara,

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 329

Andrew Lombardino, Paul Lombardino, Anthony Marchetti, and Anthony Riello.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know whether all of these are in the Genovese family in any way?

Mr. BERGIN. They appear to be; yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Are any of them that you mentioned outside of the charts which we have placed in evidence.

Mr. BERGIN. Well, there are others in what is known as the Philadelphia-Camden area which is—allegedly the head man there is an Angelo or also known as Micheal Bruno. Dominick Elvito is his lieutenant, he was delegate at Apalachin.

Joseph Ida is also in that area. He is presently in Italy, I believe. He returned to Italy after the Apalachin convention. He was delegate also.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you name the delegates that attended the Apalachin convention that came from the State of New Jersey?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir; Gerado Catena, Louis Larasso, Charles or Salvatore Chiri, Frank Majure, Dominick Olvetto, Anthony Riella, Vito Genovese, and Joseph Ida.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Following World War II, did you have a group known as the Big Five in New Jersey?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir. Following World War II and up to approximately 1950, the so-called Big Five had extensive gambling operations in the northern part of New Jersey, centered mainly in Bergen County. These people were Salvatore "Sally" Moretti, a brother of Willie Moretti; James Lynch, also known as Piggy Lynch; Arthur Langano, Anthony Reno, also known as Tony Groan; Joseph Adonis, whose right name was John Dodo. These five—and also Frank Ericson—were operating gambling operations principally in Bergen County at that time. They all were subsequently indicted and all simultaneously went to jail in 1950 for violation of the gambling laws of New Jersey.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This left Willie Moretti in charge?

Mr. BERGIN. Reputedly; yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You heard the testimony of Mr. Valachi concerning Moretti. Could you corroborate or verify any part of that testimony?

Mr. BERGIN. I heard Mr. Valachi testify to the fact that Duke's Restaurant was the hangout. That we can corroborate because at that time Duke's Restaurant was owned by John DeNoia. It was on Palisades Avenue in Cliffside Park and I think almost everyone mentioned here at one time or another either telephoned Duke's Restaurant or was seen at Duke's Restaurant in the 1940's. After this combine was smashed, Duke's Restaurant went into bankruptcy, and about seven doors away a restaurant and bar known as Joe's Elbow Room and Joe's Restaurant became a hangout for these people on Palisades Avenue in Cliffside Park, N.J.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was Moretti talking freely at that time?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir; from all reports he had become extremely garrulous with newspapermen, before the Bergen County grand jury. He was giving interviews right and left. He was giving, he was entertaining—

The CHAIRMAN. Was that shortly before he was murdered?

Mr. BERGIN. It started a couple of years before, Senator, and kept up to the date of his murder.

The CHAIRMAN. What information did you have that he was regarded as off his rocker or sick mentally at that time, if anything?

Mr. BERGIN. Observations of the man, I knew the man personally, Senator. I had seen him around because I lived in that particular area, and also information received that some time in the 1940's he had been taken west at the direction of Frank Costello, a male nurse accompanied him all through the western part of the United States, and allegedly was almost raving at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, your general information, then, pretty much corroborates Valachi's testimony which he has given here because he knew him intimately?

Mr. BERGIN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. So your general information at the time would corroborate what he has said?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you give us the details as far as you know from the police records or the history of the police records concerning the Moretti killing?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

At approximately 11 a.m., October 4, 1951, in Joe's Elbow Room, or rather the restaurant next door, there were three male patrons. One was seated at the counter and two were at a nearby table. The only other persons in the premises at that time were Mrs. Crevatta, the wife of the owner of the establishment, and Mrs. Novack, who was a waitress. The male at the counter left the premises, went outside and immediately came back in with Willie Moretti, whereupon he introduced Moretti to the two men seated at the table.

They engaged in some sort of pleasantries.

At that time Mrs. Crevatta and Mrs. Novack retired to the kitchen. They had just opened that morning and they were preparing for the day's business. While they were in there, they heard gunfire. Immediately upon coming outside there, all the males had fled with the exception of Willie Moretti who was laying dead on the floor, shot twice in the head.

Subsequently, an investigation was started and pictures of all members of the crime cartel, or whatever you wish to call it at that time, were shown to the waitresses, and there was a hesitant, tentative identification of John Robilotto, also known as Johnny Roberts, as being the male seated at the counter.

Additionally, there were two male or men's felt hats left at the premises, one bore a cleaning mark. This cleaning mark was traced to a hat-cleaning place on the Avenue of the Americas. However, this unfortunately was prematurely released to the press and by the time the investigators got to this hat-cleaning place, the slip or bill was missing.

Incidentally, this hat-cleaning place was directly across the street from No. 10 Downing Street in New York City, and where resided Robilotto's brother.

Subsequently, after an extensive investigation, Robilotto was charged but had to be released because of insufficient evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. You have said the waitress, I believe, and the proprietor of the restaurant tentatively identified?

Mr. BERGIN. It was one of these "It looks like the man," "I can't be sure," that type.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, it lends some credence to the story that he is the one that did the killing but they were not able or willing to positively identify him. They just said, "This looks like the man."

Mr. BERGIN. That is right, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, you could not, of course, get a conviction on that character of proof?

Mr. BERGIN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Although he was arrested for it?

Mr. BERGIN. He was charged.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he indicted?

Mr. BERGIN. I believe he was indicted but a judgment of dismissal was entered before trial.

The CHAIRMAN. After indictment, because you could not get proof that would establish the defendant as the offender beyond a reasonable doubt?

Mr. BERGIN. That is correct, Senator.

There was one more factor I forgot. He was picked up in Brooklyn, that is John Robilotto, and asked about his whereabouts on that particular morning. He first said he was in Duke's Restaurant at that time. He even stated he had cantaloup and coffee which the owner and waitress said this male had but immediately recanted and said he would deny ever saying such a thing and asked for an attorney.

The CHAIRMAN. Immediately after saying it, he recanted and asked for an attorney and said he would deny ever having said it?

Mr. BERGIN. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you tell us what part Anastasia played in this, Albert Anastasia?

Mr. BERGIN. We received information that on the day before Willie Moretti was murdered, that was October 3, Albert Anastasia contacted a man named Harry Shepherd, who had been a chauffeur for Moretti and asked him to drive him to St. Mary's Hospital which is in Passaic, N.J., some possibly 15 miles distant from the Cliffside Park Restaurant.

At the hospital, he created quite a disturbance because the X-ray technician was not present. He wanted X-rays because Anastasia alleged that his back was giving him some trouble. No appointment, he just walked into the hospital.

The CHAIRMAN. That was Anastasia?

Mr. BERGIN. Albert Anastasia, yes, sir. He then, as we gather it, made a phone call out to the hospital to somebody in a public booth and then proceeded to leave.

The next day, or that evening, we are informed that a mild argument ensued between Moretti and Anastasia over use of Shepherd, because Moretti, I believe, wanted Shepherd to drive him to the track or something like that.

The next day, Albert Anastasia again asked Harry Shepherd to drive him to St. Mary's Hospital in Passaic, whereupon his back was X-rayed at the time that Moretti was killed. Thus, an alibi.

(A short recess was taken at 11:20 a.m., with the following members of the subcommittee present: Senators McClellan, Jackson, Muskie, Mundt, and Javits.)

332 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, he took care to establish an alibi?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. There is no question about that in your mind?

Mr. BERGIN. I would say no, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What part did Mr. Valachi play in this? Was he questioned?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir; he was questioned—was interviewed on October 14, 1952, by then Detective Edwin Wallace of the New Jersey State Police. He was contacted in the Bronx. He was called down to the precinct by Detective Stewart, of the New York Police Department, and—do you wish me to go into the results of the interview?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Would you, please?

The CHAIRMAN. Just the highlights of it. I don't want the details. Just anything that, as an attorney, you would have some idea about as to what might be significant.

Mr. BERGIN. Right, sir. At that time, Detective Wallace showed Mr. Valachi pictures of John Robilotto and Joseph LiCalsi. LiCalsi was named as a suspect by a spurned girl friend. It didn't pan out one way or another subsequently. At that time, Mr. Valachi denied ever seeing either John Robilotto or Joseph LiCalsi. He was asked to come to New Jersey, and he said he wished to consult his attorney first before he would. He was never brought over to New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Valachi, let me ask you, at that time when you told them you didn't know Johnny Roberts, were you telling the truth then?

Mr. VALACHI. I was not.

The CHAIRMAN. You were not?

Mr. VALACHI. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Bergin, Mr. Valachi has testified as to two other killings which took place in New Jersey. One was Don Steven and the other one was Monaco. Would you give us the details concerning those?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir. I understood that Mr. Valachi testified to a Sam Monaco being killed in New Jersey by being thrown into the Passaic River. A search of the records discloses that a Samuel Monaco and a Louis Russo were found in that area at that time. A missing person on Samuel Monaco was sent out by the East Orange Police Department on September 10, 1931. On September 13, 1931, two bodies were floating in what is Newark Bay. Both the Passaic and the Hackensack River empty into Newark Bay. One body washed ashore or was pulled ashore to Bayonne, N.J., and was identified as Samuel Monaco. The other body, Louis Russo, wound up in Kearney, N.J. The cause of death was identical in both, both had their heads crushed, their throats cut. They were wrapped in sashcord and weighted down with sash weights. Ultimately, Sam Monaco's car was discovered on 46th Street in New York. He had been missing since the 10th of September.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Have you got the details concerning Don Steven?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

On March 31, 1955, at Vito's restaurant in Newark, N.J., Stefano Badami—

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was the date?

Mr. BERGIN. March 31, 1955.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was the date of the finding of the bodies in the river?

Mr. BERGIN. In the river, of Monaco——

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BERGIN. September 13, 1931.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That was around about the time that Maranzano was killed?

Mr. BERGIN. They were found 2 days later or 3 days later.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Would you proceed?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

Stefano Badami, also known as Don Steven, was arrested in Essex County, N.J., generally in the dress business. On March 31, 1955, he proceeded to Vito's restaurant or clam bar on 15th Avenue in Newark, N.J. This was owned by Vito Oddi, who was a friend of Badami's. While in the restaurant in the morning, two males came in and forced Oddi into the kitchen and locked him in there. Badami was then murdered by being stabbed 40 times with a stiletto.

Subsequently, a Frank Monaco was held as a material witness in this killing, and he identified himself as a brother of Samuel Monaco, and volunteered the information that his brother, Samuel Monaco, had been in business with Don Badami prior to his death in 1931. He was released as a material witness and charged with carrying a switch-blade knife.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you tell us generally some of the problems that confront law enforcement in New Jersey and whether you have any recommendations or any suggestions that might help the committee in formulating any legislation?

Mr. BERGIN. Our principal problem in New Jersey is that we do not have an immunity statute, a witness immunity statute, except in certain restricted areas. It has always been a problem, even in those restricted areas, when you offer a witness immunity from State prosecution, he alleges that he needs immunity or he cannot get immunity from Federal prosecution in the areas of income tax and so forth. If a corollary Federal statute could be worked out to include both State and Federal in this area, it would be very helpful.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Would one that would provide that the consent of the U.S. Attorney General for immunity on the Federal violation be a necessary prerequisite, and would be valuable to the State?

Mr. BERGIN. It would be invaluable.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you: Do you regard this as most vital to law enforcement?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That you have this authority to grant immunity to material witnesses, witnesses whose testimony is indispensable to a conviction?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir; an unqualified offer of immunity is invaluable, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That authority, if it was reposed in you, by whoever had the authority to grant the immunity, could very well be abused; could it not?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir; it could be in certain conceivable situations.

334 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. But if used wisely and exercised with prudence, it can be made a most effective weapon?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir. I might say this, anybody who would abuse it would only abuse it once, because the public reaction, I think, would be so great.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, courts can abuse their discretion. You in your position can abuse your authority. All of us can abuse the power or authority if we have it. Although I want us to always retain as much control and checks and balances as possible and necessary, there are circumstances, there are cases, where the ends of justice can be better served if such authority is possessed by officials who have jurisdiction of the events.

Mr. BERGIN. That is true in my opinion, sir; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think it would be very essential to you, your State being a border State to New York, or an in-between, as you have described, between New York and Philadelphia, the two great metropolitan cities, do you think it would be very useful to you there?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. While we are talking about it, would you care to comment upon the value you think of wiretapping, if you had that authority under a court's order, direction, and supervision? While we are on the subject, would you care to comment about that?

Mr. BERGIN. My personal opinion on wiretapping is this, that whereas I have an instinctive feeling against it, I personally believe that we have reached the point and that these people that are depicted here present such a menace to our society and to our Government, that I feel, and this is my personal opinion—I work for an attorney general who feels the other way—that we must, with proper safeguards, have wiretapping because, as I understand it, a proper wiretap, with proper safeguards, 4 men can do the work of 400.

The CHAIRMAN. Four men what?

Mr. BERGIN. Can do the work of 400 men without wiretapping.

The CHAIRMAN. It isn't an easy decision to make as between clothing proper officials with that authority to place a wiretap, to make use of it, or to let the criminal who can make a wiretap—who today, as I understand it, can make a wiretap with immunity, with immunity for being punished for it unless he discloses; there is no way to establish the fact and disclose it—they can make a wiretap and use the information they get in furtherance of their endeavor to make crime and to conceal crime, and yet they have violated no law, as I understand it now. But if that authority was granted to courts under proper supervision, and to law enforcement officials, you think it would be an effective weapon against organized and syndicated crime, such as we are here investigating?

Mr. BERGIN. I do, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Javits.

Senator JAVITS. I thank the Chair. I wanted to ask Mr. Bergin a question along that very line.

Mr. Bergin, were you here yesterday?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir, a half day, sir.

Senator JAVITS. The afternoon?

Mr. BERGIN. No, in the morning, sir.

Senator JAVITS. I am sorry. May I then tell you that Witness Valachi testified about the use of the telephone, at least to his knowledge, and he said that it was used. He used the expression when he was on the streets, and he uses it fairly frequently. So I asked him, "Did you use the telephone to do all your business?" He said they used the telephone, but they used it, he said, in a very garbled way. They spoke in riddles, insofar as they thought they were speaking in riddles, and also that they were very wary of wiretaps themselves. In other words, they took considerable precautions with respect to the use of telephones, checking first whether they were tapped.

In view of the fact that they are just as alert to that situation as would be the law enforcement officers, and would undoubtedly be even more alert to it if we had a Federal statute even with the safeguards, and I, myself, having been in your business, have had occasion to impose those safeguards on my own people, because I did have authority to give wiretapping orders when I was attorney general, I wonder whether you would then say that the balance might be weighted the other way? That is, the balances between privacy, civil liberties, abuse of information obtained, et cetera, and your rather strong testimony on its need for law enforcement.

I hope you understand, Mr. Bergin, that in this particular case, I really am inquiring. I really have had bitter experience myself on your side, and at the same time, as a Senator, am deeply concerned about the questions of privacy and civil liberties which, as a liberal, I feel very strongly about.

Mr. BERGIN. Senator, I am equally appreciative of your position. As I pointed out before, the attorney general of New Jersey, Arthur J. Sills, feels just as strongly the other way on the basis of invasion of privacy. But in answer to your question, I can give you an illustration with Mr. Willie Moretti. He had on his possession almost 400 telephone numbers, on his body, when he was dead. He was a continual talker on the telephone. No matter how guarded they may be, or how cryptic they may be, they must establish a pattern, and that pattern can be broken just as easily as any code can be broken.

I feel, and I feel as you do, that I have an innate repulsion to this. To me the need to break up this type of organization, I feel, must override, until the situation changes. I believe these coded messages, once you have established in your mind, established his modus operandi, can be broken and can be revealing.

Senator JAVITS. Of course, Willie Moretti, you have already testified, was something of a nut. But, nonetheless, you do feel that that is the case in point?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir. There are other cases, too, because we find that not only the suspect himself talks, or a big man, or whatever you want to call him, but lesser lights will discuss his activities over the phone.

Senator JAVITS. And be less careful?

Mr. BERGIN. That is right, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Would you say, too, in all fairness, that this is a tool for law enforcement, that it wouldn't be a breaking up of these syndicates?

Mr. BERGIN. It is an investigative aid.

Senator JAVITS. A tool?

Mr. BERGIN. A tool, yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. But you feel personally, notwithstanding the witness' testimony and what you know to be the efforts of the underworld to avoid implications on the telephone, it is nonetheless a useful tool and its usefulness should, for us, outweigh the dangers if we can devise safeguards to the best of human ingenuity?

Mr. BERGIN. If we can eliminate this danger by the use of wiretapping, then I would say I am for it, as opposed to the danger of the invasion of privacy.

Senator JAVITS. But you do not claim it is the key tool in the elimination of this kind of crime?

Mr. BERGIN. I say one of them.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt.

Senator MUNDT. Did I understand you to say a little earlier that the criminals could establish a wiretap without violating any law?

Mr. BERGIN. In New Jersey, we have a criminal statute on the subject of wiretapping but it requires both the tap; that is, a tap into the line, and disclosure.

Senator MUNDT. Let us take a hypothetical case. Suppose criminals established a wiretap in the sheriff's office to find out what his operations were and what he knew—what he was saying to his deputies. They, obviously, would never disclose that. That is for their information. They want to find out who is being suspected.

You must have some kind of law that would prohibit something like that?

Mr. BERGIN. You might have a conspiracy to obstruct justice or due administration of the laws, that sort of thing, by listening in on these conversations and using them to avoid prosecution. You might be able to make a criminal charge of that nature. But to merely tap without disclosure, under our State law, is not a crime.

Senator MUNDT. Let us change the scenery to a bank.

If a mob wants to do a job on a bank and they would kind of like to know what the movements of personnel are, their habits, when the president leaves, or someone else, they may have a wiretap in the bank. Would that be a crime? They obviously would not disclose it except to themselves.

Mr. BERGIN. Well, the disclosure under our particular statute does not have to be in a court of law or anything else like that.

Senator MUNDT. In other words, if I understand it, in New Jersey it is not a crime to invade private property to establish a wiretap as long as you do not disclose what you get.

Mr. BERGIN. That is the way our statute reads, that is the way it has been interpreted.

Senator MUNDT. I should think the first step in the wiretap business would be to protect the integrity of private property against wiretapping. It seems to me it is certainly a violation of law involved in that.

Mr. BERGIN. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. I appreciate your testimony on this other aspect of wiretapping because it is a tormenting question.

May I say to my good friend from New York that, as a conservative, I resent invasion of privacy and intrusion upon the civil rights of individuals. I think I resent it even more than others because I do not want to see Government establish additional power to push people around.

Wiretapping is a way of pushing people around.

Still, I recognize that what you say is undoubtedly true. Four men can do the job of 400 and maybe could do a job 400 would not be able to do. So that, if it has the proper safeguards and full disclosure is made ultimately as to what was done, which I suppose would occur, I think public opinion would pretty well enforce a very limited use of that kind of wiretapping.

Would you agree or disagree?

Mr. BERGIN. I would agree on that. I would add this: We have had a wonderful rapport with Commissioner Murphy in the New York Police Department and Deputy Chief Inspector Shanley in the New York area. New York, of course, permits wiretapping. As I understand it, all investigations of wiretapping in New York by police authorities have not shown any abuse.

Senator MUNDT. In New York, can you use the evidence in court, too?

Mr. BERGIN. In the light of recent decisions in Benante & Pugash v. Doloinger, all States have been waiting for Federal legislation in this area giving the States the right.

Senator MUNDT. You have to use it just in State cases anyhow, it cannot be used in Federal cases.

Mr. BERGIN. There is a recent New York decision that holds generally that wiretapping does not involve a constitutional right. Therefore, while it might be a violation of section 605, it will be permitted in evidence.

Senator MUNDT. On the question of granting immunity, you said "unqualified immunity." Does that mean you are giving a criminal the right to establish immunity against all the crimes he may have committed if he testifies in conjunction with one or do you mean it is unqualified as far as that one particular crime is concerned?

Mr. BERGIN. His participation in that one particular crime.

Senator MUNDT. It would not be a blanket immunity?

Mr. BERGIN. No, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Just for this one crime?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir. There might be two.

Senator MUNDT. Well, related crimes, put it that way.

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Who would have that right, the Attorney General or every prosecuting attorney or every law enforcement officer? At what level would you place that right?

Mr. BERGIN. I would limit it to the prosecutor, the county prosecutor himself, and the Attorney General himself.

I would not go any lower than that.

Senator MUNDT. I think you said it was a sort of consent—

Mr. BERGIN. Of course, with the consent of a superior court judge. That is for witness' immunity we have to have consent.

Senator MUNDT. Do you have some check?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. You occasionally get a bad prosecuting attorney?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

338 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator MUNDT. I think what you say is true. Whenever you have a fellow who has to get elected, this would kind of be a law that would enforce morality if exercised because they could not do evil by stealth. They would be done in a goldfish bowl.

Mr. BERGIN. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. You give an obvious crook immunity, but if you do it a second time or third time, you would say "something smells" so far as this prosecuting attorney is concerned.

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir, our prosecutors are not elected, they are appointed by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Senator MUNDT. I think that is a little bit disturbing. I think when you have an elected official you have a rain check on him that you do not have on appointed officials.

If you have a judge, he is appointed for life. You have no control over him any more.

Mr. BERGIN. We have statutory areas where the attorney general can supersede a prosecutor at the request of the superior court assignment judge, the Governor, the board of what we call the Freeholders' County Commissioners can supersede where he is not performing his duties.

Senator MUNDT. He has a responsibility to supersede.

Mr. BERGIN. It is mandatory.

Senator MUNDT. This is a responsibility that the office carries with it?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Thank you very much. Your testimony is very helpful in trying to find some area that we can move into as legislators to reduce this crime wave. We certainly need the counsel of experienced people like you.

Mr. BERGIN. Thank you.

Senator JAVITS. Could I ask a question of witness Valachi?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Valachi, could you tell us whether an offer of immunity from prosecution would have meant anything to you in respect of the kind of testimony you are giving us now or the revelations with respect to the operations of these families?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, what are you referring to, when I first got arrested?

Senator JAVITS. Give it to us both ways, when you first were arrested or not.

Mr. VALACHI. It would not have done any good.

Senator JAVITS. It would not have meant anything to you?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator JAVITS. As far as the higher ups are concerned, is it not a fact that they feel they are insulated from prosecution? In other words, prosecution is not likely to get to them, they are unlikely to get arrested, and so on. I mean, Genovese and people at the top.

Mr. VALACHI. Let me understand, Senator, just what you mean.

Senator JAVITS. Surely. I am trying to ascertain the reasons for your statement that it would not have meant anything to you.

Can you state in your own words why you say it would not have meant anything to you?

Mr. VALACHI. Because—remember, I took an oath. I ain't going to talk for any kind of offer. I will take 100 years, 400 years. I have my own reasons why I am here, Senator, you know, as I explained. But I must talk. I would not say it would mean anything to others. I am talking for myself.

Senator JAVITS. It would not have meant anything to you?

Mr. VALACHI. It would not have meant anything.

Senator MUNDT. You would not say it would mean anything to others? In other words, there may have been some weak characters in your outfit who would have talked?

Mr. VALACHI. Right. Yes. Like I know weak people, they exist in the Cosa Nostra but I also know what I am telling you, Senator, I am speaking for myself.

Senator MUNDT. That is right.

Mr. VALACHI. But I also know there is weak people that that would mean something. I can only talk for myself, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. I know. I wanted to find out. I think it is highly important that you do know weak people who would have talked in line with the testimony we have just had.

Mr. VALACHI. It is important.

Senator MUNDT. I am sure that everybody in Cosa Nostra is not a Spartan who is going to come home with his shield up. They have weak people who lack nerve just like in any other business.

Mr. VALACHI. I am in a position to know in my 30 years of experience, especially the new ones, I will not mention any names, but I know if some of these people were in a jam which they never get in a position to be in a jam because they don't ask nothing of them, but if they did get in a jam, they will talk and talk plenty. That is my opinion.

Senator MUNDT. It is your belief that if they followed the offer of immunity, it would help to close down Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. I agree with him, Senator, but as I said, Senator Javits asked me, myself, personally. I had to answer for myself.

Senator MUNDT. You opened up something else I wanted to follow up.

Senator JAVITS. That is important, both aspects are important to us.

You are giving us your opinion about others, you are giving us your feeling about yourself.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator JAVITS. Everybody in Cosa Nostra, so far as you know, took the same oath you did?

Mr. VALACHI. As I say, Senator, they are pretty smart. The ones I have in mind, the weak ones, never do anything, are never asked to do anything. As I know, myself, can you imagine how they know? They don't ask them to do anything because they themselves know. You take Albert Anastasia, look how many he got rid of, himself. I don't mean himself personally. He had them done away. Why? Because he did not want no comeback. We use that expression "comeback." He didn't want any fellows in the doghouse twice, Senator. He was thinking about that all the time. He would eliminate them.

Senator JAVITS. You believe there are some, it is your opinion, there are some who could be influenced by an offer of immunity when they are in a jam?

Mr. VALACHI. A hundred percent.

The CHAIRMAN. You said you were talking about yourself as of then, back in those days you would not have talked in order to get immunity. You were asked as of then, and as of now. Would you now talk to get immunity?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I am talking now without any immunity right now.

The CHAIRMAN. I know you are. And you have given your reasons for it.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He asked if you were talking about then or now. Looking back upon the situation over the years, and you have had 30 years of it, I expect you would make several changes if you could.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator. Take, for instance, I was called and questioned. I didn't know Johnny Roberts. Now I am telling you I was partners with him a couple of years. You see, what I told the detectives at that time, the investigators, I didn't know Johnny. I knew the other guy, too, Senator, Joe Lascasa, I knew him, too.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew both of them?

Mr. VALACHI. I knew both of them.

The CHAIRMAN. At that time you say you would not have talked even if you had gotten immunity?

Mr. VALACHI. I wouldn't talk.

The CHAIRMAN. There are those and you know them in the organization?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, later on I will explain that to you, Senator. I am going into that when I reach the point of talking about Apalachin. I will come to that, too.

The CHAIRMAN. There are those whom you have known in the organization and whom you know that are weak, who would talk?

Mr. VALACHI. I am so sure that I feel confident, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. You also know that as they find some of those they eliminate them, they liquidate them; is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Right. Right; yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Following through on what the chairman said, as I recall your executive testimony, while you would not have talked to get immunity for a long time, there was a time in your life when you were in Atlanta, shortly before you killed the wrong man by mistake, that if you felt you could have had some immunity or protection you were prepared at that time to talk and to say there was a plot being made against your life?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, believe me, I never was thinking about immunity. I never was.

Senator MUNDT. You were thinking about security, personal security?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. Living?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator MUNDT. And if you had been able to get to someplace to tell your story about Genovese and the plot to kill you, maybe you wouldn't be sitting here with a life sentence but you would only have a sentence up to 85 years of age; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator MUNDT. So that even for tough guys like you, as you have described yourself, conditions change and times change. There might be a time when even a tough guy like you would say, "What have I got to lose? I will talk"?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 341

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, the question was asked me if it would have taken any effect at the time. I answered that when I was asked.

Senator MUNDT. Now I am asking you whether, as you grew older and times changed and conditions changed there might not have come a time when you would say, "All right, for immunity I will talk"?

Mr. VALACHI. I gave my opinion, if it will help, and it will help a lot.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Are there any other questions by the Senators at this time? Senator Muskie?

Senator MUSKIE. I have a question I would like to ask Mr. Bergin.

The argument against wiretapping legislation is usually not that it would be a useful investigative aid, but that, first of all, there is the invasion of privacy problem and, secondly, the argument is made that in most cases it is possible to get convictions by the use of other types of efforts, other types of techniques; that it isn't necessary to resort to this one.

I am curious as to whether or not, out of your experience, you can give us any impression as to whether or not you feel that the right to wiretap or the authority to give immunity might have made the difference in cases with which you were personally involved?

Mr. BERGIN. I can answer you this way, Senator Muskie: There is no substitute or this is no panacea for a police officer doing hard leg work and investigative work, but there are certain types of crimes which, by their very nature, are conspiratorial. Let me give you an illustration.

Bookmaking today, and numbers today, is using almost exclusively what we call the sit-in operation. As a bookmaker, you must have some kind of recording to show that he is taking bets. What they are doing now is to have a person sit in the private home. They will memorize their bets. They will immediately go to a public phone and call them in, just taking enough that they can retain in their head.

This sheet writer is sitting there insulated, because all the phone calls are coming in from various places and he is just sitting there writing down the day's play. Thus, when you attempt to arrest or search with a warrant, the bookie or the numbers writer, or whatever the case may be, you find nothing on him but money, and money is not evidence unless it is marked or something like that, so there is a particular problem.

Senator MUSKIE. It has been your experience in that particular kind of case that you have been prevented or limited in your ability to get convictions because of the inability to get this kind of evidence in this way?

Mr. BERGIN. In this way; yes, sir.

Senator MUSKIE. Would your judgment be limited to this conspiratorial type of crime, or would it apply to others as well?

Mr. BERGIN. No. It would certainly apply to kidnaping, too, as has been testified here today, these conspiracies to commit murder. I would limit it to certain types of crimes. I wouldn't want this an overall thing for any type of crime or just to get evidence of crime, but in cases where the phone is generally part of the modus operandi of conspiracies and things of that nature, bookmaking, numbers, shylocking, narcotics, in that area and that area alone, I want this limited to that. I wouldn't want this to go into just burglary, which, on its face, would be ridiculous.

Senator MUSKIE. In the Moretti case, which is an unsolved crime, do you have any reason to believe or did you have any reason to believe that either of these types of authority might have enabled you to solve that crime?

Mr. BERGIN. I don't think so. I would say probably not at this time. That would be a question of something else.

Senator MUSKIE. Would that be true also of the Monaco case?

Mr. BERGIN. Monaco, of course, happened when the phone companies were in rather crude form. Everybody was on a board and six-party lines. You would call central. I suppose you would just pick up your extension and hear that. But there was wiretapping in those days. Whether wiretapping could have solved that or could have prevented that, I cannot answer that. I do not know all the facts and circumstances. I was, I think, 11 years old when that happened.

Senator MUSKIE. Thank you, Mr. Bergin.

The CHAIRMAN. Witness Valachi wanted to make some comment.

Mr. VALACHI. I happened to hear the conversation just now. I understand that business.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, talk about it.

Mr. VALACHI. Taking the telephone away, I must tell you, will wipe out the business.

The CHAIRMAN. It will what?

Mr. VALACHI. It will wipe it out. I understand the business. We call it single action. We call it first, second, and third. Is that what you are talking about?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. VALACHI. I forget your name.

Mr. BERGIN. Bergin.

Mr. VALACHI. I understand that business. They bet on the first number. The odds are 7 to 1. They bet, for instance, the first, second, and third race, making the first number. Then they bet maybe $10, $20, $50, any amount. If they guess the winning number from zero to nine, you get your dollar back with—for instance, say it is $10. You get back $80. In other words, you win $70.

Then the fourth and fifth race, that has about an hour between, between the numbers. That makes the second number. The sixth and seventh race makes the third number.

Now, for instance, the third number, there are small banks that are booking numbers. They have a habit of checking their play. When the first two, the lead comes out, for instance, four, three is leading, they may have one number or two numbers played very heavy in the lead of four, three. Then you run right through it. In other words, they look at the dollar bets. Say they have on four, three, their business at $500, or even $1,000, considered small. They turn around and bet the last number to try and protect their hit. For instance, say it is eight in the end, and they have it very heavily played. They might put a couple of hundred dollars on that eight to protect themselves.

Remember, they are only getting 7 to 1. Maybe they have to pay out maybe $4,000 or maybe $5,000, which is a little too much for the play they have, so they will protect themselves by betting on the last number.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, they get the information of the two numbers first and then they can anticipate what is about to happen and they can protect themselves.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. You see how they stand. If they see themselves being crucified or being hit heavy on one number and they have nine other numbers in their favor, that particular day they wouldn't even care to win. They would be glad to break even. So they may put a couple of hundred dollars on the last one to protect their play.

(At this point Senator Javits withdrew from the hearing room.)

The CHAIRMAN. So you think—

Mr. VALACHI. Without the telephone, it is going to be mighty hard to get it off.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Is there anything further?

Mr. ADLERMAN. I would like to ask a couple more questions of Mr. Bergin.

Mr. Bergin, there has been some talk about the invasion of privacy in wiretaps. Can we not draw an analogy between wiretaps and a search warrant? If you have a wiretap which can only be placed by court order, where you make a proper presentation to the court that you have reasonable grounds to believe that a crime is being committed, and you get permission of the court and you satisfy the court there is no other way that you can obtain this evidence, isn't that analogous to the same type of information that you must supply a court to get a search warrant?

Mr. BERGIN. I agree with you entirely.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Isn't a search warrant, itself, an invasion of privacy?

Mr. BERGIN. In that sense it is; yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So there is a very close analogy to a very tried and true means or tool of law enforcement in the search warrant and the tool of a wiretap.

Mr. BERGIN. I can give you an analysis. For instance, our rules of court on search warrant go beyond the Federal rules, where we are permitted, after a showing of probable cause, and so forth, to secure evidence of a crime. If you use that in the light of the fifth amendment, by which you are not required to give evidence against yourself, I think that bears out your analogy that under proper safeguards, with showing a probable cause, that you receive a wiretap, it is analogous to a search and seizure.

Mr. ADLERMAN. There is another point I would like to raise and that is this: I think there has been a pretty wide misconception about the number of wiretaps, who can wiretap, whether or not private individuals can wiretap in public domain.

You have been able to observe the operations of the New York wiretap law, which was a constitutional amendment permitting the police departments to wiretap under a court order, under safeguards, and so forth.

Mr. BERGIN. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know of a single case where a wiretap was applied in the public domain other than on people who were involved in crime or where they satisfied the court that a crime was being committed?

Mr. BERGIN. No, I do not.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Isn't it also true that the placement of a wiretap is not something that is undertaken lightly by the police department, because it requires a great deal of manpower? It requires several teams of men. It requires them to have surveillances on the thing in order to have a wiretap that is going to be effective. They have to watch the place where the wire is going. When they hear some appointment being made, they have to have a team of men tail the man to the place where he is going to make an appointment, have people survey that place and find out who may come to that place. Sometimes they may have 16 or 20 men on a wiretap job.

Mr. BERGIN. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is a rather expensive thing?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I think it should be made clear that the misconception of a law that would permit wiretapping under a court safeguard can't be placed lightly on the average individual who is not involved in a serious crime. It wouldn't even pay to put a wiretap in on a case which was not a serious crime.

Mr. BERGIN. That is right.

I just want to add one footnote. I have been informed by members of the New York Police Department that they can tell almost immediately whether they are wasting their time or not and immediately pull out of these things. You develop an ear for these things.

The CHAIRMAN. Talking about invading privacy, if you happen to be standing outside of the door, two people inside carrying on a conversation, and you happen to hear through the wall of the door, that is an invasion of privacy in a sense but you are permitted to give testimony as to what you heard, are you not?

Mr. BERGIN. That is correct, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask you also, suppose you are in an adjoining room in a hotel, if you have an instrument that you can attach to the wall on your side of the wall that will hear through the wall, you can also use that testimony, can you not?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no law against that?

Mr. BERGIN. No. The U.S. Supreme Court has decided you can use it.

The CHAIRMAN. You can use it.

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is, you talk about invading privacy, this is the only area now that is left where we cannot make use of this instrumentality to gather evidence against criminals.

Mr. BERGIN. That is right. They are using the instrumentality to commit crimes.

The CHAIRMAN. They are making use of it in pursuing their criminal enterprises.

Mr. BERGIN. That is correct, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. We talk about the rights of people. It is the public rights in this instance that likely, and I am saying "likely," I am using that and proceeding with some caution, that likely predominates. You have to weigh occasionally there might be a tap on someone who is innocent. You might hear some conversation that would be private, it would be an invasion of privacy, but in the overwhelming instances you would be using it actually to catch a criminal or to more effectively enforce the law against crimes committed against individuals, against the innocent.

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

I might also say in the course of investigating crime you learn things about people's private sins that you just forget about anyway.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Bergin, you use the word "wiretapping." Are you using it literally? I have always thought that when you talk about wiretapping, it is used figuratively as to any kind of clandestine tap. Do you use evidence in court that you can secure from a microphone that you plant in a man's office just so long as there is not a wire connected with it?

Mr. BERGIN. I believe that was the Silverstein case involving a spiked mike. As long as there is no physical intrusion into the premises of the person whose conversations are being intercepted, you can do it.

Senator MUNDT. I know from our studies of Communist espionage in another committee to which I belong, the Communists use electronic gimmicks whereby they can read the vibrations on a window pane a half mile away with no wire connected whatsoever.

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir; so-called sonic wave.

Senator MUNDT. Is this legal?

Mr. BERGIN. I believe any device that amplifies either vision or hearing is legal, such as use of binoculars, parabolic mike, or sonic wave, so long as there is no physical intrusion into the premises.

Senator MUNDT. That is true. If your budget is adequate, you have a whole host of electronic devices which can invade privacy and which can determine what is going on.

Mr. BERGIN. You have hit the nail on the head, the budget.

Senator MUNDT. Yes. I know this equipment is available. I know what they are using. I assume we do not use it ourselves. This is pretty sophisticated stuff. You may not have a telephone within a block of them but they can know what is going on all through the house.

Mr. BERGIN. As a matter of fact, today you don't have to physically cut into a line.

The CHAIRMAN. But it would be a tapping though you did not physically cut into it?

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The courts would so hold, if you got your communication by reason of the line.

Mr. BERGIN. If you intercepted a communication.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything else before I recess?

Senator MUNDT. I have just two or three questions for the witness, Valachi, on what he knows about certain people.

Do you know anything whatsoever about the Scoteregio murder?

Mr. VALACHI. No; I don't.

Senator MUNDT. You did not know the man?

Mr. VALACHI. No; I did not.

Senator MUNDT. Only what you read in the paper?

Mr. VALACHI. It is my neighborhood, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. Does the word "Scabett" mean anything?

346 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator MUNDT. Do you know a lawyer by the name of Faconde?

Mr. VALACHI. Pronounce that again, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. It is "F-a-c-o-n-d-e." I may be pronouncing it wrong. It is a lady lawyer.

Mr. VALACHI. Is she a blond?

Senator MUNDT. I don't know. We will have our staff talk a little bit with you about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will everyone please remain in the room until the witness has been taken out?

The committee will recess until 2 o'clock.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of the recess were Senators McClellan and Mundt.)

(Whereupon, at 12:15 p.m., a recess was taken until 2 p.m., this same day.)

(The subcommittee reconvened at 2:05 p.m., Senator John L. McClellan, chairman of the subcommittee, presiding.)

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will come to order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of reconvening: Senators McClellan and Curtis.)

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Curtis, did you have a question of the witness you wished to ask?

Senator CURTIS. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

(At this point Senator McIntyre entered the hearing room.)

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Senator CURTIS. Mr. Witness, my last appearance here in the committee on October 2 was before I left for a trip back home. I asked you:

Now, do you know of anyone in the family or families, meaning Cosa Nostra—that worked through or with any Teamster Union officials?

Mr. VALACHI. Now, I would like for you to explain that to me.

Senator CURTIS. I am not talking about the rank and file of union members, but this committee in previous hearings has had testimony where a few union leaders have cooperated with organized crime. Do you know any of these people?

Whereupon, you said that you could answer my question in private. I wish to pursue that further right now and ask you: Do you know of any Teamster Union officials who have worked with or through the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. What do you mean by "officials"?

Senator CURTIS. Agents, employees—

Mr. VALACHI. What would you call Johnny Dio or Jimmy Doyle?

Senator CURTIS. That is the type of individual I have in mind.

Mr. VALACHI. That is the kind of people I know.

Senator CURTIS. Who were they, again?

Mr. VALACHI. Jimmy Doyle or Johnny Dio.

Senator CURTIS. Are there any others?

Mr. VALACHI. I am trying to think.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 347

I don't know much—I don't think Mike Clemente comes in here. The docks have nothing to do with that; is that right? I don't understand too much, you know, Senator, about that.

Senator CURTIS. But you would name those two?

Mr. VALACHI. Those two, and I would probably have one or two more in mind. Right now I just can't think.

The CHAIRMAN. I might advise the Senator that the witness has testified that Johnny Dio and his brother—

Mr. VALACHI. Tommy.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). Tommy were people he could go to when he was in business and, thus, they would protect him against the union when it tried to unionize his shop.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. He has already testified to that. I don't know whether you know that.

Senator CURTIS. The two Dios, and who is the other one—Doyle?

Mr. VALACHI. Jimmy Doyle. And I think his last name is Plumeri.

Mr. ADLERMAN. P-l-u-m-e-r-i.

Mr. VALACHI. I know Jimmy Doyle a long, long time.

Senator CURTIS. Now, are there any others?

Mr. VALACHI. There is about one or two more that I know of but I can't think back to them.

Senator CURTIS. Before I leave this, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the staff if the names that he has mentioned are clearly enough established to ascertain their identity without confusion with anybody else.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Johnny Dio, of course, and his brother, are well known to the committee.

Senator CURTIS. What is his brother's name?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Tommy Dio. Johnny Dio, of course, testified before the committee, or rather, he was brought before the committee, and there was considerable testimony. Jimmy Doyle is the uncle of Johnny Dio. I think there was testimony about him. I am not too sure whether or not he appeared before the committee. I would have to check it out.

Senator CURTIS. Who was the other?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Those are the three that he mentioned.

Senator CURTIS. He named another one.

Mr. VALACHI. I said there might be one or two more. I am not sure. I don't know whether they are really Teamsters. I don't understand that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who?

Mr. VALACHI. The docks, those who take care of the docks.

Senator CURTIS. The dockworkers? No, they are not in the Teamsters, in the purview of the question that I asked, but it may come to that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Jimmy Doyle and Plumeri are the same person.

Senator CURTIS. I see. Were there any members of the Dockworkers Union who cooperated with or worked with or through, the Cosa Nostra, any officials or agents?

Mr. VALACHI. I am not too familiar with that line of work, so I am not going to say anything, because I am not familiar. I know they are there, but who they are there for and how they are there, I don't know.

Mr. ADLERMAN. We do have a member on the Cosa Nostra chart, Tony Anastasia, who was a very powerful leader of the Longshoremen's Union in New York, who died recently of natural causes.

Senator CURTIS. I might say, Mr. Chairman, for clarity of the record, that the other day when I asked the questions, and it was suggested that it be revealed in executive session——

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, there was one name which I don't want to say now. Yes, you are right.

Senator CURTIS. The question was raised that this threw a cloud on perhaps a great many union officials, and that is the reason I decided to pursue it further, especially in light of the conversation which has gone on now.

That is all, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

All right, Mr. Counsel, call your next witness.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I will proceed with Mr. Valachi.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, we were talking before about the murder of Moretti and the alibi that Anastasia had established, and so forth, and that Roberts was involved in the killing of Moretti.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Roberts was considered an Anastasia man, was he not?

Mr. VALACHI. He originally used to be with Tony Bender, and Tony Bender was never able to get Johnny Roberts in because Johnny Roberts has a brother, a policeman. In other words, Tony Bender didn't have work enough to get him in. But all of a sudden here he is with Albert Anastasia, and Albert Anastasia got him in.

You understand what I mean when I say "in." He got him into the organization, or Cosa Nostra.

And from then on, he was hanging out with Albert Anastasia and became a lieutenant of Albert Anastasia.

Mr. ADLERMAN. About 1957 was Anastasia murdered?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know any of the details of the crime, details of the murder?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, we had been notified to stay away from Albert's men about a year before that, from my boss. In other words, there has been talk between us that they weren't getting along.

At one time, Albert was trying to talk to Frank Costello and Vito Genovese told him to mind his own business, "We will take care of our family, you take care of yours."

Everybody told him it was a great thing, there was lots of talk about this.

Mr. ADLERMAN. At the time that Albert Anastasia was killed, who do you believe arranged for his murder?

Mr. VALACHI. I believe that Vito Genovese worked hand in hand with Gambino and Joe Bandi. In other words, they have the right to do something like this. If it appears that Vito Genovese had a hand in it, then it would be hard to explain. But being that Albert Anastasia was doing so much wrong and it was up to his own family to act, in other words, what I am trying to tell you is that Gambino, Joe Bandi, and the rest, whoever they may have been on it, acted with the assurance of Vito Genovese backing them up.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, after Anastasia was killed—you don't know who did the killing, do you?

Mr. VALACHI. No. You mean the actual trigger men?

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is right.

Mr. VALACHI. No, I don't.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you believe that Genovese and Gambino and Bandi were behind it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But you have no proof of that?

Mr. VALACHI. No, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. After Anastasia was killed, were you in touch with Johnny Roberts or Johnny Robilotto?

Mr. VALACHI. After Anastasia was killed, I being a close friend of Johnny's, I didn't know how to get to Brooklyn and I didn't know how, even the place where he was hanging out. I knew they were in Brooklyn but I was talking one night with some kid named Rufus, and somehow this name come up, I said, "Do you know where to find him?"

He said, "Yes."

"Let us take a ride."

I remember it was along Grand Avenue some place. I got to Brooklyn. Naturally, I left the kid outside. I met—there were about 10 or 15 boys up in this club. I had a talk privately with Johnny Roberts in his office.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was the nature of your talk?

Mr. VALACHI. I talked to him naturally, slowly, and curvally because I know now that he was very close with Albert and if he had anything in mind, I said, "You know, making a comeback something like that, you know, Johnny."

Mr. ADLERMAN. When you say "comeback," you mean he might want to get revenge for the killing of Anastasia?

Mr. VALACHI. He said, "No, don't worry about it. Tony and Vito already spoke to me."

I said, "Good."

That is the way it remained.

Then I talked about my own affairs, which didn't amount to anything.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Roberts was close to Anastasia?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You thought he might want to avenge Anastasia's death?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; I just told him Tony could never have gotten him through the years. He was partners with Tony Bender in different clubs, Hollywood Restaurant, the Village Inn. Whatever Johnny used to do—Tony was partners with him.

Now, as I say, all of a sudden he is with Albert Anastasia. Naturally, I never questioned that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Let me ask you this: When you had your conversation with him at this club over in Grand Avenue in Brooklyn, he told you that he had already been cautioned?

350 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. By Tony and Vito.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Not to be foolish and not to try to take any revenge?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did he agree at that time that he would not take any steps to avenge him?

Mr. VALACHI. He assured them.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He himself was killed, was he not?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, he was killed not long after this.

Now, it got to me that Johnny had agreed to make a comeback and when these people, when he told these people that he wanted to be counted out of it, that they killed him because he was trying to declare himself out.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you find out with whom he had made his agreement to avenge Anastasia with?

Mr. VALACHI. It was the same crew up in the club. All I remember is Tommy Rava.

Mr. ADLERMAN. R-a-v-a?

Mr. VALACHI. R-a-v-a, yes. Now, after that Johnny Roberts was killed, Paul Gambino come up in the Bronx. I wouldn't know just how long after, and he wanted to have a talk with me. We walked up and down. He was curving me. He knew I liked Johnny. "In other words, what I am trying to get out of you, what should we do"? He says, "I have a lot of respect for your opinion regardless of how other people feel." This is Paolo Gambino now.

Do you know the Paul I mean?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Paul is the lieutenant of his brother, Carlo Gambino?

Mr. VALACHI. That is the one Steve Rinell shot in the 1930's. We were close friends.

I said, "Paul, there is no sense curving. Have you got an idea? Have you people any idea at all?"

He said, "Yes."

"Well, then, act, what are you waiting for?"

He said, "You advise that?"

"Go right ahead before they pounce on you."

It was about a week or two later, sometime that way, when they caught up with him in some club in Brooklyn. They fired about 18 shots. Some of them got away, some were caught, I don't remember just how it went, but some of them made it, they jumped out of the window.

I heard that they had gotten Tommy Rava.

Everything was peaceful then.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who found out that Tommy Rava was the one that killed Roberts?

Mr. VALACHI. They must have found out themselves. They investigated his family.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now coming to September of 1952, do you remember the circumstances that preceded the killing of Eugene Giannini?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; I do.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you state the circumstances concerning the Giannini murder?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 351

Mr. VALACHI. Around that time Tony Bender sent for me. I met him in Thompson Street, in a restaurant called Rocco's. I sat on a table and he told me that word came from Charley Lucky that Giannini is an informer. So I said, "There goes my couple of thousand that he owes me."

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did Giannini owe you some money at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; a couple of thousand. So he said, "Anyway, it is none of our affairs. It is their affairs." Meaning the people he was associating with.

About a month later, Tony sent for me again. This time we went down to the Gold Key Club, I met him.

He said, "They can't seem to find him."

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can't seem to find Giannini?

Mr. VALACHI. Giannini. He said to me, "Gee, Joe, you are not thinking about the money?" I said, "They are going to start this business? Can't they find him? I will find him."

He said, "Well, I will have to talk to the old man about that," meaning Vito Genovese, of course.

So, the next night I met him and he told me that Vito Genovese liked the idea.

The CHAIRMAN. When you said you would find him, what did you mean by that?

Mr. VALACHI. I would get him. If they can't find him means they can't find him to shoot him. So I said I will find him.

The CHAIRMAN. What does that mean in your terms?

Does that mean you were agreeing yourself to kill him?

Mr. VALACHI. I volunteered because I figured now they are looking for excuses. Maybe somebody else will make a lead with him and blame me because he owes me money and accuse me for tipping him off. That is the reason why I answered that way. If they can't find him, I will find him.

The CHAIRMAN. What I am trying to determine, was that in effect, "I will take the contract, I will kill him"?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. You were taking the contract, yourself?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. To kill him, find him and kill him?

Mr. VALACHI. Right; and I had to get the OK.

The CHAIRMAN. You had to get the OK from the old man and the old man was Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How did you go about this?

Mr. VALACHI. When I got the contract, I called Giannini home one night. Jo Pagano was with me.

Mr. ADLERMAN. P-a-g-a-n-o?

Mr. VALACHI. Right. I didn't want him to come to my restaurant. I called him, I didn't give him no name. I just said—I knew he recognized my voice—I said, "Meet me on the corner," meaning on the corner of Casselbra and Westchester Avenue.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who are you talking about now?

Mr. VALACHI. Gian. It was 8 or 9 o'clock at night, so, Gian said, "I'll be over in the next 20 minutes."

352 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

When he came over, there was a car behind him, which I gathered and I figured was agents.

So I met him in the Casbah on the corner. I told him, I said, "What, do you have agents following you?"

He said, "Jeez, they must be watching you."

I said, "Maybe they are," and I just passed it up.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, you spotted that he had a tail on him?

Mr. VALACHI. He had a tail. So I passed it up and I went to a side door. I said, "I will give you a ring in a couple of days," and I walked out the side. A few days later I called him again at the same place, but this time I went off the corner in another bar called the Casbah. And again the car came. So this time I told him, I said, "Gee, every time I call you, you got somebody covering you." He said, "Gee, I am surprised." I said, "Ah, let's have a drink." So we had a drink, and while we were drinking, he said he had a creeping feeling that night, and also Joe Pagano was with me, and I said, "What do you mean?" And he said, "I don't know. I feel like I am going to be killed."

I said, "What are you talking about?" He said, "That is how I feel." I called the girl over that I knew, a girl that used to work with me in the Lido, and she was hanging on there in the Casbah, and she used to go out with the owner of the Casbah. So I said, "Have a drink," and I introduced him to the girl, which he knew already, because she worked in the Lido Restaurant. But he didn't know her to talk to her.

So I said, "Why don't you go out and have a good time?" He said, "I am broke." So I handed him $40. So I hung around a little more and then I told Joe, "Let's go. Go ahead and enjoy yourself." And I left him in the Casbah with Jean.

On the way down, Joe he told me, or one of us said, "Joe, it must be true. The guy is an informer."

Mr. ADLERMAN. What?

Mr. VALACHI. That it must be true, that he is an informer. Twice we called him, and twice he has got a tail. So we left it off that way.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you later discover where he was operating from?

Mr. VALACHI. A few days later, and it must have been Joe, because I was hanging out in the Bronx at the time, told me he found out that Jean is working at a crap game at 112th Street, at the drop. "At the drop" means the crap shooters go to this place before they go to the game, and one of the fellows that is working there, maybe three or four or five or seven of them working, would direct the crap shooters where the game is. That is what we call a drop.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, they go to the drop and there they are met by somebody who tells them the game is at such and such address, or such and such room in a hotel?

Mr. VALACHI. One of them will escort them usually to the game.

Well, I said, "I will go down and see Tony." I said that to myself. So I went down to see Tony, and I explained to Tony about the two calls I made from Westchester Avenue, and now I find out that he is working at the game at 112th Street. I said, "The game belongs to Paulie Hamm."

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 353

Mr. ADLERMAN. Paulie Hamm?

Mr. VALACHI. Paulie Hamm.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that H-a-m-m? What is his real name? Is it Correale?

Mr. VALACHI. It sounds like it. I don't know the real name, but that sounds like it. So I told Tony that the game belongs to Paulie Hamm, meaning that another family—that is another family.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What family was that?

Mr. VALACHI. Tony Lucchese.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, that is a dice game run by Paul Hamm, and it is under the protection of the Lucchese family?

Mr. VALACHI. And Joe Palisades.

Mr. ADLERMAN. A lieutenant of the Lucchese family?

Mr. VALACHI. He said, "I will tell the old man about that." I said, "I will make sure." He said, "You don't have to come down. Call me up and I will have an answer for you." So I called him up at the Gold Key Club, and he told me that, "OK on him."

Mr. ADLERMAN. He said it was OK to kill him?

Mr. VALACHI. He said it was OK, that is all right, meaning go ahead. So, naturally, now, we are working on him in Harlem. So I got the boys.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who did you recruit for this job?

(Senator Mundt entered the room.)

Mr. VALACHI. Pat Pagano.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Pasquale Pagano?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Joe Pagano, the same name, two brothers, and Siano. Well, I looked over the situation, and I told them to get an apartment from 112th Street that would lead into the 111th Street. In other words, they will go through 112th and come out on 111th Street.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, examine a building where they can go from 112th Street and come out on 111th Street?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Where was this game located?

Mr. VALACHI. 112th Street between Second and Third Avenue. The drop was 112th Street, between 111th and 112th Street on Second Avenue, in other words a half block away. So, on this particular night, and this is going on for about a week, a few days, 4 or 5 days, a week, whatever it was, I was down there myself and I ask them this—this night Jean was sitting in front of the drop—I asked them if they had gone through the hall. They said they had not. I said, "Well, go home and sleep. You ain't doing anything unless you go go through that drop. You may find the door locked. You people are crazy." I wanted them to go through.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You wanted to check out the exit so they would have a clear getaway?

Mr. VALACHI. Right. Besides, Pat said, "I will make sure I go through and come out." I said, "Okay, if you don't go through that, I am responsible for this."

I come down the following night and they had gone through, but Jean didn't come that night. He wasn't there. Well, it was a few more days that passed when I got a telephone call. They explained to me whichever way it was that she was around.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That what?

Mr. VALACHI. That she was around, that that girl was around, she is over there, meaning Jean. I mean, that is the way they said it on the phone. "Well, go see her." Well, they took care of her.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did they shoot her?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, they shot her.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And they escaped on the escape route that you had planned out for them through the building from 112th Street to 111th Street?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Where did they leave the body?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, now, the body was moved.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did they move the body?

Mr. VALACHI. Who is they?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Pagano or Siano?

Mr. VALACHI. No. There was a dispute about the body. The body was moved from 112th Street and dumped in 107th Street. I am coming to that. I didn't see Tony until a few days later, maybe 2 days, and he asked me about the guns, what happened to the guns, with the other gun.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who was it you are talking about now?

Mr. VALACHI. Tony Bender.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Tony Strollo?

Mr. VALACHI. Tony Strollo. I said, "To tell you the truth, I didn't see those guys yet, but I know they went to Newark for a couple of days. But I will check." And Tony is telling me about how come they found the body on 107th, and I don't know. Well, a few more days go by and I get called again, this time in the office of Vito Genovese in the scrap company that he had.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was that the Erb Scrapping Co.?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Where was that located?

Mr. VALACHI. On Thompson Street. Vito was telling me that them guys made a beef and they are pretty mad.

Mr. ADLERMAN. When you say "them guys," who do you mean by that?

Mr. VALACHI. People of the game.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Paul Hamm?

Mr. VALACHI. Pauly Hamm and the ones that was interested in the game. I didn't know all of them.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, the people that were running the crap game made a squawk about it because the killing was committed so close to the game?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Thus attracting the attention of the cops to that area.

Mr. VALACHI. They said it cost them $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. It cost them $10,000, and they didn't like to lose that kind of money. He wasn't concerned about the fellow who got killed particularly, but just didn't want the crap game interfered with; is that it?

Mr. VALACHI. That is what I told them; isn't it worth $10,000 to get rid of something like that?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 355

The CHAIRMAN. You told them it was worth $10,000 to get rid of something like that?

Mr. VALACHI. Certainly, and then I told Tony, "I told you people." In other words, I didn't do it on my own.

The CHAIRMAN. You thought it had been arranged to handle it just that way before you arranged to have him killed?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. They ok'd it.

The CHAIRMAN. Where were you when the killing actually took place?

Mr. VALACHI. I was in the Lido restaurant.

The CHAIRMAN. In the restaurant?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know it was going to take place at that time?

Mr. VALACHI. When I told them I got the call and they told me that she was there, meaning that he was there. Now I am giving you an idea of how we talk.

The CHAIRMAN. When they said she was there, you knew it meant that Giannini was there, and, therefore, it would be taken care of.

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. Then they gave me another call I forgot to tell you about, and they were going to take a trip to Newark, meaning that it was taken care of.

The CHAIRMAN. They gave you another call and talked to you in language that they were going to take a trip.

Mr. VALACHI. And which they did take a trip.

The CHAIRMAN. It indicated to you that they had taken care of it and that they were going on as they planned?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. They wouldn't be around for a couple of days.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be away for a few days.

Senator CURTIS. Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Curtis.

Senator CURTIS. You were not present when he was killed?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator CURTIS. You did take the contract for it?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, sometimes I was there and sometimes I wasn't. If I am there, I will be there just the same. It don't make—

Senator CURTIS. I am coming to that. But you took the contract for the killing?

Mr. VALACHI. I had the contract and the responsibility.

Senator CURTIS. And in carrying out that contract, you introduced him to this girl Jean?

Mr. VALACHI. Jean had nothing to do with it.

Senator CURTIS. No, I mean in the first instance you introduced him?

Mr. VALACHI. Do you mean when I wanted him to go out and enjoy himself?

Senator CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator CURTIS. And you gave him some money?

Mr. VALACHI. I gave him $40.

Senator CURTIS. Did you recruit the men who did the killing?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't understand what this means.

356 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator CURTIS. Did you arrange for them, did you pick them out?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator CURTIS. What did they get?

Mr. VALACHI. Money?

Senator CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. No, they were proposed.

Senator CURTIS. I see. They were members——

Mr. VALACHI. Not members. Proposed.

Senator CURTIS. Proposed members?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator CURTIS. So they had to do it to prove themselves; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, we always worked the same way, and we are still working the same way. We don't care what anybody else does.

Senator CURTIS. Now, in every murder that you have described, you have always been absent at the time the gun was fired, or at least you didn't fire it.

Mr. VALACHI. Senator——

Senator CURTIS. Is that because you have a convenient memory, or are you withholding something from the committee that might incriminate you, or is there some other reason?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I am glad you brought that out. At this time we are talking about, around 1952, I am experienced, and these boys are not. You see the way they wanted to go ahead and do this without going through the yards? We talk about myself now, like I have been telling you I have been driving the car.

Senator, I want to tell you something, driving the automobile is more important and more dangerous. For instance, I want to recall to you, Senator, the Joe Baker affair. You will remember I told you there was four of us up there, like Sally Shields, myself, Buster and Nick Caputo, is that right?

Senator CURTIS. That is right.

Mr. VALACHI. Sometimes we were five, Senator. Remember, Senator, we were going into the headquarters of the opposite mob. In other words, Sally Shields was a stiff there. He wasn't needed nohow. But to watch their backs or be prepared in case we do meet the opposite mob. Now, I am a chauffeur, for which I have been known through the years, that I was a good driver. In fact, other mobs used to try and borrow me, which I never wanted to go. I am a professional at the wheel. Buster is a sharp shooter. So I take the wheel and Buster does the shooting, and for instance, Nick could not fire unless Buster fired first. I didn't think I had to explain that. But, Senator, being you asked me that, that is the way we worked. Everybody today is professional.

Senator CURTIS. Do you regard the individual who uses the gun or the knife more guilty than you or the others?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, if I go and do something—what difference does it make who uses the gun and who drives the car? We are both guilty. How can you get out of that?

Senator CURTIS. I don't want you to. But I want to know what you thought about it.

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I know the law, but this is war. Now, look at the time we wasted on Joe Baker, 2 months up in the other place.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 357

Can you imagine if we had a miss there how we would feel? So why take a chance with an amateur when you got a sharpshooter around?

Senator CURTIS. In other words, you are explaining that you divided up among experts a particular function?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator CURTIS. And you are not putting this in the light that there would be more guilt on somebody else?

Mr. VALACHI. No, Senator, by no means.

Senator CURTIS. You regard everyone that participates equally guilty with the individual who pulls the gun?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator—

Senator CURTIS. Now do you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I want to tell you how much I am aware of the law. You are guilty as an accessory before the fact, after the fact, I know all that, Senator. I am very familiar with that. I don't mean that by no means when I speak that way. I just tell you what happened. In 1930, that is the reason why Maranzano liked me a lot. Everybody that had to go somewhere asked, "Can I take Joe," because they depended on the driver. I went three places one day. Nothing was done but I went three places. Everybody would ask for me because of the driving. You remember in the early days when I got shot in the head and arms, the 72 shots that were fired. Do you want me to explain the 72 shots?

Senator CURTIS. If it won't take too long.

Mr. VALACHI. I got it in the court, where the detective made the statement in court. That is how I knew 72 shots were fired. "Twelve men fired 72 shots at this boy." I thought I—

Senator CURTIS. What is involved in being a good driver when there is somebody to be murdered, is it speed or is it knowledge of the streets or how to take the lights or what is it?

Mr. VALACHI. In case you are put in a position that you are stopped and you can't stop and in case you have to be prepared for that—in case some policeman wants to stop you, maybe we can't afford to stop, maybe we didn't get rid of the guns yet and we have to get away. It always pays to have a level-headed driver.

Senator CURTIS. Who is in command in the car? You are in the getaway, you haven't got rid of the guns yet and a decision has to be made whether to abandon the car or fire at a policeman or what. Who is in command? Who is to say they are not to fire on a policeman?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, the only thing I can say, we didn't come across anything like that. Everything went smooth.

Senator CURTIS. If something had happened would you have been in command?

Mr. VALACHI. The guy at the wheel. He is responsible for everything. After that it is all up to him whether he takes you home or whether he crashes and gets you pinched. He is the most important after that.

Senator CURTIS. If he would run into a situation and told the men not to shoot, they should not do it, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, we always try to avoid shooting. After all we are experienced. We always try that. I went into details of the Tremont Avenue job and I never told what police told me. They give me credit for two things. One, that we didn't fire back. Another was that I didn't hit anybody going at 80 miles an hour. I tell you something that happened but I didn't think I should go into details. For instance, I got arrested and I went to jail. But now I see it pays for me to explain to you, Senator. Do you understand what I mean?

Senator CURTIS. I do.

Mr. VALACHI. I was wondering why no one asked me about the 72 shots. How did I know 72 shots? Before I made the statement I knew where I got it from. Nobody asked me and I didn't say anything. If you had asked me I would have told you I got it when the arresting officer made the statement in court.

Senator CURTIS. One time the police praised you for the fact that you did not shoot back at them?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, they said they gave us credit for two things.

Senator CURTIS. Also you could drive 80 miles an hour without hitting anybody?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. "We don't know if you had any guns but if you did, instead of being here for burglary today you might be here for murder."

They explained it.

Senator CURTIS. Instead of the low man in command being the car driver he is the man in the car that really runs it.

Mr. VALACHI. That is the most dangerous job. Twice there was somebody that got hit and I was the one twice. Once in the arm and once in the head.

Senator CURTIS. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. In driving you have to try to see where you are going, don't you?

Mr. VALACHI. In driving it is to keep a level head, Senator. Being a good driver won't help if you are going to get excited and go into a building, no matter how good a driver you are, it is sustaining under the pressure, they are shooting at you, is to hold your head. Don't be dashing around a corner a hundred miles an hour and turn upside down. It is keep cool. That is the experience of driving, it is to stay cool. Senator, I would be ashamed to tell you how many chases we got.

The CHAIRMAN. What?

Mr. VALACHI. I would be ashamed to tell you how many chases we got, it would sound like an exaggeration.

The CHAIRMAN. How many times they chased you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You are talking about in your career of burglary in the 30 years?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. The old-time policemen they know. The policemen of that day they know. I don't want to praise myself.

The CHAIRMAN. A minute ago you told us, you don't regard yourself less guilty because of the fact that you drove the car and the other fellow did the shooting.

Mr. VALACHI. By no means, Senator. I say we all the time, like we went to the——

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, we did the killing. That is what you are saying.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not saying they killed him?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 359

Mr. VALACHI. The opposite mob ain't going to leave me alone because I drove the car, neither is the law going to leave me alone. I didn't think I had to explain that. I took it for granted.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, you explained that this dice game was under the jurisdiction of the Lucchese family and the game was run by Paulie Hamm and that his lieutenant was Joe Palisades.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did they make a complaint against you for having a murder committed on their doorstep?

Mr. VALACHI. Let me go on with the conversation I had with Vito Genovese.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. He told me what did I get him on. I said, "What did they say?" "They said they took out of the neighborhood to throw the heat off the game." I said, "They are lying." "What do you mean," he says. I said, "The boys that were loose, that were working in the game, which are not members, they thought he had a chance. They were rushing him to the hospital. You don't know the neighborhood, I do." I am telling this to Vito. I said, "You don't know the neighborhood, I do. They are on their way to the Fifth Avenue Hospital. Going on their way to the Fifth Avenue Hospital," I said, "they realized that he was dead and they dumped him off. Now they want to play heroes. Now they want you to understand they took a dead body, taking a chance of being caught just because they wanted to take it away from the crap game." I said, "I won't go for it." He said, "That is what they say." I said, "I am telling you what I say. You can count on it." He said, "I agree with it." That is what he told me. Now what was the question you asked?

Mr. ADLERMAN. I asked you whether or not Joe Palisades had made any complaints because you drew heat to the game by killing him right at the doorstep there?

Mr. VALACHI. A week later I got a telephone call from Tommy Ryan that Tony wanted to see me.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is Tommy Eboli, Tommy Ryan.

Mr. VALACHI. Right. I had an address to go to Hialeah Park, Highlands, whatever it is in New Jersey, I got an address to go alone. I went. I found my way. I got into the place. It was owned by Vito Genovese's son-in-law.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was this Atlantic Highlands?

Mr. VALACHI. I saw Vito there. I saw another room, there were quite a few boys in there. I don't know if I saw Tommy or Joe Palisades but I saw one of them, I wasn't sure, the door was closed. I was drinking at the bar. I was pretty sore. I had an idea why they called me. Nobody is telling me anything but as I say, the other door was closed, you know, was closed and then where I was at the bar there was tables naturally in the room and in the other room. After my drinking about maybe 10 or 15 minutes by myself I decided to go to the bathroom. Now when I went into the bathroom, alongside of me came Tock O'Dell which I knew for a long time and he got next to me as I was in the bathroom. He said, "I am your friend." I said, "For what?" He said, "I am your friend." I said, "Tock, can I ask you some questions?" He said, "Nope." "Can I come and see you in

Brooklyn?" He said, "Nope." "Have I done something wrong?" He said, "I am your friend." I said, "What am I supposed to do, go home?" "Yes." Then I come out. I don't even know if I said so long and walked out and I went home. In other words, I was on the carpet. Tock was trying to make me understand. I want to know why I am on the carpet. In other words, I am trying to say, they told me to do it, now what?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Anyhow, they resolved it without calling you in, is that right? Then they told you to go home?

Mr. VALACHI. They straightened it out.

Mr. ADLERMAN. When you discussed this with Vito Genovese after the murder and you explained to him how it happened did he say anything to you?

Mr. VALACHI. When he learned that I accepted the proposition, that he was had.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He wanted to get the first punch?

Yes?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I forgot to tell you that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, he had given approval to do the job where it was done even though it was on the doorstep of the—

Mr. VALACHI. Right. Now when it comes to these other guys making a beef, I don't know what they said. Why are they calling me in Highlands?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Have you ever talked to Lucchese himself personally?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, somebody died, well, that was maybe a couple of months after, 2 months, somebody died, and I knew Tommy Lucchese would be at his wake. I waited 2 days, in other words, to talk to Tommy. When I did meet Tommy there was some of the boys there like Big Sam, Joe Palisades himself was there. They were acting cold. Anyway what I explained to Tommy is, "I wanted to know how you feel, I don't care about them, how they feel." I said, "Do you think I went crazy? Do you think I would go there by myself?" In other words, I am trying to tell him, do you think I took it on my own?

Mr. ADLERMAN. When you took it on your own, you mean killing him on the doorstep?

Mr. VALACHI. Because of the crap game. He said, "Forget about it. Everything is fine."

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words Lucchese was pleased because Giannini was killed because he was an informer?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I wonder if we can call Sergeant Salerno so that we can put the record on this.

TESTIMONY OF SGT. RALPH SALERNO—Resumed

Mr. ADLERMAN. Sergeant, you have already been sworn and you have heard the testimony, of Mr. Valachi, concerning the killing of Eugene Giannini?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir, I have.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you tell us what the record shows on that?

Sergeant SALERNO. The record shows that at 6 a.m. on September 20, 1952, the body of Eugene Giannini, age 42, who lived at 282 West

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 361

234th Street, New York City, was found in front of 221 East 107th Street. The cause of death was shotgun wounds in the head. The deceased had a narcotics arrest both for violation of State laws and Federal laws and, through confidential sources, it was learned that he had, in fact, been an informant for the Federal Bureau of Narcotics.

(At this point Senator McClellan withdraw from the hearing room.)

MR. ADLERMAN. Do you know whether or not Fiore Siano mentioned by Mr. Valachi is still alive?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir, he is.

MR. ADLERMAN. Do you know whether or not Joe Pagano is still alive?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir, he is.

MR. ADLERMAN. Do you know whether Pasquale Pagano is still alive?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir; all three of them are.

MR. ADLERMAN. Are any of them in prison at the present time?

Sergeant SALERNO. No, they are all out of prison right now. I believe that Joseph Pagano is in jail at the present time.

MR. ADLERMAN. Is what?

Sergeant SALERNO. Joseph Pagano is in jail at the present time.

MR. ADLERMAN. Joe Pagano?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

MR. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi testified to the killing of Rava and Roberts. I wonder if you can put in the police record showing what it reflects?

Sergeant SALERNO. In the case of Armand Rava, there is no official record of a homicide or even of him being a missing person.

In the case of John Robilotto, who is known as Johnny Roberts, on September 7, 1958, at 3:35 p.m., John Robilotto, also known as Johnny Roberts, of 782 St. Marks Avenue, Brooklyn, age 54, was found shot and killed at 150 feet south of the southwest corner of Utica Avenue and Kings Highway in Brooklyn, the cause of death being multiple gunshot wounds of the face and head.

MR. ADLERMAN. Has the police department made any investigation concerning Armand Rava?

Sergeant SALERNO. We don't truly have an official complaint, either that he is missing, by any member of his family who do reside in our city, nor do we have any complaints or homicide, nor is there a body, Mr. Adlerman.

MR. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, do you know the whereabouts of Rava's body, or what the circumstances are or how he was killed?

MR. VALACHI. Who?

MR. ADLERMAN. Rava.

MR. VALACHI. I understand they buried him.

MR. ADLERMAN. They buried him?

MR. VALACHI. Yes.

MR. ADLERMAN. And you say his family has never reported him missing?

Sergeant SALERNO. No, sir.

MR. ADLERMAN. Has he been seen around?

Sergeant SALERNO. Well, there was a great deal of interest in him immediately following the Apalachin meeting because he was one of those men in attendance. His close association to Albert Anastasia is a thing that was known, of course.

So many agencies, local, State, and Federal, had an interest in Armand Rava.

The last traces of his whereabouts were in the State of Florida in 1959.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In the opinion of the police department, do they suspect that he has been killed?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes. We presume that he is dead.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you have a lot of other instances of a similar nature, like Vincent Gigante and some of those others that have been missing?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And this is not an uncommon occurrence for bodies never to be found, a corpus delicti to be available?

Sergeant SALERNO. We have given some really very serious consideration that this is a new technique employed by organized crime for the purpose of having no official report or, at best a missing person's report, rather than have a body in the street where there is quite a thorough investigation of the circumstances of a homicide.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And the proof of the homicide would depend upon the finding of the corpus delicti?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, or at least a complaint that someone is missing might lead to an inquiry.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This has become rather a current mode of operation?

Sergeant SALERNO. I can think of at least a half dozen in the last several years in our area of interest, if not actually within our city at least, of people whom we would be interested in, for example, Tony Bender actually disappeared from his home in New Jersey but he is a person that we would be interested in and we would give it some analysis in our thinking.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Thank you.

Senator McINTYRE. Mr. Chairman?

Senator JACKSON (presiding). Senator.

Senator McINTYRE. May I inquire of the sergeant on a couple of questions?

Sergeant, I am intrigued by Valachi's testimony about the game belongs—speaking about a dice game—that the game belongs to so and so. What does that mean?

Sergeant SALERNO. A dice game actually has an operator.

In addition to the playerrs, there are the persons who must arrange for the premises, itself. There is an operator. The game can be cut, where a certain amount is taken from the pot for the expenses involved. The persons who are in charge of this, arranging—he has described, for example, that you just don't walk up and ring a doorbell and walk into a game. There is a drop where you are picked up and delivered to the game. We have found that some of the methods which have been arranged for delivery are quite elaborate.

He speaks of the drop in this particular case being a block or a block and a half away. We have found that a person may actually start, let's say, seven blocks from the ultimate location that he will be delivered to.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 363

However, the man who delivers him puts him into a vehicle and they may travel 20 and 25 miles up and down parkways to be sure that they are not being tailed before that man is actually delivered into the game.

So the people who have to arrange for all of this are the people who have the game and operate the game.

Senator McINTYRE. They take a big cut out of this?

Sergeant SALERNO. They get enough out of it to make it worth their while, Senator, or they wouldn't engage in this type of thing.

Senator McINTYRE. I think Valachi referred to the fact that it cost somebody $10,000 on this particular night.

Sergeant SALERNO. The profits from having to perhaps relocate their game, to get in touch with their players and let them know where the new location would be, this would be an economic loss to them; yes, sir.

Senator McINTYRE. Who are the players? Are they fellows in New York, looking for thrills, or something?

Who are the players who participate in this?

Sergeant SALERNO. Well, in a real good game, you find that the players are quite usually, these days, members of the smart money crowd who are in organized crime. There might have been a time when legitimate businessmen, looking for the thrill of a big action game, would have attended, but there is a certain amount of embarrassment in being arrested in this game, even if you are only a player and not directly concerned with the operation of the game, and we find that legitimate people have started to shun the effects of being arrested in a game of this type.

Senator McINTYRE. The players, then, would normally, in this type of game that Valachi is talking about, would be part of these hoods, and so on?

Sergeant SALERNO. These days, I would say this is what you would find at the game, smart money people.

Senator McINTYRE. Does shylocking enter into the dice game at all?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, it does. In a good game, I suppose, the principle behind it is that the man who is losing expects that his luck is going to change at any moment. So even though he goes through all of the cash that he may have walked into the game with, he will then seek to borrow money from a shylock who is at the game, so that he can continue and perhaps change his luck.

Senator McINTYRE. Thank you very much.

Senator JACKSON. Mr. Valachi, did you want to comment?

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Mr. VALACHI. I would like to explain about the shylocking, too, in the game. I know about it.

Senator McINTYRE. Shylocking at the dice game?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JACKSON. You do not mean you introduce high rates of interest into the dice game?

Mr. VALACHI. No; they have a man there and he stays there just for that. They charge 5 percent for overnight borrowing. In other words, if you borrow $5,000, you have to pay 5 percent on it. But they are not giving this $5,000 to anybody. They know who they are giving it to.

Senator JACKSON. Was this a pretty good area of business in lending money?

Mr. VALACHI. I have known boys who got rich in the Sammy Shields game downtown through the years.

Senator JACKSON. Did you have some who specialized in loaning money for dice games?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JACKSON. And I suppose the participants are captives so that if it is a 24-hour loan, at least the body would be there all that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I don't know how they think, Senator, but if you borrow $100, the next day you have to bring $105; if you borrow $500, you have to bring $525. It is according to what you borrow. But they charge 5 percent.

Senator JACKSON. Five percent for 24 hours?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JACKSON. That is about the highest rate submitted so far.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, that is the way it goes, Senator.

Senator MCINTYRE. That is the overnight rate, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JACKSON. I have heard of by the month, but this is the first time I understood they had an overnight rate.

Mr. VALACHI. So they can be a day late, but it is 5 percent.

Senator JACKSON. Thank you, Sergeant.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, do you recall the occurrence of the shooting of Costello?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Costello had taken over what is now known as the Genovese family and previously had been known as the Luciano family, and he had taken it over after Lucky Luciano had gone to Europe and it was determined he was not coming back.

Mr. VALACHI. He originally had been there after Che Gusae. There was a Che Gusae there for 1 year after Charley went away. He died. Frank was put there as acting boss.

But through the years, and you are talking up to the time he got shot, he must have been there about maybe—I don't know how many years, but quite a bit of years. He automatically became boss.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were you approached by anybody to shoot or kill Costello?

Mr. VALACHI. I have to be very cautious in telling this.

Senator JACKSON. Refer to it as Mr. C. or your "friend."

Mr. VALACHI. That wouldn't help Mr. Adlerman.

Can we leave this until private? I want to protect this person. It is very hard.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were you asked to participate in it?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Without mentioning the name of the man, did you agree to participate?

Mr. VALACHI. Mr. Adlerman, I am not thinking of the question.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. I am not thinking of the question you just asked me. That would also be incriminating.

Let's put all of the question for private. I will answer you. I will give you all of the details.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 365

Mr. ADLERMAN. Would you rather tell it in your own way?

Mr. VALACHI. No; I would rather talk it in private.

Senator JACKSON. You want to talk in a private room or in what we call an executive session?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. All right; then, we will abandon this for the moment.

Mr. VALACHI. Please.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yesterday, we were discussing about some of the businesses that Genovese had been in. I would just like to get this straight.

Was he partner in any clubs in New York City?

Mr. VALACHI. He had the Savannah Club.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Where is that located?

Mr. VALACHI. Third Street on the west side. I always forget the other street. But it was Third Street.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Any other clubs?

Mr. VALACHI. The Grotton Village on Eighth Street.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What other clubs?

Mr. VALACHI. The 111 Club, on Second Avenue, when it was there.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was that 111 or 181?

Mr. VALACHI. 181.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Any other clubs?

Mr. VALACHI. The 82 Club on Fourth Street. He had nothing to do with the Gold Key.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who were his fronts on those, do you know?

Mr. VALACHI. A fellow by the name of Steve Francis and another fellow named Tony Petillo, which was his brother-in-law. That is about all.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Let me go to another matter now. While you were a cellmate of Genovese in Atlanta, did you have a discussion about the Copacabana Club?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I would like you to relate the nature of your discussion with Genovese.

Mr. VALACHI. I was walking around with him. I was walking around with him one day and he told me that Joe Pagano had a piece of Copacabana.

So, innocently, I said, "Joe has a piece of the Copa?"

Well, he blew up. He said, "What do you mean?"

I said, "That's what I heard."

"Where did you hear it? With my permission, I want you to tell everybody, I am giving you permission," and he was yelling, "You go tell everybody that Frank Costello—I gave him back the Copacabana, that Frank Costello owns the club."

When he means "anybody," he didn't mean the inmates, he meant the boys in the prison, of which there was about 14 boys from different families, some from Buffalo, some from New York, some from Chicago. There was quite a bit, about 14 members.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This was after the attempted shooting?

Mr. VALACHI. This was after that. That was after he reinstated him in Atlanta Prison. In other words, they made up. I don't know if I explained that Frank Costello was stripped out of everything. Did I explain that before?

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. That he was nothing.

Mr. ADLERMAN. After the shooting he had been downgraded and he had no rank or anything.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. Have I explained that before?

Mr. ADLERMAN. No; we did not go into that.

Mr. VALACHI. Do you want me to go into that?

Mr. ADLERMAN. No; I think we had better avoid that. We will take that in executive session.

Mr. VALACHI. I will leave that for private, too. There is something I thought about that I can't say.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In your talk with Genovese he explained to you that he had reinstated Costello in favor with the organization.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, at this time, when I asked him that, I knew Frank was reinstated, but I did not know that he had gone back to the "Copa," only that I asked innocently that I had heard that Joe Pagano had a piece of the Copa. Innocently, when I asked him if that was true that is when he blew up and told me that Frank Costello has the club back and it belongs to Frank and nobody else but Frank.

Mr. ADLERMAN. When he says a piece, does that mean ownership of the club or does it mean the hat concession, or what?

Mr. VALACHI. It could have been anything, it could have been the hat concession, it could have been anything, it would have meant anything. That is what I wanted him to explain to me, what kind of piece he had. I walked into it innocently. I was sorry I asked him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you have another conversation with him about Philip Lombardo or Benny Squint?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Will you explain what that deal was?

Mr. VALACHI. When he was out, somebody else told me that in Atlanta.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who told you that?

Mr. VALACHI. Not in Atlanta but West Street.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who was that?

Mr. VALACHI. The same thing, that Benny Squint and Chink Leo, they had the concession of the hat checking. It cost $25,000 to get the concession. Anyway, to make it short, after 1 year there was a $30,000 profit. So, now when they went to tell Vito, I am talking about Benny Squint now, that there was $30,000 profit, he turned around and said he had a case pending. He took the $30,000 and put it in his pocket and they did not get 2 cents.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did they ever complain about it?

Mr. VALACHI. They did not make no complaints but the interest was lost about having the hat checking.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. They lost their interest in having the hat check. They traveled.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The two people you are talking about is Philip Lombardo alias Benny Squint and Ben Turpin?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. As long as I am talking about him he is the one who acts as lieutenant while Mike Copolla is in Florida.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 367

Mr. VALACHI. He is the one who acts as lieutenant while Mike Copolla is in Florida.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Will you explain what you mean by acting for Mike Copolla while he is in Florida?

Mr. VALACHI. Being Mike Copolla is in Florida most of the time he acts as lieutenant in Mike Copolla's absence. Now, if something is very important and Mike has to come in then he comes in. Until then Benny Squint or Ben Turpin is what we call acting lieutenant.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, the other man that had an interest in this was Arthur Leo or Chink Leo?

Mr. VALACHI. Chink Leo.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Philip Lombardo and Arthur Leo were afraid to complain about taking away this money?

Mr. VALACHI. Naturally; who is going to complain?

Senator MUNDT. Do I understand that if you are out of your area of operations for a certain amount of time, under your Cosa Nostra rule you have to get a sort of letter of reference or introduction to get back in?

Mr. VALACHI. No, Senator; it is this way—maybe you have not put the question right.

Senator MUNDT. Tell us how it is.

Mr. VALACHI. May I explain it to you?

In other words, if a member wants to move, like, say, I want to go to Boston, I have to live in Boston 6 months. Then I can go in and get a letter if Boston wants me. That is what you mean, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. I see. You have to live in an area 6 months?

Mr. VALACHI. Six months. In other words, if you want to move, yes.

Senator MUNDT. Are there any open areas in which the mob operates where you don't have to do that?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, then you belong in the same place. This is only if you want to make a move. You can go live anyplace you want but you are not making any move. You always have to report where you originally report and let them know you live there, that is all. This way they can call you. I explained, if you want to make a move and go from one family to another.

Senator MUNDT. Then you have to be there 6 months?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JACKSON. Mr. Valachi, is the $30,000 take from a hat-check operation a net take?

Mr. VALACHI. That was the net profit.

Senator JACKSON. Do you know any other similar concessions in the New York area?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, there is all kinds of concessions, Senator. Some places they lose money, too.

Senator JACKSON. I am talking about being run by the mob.

Mr. VALACHI. No; mostly they sell them.

Senator JACKSON. They buy and sell them?

Mr. VALACHI. No; like they rent it out. Like, say, the $25,000 was like renting it out rather than having the trouble. They have to furnish the girls and work.

Senator JACKSON. I understand; but they, in effect, own the concession and then they rent it out?

368 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. Right, that $25,000 a year.

Senator JACKSON. The average charge or rental or lease arrangement is $25,000 a year you say?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, it would be leased, yes.

Senator JACKSON. I meant on the so-called better known clubs and so on.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; they lease them that way, yes.

Senator MUNDT. Do you object to telling us in public testimony about what Genovese told you in Atlanta concerning the Federal agent that had been marked for extinction?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; I would rather have that in private session.

Senator MUNDT. You would rather not tell that?

All right.

Senator JACKSON. Sergeant Salerno, counsel has a question.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Sergeant, have the police conducted any investigation as to any activities in the Copacabana Club?

Sergeant SALERNO. There are at the present time, Mr. Adlerman, two rather extensive investigations into the areas of the premises which are licensed by the State liquor authority. The State liquor authority itself is conducting an investigation. As a matter of fact, yesterday's paper spoke of several revocations of licenses for hidden interests. That investigation is being pursued by the State liquor authority, itself. The district attorney in New York County has a very active investigation in the same area.

With regard to the Copacabana, there is a case right now being appealed in superior court arising from an assault that took place in the Copacabana. Our department, when it had a jurisdiction of cab areas, did conduct a hearing with the licensee of the Copacabana, was brought in. All these matters are still pending so we feel we have to ask the indulgence of the committee in not discussing the matter while these investigations are current.

Mr. ADLERMAN. We won't pursue it any further.

Sergeant SALERNO. Thank you.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, Mr. Valachi, during the time that you were being tried on the conspiracy charges in New York City you were held at the Federal detention house on West Street?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You call it "West Street" usually; is that your abbreviation for it?

Mr. VALACHI. For the detention house.

Mr. ADLERMAN. While you were at the detention house did you meet Carmine Persico, Jr.?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I did.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you have some conversations with him concerning the Profaci and Gallo feud?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was Persico involved in that, himself?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, he was involved in that. I was introduced—let me call him "Junior." I can't pronounce his name and I can't remember his name often. I was introduced to Junior by some members there. There were quite a few of them.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is Persico a member of the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You introduced him as a member?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I was very close to some of his friends. I was on the same case with him. He had heard about me outside. He was very close to some friends of mine, even Tony Bender. So, one day he was explaining to me about Joe Profaci, that they had been getting taxed very heavy, he said, "Even if we go hijack some trucks he taxes us. I paid up to $1,800."

Mr. ADLERMAN. They were taxing individual members as high as $1,800?

Mr. VALACHI. He is talking about himself. In other words, he is telling me how he was taxed and explaining to me how Profaci works. So, I was stunned and amazed. I told him that I used to be with Profaci years ago and he was preaching to me at that time about the Masseria group doing the same thing. Now I am hearing the same thing he is doing. Well, I told Junior that they were within their rights. I was explaining to him how right they were. It was not Junior that told me, it was Jiggs that started all this. It was another member I had met.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Jiggs is who, Jiggs Forlano?

Mr. VALACHI. Jiggs Forlano. I never thought I knew him until I saw his picture. Then it was explained to me that Jiggs started all this business. He made 125 men pull away on Profaci. In other words, that was half the group.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was Jiggs Forlano a lieutenant or a caporegime of the Profaci family?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; he was a lieutenant. I understood that they stuck up and kidnapped four or five of their bosses or main people. Who they kidnapped and what they had done, I didn't know who.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Let me go back a little bit with you. What is the ordinary tax paid by the members of the family?

Mr. VALACHI. $25 a month.

Mr. ADLERMAN. At this time they jacked the taxes up as high as $1,800, for example, in Persico's case?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, in this particular highjacking he was involved in.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You had conversations in jail with Jiggs?

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't meet Jiggs in jail. No, somebody else told me that was in Junior's crowd. There was quite a bit in West Street that were with Junior's crowd. I even met Joe Gallo's father in West Street.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who told you that Jiggs was a leader of this group?

Mr. VALACHI. One of them, which I don't remember his name, he had a big name. I was introduced to him too.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who were the other members in Jigg Forlano's group?

Mr. VALACHI. All of them had some friends, Franzese—all I know is Franzese.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How many men did he recruit to fight Profaci?

Mr. VALACHI. About 125.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Included in the group that he recruited to fight against Profaci were the Gallo brothers?

Mr. VALLACHI. Yes; the Gallo brothers.

370 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. Had you met the Gallo brothers?

Mr. VALACHI. I knew Joe Gallo. I just met him once.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You knew the father of them.

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't know the father. I introduced myself to the father. I will explain that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You met him in the jail there?

Mr. VALACHI. In the jail.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, will you explain the nature of your conversation with Gallo's father.

Mr. VALACHI. He was on the third floor. Talk was going around like he was a blabber mouth up on the third floor. "The old man said this, the old man said that," he was talking about his son Larry, how he just made it. You remember what happened in the Sahara Club, they had put a rope around his son. When I heard about it, when I got my chance to go to the third floor, that would be the only time I had a chance is when we went to the commissary, so I went over to the old man, I said, I introduced myself and I told him I was a friend of so and so and so and so and he should stop talking "because they are spreading it all over the building and you are going to make it hard for your sons." He said, "Thanks, I am glad you told me." I said, "Don't be talking to those people, especially one big Montesano that was spreading it all over." He was from Brooklyn. Well, he appreciated that.

About a month later some inmate came from the tombs—sometimes they hold Federal prisoners in the tombs when they do something like break the law.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Tombs is the city jail.

Mr. VALACHI. He was going to Leavenworth. Naturally he stopped overnight in West Street. So he sent me a message from Joe Gallo asking me anything I need, if I need any lawyer, whatever I need send a message to 51 Crescent Street. I never did. I did not want to involve myself. I never did send any message. I just forgot about it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That was in gratitude for talking to the old man and advising him?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. Pardon me a minute. The old man Gallo, the father of the two brothers, was he a boss? What was he?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, he is a square.

Senator MUNDT. A square?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. He don't know anything. I mean, he is not a member.

Senator MUNDT. He was in jail?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; but I think it was something about—I don't know if it was about being an alien, something about being an alien. Some deportation proceeding.

Senator MUNDT. He wasn't in the same mob with his two sons?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator MUNDT. He was just kind of bragging?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. He was talking about his son Larry, you know, when he has a rope around his neck. I don't know whether you know about it, in the Sahara Club, and the police walked in in time to save him. It has been all over the newspapers, Senator. I thought maybe you knew.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 371

Senator MUNDT. Maybe you better tell us. I will get caught up on my reading matter.

Mr. VALACHI. I am telling you now. That is about all I know. I was in jail myself. The police happened to go around on a routine check and they had a rope around Larry Gallo. He was already blue in the face and when the policemen came there was a shooting match there between—I don't even know if the police fired any shots but I think one policeman got hit. Yes, that is right. That is what the old man Gallo was talking about, his son just made it by seconds that time.

Senator MUNDT. In other words, some rival gang or mob had tried to kill one of his sons?

Mr. VALACHI. That was his friends. This was a doublecross that those men pulled on the Gallos after he met Mike Costello. Then they pulled away from the Gallos and they went back and the Gallos remained, maybe about 15 or 20 of them, a handful, and the rest all went back.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Perhaps I can get this in sequence.

You mentioned a little while ago that in your conversations you found out that some kidnappings had taken place; is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you tell us who was kidnaped and by whom they were kidnaped?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, like, for instance, Magliocco and whoever they were. I didn't know their names.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were they five members of the Profaci family that were kidnaped?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They were kidnaped by whom?

Mr. VALACHI. By the Gallos, by Junior, you know.

Mr. ADLERMAN. By Persico, Jr.?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And what happened then?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, what's his name, Jiggs, told them to leave them go, to leave them alone. I told Junior that was a mistake. In this part I was talking to Junior. "If you carried something on and you went that far," I remember that conversation "If you went that far, you were doomed anyway, so why didn't you go through?" and he said, "Oh, that Jiggs."

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, you had advised them that if they had been smart, they would have killed?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, they started something and "Now you are in trouble." Anyway, he managed to get back in.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is it your understanding what they did was declare a truce after the kidnaping?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, yes; at the time; yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What happened after that?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, they were shooting the boys instead of straightening things out, you know, and that started it off, and up to now they are still in.

Mr. ADLERMAN. As a result of their releasing these men from being kidnaped, did they lose strength in their own ranks?

Mr. VALACHI. Sure. Do you mean the Gallos?

372 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. I mean the 125 men that Gallo and Jiggs had gathered to fight the Profaci, did they dwindle away?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, they dwindled away and they left the Gallos in the hole.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And the Gallos had no support after that?

Mr. VALACHI. No support but maybe 15 guys.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know whether or not a deal was made on some games or a business that the Gallos wanted?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, actually, the whole idea was they were—they didn't want to be shaken down any more. All they wanted to do was to be left alone. That was the real thing.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And what happened after that? You were telling us about the time that they tried to choke or strangle—

Mr. VALACHI. Well, now Frank Costello comes into it. Junior comes back to jail. You see, he went out on bail, he got tried, he got convicted, and he comes back to Westfield. Then he goes out again pending appeal. But he stood a few days before he got out, on the second time he come back. By this time, Frank Costello was in Westfield. So when I saw them in the huddles and walking around together, I knew then that Frank was going to use his influence. Being an oldtimer naturally I didn't want in on it. I tried to convince Junior to go back and all that sort of stuff and that is just what happened.

Mr. ADLERMAN. To go back?

Mr. VALACHI. With Profaci.

In the meantime, he went under what you call—I heard later on that he went under Tony Sheik temporarily until this thing is straightened out.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I would like to call Sergeant Salerno and Inspector Shanley back.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN F. SHANLEY AND SGT. RALPH SALERNO—Resumed

Mr. ADLERMAN. Sergeant Salerno, I think you are equipped to testify on the particular Gallo incident, are you not?

Sergeant SALERNO. I have given these young men several of the best years of my life; yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you tell us from the police investigations what the facts were concerning the recent Gallo-Profaci gangland war?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, in the latter part of 1960—I might say this, that our particular command, the one that Chief Shanley has, has been familiar with the Gallo boys for quite some time. We picked them up actually back in 1956 and 1957 when they first became active in the jukebox business. They appeared before this committee in that connection, so we have known about them for a long time. In 1960, it became apparent to us that there was a great deal of dissatisfaction among the younger men in the Profaci family. The Profaci family, I might add, and I think the witness would concur, comes closest to being operated as an old-fashioned family. Joseph Profaci has probably stayed closer to the old tenets of the organization in 1930 than any other group today. Basically it was our feeling that the complaint of the younger men was not so much one of having to pay their dues or having their dues raised as much as it was a fact that they felt there was a great deal of nepotism in the family. Anything that might have a lucrative look to it was being portioned out by Joe Profaci to some of his own contemporaries who would be much older in age than fellows like Junior Persico, or the Gallo boys themselves, or their partner, Joe Eboli. That was our analysis of the situation, that that seemed to be to us the big bone of contention. Other men, even within their own family, and certainly other families, for having performed the same type of services that we could suspect the Gallos might have performed, seemed to be coming up in the ranks, whereas the Gallo boys had started out small, they had been traveling with this group for a number of years now and it looked like they were still going to remain small.

This seemed to be their bone of contention. The thing that I would like to make clear is this, that the group of young men that seemed to be dominated by Nicholas Forlano were not just the one little group. The 125 that the witness speaks of is actually an amalgamation of several groups. The only thing they had in common was that they were dissatisfied young men. We found out from very reliable sources that the Gallo boys unilaterally, although they had discussed this matter and their dissatisfaction with other groups, that they, of and by themselves, had proposed two plans.

The first one might be of interest to you because the spearhead of the first plan was intended to be the Government of the United States.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can I ask you a question?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were the Gallo brothers and Joe Eboli in partners with Persico in the jukebox business?

Sergeant SALERNO. No, sir, they were not.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were they all employed as gamblers with "Shots"?

Sergeant SALERNO. In 1952, both Carmine Persico, Jr., and Larry Gallo were arrested and convicted with Frankie "Shots" Abbatemarco in a gambling operation, yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was Abbatemarco murdered later on?

Sergeant SALERNO. In 1959, in November.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Had Persico and Jelli and Gallo expected to take over Abbatemarco's business?

Sergeant SALERNO. I had the very strong feeling that they suspected that they should have been given a portion of that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Not being successful in getting that business, you would then say that they made a two-pronged plan?

Sergeant SALERNO. The Gallo boys did, yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you tell us what it was?

Sergeant SALERNO. The first one was this: It indicated that the period of time was 1960, and the Federal Government, following the Apalachin meeting, had appointed Mr. Milton Wessel, to head a special group, operating out of the southern district of New York, and they brought about a prosecution of more than 20 of the men who had attended the Apalachin meeting. He was successful in obtaining a conviction in the southern district. Included in these 20 men were the 2 top men in the Profaci family, Giuseppe Profaci, himself, and his under boss, his brother-in-law, Joseph Magliocco. The Gallo boys hoped that this conviction would be upheld on appeal. The plan was that if the Government of the United States was successful in putting these two men in jail that a power vacuum would be created and they planned to walk into this power vacuum and declare themselves. They were realistic, of course, and realized that there was a possibility, a distinct one, that this conviction might be reversed, so they had an ultimate plan and the ultimate plan called for the use of force.

When the conviction, itself, was reversed, then they put the alternate plan into effect. We, of course, have no official complaint of a kidnapping. Many of these crimes are ones where you don't get an official complaint. But we believe very strongly, and we have had it confirmed since that time, that they did kidnap four or five men. They did not kidnap Joseph Profaci himself, but they did kidnap his brother-in-law, Joseph Magliocco, they kidnaped one of Mr. Profaci's brothers, they kidnaped John Scimone, who was very closely associated with Nicholas Forlano, and who had indicated to the Gallo boys that he was sympathetic to them in their dissatisfaction. The interesting point, again, here, for those members of the committee who might remember Joseph Gallo when he appeared before you, is this, that he was forced to disassociate himself physically from the holding of these kidnapers. Joe Gallo had a difference of opinion with those of his own group. He would have agreed with the witness here that to show the fullness of their intent, at least one of the hostages or more should have been killed.

He was overruled.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, they feared that Joe Gallo would tend to take a more positive or more strenuous step than they, themselves, were willing to do, so they sent him out of town?

Sergeant SALERNO. They did. He was sent out of the city on a vacation.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He had a reputation of violence?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes. The actual terms in which it was put to Joseph Gallo was that if he was in the picture, there could not be a negotiated peace. No one would trust him to return the kidnap victims unmolested; that if it could be said that he was not around at the time, he had nothing to do with the holding of the victims, that the other side would be convinced that they could be released unharmed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did they have a truce after that?

Sergeant SALERNO. That is the best description of the circumstances following the released of the kidnaped. There was an armed truce.

Senator MUNDT. Do you have any information how long they kept him captive?

Sergeant SALERNO. The best information we have is that they kept him several days with the exception of one John Scimone, who indicated he was sympathetic to their cause and who seemed to be acting as double agent.

Senator MUNDT. They negotiated this armed truce while these people were still kidnaped, still held as captives?

Sergeant SALERNO. We believe that while they still held the kidnaped victims that they received nothing tangible but a promise that their grievance would be heard and fairly acted upon.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know from your information whether they had any counsel on this thing?

Sergeant SALERNO. Well, the thing that we found to be of particular interest, even prior to this move, was this: that in the Gallo group Larry was the oldest of the brothers and he was the apparent leader of the Gallo bunch which was operating under Nicholas Collado at the time.

Joe was an odd sort of character. I don't mind admitting quite freely that working on him as a law enforcement officer that there were times you were forced to hang on to your equilibrium, you could almost like him. You might fall victim to the all-American principle of rooting for the underdog.

In this group there actually were, the Gallo gang, as we knew it, there were about 50 young men. Actually, the best information we have is that only four of them were button men and members of this organization. That was one of the things that was going against them.

They felt that they were asking for too much, that they were only button men, only four of them were button men. Those who were not members of the organization were completely overlooked.

Just to give you an idea of Joseph Gallo's thinking, there was a time when in discussing matters generally some one used the expression "Frank Costello has Louisiana." Joe Gallo's reaction, which is not typical of other members of this organization was, "Who gave Louisiana to Frank Costello?"

He said, "Any man who is strong enough to take something and hold it, he owns it. If he is not strong enough to take it and hold it against all comers, nobody can give him Louisiana or any place else."

This was the thinking of Joseph Gallo.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What happened to Joe Jelly?

Sergeant SALERNO. Joe Jelly—the truce, itself, lasted from February 1961 right through the summer of that year. Joe Jelly was last seen on the 17th of August in 1961.

Four days later, on the 21st of August, Larry Gallo was invited to come to the Sahara Restaurant to meet John Scimone. They went into the restaurant and they spoke to the owner, a man whom they knew. This was at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, which was 1 hour earlier than this premises ordinarily opened. The place was dimly lit. It was not open to the public actually at that time.

He spoke to the owner, John Scimone excused himself for a moment, and left Larry, and the next thing that Larry stated to the police that he remembers was that a rope had been placed around his neck and someone was tugging on the other end of it. While this was going on, a passing radio car with a sergeant and a chauffeur passed by and noticed the side door being opened at an hour other than which was usual to this particular premises.

So the sergeant got out of the car and he went to the side door. He stuck his head in the door and he saw the owner behind the bar and asked him, "Is everything all right, Charley?"—the owner of the premise, one Charles Clemenceau, who was an associate of all the people concerned—Profaci was not a stranger to any of them.

He made a remark which tried to indicate that everything was all right. The sergeant looked over to the side and could see the feet of Larry Gallo extending from the side of the bar.

This aroused his investigative instinct and he stepped into the premises. As he did so, three men ran by him. As they left the premises, the chauffeur of the police vehicle saw three men running from the premises and he started to get out of the car, two of the men ran by the vehicle. The third man fired at him with a revolver and the bullet entered the right cheek and lodged itself under his nose. He was shot.

One of the three men who had left the premises was John Scimone. John Scimone was picked up by a radio car which responded to an alarm which had been broadcast. John Scimone was found in the street. He had evidently been thrown from the car. He did have bruises across the nose, cheek and eye, of his face.

He indicated that he had been forced to leave by the two men on the premises, they pushed him into a car which had a chauffeur waiting at the wheel, that some blocks from the premises he was struck across the face with a gun butt and thrown from the car.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you have prepared a chronology of the violence that occurred during the current Gallo-Profaci episode.

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, I do. I have already indicated that on August 17, Joseph Giorelli, also known as Joe Jelly, who was a button man who was a close partner and associate of the Gallos just disappeared. He officially is the subject of a missing person report put in by his wife.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I wonder if you could just summarize the events that occurred between August 17, 1961, through August 9, 1963, and then put the whole thing into the record?

The CHAIRMAN. Let it be placed in the record at this point. Now you may summarize it. That is the gist of it prepared by you.

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It is authentic?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, it may be put in the record at this point. You may summarize it.

(The document referred to follows:)

GALLO—PROFACI

In the latter part of 1960 there was widespread dissatisfaction among the young men of the Profaci family, arising from the fact that the old man, Giuseppe Profaci, was awarding any lucrative enterprise to his relatives and close associates among the older men of the group and repressing the ambitions of the young button men such as Joseph and Larry Gallo, Carmine Persico, Jr., and Joseph Giorelli (Joe Jelly).

The Gallo brothers and Joe Jelly had been partners for some time and together with Carmine Persico they had been employed by Frank "Shatz" Abbattemarco in his gambling operations as far back as 1950. It would appear that they had hoped that following the death of Abbattemarco (who was murdered in November 1959), they would "move up" and take over a part of his operation, and this had been denied them by Profaci.

The Gallos conceived a twofold plan to achieve that which they believed they were entitled to.

1. The first plan is most interesting, in that it was based upon the presumption that they could benefit from a power vacuum in organized crime which was going to be created for them by the Government of the United States. Both the boss and the underboss of their family, Joseph Profaci and his brother-in-law Joseph Magliocco had just been convicted of obstructing justice, and were at liberty on an appeal bond. Their plan was to wait until this conviction should be upheld and the two sent to jail, and then in the consternation which they expected to exist in the new administration, walk in and declare their position feeling that a new boss would accede to their demands rather than have difficulty in the early stages of his administration.

2. The alternate plan which was to be used if this conviction were to be reversed called for the use of brute force.

When the appellate courts set aside the conviction of those persons who had attended the Apalachin convention and then been charged with obstructing justice, plan No. 2 was set in motion. The Gallos kidnaped five men who were related to, or closely associated with Joe Profaci. It is believed that among these five were Profaci's brother, Frank, and his brother-in-law, Joe Magliocco. These men were held and then released unharmed when Joe Profaci agreed to rectify the complaint of the Gallos. The Gallo group's plan called for just this, the release of unharmed hostages once they had promised their demands would be met, and in order to insure this, Joseph "Crazy Joe" Gallo had been sent out of town on a "vacation," and did not take part in this operation, because it was felt that if he had a hand in it the hostages would not have remained unharmed.

There existed for the next 6 months what could be described as an armed truce, while negotiations were conducted by intermediaries. The best information available indicates that the matter was heard by the Cosa Nostra Council where it was decided that the matter should remain an intrafamily dispute to be adjudicated within the Profaci family and that all the other groups should adopt a policy of noninterference.

Joe Profaci's final answer was made manifest in August 1961, when Joseph Giorelli (Joe Jelly), disappeared, and an attempt was made on the life of Larry Gallo. It is not insignificant that the instruments chosen for this purpose were Carmine Persico, Jr., and his cohort of angry young men who were dominated by Nicholas "Jiggs" Forlano and John Scimone. These latter two had been the ones who had previously encouraged the younger element of the Profaci family to rebel.

A proper analysis of this action would indicate that Joe Profaci was seeking to achieve two ends with the same act. He would save face by having revenged the rebellious act of the Gallos, and at the same time by using the dissatisfied young men of the Forlano-Persico faction for this purpose, he could later reward them for obeying the orders of the old man rather than have it appear that he was yielding to their original complaints.

Thus then began the Gallo-Profaci situation:

Sergeant SALERNO. Actually there were a series of acts of violence. There are three people missing. We presume they are dead. Nine persons have been killed.

The CHAIRMAN. Nine killed?

Sergeant SALERNO. Nine killed; yes, sir. There have been nine assaults.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean deadly assaults?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes: garrotting, shooting, and so on.

The CHAIRMAN. Attempting killings?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Apparently attempted killings were nine?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And nine were killed?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And there are three missing?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Is there anything further?

Mr. ADLERMAN. I think that Inspector Shanley has something that he would like to put into the record; a statement that he would like to make.

Mr. SHANLEY. I have here a grand jury presentment in the matter of the investigation of the circumstances surrounding the death of Abe Reles on November 12, 1941. In the Half Moon Hotel, Coney Island, Brooklyn, N.Y.

The CHAIRMAN. Has that been testified to here by Valachi?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is true.

I would like to read some excerpt from it.

The CHAIRMAN. The document may be filed for reference and made exhibit No. 15. Therefore you may read from it and highlight it.

(Exhibit No. 15 was filed for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. SHANLEY. This is to the Honorable Samuel S. Leibowitz from Donald A. Lawson, foreman, September 1951, grand jury, Kings County, and all the members thereof. Then it gives an introduction:

For a decade the circumstances surrounding the death of Abe Reles, on November 12, 1941, at the Half Moon Hotel in Coney Island, have been the subject of much speculation.

Recently, the Kefauver committee highlighted this occurrence. Limitation of time and other important phases of that committee's investigation left the Abe Reles death more of a riddle than ever. It was, therefore, most important and necessary that a real effort be made at long last to ascertain all available facts surrounding his death, to the end that the public might know whether Reles was murdered, and, if he was, that the perpetrators be brought to justice. It is not a healthy condition for a community to be left guessing, wondering and confused about an event that concerns the people deeply. They have a right to know all the ascertainable facts. We are constrained to say that what we have now done should have been done at the time of the occurrence. Had it been, the fanciful speculation that has run rife, and the onerous task of this grand jury, would have been obviated.

The grand jury, in its inquiry, has exhaustively examined 86 witnesses and spent approximately 110 hours in its sessions; 127 exhibits were submitted to us for our consideration.

Our report is based on credible evidence. We cannot indulge in the speculation and fancy that has been rampant for the past 10 years. Sensationalism, induced by whatever cause, must be and has been avoided. Wishful thinking is another morsel a grand jury's diet does not permit.

District Attorney Miles F. McDonald is to be congratulated for instituting this inquiry. His chief assistant district attorney, Edward S. Silver, who conducted the investigation, and his aids, Assistant District Attorneys J. Kenneth McCabe and Lewis Joseph, carefully and ably performed a notable task.

The people of our county are fortunate in the fact that its prosecutor's office is staffed by forthright men of ability, integrity, and tireless energy. Again and again we were amazed by what these men could find 10 years after the event.

Abe Reles, then 37 years of age, fell to his death as a consequence of his attempt to escape from his room, No. 623, at the Half Moon Hotel, between 3 and 4 o'clock on the morning of November 12, 1941.

He fell to an extension roof five floors below his room. This roof, 19 feet one-fourth inch wide, ran along the entire east side of the hotel. His body was found 9 feet from the building with two sheets partly entwined about him. They were knotted together and a length of wire was tied to one end.

Just beneath the window of Reles' room was a steam radiator. On that morning there was found, fastened to the brass bushing connecting the top of the radiator with the steam valve, a length of wire which extended from the bushing to the edge of the window sill. This wire was the same type as that tied to the end of the bedsheets.

It is most important to note that the piece of wire attached to the end of the bedsheets was, for the purpose of our investigation, scientifically tested by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in its crime laboratory at the request of the present district attorney. The findings of the FBI showed that the free end of the wire attached to the sheets entwined with Abe Reles' body was unquestionably broken by a tensile stress sufficient to pull it apart. Abe Reles, who was an unusually strong and agile man, weighed between 160 and 170 pounds. The FBI ascertained that this wire would not support a weight of 160 pounds. Its limit of stress was 130 pounds.

It was also clearly ascertained that the end of this wire was not severed by any tool or broken by bending the wire up and down. It was therefore clear beyond doubt that the wire broke as the result of a weight hanging from it in excess of 130 pounds.

Reles died of a fractured dislocation of the fourth and fifth lumbar vertebrae, ruptured liver and spleen and hemoperitoneum (hemorrhage in the abdomen).

When he fell from the window, Reles was not under the influence of alcohol. On the contrary, chemical analysis of his brain showed the presence of only a faint trace of alcohol, insufficient to affect his actions in any way. Chemical analysis showed that there were no drugs or poisons of any kind in any of the vital organs. There were no bullet wounds, stab wounds, or any other marks of violence on his body. He had sustained no injuries in to his skull, brain, or to the coverings of the brain. Nor, at the time of his death, was Abe Reles suffering from the diseases of cancer, paresis, tuberculosis, or ulcers.

Much of the speculation that was indulged in concerning Reles' death centered about the theory that Abe Reles was the corroborating witness against one Albert Anastasia in the killing in Brooklyn of one Morris (Moish) Diamond, on May 25, 1939.

This is the murder which former District Attorney O'Dwyer characterized as "the perfect case" which "went out the window with Reles."

Our investigation has disclosed that Abe Reles was not a corroborating witness in that killing. On the contrary, as a matter of law, he was only one of several accomplices. In view of the availability of the other accomplices, it follows that Reles was not even an essential witness. The prosecution of Anastasia required corroboration and Reles could not have supplied it.

Then it goes on in detail about the setting, how the hotel was set up. And of particular significance is the fact that there were scuffings on Reles' shoe:

Lying with the body, and partly entwined with it, were two bedsheets which had been knotted together, with an overall length of 8 feet and 11 inches. Tied to one end of the sheets was a 4-foot piece of insulated 14-gage, 7-strand, tinned copper wire.

The sole of the left shoe worn by Reles showed considerable scraping from the inner to the outer side. Such marking also appeared on the shoe on the right foot, but only at the toe.

Upon inspection of room 623, which Reles had long occupied as his private room, it was discovered that the window which overlooked the extension roof was wide open and that attached to the radiator immediately beneath this window was a length of wire of the type found attached to the sheets at the body of Reles. This length of wire extended from its point of attachment on the radiator to the end of the sill of the window in room 623.

* * * * *

"Investigation of the activities in the suite."

Well, it goes on to say that somebody called up during the evening to find out if the room below was unoccupied. They then investigated that and found that it was unoccupied at the time, that there were indications on the window sill in the room immediately below Reles' room of markings similar to those on his shoes.

The conclusion reached:

The grand jury has reached the following conclusions:

That Abe Reles met his death while trying to escape, by means of a knotted sheet which was attached to a wire, which wire was in turn attached to the radiator in his room. He fell to his death, while suspended from or supporting himself on this sheet, when the wire parted as a result of the strain of his weight on it.

We find that Reles did not meet with foul play and that he did not die by suicide.

It would be sheer speculation to attempt to discern his motive for wanting to escape.

Respectfully submitted, Grand Jury for the September 1951 Term, of the County Court of Kings County.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Is there anything further?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Inspector Shanley, you also would like to, I understand, make a statement concerning the views of some of the law enforcement agencies on matters of legislation and so forth?

Mr. SHANLEY. I have a statement from Commissioner Reisman, our legal adviser. He testified before the committee initially.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is he?

Mr. SHANLEY. He is the commissioner in charge of legal matters in the New York City Police Department. He appeared as a witness with Commissioner Murphy. He has written a statement here in connection with the——

The CHAIRMAN. We will suspend for just a moment.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can the witness be excused for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Let everyone remain in the room for the present. All right, you may proceed.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 381

Mr. SHANLEY. Commissioner Reisman speaks of the decision in the U.S. court in Mapp against Ohio.

On June 19, 1961, law enforcement officials and agencies in the State of New York were rocked by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Mapp against Ohio. Prior to this case and for many years, the Court had approved the doctrine that evidence, no matter how obtained, was admissible against a defendant in a criminal case. Thus, as Judge Cardozo said, even if the constable blundered, the defendant arrested in possession of a gun, narcotics, or other contraband would receive his just punishment. In the Mapp case, the Supreme Court reversing its prior decision, imposed the exclusionary rule on the States by holding that evidence obtained in violation of the defendant's constitutional rights was inadmissible against him. At the present time, for example, where large quantities of illicit narcotics are seized in the possession of the defendant, as a result of a search warrant which later is declared to be technically deficient, those drugs will be suppressed as evidence and the case will be lost.

The initial impact of this decision was startling. Narcotics arrests fell off sharply as did arrests in other areas such as gambling. In order to overcome the adverse effects of the Mapp decision, law enforcement agencies in the State of New York have sought release from the State legislature. The bases on which certain misdemeanor arrests may be made have been realistically revised. More is needed, however, and this year again efforts will be made to amend the statutory procedures for the execution of search warrants. This would permit police officers in certain carefully circumscribed cases to execute the warrants in such a manner as to prevent the destruction of the contraband by the suspect. Efforts will also be made to provide a procedure to temporarily detain suspicious persons for short periods of time while their explanations are verified. Finally, law enforcement will seek again the authority to frisk a suspicious person for dangerous weapons. It is hoped that such a measure will reduce the risk of death or bodily injury to police officers whose hands are tied by unrealistic and obsolete arrest statutes.

In connection with that, we have here a pamphlet which has been put together by the combined council of law enforcement officials in New York. This consists of John M. Braisted, Jr., president of the District Attorney's Association for the State of New York, and he is the district attorney of the county of Richland. There are some other officials. It also includes Jacob Grumet, chairman of the State Commission of Investigation in New York State; Frank S. Hogan, district attorney, New York County; Michael J. Murphy, police commissioner, New York City; Edward S. Silver, past president, National District Attorneys Association, and present Kings County district attorney.

The CHAIRMAN. Let that be received and filed as exhibit No. 16 for reference.

(Exhibit No. 16 was filed for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

382 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. SHANLEY. This is the type of difficulty that is attempted to be overcome. They state why we need your support and indicate a case in the nighttime, a case in the daytime, and on holidays, and so on. The case in the nighttime is People against Brown, and it shows as follows:

About 11 o'clock one night an alert police officer observed a man dragging a heavy suitcase some distance, stop at a public bench, place the suitcase behind it, and sit down. The officer approached him and inquired where he had obtained the valise. "What valise?" was the answer the officer received. He thereupon told the defendant of his observation and when he refused to answer any further questions, the officer took him to the police station. Subsequent investigation disclosed that the suitcase contained the proceeds of a burglary. The court held that since the officer did not know that the burglary had been committed when he approached, questioned, and detained the defendant, the arrest was unlawful and the evidence of the burglary was illegally seized. The case against the defendant was dismissed.

They cite a number of other examples and then they cite Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., in a case 1904:

At the present time in this country there is more danger that criminals will escape justice than that they will be subjected to tyranny.

Learned Hand in 1923:

Our dangers do not lie in too little tenderness to the accused. Our procedure has always been haunted by the ghost of the innocent man convicted. It is an unreal dream. What we need to fear is the archaic formalism and the watery sentiment that obstructs, delays, and defeats the prosecution of crime.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Inspector, have you made a recapitulation of these charts since you testified yesterday with respect to the number of people in each family, those identified by Valachi and those not identified by Valachi, so we can make the record accurate? Which one of you examined them?

Sergeant SALERNO. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. I hand you this breakdown of individuals identified by Valachi on the five charts of organized families in the New York City area. I ask you to examine it and state if you helped prepare it?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir; I did, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now correct with respect to the number of people on each chart, with respect to those who are bosses, those who are lieutenants, those who are soldiers or button men; is that correct?

Sergeant SALERNO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And also with respect to the number of each identified by Valachi and the number that were not identified by him; is that correct?

Sergeant SALERNO. It is, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Showing the totals to be on the chart a total of 338 persons, and the number identified by Valachi as 289 persons, and those not identified were 49. Is that correct?

Sergeant SALERNO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. This may be printed in the record at this point.

(The breakdown follows:)

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything else, Mr. Counsel?

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, on the analysis, have the analysis of those who are still around, in jail, out of jail, alive, et cetera?

The CHAIRMAN. Was there another list? Have you prepared another table, also?

Mr. SHANLEY. On the individual charts.

In the Genovese family, 42 are out of the city, 15 in legal custody or awaiting legal action, 23 dead, 2 deported.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the first item you gave?

Mr. SHANLEY. Forty-two are now out of the city.

The CHAIRMAN. Are now out of the city?

Mr. SHANLEY. They no longer reside in New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. How many of them are in prison?

Mr. SHANLEY. There are 15 in custody or awaiting legal action.

The CHAIRMAN. In custody. Does that mean they may have already been convicted and are serving their sentence?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right; yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Twenty-three dead. And where are the rest of them?

Mr. SHANLEY. Two have been deported.

Senator JAVITS. And the rest of them are in New York?

Mr. SHANLEY. The rest are in New York.

Senator JAVITS. How many is that, 61? Is that right? Is the figure of 61 the correct figure?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Sixty-one.

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Will you submit the same facts as to the others? I don't want to take the time of the committee to do it now, because this is adequately illustrative for my purposes. What happens to these 61? Are they under police surveillance?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Today?

Mr. SHANLEY. Well, we can't—

Senator JAVITS. So far as you know—I didn't mean to interrupt you. Did you answer my question?

Mr. SHANLEY. We can't put each and every one under surveillance continuously. They are under intermittent surveillance and observation and investigation through the year.

Senator JAVITS. No one knows better than I the difficulties of the police and the great heroic efforts of the New York Police Department. I hope nothing I say will in the least depreciate my conviction on that score.

Mr. SHANLEY. Thank you, sir.

Senator JAVITS. The men are absolutely without parallel in the risks they take in law enforcement. The few rotten apples in the barrel that we find from time to time should dissuade no one or convert no one from the understanding of the sacrifice and danger to which they are subjected.

Mr. SHANLEY. Thank you, sir.

Senator JAVITS. As to these 61, can you tell us one other thing? So far as you know, they remain pretty much in the same status that they have been described on these charts, congenital criminals?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. So that in that respect, we are, as it were, as you testified yesterday, updating in the mass an important element of the criminal problem in the city of New York?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Are we to assume, too, that these that have left town represent an area of liaison between our police department in New York and other departments, wherever they have gone?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. The departments are in close touch?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. As well as with the FBI?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you very much.

Now, would you submit for the record the breakdown on the other charts? This is illustrative enough for my purposes.

Mr. SHANLEY. We will do that, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Submit the same thing for the other families as you have enumerated here for the Genovese family.

Mr. SHANLEY. We will do that, sir.

Senator JAVITS. And will you do one other thing?

I think it would be helpful if you did divide these figures among the echelons of commands as they are on the charts so that one could relate them correctly back to the charts.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 385

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir, we will do that.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to also say something in a moment, but you may proceed, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. This is a followup question.

Do you know or have any information as to whether or not some of these family criminals who have been described by Mr. Valachi and by you as presently living in Florida, whether or not they are still operating in New York while living in Florida?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir. They exercise remote control from Florida.

Senator MUNDT. You have established that fact?

Mr. SHANLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. And as a consequence, your surveillance, with the cooperation of the Florida police, I presume, goes to the place where they are presently living?

Mr. SHANLEY. That is right. We have constant communication with the Florida police.

The CHAIRMAN. We are going to close pretty quickly. At this point, since Senator Javits has mentioned the heroic service that the New York police force renders and the work that it does, and I certainly defer to him as being better acquainted with it than I am, I did want to add this for the record at this point.

The police authorities in the city of New York, Inspector Shanley, Salerno, and others, have cooperated with this committee 100 percent plus, in every way they could, in helping us prepare this presentation here and worked with the staff. It is not an easy thing, I think, to develop these charts so that you can present this in a light that is understandable and that carries with it the significance of a crime organization and how it operates and functions.

I know that every member of this committee is grateful to you. I think the Congress is—and the country as a whole. I know that you feel that in doing this in your work with us and the way you have cooperated with the committee, that it is not a waste of time so far as advancing the cause of law enforcement and strengthening your hand in the work that you have to do. I hope you feel that way.

Mr. SHANLEY. I certainly do, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. We have Commissioner Murphy, Cy Jordan, Tom O'Brien, and Joe Corrigan, whom we should mention also. I meant this to apply to everyone we have contacted, everyone we have called on for any service at all. Any help has been given enthusiastically and cooperatively. In working that way there is the prospect, if we carry through with proper legislation, legislation that is justified and warranted, the prospect that some lasting good can come of our labors here together.

Mr. SHANLEY. Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions at this point?

The counsel wishes to question Valachi on two or three matters. Any other thing before we go into that?

Very well. You may proceed, Counsel.

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, we have covered New York rather extensively. Now are there any other members, any other families outside of the area of New York?

Mr. VALACHI. You mean like Chicago, Boston?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Could you mention the cities where other families exist of the Cosa Nostra, and if you know, the numbers of the members as you know them, could you mention them?

Mr. VALACHI. I will start with Philadelphia. In Philadelphia I would say about a hundred. Boston, when I left the streets, was about 20, 18 or 20. Chicago, about 150. Cleveland, about 40 or 50. Los Angeles, about 40. Tampa, about 10. Newark, about a hundred. Detroit, I am not familiar at all with Detroit.

Senator JACKSON. Can you talk a little louder?

Mr. VALACHI. Detroit, I am not familiar at all.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not familiar with Detroit, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Detroit.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Buffalo?

Mr. VALACHI. Buffalo, about 100 to 125.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Utica, N.Y.?

Mr. VALACHI. Utica, about 80 to 100.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I think you covered New Orleans, did you?

Mr. VALACHI. No, I didn't cover New Orleans. Very few in New Orleans.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 387

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now you mentioned you don't know any in Detroit. Do you know if any families exist there?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, they exist.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But do you know the number they have there?

Mr. VALACHI. I have no idea of Detroit.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you mention Tampa?

Mr. VALACHI. Tampa, I did, yes, about 10. When I left the streets.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, the 10 cities are Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, New Orleans, Tampa, Buffalo, Utica, Philadelphia, Cleveland, and Detroit?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Are there any other cities where they have families existing?

Mr. VALACHI. Right now if you call me some cities—I remember what I possibly can remember now.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is that?

Mr. VALACHI. I remembered all I could remember just now. Now if you have any other cities in mind?

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Miami and Las Vegas?

Mr. VALACHI. None in Miami, only that they go there and live there.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that what they call an open area?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, put it an open area, yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What do you mean by an open area?

Mr. VALACHI. No one is there.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Any member of the family can settle there and operate there?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But they don't exist as a family group?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. They have gone there from all families.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, they may have 10 different families operating in an open area?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, if they are operating in an open area, I wouldn't know about it. That is for individuals, whoever they are. But the ones where the family—all through the years I knew there was a few in Tampa, but in jail I have been hearing now they raised it, but I don't want to say what I heard when I was in jail.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In any other cities outside of New York is there more than one family in any city?

Mr. VALACHI. One family is all I know of.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In any city?

Mr. VALACHI. One family.

Mr. ADLERMAN. With the exception of New York?

Mr. VALACHI. With the exception of New York.

Senator JAVITS. I don't think the counsel pursued the Las Vegas thing.

Mr. ADLERMAN. No, he said that was an open area.

Senator JAVITS. He said Miami.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is Las Vegas an open area?

Mr. VALACHI. The same as Miami.

388 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. He does not have to have permission to operate there?

VALACHI. That is right; as long as he has an interest in something, he may go there, but he will notify his boss that he is there.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He will have to notify his boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Suppose they have a conflict in jurisdiction between any of the various families in the various cities, how is that settled?

Mr. VALACHI. It is always straightened out between those it may concern. For instance, if it is somebody from Philadelphia and another one from New York, so they get Boston and New York and the one from Philadelphia, and they stake it out. If it is too serious, the lieutenants will straighten it out. They will always come to agreement.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, before they start fighting with each other, they have to go to their lieutenant?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Then if he can straighten it out, he can do that.

Mr. VALACHI. Right. Each one of them will complain to their own lieutenant, and then the lieutenant takes action. Action I mean by making appointments and talking about it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Thank you.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Chairman.

This may be your last appearance in public session, at least for some time. I would like to ask you to explain in your own words what you know about the meeting at Apalachin, because I think you have some information we should have in connection with that meeting. You tell that story in your own words.

Mr. VALACHI. You mean why they had the meeting?

Senator MUNDT. Why they had the meeting, the purpose of it, some idea of who was there.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

After the shooting of Frank——

Senator MUNDT. Costello.

Mr. VALACHI. After the shooting of Albert Anastasia there was a meeting. This meeting was held for two main reasons that I know of. One was to talk about the justifying of the shooting of Albert Anastasia. The other one was that they were going to talk about eliminating some couple of hundred new members. I spoke about this. Whom I talked to I don't remember but it was an important one. How they are going to do it? He said that they were going to ask the lieutenants for the list of names of all of soldiers they have under them and to put a cross on everyone that never done anything. But they never reached to have this meeting and they never had a chance to tell it because they got arrested.

Senator MUNDT. You mean the raid took place before they got to that point?

Mr. VALACHI. They got arrested before they got to talk about it.

Senator MUNDT. When you say they were going to eliminate button men, do you mean they were going to dismiss them or knock them off?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 389

Mr. VALACHI. I said, how are you going to do that? I was explained that they would be told that this organization don't exist any more. In other words, they being in charge, maybe one here, one there, this couple of hundred would involve all around, and some soldiers would be in charge of these members, we would call them now former members. If any of these soldiers made them understand that this Cosa Nostra still exists they would pay with their lives. I remember I even remarked I would not want to have anybody under me, that is, where I would have no responsibilities. They were going to be told that the organization, Cosa Nostra, whichever way, that it was going to be broken up. In other words, they were going to throw them out.

Senator MUNDT. If I understand what you have said, they were to tell the soldiers that Cosa Nostra was going out of business.

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator MUNDT. It was not going to be here any more?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator MUNDT. If they did not believe it but sneaked around to find out it was still active in operation, then they were going to bump them off.

Mr. VALACHI. The one who would be responsible. For instance, if they gave me one name, right, that was thrown out, if I let him know that Cosa Nostra still exists I would pay with my life.

Senator MUNDT. You would pay with your life?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator MUNDT. Who called the meeting at Apalachin?

Mr. VALACHI. Vito Genovese.

Senator MUNDT. Did he select the site?

Mr. VALACHI. No, Vito wanted to go to Chicago. Stephen Magaddino talked him into going to Apalachin. Vito never stopped beefing about that. Vito Genovese never stopped beefing about it. He said if it was not for him we would have gone to Chicago.

Senator MUNDT. He thinks if they had gone to Chicago they would not have had a raid.

Mr. VALACHI. They would not have had a raid because the town was small. Anyway, at this time it looked pretty raw to try to get away with something like that. Especially Barbara had a cop that was after him through the years and that is how they got suspicious because he ordered so many steaks and so many rooms, he was renting, he was making appropriations for and that is how they got to be observed.

Senator MUNDT. One of the other purposes of the meeting at Apalachin was to sort of establish the fact that Genovese was the boss now of the whole country.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; just like they had the meeting in 1930 in Chicago, as I explained about Mansano, exactly the same thing.

Senator MUNDT. To get him the recognition that he was king of the bosses.

Mr. VALACHI. And they gave him, in other words, he would be justified when they came up with all the complaints. Let me tell you about Jimmy Jerome, Jimmy Squillante. The talk got around too. Jimmy Squillante requested, "If you want me to say some more, more things that he has done, call on me." In other words, Albert made Squillante. He made him even a godson. In other words, Squillante was getting all the recognition for being with Albert. Now that he was dead he was kicking that he was willing to testify against him. They told him, "All right, if we need you we will call you." Lots of remarks were passed about it. In other words, the punk, now he is looking to hang him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I have just one more question.

Mr. VALACHI, you went over some of the charts with me and the small pictures of some of these out-of-town charts, and I would just like to run over with you if you can identify or were you able to identify some of the people that I showed you on these charts?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In Buffalo?

Mr. VALACHI. In Buffalo?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were you able to identify Stefano Magaddino?

Mr. VALACHI. Stefano Magaddino and John Montana.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And Randaccio?

Mr. VALACHI. Is that the big name that I talked to you about?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And Salvatore Pierri?

Mr. VALACHI. Sam Pierri.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Sam Pierri, yes, and John C. Montana.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In Boston and Rhode Island, did you know Phillip Bruccola?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Raymond Patriarca?

Mr. VALACHI. Raymond, Joe Lombardi, Henry.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Johnny Williams?

Mr. VALACHI. Johnny Williams.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Henry Noyes? Henry Selvitelli?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, one Henry. I only know Henry. I would have to see the picture.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How about Henry Tamello?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know the second name.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You don't know which one? All right.

Now, in Chicago, did you identify Tony Accardo?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the Tony Accardo, there seems to be a question. I met a Tony Accardo in Atlanta.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You are not certain it is the same fellow?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, the picture I saw and me meeting Tony Accardo in Atlanta, it is so different between prison clothes and when they showed me his picture he had a full dress suit on.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You don't think it is the same person?

Mr. VALACHI. Not by the picture.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Had you met any of the Fischetti brothers?

Mr. VALACHI. Two Fischetti brothers.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Those that you have identified, were those members of the Cosa Nostra?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 391

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Those we just named that you have identified?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Javits.

Senator JAVITS. Do you know anything about the source of the narcotics which was dealt with in these circles that you just referred to? Where did they get the narcotics?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator——

The CHAIRMAN. We are going into this later, Senator. There are certain reasons why they prefer, the Justice Department prefers, that we do it in executive session.

Senator JAVITS. I will defer that, then. Thank you.

You spoke about Las Vegas. Was that a large area of operation of the groups with which you were associated and do they do much business in Las Vegas?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, they do a lot of business in Las Vegas. For instance, so and so has a piece, and so and so has 10 percent, so and so has 3 percent, and so and so. You hear that through the general talk between us. But actually, what they have, how it is run, I wasn't interested.

Senator JAVITS. You don't know?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Senator JAVITS. And you were not told enough to give us any detail?

Mr. VALACHI. That is correct.

Senator JAVITS. Now, I am trying to find out how these things operate. What is important to us is who is alive, where they are, and what they are doing.

Mr. VALACHI. The best I can given you, Senator, is that they sell 100 points at $5,000 a point. Some of us got the belief they may sell 200 points. In other words, the big ones involved probably get in there under cover. I mean even that talk got around. But you are so glad to get a point you don't mind what they do because those points bring in money.

Senator JAVITS. A point of what?

Mr. VALACHI. They call it a point. That is 1 percent.

Senator JAVITS. A participation?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. In what? Gambling?

Mr. VALACHI. Let's say you buy 1 percent. You can buy a half percent from $2,500 maybe from another member who has a piece.

Senator JAVITS. Is that in a gambling operation?

Mr. VALACHI. Aren't you talking about gambling?

Senator JAVITS. I am talking about anything that goes in Las Vegas.

Mr. VALACHI. That is all I know.

Senator JAVITS. So that a gambling operation at a particular hotel or club——

Mr. VALACHI. I know the hotels like in Havana but not in Las Vegas.

Senator JAVITS. What would they sell points in, a hotel gambling operation?

Mr. VALACHI. In the gambling casino.

Senator JAVITS. In the gambling casino of the hotel?

Mr. VALACHI. Not in the hotel. You are using it as an expression in the gambling casino.

Senator JAVITS. A gambling casino, not in a hotel?

Mr. VALACHI. Naturally you know it is the hotel, but you know what you are buying into. Is that what you mean, Senator?

Senator JAVITS. That is right. Now, did you buy any points?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I had a half point with a friend.

Senator JAVITS. In what particular enterprise?

Mr. VALACHI. Capri.

Senator JAVITS. The gambling casino at the Capri?

Mr. VALACHI. The Capri, just about when Castro started making trouble.

Senator JAVITS. Did it make any payments for you?

Mr. VALACHI. I got three payments for a half payment, 275, 300, and 275.

Senator JAVITS. Was that Havana or Las Vegas?

Mr. VALACHI. At the Capri.

Senator JAVITS. Havana?

Mr. VALACHI. I can tell you what happened when Castro took over. They were paying $25,000 a year rent. The deal was that what Castro wanted to give them was he raised it to $50,000 and 50 percent of the business. They told him to take a walk and they all went out of Havana.

Senator JAVITS. So you lost money on that deal?

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't lose. I had sold out.

Senator JAVITS. On offtrack betting, is that a big item of operation for the groups with which you were associated?

Mr. VALACHI. Do you mean booking?

Senator JAVITS. Bookmaking.

Mr. VALACHI. Very good, yes.

Senator JAVITS. Did you participate in that business?

Mr. VALACHI. Sometimes.

Senator JAVITS. How? As a shylock or some other way?

Mr. VALACHI. No. I booked myself some years ago.

Senator JAVITS. You booked yourself?

Mr. VALACHI. Do you mean Harry Gross?

Senator JAVITS. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. Do you remember the one who made trouble after him, the Joe Shanks or something?

Senator JAVITS. The name doesn't ring a bell. I remember Gross.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I remember. He puts me out of business.

Senator JAVITS. But you were in business for a time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, taking bets over a phone in an office.

Senator JAVITS. Did you work under anybody like Gross, or anybody else?

Mr. VALACHI. No. Gross was in Brooklyn. I was in New York. I didn't have nothing to do with Gross.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 393

Senator JAVITS. But did you report to your boss that you were operating under?

Mr. VALACHI. All they know is that I am booking. That is about all you tell them.

Senator JAVITS. Do you know of any political tie-ins with political people or judges or police in this operation?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I didn't have any myself so I am not going to say anything, because if I wasn't in it myself I am not going to talk about it.

Senator JAVITS. So when you ran a book you didn't pay anybody off?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know if they were paying. I never asked.

Senator JAVITS. They being who, the people you worked with?

Mr. VALACHI. The people who worked for me.

Senator JAVITS. People who worked for you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. In other words, you ran a book and people worked for you?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. And they divided the pockets with you?

Mr. VALACHI. The winnings, yes.

Senator JAVITS. And whatever they paid anybody, you don't know?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator JAVITS. You didn't pay anything yourself?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator JAVITS. Finally, there is some rumor around New York which I would like to get your judgments on, or any facts you have, about highway contractors, that highway contractors are shaken down for some fees or percentages or cuts or something else.

Do you know anything about that whatever?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, I would like to get that more clear.

Senator JAVITS. I will give it to you. There are people who make contracts to build roads and to build streets, et cetera, repair streets, and so on. There are always rumors about the fact that they are shaken down in some fashion. Do you know anything about it?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't, sir.

Senator JAVITS. You were never in this?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator JAVITS. You never heard of it?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I have a followup question.

This is on the same type of question, Mr. Valachi, you mentioned in connection with your own ownership of a dress shop that you settled a strike by calling up Johnny Dio.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Senator MUNDT. Did you have any other experiences with labor racketeers?

Mr. VALACHI. Senator, that was the only one.

Senator MUNDT. That was the only one?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator McIntyre.

394 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator McINTYRE. Mr. Valachi, these names you mentioned up around Boston, did you have any understanding of who was the boss or who was the big guy?

Mr. VALACHI. I met the boss, Phil Buccola, at the time I was there.

Senator McINTYRE. What was the name?

Mr. VALACHI. Phil Buccola. That is the way I know.

Senator McINTYRE. Buccola?

Mr. VALACHI. He has a funny name.

Senator McINTYRE. Did you have any understanding that there was a family in Boston or in the New England area?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. You don't know the name of that family?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, all you call is Boss, or you say the Buccola family. Whoever is the boss, they call it that name. You know, like you use the expression the Phil Buccola family, or whoever it may be. Now they say there is Raymond there, so you say the Raymond family in Boston or Rhode Island, whichever it is.

Senator McINTYRE. Do you know where their principal areas of activity were in New England?

Mr. VALACHI. I knew they had a crap game going for years and years, Senator, and that is all I know. In fact, I was up there once.

Senator McINTYRE. Just the once?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. I thought you said you raced horses.

Mr. VALACHI. That has nothing to do with the crap games. I was at the game once.

Senator McINTYRE. You were at the game once?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. That was in Boston?

Mr. VALACHI. In Boston.

Senator McINTYRE. Were you ever at Providence?

Mr. VALACHI. Only when they raced at Narragansett.

Senator McINTYRE. You don't have any understanding or do you have any knowledge of who the underboss was at the time that you were up there, if Buccola was the boss?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I will tell you, I thought Joe Lombardi was, but I am not sure, so I can't say. I never asked.

Senator McINTYRE. What about this man Patriarca?

Mr. VALACHI. That is after my time. I met him as a soldier when I met him.

Senator McINTYRE. It is your understanding that Patriarca is the boss now?

Mr. VALACHI. Now. That is what I heard.

Senator McINTYRE. What is your understanding of his operations? What type of operation is it?

Do you know this?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, I couldn't say, sir.

Senator McINTYRE. You said once he had a dice game.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, they all were in on it. There weren't many so they could all have it.

Senator McINTYRE. Were they all involved in booking?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 395

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. And off-track betting?

Mr. VALACHI. Even on the track. They book on the track, too.

Senator McINTYRE. Do you know anything about vending machine operations up there?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, if the machines were running, they would have them. But I don't know if the machines were running at the time I was there. Sometimes they run and sometimes they don't. I wouldn't recall if the machines were running. Are you talking about the pinballs?

Senator McINTYRE. One last question. I have been somewhat intrigued about these disappearances. You know there has been talk here of people being killed. How do they accomplish these disappearances? You said on one occasion they bury the man.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. Do they drop him in the river or how else do they cause these men to disappear?

Mr. VALACHI. When they throw them in the river, they don't use the expression of "burying them" because 99 out of 100 will always come up in the river. When I use the expression "buried," I mean they buried them in some area upstate, somewhere, anywhere. It could be anyplace.

Senator McINTYRE. Is this the way that they cause these people to disappear so that the police or nobody found them?

Mr. VALACHI. Right.

Senator McINTYRE. This is the only way, they take them upstate and bury them in the ground?

Mr. VALACHI. I used the expression of "upstate" because we were in New York City. Naturally, upstate is where they really aimed for.

Senator McINTYRE. You are a chauffeur, yourself, you said that that was your specialty?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. What did they do with the vehicles? How did they disappear, the automobiles? How do they get rid of them?

Mr. VALACHI. When I was a chauffeur, we used to rent the cars, Senator. At first they were my own cars, but in around 1929 I was renting the cars. I was using almost legitimate cars. I was bending the plates while we were burglarizing.

The CHAIRMAN. You were doing what?

Mr. VALACHI. Bending the plates. You know, lifting the plates up and then they couldn't take the number.

Senator McINTYRE. Can you give us any idea, Mr. Valachi, how they dispose of the car of the victim, of the man who is bumped off? How do they take care of his automobile or his car so it disappears along with him?

Mr. VALACHI. I never was involved in anything like that so I can't say.

Senator McINTYRE. You don't know?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't know.

Senator McINTYRE. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will announce that this concludes temporarily the public hearing with respect to the testimony of Valachi who probably will be recalled before the hearings are concluded to give further testimony in public hearing. But we cannot indicate at the present, at the moment, just when that may occur. He will, however, in the meantime, be interrogated by the committee in an executive session.

There are some three or four murders that are under active investigation at this time that we want to interrogate him about that we do not wish to make his testimony public on but want the information to serve as a guide to the committee in future deliberations.

(At this point Senator Javits withdrew from the hearing room.)

The CHAIRMAN. There are also other matters that have not been mentioned in the public hearing that we will want to talk to him about, and some others, as you have observed during the course of this testimony, that he has indicated he would prefer to discuss with us in an executive session. So we will have possibly quite a lengthy executive session with him, maybe for a day or 2 days.

I don't know how long it will take. In the meantime, we will resume hearings tomorrow, and they will be public hearings. We will probably go into some of these families that Valachi has talked about in other cities, and we will work on that for the next day or two.

In the meantime, I wish you would please observe and remain seated until the witness has been taken from the room.

When the committee reconvenes, it will reconvene in the morning at 10:30.

(Members present at time of recess: Senator McClellan, McIntyre, and Mundt.)

(At 4:35 p.m., the committee recessed, to reconvene at 10:30 a.m., Thursday, October 10, 1963.)

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1963

U.S. SENATE,
OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
Washington, D.C.

The subcommittee met at 10:30 a.m., in the caucus room, Old Senate Office Building, pursuant to Senate Resolution 17, agreed to March 14, 1963, Senator John L. McClellan (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat, of Arkansas; Senator Edmund S. Muskie, Democrat, of Maine; Senator Thomas J. McIntyre, Democrat, of New Hampshire; Senator Karl E. Mundt, Republican, of South Dakota; Senator Carl T. Curtis, Republican, of Nebraska; Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, of New York.

Also present: Jerome S. Adlerman, general counsel; Donald F. O'Donnell, chief counsel; Philip W. Morgan, chief counsel to the minority; Paul E. Kamerick, assistant counsel; Harold Ranstad, assistant counsel; Eugene J. Marshall, Bureau of Narcotics; Martin Pera, Bureau of Narcotics; and Ruth Y. Watt, chief clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will be in order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at the convening of the session: Senators McClellan and Muskie.)

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Counsel, call your next witness.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Police Commissioner George Edwards.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Edwards, will you stand and be sworn, please?

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like to have our deputy also sworn, our district inspector, Vincent Piersante, sworn with me.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you and each of you solemnly swear that the testimony you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. EDWARDS. I do.

Mr. PIERSANTE. I do.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE C. EDWARDS AND VINCENT W. PIERSANTE

The CHAIRMAN. Will each of you identify yourself for the record, please?

Mr. EDWARDS. I am George C. Edwards, police commissioner of the city of Detroit.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you been in that position?

Mr. EDWARDS. Since January of 1962.

398 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. Will you give us a brief résumé of your past official positions, please?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir. I came into public office in 1939 as director of the Housing Commission of the City of Detroit. I then served four terms in the Common Council of the City of Detroit, two of them as council president and acting mayor.

Subsequent thereto, I was appointed and elected to the probate bench, where, for 4 years, I presided over the juvenile court of Wayne County, which is the county in which Detroit is located.

Subsequent to that, I was appointed and elected to the circuit court of Wayne County, which is the court of general trial jurisdiction, including criminal jurisdiction, in Wayne County, which includes Detroit.

Subsequent thereto, I was appointed and twice elected to the Supreme Court of Michigan, which is the highest court in our State. I served on that court until January of 1962, at which point, at the request of major of the city of Detroit, I resigned to take the post which I currently hold, in view of certain problems which my city was facing at that time, which involved very directly the problems of the police department.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much. I might add, as I recall, you have also received Presidential nomination to serve as a U.S. district judge in your State, have you not?

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, it is the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, which does cover the State of Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. To serve on the Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought the record should show that. We have three or four nominations pending before the Judiciary Committee, of which I am a member, and I have been so occupied with this lately, I didn't draw the distinction between Circuit Court of Appeals and the district courts.

Very well. We welcome you and we appreciate your appearance, and I know your testimony will be very helpful to us.

Will the other gentleman now please identify himself for the record?

Mr. PIERSANTE. I am Vincent Piersante. I am a district detective inspector, with supervision over the Criminal Intelligence Bureau of the Detroit Police Department.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you held your position?

Mr. PIERSANTE. I have been a police officer for 22 years.

The CHAIRMAN. In Detroit, in the city of Detroit?

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Judge Edwards, I believe that you have a prepared statement, have you?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, Senator, and if it were permissible from the point of view of the rules of the committee, I would appreciate having the prepared statement printed in the record and thus give me a little leeway in relation to adlibbing a bit as I go through and refer to that text.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Without objection, that may be done, and you might read it if you like, or we will just print it in the record as you requested.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 399

Mr. EDWARDS. A certain portion of it I would like to read, Senator, and I hope to not bore you with reading right straight through it.

The CHAIRMAN. You may read excerpts as you proceed with your testimony.

Senator MUSKIE. That is fine.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, the statement will be printed in the record in full at this point, and Mr. Counsel you may proceed.

(Mr. Edwards' prepared statement is as follows:)

My name is George Edwards. I reside at 19925 Briarcliff, Detroit. I am commissioner of police of the city of Detroit. I am testifying here at the invitation of the subcommittee.

I am glad to accept this invitation to appear before you so that my department can make some contribution to your work in making known to the American public the threat posed to its welfare by organized crime and racketeering in America, a threat about which I and many of my associates in law enforcement have been long concerned.

I am and have been a member of the Michigan bar since 1944. From that time onward, as a lawyer, judge, and now as Detroit's police commissioner, my work has made me increasingly aware of the existence, growth, and danger of organized crime.

I have been intimately connected with government in the city of Detroit for many years. I first entered public office in 1939 as a member of the reform administration of Mayor Edward J. Jeffries, Jr. I served 2 years as administrator of a city department, the Detroit Housing Commission. I then served 8 years as an elected member of the Detroit Common Council—the last 4 years as its president and frequently as acting mayor. Detroit as I have known it, has been a very clean city. At the moment, some knowledge (plus an admitted love for my city) leads me to suggest that it is the cleanest and least racket-ridden big city in the country. But this does not for a moment blind me to the major influences which have sought and now seek to operate in the fields of organized crime, both within and without its boundaries.

Much of what your staff people have asked me talk about today will come as a shock to many lifetime and knowledgeable Detroiters. Most respectable and law-abiding citizens in our area see little evidence of gambling, narcotics, or prostitution. And in their daily lives they have never been threatened by, or pushed around by the element which dominates these activities. Many of these citizens may even know some of the names we will discuss and may know them favorably—as businessmen who deliver a sound and lawful product, or persons who are generous when contacted on a charity drive.

But the fact is that we have some Jekyll and Hyde characters and that the most powerful group of them constitutes a continuing menace to law enforcement. Our information as to them has not been gained from Joseph Valachi—in fact, to date we have not had the opportunity to interview him.

Indeed, in 1961, long before I ever heard of Mr. Valachi, I made a speech to the Crime Prevention Conference convened by the attorney general of Michigan and stated that I was convinced there was an organization operating throughout the Nation which dominated the major rackets in most of America's metropolitan areas, a "conspiracy nationally and internationally organized primarily to promote the illegal importation and sale of narcotics and the development and protection of illegal gambling."

In May of this year, I spoke before the Advisory Council of Judges of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency. As a result of what I believe to be incontrovertible evidence brought before me in the 2 years between my 1961 speech and my address to that distinguished panel of judges in New York this spring, I felt warranted in stating that the organization dominating the national crime picture was properly called the Mafia. I am submitting here a copy of that recent speech which summarized my views about this menace.

Our research into the leadership of organized crime in Detroit leads again and again to a small group of families of Sicilian extraction, closely interrelated by marriage and by strong ties in legal and illegal enterprises. The frustrations of our police in law enforcement center around a code of absolute silence and a positive refusal of all forms of cooperation with legal authority on the part of these families.

There is a strong evidence that in the Detroit area as in other of our large cities, too, these illegal enterprises are backed by the threat of planned, carefully executed, and highly professional murder. Such facts demanded a more descriptively accurate name than "the syndicate."

From my conversations and interchanges with my colleagues in this field, I know that most of the high-level law enforcement officials in this country believe, whether or not they will say so, that the Apalachin meeting was a conclave of the top members of the nationally organized crime syndicate more properly referred to as the Mafia. This organization has its top command figures active in almost every large city in the country, including Detroit, and has been and continues to be the dominant factor in organized crime in America. The organization to which we in Detroit apply the name "Mafia" appears to be very similar to and directly connected with the criminal group in New York characterized by Valachi as Cosa Nostra.

We will present a chart showing 66 Mafia members arranged in what we believe to represent the organizational structure of this conspiracy. Practically all of these persons are of Sicilian birth or ancestry. We will present family charts to show Sicilian origin of the major families and the blood and marriage interrelationships among the top figures. Associated with these 66, we will name 18 associates who are not Sicilian. These, in our opinion, are not taken fully into membership, but none the less have had a continuing association with the Mafia over the years in illegal enterprises.

We believe that this conspiracy grosses an absolute minimum of $150 million a year in a variety of illegal enterprises in the Detroit area. We believe that these persons dominate gambling and narcotic traffic in the Detroit area.

Mafia figures have also infiltrated legitimate businesses worth a minimum of another $50 million. These businesses it uses for investment, for employment "cover" for its hoodlums and for valuable income tax protection. We will present a chart showing 98 businesses as to which we can show significant Mafia infiltration, ownership, and influence.

As to the top 66, we will show their criminal arrests, their criminal convictions, their criminal associations, their family associations, and their business associations. We have available for the committee a police report on each individual as complete as present information allows.

We will present synopses of the 69 gangland murders committed in the Detroit area from 1927 to 1962; we will demonstrate their decreasing frequency (for the last decade approximately one a year); and we will discuss in some detail two such murders (one in Chicago and one in the Detroit area) with which the Detroit Police Department has had considerable contact.

We will offer histories of gambling, prostitution, and narcotics cases from past years involving many of the 66 Mafia members and the 18 associates.

We will then discuss enforcement activities during 1962 and 1963 which have uncovered major Mafia activities in the city of Detroit and show the relationships of various named Mafia leaders to these current operations.

The Detroit area Mafia of the 1960's is big business. On the legal side it is involved in selling everything from horseraces to fruit juice; on the illegal, everything from dope to football bets; however, the Mafia's principal product is fear.

The Mafia front men are characterized by the smile, the glad hand, the tuxedo and the ticket to the charity ball. But the basic Mafia tools are still money, murder, and corruption.

Less violent than in earlier years, the Mafia still uses as trademarks the lime, the garrote, and the dead pig. It is the only outfit existant which deliberately advertises its murders. Its slogan could still be "Bodies by Mafia."

We must emphasize that we are by no means charging that every one of the 84 persons whom we will name today as Mafia members or associates is privy to all of the Mafia activities or crimes. We are confident on the contrary that knowledge of top-level activities and crimes is held to an absolute minimum number of essential personnel. We do assert that no person whom we name could be innocent of knowledge of the general criminal nature of the Mafia's activities.

In the 1930's our police department organized a "Black Hand Squad" more effectively to combat the then already apparent threat of the Mafia. Since that time the Mafia has grown in strength, cunning, sophistication, and power, from its beginning as a group of gangsters extorting money by direct assaults upon their fellow Sicilians. Today many of these very same criminals who were gunmen and hoodlums in the twenties are now executives in well-tailored suits, residing in expensive homes, and directing racketeering enterprises of national and international scope.

I would like at this point to emphasize that the organization which I describe is not a city of Detroit outfit. Actually, its most influential members live in the wealthy suburbs of our metropolitan area in homes which run upward of $50,000 in value. Among this top 16 we will name, 10 live in Grosse Pointe Shores, and 2 actually reside in Florida.

Increasingly, too, its operations, hampered in the city of Detroit, tend to seek easier soil to till in suburban areas with smaller units of law enforcement. This is, of course, one of our major problems. Local police forces are greatly hamstrung when they seek to follow law violators outside of their own local jurisdiction.

During the past several years, our criminal intelligence bureau has devoted an increasing amount of its attention to Detroit operations of the Mafia. From evidence now in its files, the CIB believes that we can show the chain of command and name many persons presently filling positions in the hierarchy. We have charted this structure for the committee, and I present this to you as our exhibit 2.

The Detroit area Mafia, organized as depicted on the chart, has these organizational attributes:

1. THE RULING COUNCIL

The Detroit area Mafia is controlled by a five-man group known as "the Council." These men are commonly referred to as "Dons," and it is their function to delegate authority to lesser members, to give racket franchises in the area, to settle member disputes, to discipline errant members, and to determine penalties for violations of the Mafia code. It represents the area in regional or national Mafia affairs and, above all, seeks to protect the organization's interests and enterprises.

2. "THE BIG MEN" OR ADMINISTRATORS AND "HEIRS APPARENT"

These are Mafia members of prominence who are most likely to ascend to a position on the ruling council. They have gained this position through proficient and successful criminal activity, through birth, or through both. They operate the more lucrative and plush Mafia enterprises, legal or illegal, and act as front men for the distribution and investment of Mafia funds. They are allowed considerable discretion in their operation and may be called on to represent the ruling council in national Mafia affairs. They are responsible for maintaining contacts, keeping order in the lower ranks, and protecting the image of Mafia invincibility.

3. CHIEFS OF OPERATING UNITS

These are members of prominence who are put forward by the Mafia as the headmen in the area to deceive the local officials and citizenry. This deception is perpetrated to remove attention from the council members and "heirs apparent." They organize and supervise specialized units of the Detroit rackets, such as handbooks, numbers, shylocking, prostitution, and narcotics. They have as assistants lieutenants who act in an executive position and are gaining knowledge and skills to move up in the organization. They have under their immediate control the various section leaders who operate the rackets on the public level.

4. LIEUTENANTS

These act as executive assistants to the chiefs of operating units. This position is used for training.

5. SECTION LEADERS

Section leaders operate the special segments or sections that make up the larger units of control. These are the Sicilians who are working their way up in the organization, or those of non-Sicilian extraction who can go no higher or cannot be officially accepted into the Mafia because of ancestry. These are the persons who have the direct contact with the bettors or other victims of the various rackets and are the ones most likely to be caught in gambling or vice raids.

6. FIELDMEN

These are the lower criminal element who act as runners, errand boys, and hooligans for hire. They can be of any nationality or profession and are not yet part of the Mafia other than being accepted for use in certain assignments with no strings attached. They are seldom in the know and accept the fact that this is the apprentice system for making the bigtime in crime.

The personal history of each of the Dons of Detroit gives an excellent history of our branch of the Mafia.

Research by our intelligence staff confirms the strong familial relationship among the Detroit Mafiosi that the Kefauver committee showed in 1951 and your select committee demonstrated in 1958 to exist nationally. The blood relationships among the top five Detroit Dons I have just described is an excellent example of one of the strongest ties cementing together this criminal conspiracy. District Inspector Piersante will explain our chart depicting this relationship.

As you will note, there are certain persons on our organizational chart who, to our knowledge, do not have criminal records, but who, we believe, must be characterized as integral parts of the organization because of their working, social, familial and business participations with the criminals named on it. These are:

Our criminal intelligence bureau has determined what we believe are the significant characteristics of the Detroit Mafia:

1. The ranking members are of Sicilian birth or descent.
2. The organization will associate in its criminal activities with non-Sicilians, but these persons never become members of the ruling group. Many of these persons are known to the Detroit Police Department.
3. The Mafia enforces by fear and murder its code of silence, organization discipline, and noncooperation with lawful authority. Since 1918 the Detroit Police Department has maintained records of crimes it has categorized, because of the circumstances, modus operandi, and other facts surrounding them, as gangland murders.

Between 1927 and 1962 there were at least 69 such occurrences. The details of these crimes I have summarized, and submit to you for the record.

An analysis of these crimes shows their consistent decrease through the years. Actually we believe only 1 murder of this nature has been committed in the last 2 years of 1962-63, while 17 such murders are listed for the single year of 1930. However, while we believe that such crimes tend to decrease in direct proportion to vigorous law enforcement directed against their perpetrators, we realize that the need to commit these crimes has lessened because of the now well-entrenched fear of the Mafia among underworld elements and the more sophisticated pressures its influence and affluence allow it to exert against its opponents. Over the past decade, through the inquiries of congressional committees, and particularly the groups chaired since 1956 by you, Senator McClellan, and your former colleague, Senator Kefauver, the American public has learned of the economic and political pressures entrenched racketeers can bring to bear upon their adversaries.

Nonetheless, we believe that murder continues to be a potent weapon in the Mafia arsenal. Let me tell you of two recent murders, one of which was committed in Chicago and was solved by the Detroit Police Department, one of which was committed in the Detroit area and remains unsolved.

Just as dangerous to the continuance of the lawful and orderly society to which this Nation is committed is the Mafia intimidation of witnesses necessary to successful prosecutions of their crimes. Inspector Piersante will explain a recent example of how a Mafia member, Santo Perrone, avoided conviction in our considered opinion, solely because of fear of Mafia reprisal.

In Detroit, the Mafia has been engaged in particular kinds of racketeering, and we have been successful in convicting lower ranking Mafiosi participating in those operations. These investigations and prosecutions have given us further evidence of the place each of these persons occupies in the Detroit Mafia hierarchy. Among the rackets we know to be Mafia-controlled are gambling (including the bookmaking and numbers rackets), narcotics trafficking, prostitution, shylocking, labor racketeering, and extortion. We have prepared charts showing examples of our investigations of several of these operations, each of which has resulted in convictions of most of the persons involved:

1. Inspector Piersante will explain a chart of one of our narcotics investigations.

2. Mafia operations reflect a relationship with prostitution. Sergeant DePugh will explain a chart of one of our investigations of a prostitution operation controlled by a Mafia member.

3. During the past several years, this subcommittee has indicated its awareness of the dangers of organized gambling and its role in furnishing the lifeblood to organized crime. Our investigations show that the Mafia dominates gambling in the Detroit area. This consists mainly of bookmaking, barbudi games, and the numbers racket. District Inspector Sage will explain a chart of one of our numbers investigations.

4. Another well defined area of Mafia operation in the Detroit gambling picture is their handbook operation. Inspector John O'Neill will explain a chart of a handbook investigation.

The tremendously lucrative gambling racket has long been a Mafia mainstay, in which Mafiosi have not only participated at all levels of operations, but have, also, made frequent use of non-Sicilian associates. Within the past year we have successfully attacked both methods of Mafia racket domination:

1. In the Lesod Club, which involved the running of an illegal barbudi game, a type of gambling using dice, we encountered several problems.

This particular club operated under a State charter, defining it as a "social-fellowship" organization, while in fact it was a convenient setting for the Glacalone brothers to run their barbudi games, oftentimes grossing as much as $30,000 each night. The security against police and/or persons not properly identified to the game operators or members was extremely cautious, and many devious and ingenious devices were employed to thwart investigating officers. These security measures were developed over the several years the club functioned as Lesod, and formerly under the name "Lebanese-American Republican Club."

Vice bureau officers had little difficulty in determining the nature of the gambling, the operators, the membership, or its illegal income, as these facts were attested to by persons who actually gambled there. However, the real difficulty was in obtaining court testimony by such persons, so necessary for convictions.

Ultimately by constant surveillance and similar efforts by the police department to abate this nuisance, and with the assistance of the courts, the club was forced to leave its then location.

2. A numbers operation run by associates but affiliated, we believe, with the Mafia was uncovered by us at the Gotham Hotel. The operation depended upon the Mafia for the daily winning number combinations, for the green sheets which are used by numbers players as a guide to their bets, the K books in which bets are recorded, and other paraphernalia necessary to the operation of this activity, as well as for whatever protections against law enforcement the group may have believed they had, prior to our raid. The raid is of particular interest because it showed, from the records we seized and the money we found, the incredibly large amount of money bet with the underworld.

One evening last November we made a successful raid on the Gotham Hotel, known for years as the fortress of the numbers racket in Detroit.

The hotel consisted of a lobby, a cafe, a drugstore on the first floor, eight floors of 174 residence rooms and a penthouse. The switchboard operator and sentries were used to alert the occupants of incoming police officers. A closed television circuit was used in the lobby to scan visitors; and if officers were detected, an alarm system rang on every floor and in the penthouse of the hotel. John White, the owner, would meet officers and order them off hotel property. In the fall of 1962, the Gotham ceased to operate as a public hotel, but the numbers activity continued.

Coordinated efforts of the Detroit police, the Federal Internal Revenue Service, and the Michigan State Police led to evidence which resulted in the raid of the Gotham Hotel at 5 p.m., November 9, 1962. A search warrant issued by Federal Judge Kaess after he was presented with affidavits describing the activities and prior arrests of numbers operators connected with the hotel.

The raid was conducted by 112 officers. Among the better known numbers operators arrested were John White, Earl Cuzzens and James Cummings. The search took 24 hours to complete. Seized were 160,000 bet slips, $60,000 in cash and 33 adding machines, 11 of which had been stolen, miscellaneous equipment, marked cards and loaded dice.

Arrested were 41 persons who have since either been convicted or charged with gambling activities before State or Federal courts.

The raiders found that there was a numbers office on each floor, generally located in the corner suites, with the largest room containing felt covered tables, used in processing the business, along with adding and calculating machines. All of the windows were blanketed to keep out prying eyes. The linen closets were full of boxes of coin wrappers.

Computations based on tapes and account books of the houses operating in the Gotham indicated a gross business of over $21 million a year.

John White had become owner of the Gotham Hotel in 1943 and within a short time it was common knowledge that numbers operators congregated there and runners carrying the business were frequently arrested in the vicinity.

John White's personal telephone directory contained the unlisted telephone numbers of Anthony Giacalone, Mafia gambling boss in the Detroit area, and Pete Licavoli, one of the top figures of the Mafia.

One further incident which I wish to bring to the attention of the subcommittee demonstrates the continual brazen effort of the Mafia to secure their immunity from law enforcement by direct bribes of police officials. This case concerns Anthony Giacalone, who on August 9, 1954, was arrested by vice bureau officers in Detroit, Mich., and charged with bribery of a public officer (warrant No. A-77583). A patrolman assigned to the racket squad of the Detroit Police Department was approached by Giacalone, who said that he was a fieldman for the Murphy House which had four units and that he [Giacalone] wanted the officer on his payroll at $200 a month. The officer's only obligation in return for this money was to keep Giacalone apprised of any gambling raids by the police department. Giacalone was convicted on this bribery case and was sentenced to 8 months in the Detroit House of Correction and a fine of $500.

On June 20 of this year, Giacalone was again arrested by the Detroit Police for conspiring to bribe a public officer (Warrant N. A-116337). This arrest was the result of a 5-month surveillance and investigation which began when a Detroit police sergeant was approached by known gamblers who offered $50 a month to insure protection for their gambling operation. The operators were Claude Edward Williams (DPD No. 183472) and Harrison "Chink" Brown (DPD No. 146074), who were attempting to operate a mutual house within the sergeant's immediate jurisdiction. The examination and trial are still pending.

One of the most significant and insidious threats from the Mafia is its increasing infiltration of legitimate business and its associations with legitimate businessmen. Our Criminal Intelligence Bureau has studied and has made up a chart depicting this problem. This will be explained by Inspector Miller.

A classic example of Mafia infiltration of legitimate enterprise is the Hazel Park Racing Association, Inc. This State-licensed monopoly operation makes approximately $1 million a year. Much of this is available to further Mafia power in the Detroit area.

Recommendations for legislation: As a result of my experience and my knowledge of the difficulties of prosecuting this Mafia conspiracy, I recommend that this committee give consideration to the following remedial legislation:

1. Statutes that will allow for improved and more effective coordination of local and Federal law enforcement activities.
2. A statute that would give the U.S. Government jurisdiction over gangland murders, particularly those involving travel across State lines by any party to the murder conspiracy.
3. Federal legislation allowing law enforcement agencies to secure judicial warrants for interception of telephone communications on the same showing of probable cause required for search warrants.
4. Statutory provisions for the grant of immunity to witnesses in important felony prosecutions.
5. Legislation providing for the sentencing of racketeers as dangerous offenders in accordance with the recommendations of the Model Sentencing Act of the Advisory Council of Judges of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Commissioner Edwards, would you like to read your statement now, or part of it?

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, we are exceedingly glad to accept this invitation to appear before this committee so that our police department can make some contribution to your work in making known to the American public the threat posed to its welfare by organized crime and racketeering in America, a threat about which I and many of my associates in law enforcement have been long concerned.

I am and I have been a member of the Michigan Bar from 1944 on, and then as lawyer and judge and now as Detroit police commissioner my work has made me increasingly aware of the existence, the growth, and the danger of organized crime.

I first became intimately associated with government in the city of Detroit a considerable number of years ago. In 1949 I entered office as a member of the reform administration of Mayor Edward Jeffries, Jr.

Perhaps I should interpolate at that point, Senator, that that reform administration offered a ringside view of the exposure of the possibilities of criminal conspiracies because in the subsequent 2 years, as a result of the actions of several grand juries, including that conducted by the late Senator Homer Ferguson, the lid was lifted on the impact of gambling on a city, and during that period of time we saw the former mayor of the city of Detroit, the former prosecuting attorney, the former sheriff, the former superintendent of police, and roughly 250 police officers all go to jail for the acceptance of graft in order to let gambling operate in the city of Detroit.

The CHAIRMAN. What year was that? I recall something about it.

Mr. EDWARDS. It was 1939.

The CHAIRMAN. That was a real cleanup, was it not?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes; and I think by and large it served its purpose very well. But at the outset of my public career, I had a good opportunity to know something about the money and the power that are available to the people who are purveyors of the wares of organized crime.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you wish to comment at this point, or at any time, and it just occurred to me, to ask you to give us your observations. You speak of the power of organized crime. I am speaking of their power and their influence with constituted authority, and law enforcement officials, and how they get that power with them and that influence with them, because it is certainly more difficult for organized crime to thrive, or any crime to thrive, where there is a dedicated law enforcement establishment than it is where the law enforcement establishment is lukewarm to their activities or maybe influenced somehow by the organization or the individual criminals themselves.

Is there any comment you care to make at this point about that?

Mr. EDWARDS. I think the conspiracy to which we will refer today exists in large measure because of four things: Public complacency is probably the most important, and that is one of the reasons why I personally welcome the service which this committee is performing for the Nation.

The second is murder, just plain fear. Most people in these United States aren't in fear of the Mafia or the syndicate or Cosa Nostra or whatever you want to call it, but the people who operate in the nether-world of crime are afraid of it, and they know why they should be afraid of it, and they know the purpose of the fear. The purpose of the fear is to keep them from ever offering testimony against any of the higher-ups in these organizations.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what we speak of as an insulation. The higher-ups, or the bosses, are insulated to a great degree.

Mr. EDWARDS. I hadn't thought of using that word, but I guess that is a pretty good one.

The CHAIRMAN. I didn't invent it. It has been used here in the hearing.

Mr. EDWARDS. I guess it is a pretty good one. I hadn't heard it before, but I think I would accept it without any question.

The third thing that I think is used is political influence. This is a very difficult thing to talk about, and not one which it is easy to spell out. I think that these people are very sophisticated in their approach to this problem. They don't buy public officials in general any more. I think that they did, but I think that they found that that got them into a great amount of trouble. I think what they do now is to find front people who will get campaign contributions of a very respectable nature into the hands of influential figures, and subsequent thereto the net result is that there is somebody close to the seat of power who at least can put in a good word—not control, but just put in a good word, and a good word at the seat of power at various and sundry times can be a very, very potent thing.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, the man who actually passes the money as a campaign contribution is the man who may later come around and say, "Let us see, now, if we can't do this," or "if we can't handle it this way."

Mr. EDWARDS. "This is a pretty good old fellow, and he did get into some trouble back in the prohibition days, but after all, why shouldn't he get that license?" or whatever it is.

The CHAIRMAN. They become the go-betweens.

Mr. EDWARDS. They become a means by which the racket gains a somewhat legitimate looking, and maybe even an actually legitimate area of influence.

And the fourth tool is outright corruption, which I think perhaps is less used by them now than formerly, but I think as a matter of fact we know that they are currently consistently seeking to do this. I spent 4 or 5 months this past spring listening to one of the top hoods in Detroit seeking to bribe—not only seeking to bribe, but he was bribing one of my police officers and telling him what he should do in the police department and giving him directions as to what he should do.

You tend to get a little concerned about that kind of thing when you actually have that sort.

The CHAIRMAN. This is where it was known to you, I assume.

Mr. EDWARDS. This was a thoroughly honest and very brave police officer.

The CHAIRMAN. The police officer was working with you?

Mr. EDWARDS. On the first contact he reported immediately to his superior and his superior reported to us, and we arranged so that the telephone conversations which he had with this man were overheard by our people, and a complete record made of the whole transaction. This man is now under indictment and I don't know that I want to go much further in relation to it on that.

The CHAIRMAN. You be the judge about that, and we are not asking you to do anything to jeopardize the criminal proceedings that are now pending.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like to continue, Senator, if I may, by saying that Detroit, as I have known it, and I am speaking in the years since 1939, has been and is a very clean city. At the moment some knowledge plus an admitted love for my city leads me to suggest to you that it is the cleanest and least racket-ridden big city in the country, but this does not for a moment blind me to the major influences which have sought and now seek to operate in the fields of organized crime both within and without the boundaries of Detroit.

Much of what your staff people have asked me to talk about today will come as a shock to many lifetime and knowledgeable Detroiters. Most respectable and law-abiding citizens in our area see little evidence of gambling, narcotics, or prostitution, and in their daily lives they have never been threatened by or pushed around by the element which dominates these activities. Many of these citizens may even know some of the names we discuss, and may know them favorably as businessmen who deliver a sound and lawful product or persons who are generous when they are contacted on a charity drive, but the fact is that we have some Jekyll and Hyde characters in our society and the most powerful group of them constitute a continuing menace to law enforcement.

Our information as to them has not been gained from Joseph Valachi. In fact, to date our department has not had the opportunity to interview him, and I was here yesterday when he said that he knew nothing about Detroit, which I must say is somewhat disappointing to us because we would love nothing better than to have someone who was on the inside of this organization talking about it as Valachi did in relation to New York City.

Indeed, in 1961, before I ever heard of Mr. Valachi, I made a speech at the crime prevention conference convened by the attorney general of Michigan and stated I was convinced that there was an organization operating throughout the Nation which dominated the major rackets in most American metropolitan areas, a conspiracy nationally and internationally organized primarily to promote the illegal importation and sale of narcotics and the development and protection of illegal gambling.

In May of this year, I spoke before the Advisory Council of Judges of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency. As a result of what I believe to be incontrovertible evidence brought before me in the 2 years between my 1961 speech and my address to that distinguished panel of judges in New York this spring, I felt warranted in stating that the organization dominating the national crime picture was properly called the Mafia. I am submitting here a copy of that recent speech which summarized my views about this menace, and if it is permissible, I would like to request the committee that this be received as our exhibit 1 in this proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be received and marked "Exhibit No. 17" for reference.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 17" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. EDWARDS. Our research into the leadership of organized crime in Detroit leads again and again to a small group of families of Sicilian extraction closely interrelated by marriage, by strong ties in legal and illegal enterprises.

The frustrations of our police in law enforcement center around a code of absolute silence and a positive refusal of all forms of cooperation with legal authority on the part of these families. There is strong evidence, too, in the Detroit area, as in other of our large cities, these illegal enterprises are backed by the threat of planned, carefully executed and highly professional murder.

Such facts, in my opinion, demand a more descriptively accurate name than the "syndicate." There are various names by which this outfit is known. The last thing I am interested in doing is debating nomenclature. It is called the syndicate a great deal. It is called the Mafia a great deal. The most obscene name for it that I have heard is one which is used very frequently in the underworld, I gather. They talk about it as "the people."

The CHAIRMAN. The people?

Mr. EDWARDS. One of the people whom we will talk about, our report shows, was referred to as having been killed because he was robbing "the people."

The CHAIRMAN. Robbing the people, meaning that group or that organization?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He was cheating on them?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir. That is an interesting use of a wonderful word, isn't it?

The CHAIRMAN. Cheating on the family.

Mr. EDWARDS. It is an interesting use of a wonderful word. By conversations and interchanges with my colleagues in this field I know that most of the high-level law enforcement officials in this country believe whether they will say it or not that the Apalachin meeting was a conclave of the top members of the nationally organized crime syndicate more properly referred to as the "Mafia." This organization has its top command figures active in every large city in the country, including Detroit, and has been and continues to be the dominant factor in organized crime in America.

The organization to which we in Detroit apply the name "Mafia" appears to be very similar to and directly connected with the group in New York characterized by Valachi as "Cosa Nostra." We will present a chart showing 63 Mafia members arranged in what we believe to represent the organizational structure of this conspiracy. Practically all these persons are of Sicilian birth or ancestry.

I pause just a moment to talk about that for a brief second. On our chart there will be exactly one person whom we can identify as not having been born in Sicily or having parents who were born in Sicily. While I don't for a second suggest that there aren't thousands upon thousands of wonderful Sicilian citizens in this country, I do suggest that the derivation of the term "Mafia" from the history of the Mafia in Sicily right down to date has some significance because the same code of silence, of fear, of refusal to cooperate with law enforcement which existed in the Mafia in Sicily has been in my view carried over into the operation of modern organized crime.

We will present family charts to show the Sicilian origin of the major families associated with these 63, we will name 18 associates who are not Sicilian. These, in our opinion, are not taken fully into the membership, but nonetheless have a continuing association with the Mafia over the years in illegal enterprises.

We believe that this conspiracy grosses an absolute minimum of $150 million a year in a variety of illegal enterprises in the Detroit area. We believe that these persons dominate gambling and narcotic traffic in the Detroit area.

If anyone were to suggest to me that that figure was very conservative, I would agree with them, but I would also say that we had sought to be, throughout our presentation of this problem, conservative on every single count.

Mafia figures have also infiltrated legitimate businesses worth, we believe, a minimum of another $50 million. These businesses it uses for investment, for employment "cover" for its hoodlums, and for valuable income tax protection.

We will present a chart showing 98 businesses as to which we can show significant Mafia infiltration, ownership, or influence.

As to the top 63, we will show their criminal arrests, their criminal convictions, their criminal associations, their family associations, and their business associations. We have available for the committee, if it wishes, a police report on each individual as complete as present information allows. We will present synopses of the 69 gangland murders committed in the Detroit area from 1927 to 1962. We will demonstrate their decreasing frequency—for the last decade approximately one a year—and we will discuss in some detail at least two such murders, one in Chicago and one in the Detroit area, with which the Detroit Police Department has had considerable contact.

We will offer histories of gambling, prostitution, and narcotics cases from past years involving many of the 63 Mafia members and the 18 associates, and we will then discuss enforcement activities during 1962 and 1963 which have uncovered major Mafia activities in the city of Detroit and show the relationships of various named Mafia leaders to these current operations.

The Detroit area Mafia of the 1960's is big business. On the legal side it is involved in selling everything from horseraces to fruit juice. On the illegal, everything from dope to football bets. However, the Mafia's principal product is fear.

The Mafia frontmen are characterized by the smile, the glad hand, the tuxedo, and the ticket to the charity ball. But the basic Mafia tools are still money, murder, and corruption.

Less violent than in its earlier years, the Mafia still uses as trademarks the lime, the garrote, and the dead pig. It is the only outfit extant which deliberately advertises its murders. Its slogan could still be "Bodies by Mafia."

We must emphasize that we are by no means charging that every one of the 84 persons whom we will name today as Mafia members or associates is privy to all of the Mafia activities or crimes. We are confident on the contrary that knowledge of top-level activities and crimes is held to an absolute minimum of essential personnel. We do assert that no person whom we name could be innocent of knowledge of the general criminal nature of the Mafia's activities.

In the 1930's our police department organized a "black hand squad" more effectively to combat the then already apparent threat of the Mafia. Since that time the Mafia has grown in strength, cunning, sophistication, and power from its beginning as a group of gangsters extorting money by direct assaults upon their fellow Sicilians. Today many of these very same criminals who were gunmen and hoodlums in the twenties are now executives in well-tailored suits residing in expensive homes and directing racketeering enterprises of national and international scope.

I would like at this point to emphasize that the organization which I describe is not a city of Detroit outfit. Actually, its most influential members live in the wealthy suburbs of our metropolitan area in homes which run upward of $50,000 in value. Among the top 16 we will name, 10 live in Grosse Point Park, another 3 live in Grosse Point Woods, 1 lives in Grosse Point Shores, and 2 actually reside in Florida.

Increasingly, too, its operations hampered in the city of Detroit tend to seek easier soil to till in suburban areas with smaller units of law enforcement. This is, of course, one of our major problems. Local police forces are greatly hamstrung when they seek to follow law violators outside of their own local jurisdiction. During the past several years our criminal intelligence bureau has devoted an increasing amount of attention to the Detroit operations of the Mafia. From evidence now in its files, the CIB believes that we can show the chain of command and name many persons presently filling positions in that hierarchy. We have charted this structure for the committee and I present this to you as our exhibit 2.

If at this point we could have the chart presented, we will go on and talk a little about it. May it be presented as an exhibit, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. The chart will be printed in the record insofar as it can be and will also be made exhibit No. 18. Insofar as it can be reproduced in the record, let it be reproduced.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 18" for reference and faces this page:)

(152)

Mr. EDWARDS. Might I refer to the chart for a brief moment, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, indeed, you may.

Mr. EDWARDS. The significance of what I am going to point out will become clear as our testimony develops. At the outset I would like to call your attention to the fact that two of the five people whom our CIB regards as forming the ruling council of the Mafia in the Detroit area, Joseph Zerilli and William "Black Bill" Tocco, were born in the same year in a little town of Terrasina.

The third of that ruling council, Peter Licavoli, was born in St. Louis, but his parents were born in Terrasina.

One step down, Joseph Bommarito, "Scarface Joe" was born in this country, but his parents were born in Terrasina, Sicily. The carryover of important associations from the earliest days right down to the present time is something which characterizes every step of the development of the power of the Mafia.

The CHAIRMAN. I note you have five designated on your chart as ruling council.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you explain that a bit?

Mr. EDWARDS. We believe that this five-man group represents the top authority in the Mafia in the Detroit area.

The CHAIRMAN. Which one would you call the boss, if there is one really at the top?

Mr. EDWARDS. This is a pretty difficult thing for us to determine, Senator. At this point I want to say something to you about the comparison of our testimony with that which you have been hearing for the last few days. You must realize that yesterday from time to time you were questioning the New York Police Department about persons who had been identified by somebody from within the mob as members of the mob and you were asking them to confirm whether or not, indeed, the police department was interested in these people. We have no such asset available to us in terms of information. Our information is gained from exhaustive surveillance, exhaustive efforts to detect criminal activities, from prosecutions when we are able to arrest for illegal activities, and from such information as we can gain through intelligence sources of our department, but while we are not in a position to tell you with certainty exactly who the top dog would be in this situation, it is our general belief that Joseph Zerilli through the years has exercised the greatest continuing influence.

It is our belief that he tends to represent the Detroit operations in national meetings and tends to be looked to as probably the highest of authorities.

Senator MUSKIE. Judge Edwards, may I ask a question? You have labeled these various levels of the hierarchy by various titles. The top one is the ruling council. Is this a description that comes from members of the organization, itself? Is this how they refer to these five men at the top?

Do they call it the ruling council or the dons?

Mr. EDWARDS. The dons is certainly a term which is used in relation to each one of these persons whom we have thus described. I believe the ruling council is also a term which we have gained from our information in relation to the Mafia.

Senator MUSKIE. Is that also true of the other labels, the big men for the next level, and chiefs?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes. This is a phrase that is used in the Detroit area, the big men. The administrators and heirs apparent, this is our own description.

Senator MUSKIE. And the others, chiefs, lieutenants, and section leaders, do they refer to the lower level as section leaders?

Mr. EDWARDS. I would doubt that that term was used. I think this is more a descriptive term as to what we think they play as roles.

Senator MUSKIE. This would seem to be comparable to the soldiers that Valachi has testified to.

Mr. EDWARDS. It would seem as if they corresponded a good deal to the people whom Valachi talked about as soldiers or button men. Some of these men may take serious offense at being downgraded by that term. I am not too sure as to whether they would accept that lower ranking in some instances on what we have called section leaders, but I think it is about right.

Senator MUSKIE. The aliases aren't all as colorful as those that Valachi has used?

Mr. EDWARDS. Well, we may not know all of the most colorful of the aliases; I just heard about his this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Which one is that you heard about this morning?

Mr. EDWARDS. About Valachi's alias.

Senator MUSKIE. That is all, Judge.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. EDWARDS. We believe that the function of the dons or the ruling council is to delegate authority to lesser members, to give racket franchises in the area, to settle member disputes, to discipline errant members and to determine penalties for violations of the Mafia code.

Senator MUSKIE. May I ask a question at that point? The recent testimony of Valachi suggests two things about the Cosa Nostra that I would like to have you comment on relative to the Detroit situation. No. 1, that each member tends to operate his own illegal activities independent of the organization and undisciplined by the organization; No. 2, that—well, I guess the second point is the question of discipline. That is, the extent to which the member is part of an operating racket organization.

Mr. EDWARDS. It is our belief that many of the people who are on this chart do exercise considerable autonomy in relation to the operation of specific things which have been more or less assigned to them or which they have picked up and gained agreement from the balance of the organization as to their development and keeping for themselves. On the other hand, there is no real doubt in our mind but that there is a cement that binds this outfit together. In part, it is group loyalty and group self interest, but there is another even harder element in that cement, and that is just plain fear, because if somebody steps out of line, the chances are pretty good that he will disappear or he will be found garroted or shot. We are going to illustrate this with some specific instances. Maybe it is just as well to do it right now, if you care for it.

(At this point Senator Mundt entered the hearing room.)

Senator MUSKIE. Let me make this point. I think it would have been my impression prior to Mr. Valachi's testimony that when an organization of this kind takes over a city, that it immediately stakes out all of the illegal enterprises which are to be conducted in the city and assigns people in the organization to particular responsibilities with respect to those enterprises. In other words, something like a corporate structure, people at the top spell out the nature of the business to be operated and then assign people to do it.

This is not my impression of how the Cosa Nostra operates according to Mr. Valachi's testimony. It is much looser in that respect than was my previous impression it would be.

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, it is my belief that there is a considerable autonomy in operation, and that they have no planning and research department which says, "We will now go in and develop numbers in such and such a place." But if somebody is there and gets started on it, they see to it that that becomes a part of their operations.

Senator MUSKIE. And the operator has to give a percentage of the take to the organization, does he?

Mr. EDWARDS. Well, we are going to spell that out a good deal. Let's do it right now because I think it is better to answer questions as they are in the committee's mind than later.

We raided the biggest single gambling operation in the city of Detroit last November 9, in 1962. It was housed in a hotel, a 9-story hotel, with 174 rooms. I knew that this was the headquarters of the numbers racket when I became police commissioner. I don't think there was a knowledgeable citizen in Detroit who didn't know that it was the headquarters of the numbers racket. But they had maintained a very real discipline and security which was difficult for vigorous law-enforcement officers to pierce, and in my own judgment about the matter the efforts had not been as vigorous as they should have been.

We started in January trying to get this operation because it was a cancer in the minds of our city in terms of law enforcement. The basic reason I took the job of police commissioner had nothing to do with organized crime. It had to do with the race problem in our great city of Detroit which was very serious in terms of the relationships between our Negro population and the police department. As I was going from place to place in the core area of the city, asking for people to support law enforcement, when I got all through at the meetings people came up to me and said, "How can I teach my children to support law enforcement when the Gotham stands there?"

The CHAIRMAN. When it what?

Mr. EDWARDS. When the Gotham stands there, when this hotel is known. I didn't have very good answers to this except, "Yes, I know. We are working on it."

Well, it took a good deal of doing and a good deal of planning and a great deal of security, a great deal of security, to make a successful raid on the Gotham Hotel. We ultimately did it under a Federal search warrant issued by Federal Judge Case on affidavits supplied by picked crews from the Michigan State Police, the Federal Internal Revenue intelligence unit, and the Detroit Police Department.

I don't think more than eight people knew when we were going to hit this place when we actually did hit it, in all three of those units. But we had 112 officers so mobilized that they came together and were put on buses and were given their raid instructions after the buses' doors had been closed. We pulled those buses up in front of the bus stop in front of the Gotham Hotel at 5 o'clock on November 9, and our people took off up the stairs with assigned targets in every one of those rooms.

We found a numbers factory in full operation. I went through the hotel the next morning. The intelligence unit of Internal Revenue had just cracked open one of the safes and was counting out $38,000 in cash on the floor. We got 160,000 bet slips. We got $60,000 in cash. We found evidence of the setup for at least the seven major numbers houses in various suites in the hotels, all set, all organized, all ready to go. There were interesting developments from that.

Senator MUSKIE. How many people were involved?

Mr. EDWARDS. Forty-two people were arrested and are currently under charges of various kinds.

Senator MUSKIE. How many are on this chart?

Mr. EDWARDS. None. Not one is on the chart there. This is the point I was going to get to. This was a Negro numbers operation. There wasn't a single white person in the hotel, so far as I recall, when our raiders hit it. We have done quite a lot of work in relation to this since then. We have tried to ascertain just what relationship there was between the thing we call organized crime in Detroit and this which was its largest obvious manifestation. And we found the following: That they took the number from the Mafia; that they took the dream books which they sold to their customers from the Mafia; that they took the pads, the numbers pads—they could only be purchased from one supplier and that was supplied by the Mafia.

And we found in Johnny White's private phone directory Pete Licavoli's private telephone number and Tony Giacalone's private telephone number. And then we began to find after the raid that there was consternation because subsequent to the raid we told the people of Detroit that not only had we found evidence that this thing was illegal and big, but in addition to that, we found evidence that it was completely crooked.

We hit a dice game in the penthouse of this operation. There was $3,500 on the table and the shooter had the dice in his hands when our people broke in. The dice that were in the shooters' hand were crooked. There were 18 pairs of monogrammed dice that were seized in that dice game. Fifteen of the 18 were crooked. We found decks of cards manufactured in our sister city of Chicago, incidentally, very interesting cards. They looked just like any other deck, originally manufactured by a very reputable playing card manufacturer. But if you put on glasses with polaroid lenses, you could read the backs of those cards. In one of the gamblers' rooms we found a set of contact lenses of polaroid variety. We demonstrated this to the people of the city of Detroit. Johnny White in response said: "Who cares if we are cheating ourselves?" Well, we went on to demonstrate that the number was being changed, too, and that not only did the operator of the numbers game have a 2-to-1 margin against the bettor to start out with, but in addition to that, if they got a lot of hits on that number, the number which was supposed to be set by reading various of the race forms, they would just change it. And they didn't do it with any fancy device, as has been demonstrated in other instances. They just plain did it. They just changed it. And they enforced their changed number. The net result of the raid and this publicity was that the operators in the Gotham who subsequently kept right on trying to operate, and don't for a second, Senator, leads me to tend to suggest, that I am indicating we have completely driven these people out of business, we have hampered them, we have harassed them and driven a lot of them out of Detroit. But this is a tough weed we are trying to kill, and it takes root real fast in a new neighborhood.

Senator MUSKIE. What was your estimate as to the annual take?

Mr. EDWARDS. $21 million in the total operations in the Gotham.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that just from this hotel, the operations that were in this hotel?

Mr. EDWARDS. Just operations in this particular hotel; yes, sir.

Now we have reason to believe that subsequent to that time complaints were made to Licavoli and Giacalone by the heads of the Negro numbers operations about the changing of the number and that there was indeed a meeting between the heads of these two groups at which it was decided that the number would no longer be changed, and indeed the number has no longer been changed.

The Mafia number has gotten honest under duress, if anything illegal can be so described.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is the other man you mentioned besides Peter Licavoli?

Mr. EDWARDS. Anthony Giacalone.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is he on the chart? I see now.

Mr. EDWARDS. So you see, there is some give-and-take on these things.

Senator MUSKIE. Did Mafia get a piece of this $21 million?

Mr. EDWARDS. Sure they got a piece. They were supplying the service which was the number. They were supplying the dreambooks. Years ago we raided Licavoli's house under a search warrant and found—how many dreambooks—approximately 10,000 of these dreambooks were seized in one of these old raids on Pete Licavoli's house. The department lost the case on the ground that the search warrant had not properly described the purpose or some such reason, and no conviction resulted from it but it was fascinating to know that that is where the dreambooks were stored at that particular point.

On still another occasion we got "Long Joe" Bommarito with a truck while he was bringing them up from the printer down into Lido. We have correlated the dreambooks which the Mafia people use and store with the dreambooks which are put out in other areas by Polish operators, Negro operators, or some other than the Mafia people, and we have also correlated the bet slips so that we know that the same identical product is being distributed in both areas.

(At this point Senator McClellan withdrew from the hearing room.)

Senator MUSKIE. It is obvious that the chart, even the lower level of the chart, is just the top of the activity. How many other people do you estimate are associated in the way that this Gotham Hotel operation was associated with this organization in Detroit?

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, we are going to be conservative, we are going to try to be conservative and careful in everything we say. We would think there were at least 250 people other than those who are on the chart, who are actively employed in this general illegal conspiracy.

Senator MUSKIE. The bulk of those are not necessarily Sicilians, they are Negroes—

Mr. EDWARDS. Or whoever, just whoever happened to come along. Some portion of those are people who are Sicilian and who are not on the chart and this is not because we have any great inclination toward doing them any favors. We have a great many more people than are on this chart under observation and at least intermittent surveillance.

But we have tried to limit the names which we brought into public gaze to those where we were sure, where we were sure, and I want to emphasize that because actually there are some very important people who are not on there and we know they are important but we are not able to develop the evidence which we think your committee would like to have before it if we were going to bring a name out in the public gaze.

Senator MUSKIE. Let me ask you this: Are the people who ran this Gotham Hotel operation a part of the organization or were they simply holders of a franchise, so to speak from the organization?

Mr. EDWARDS. I don't think it works quite that way, Senator. I think somebody gets in the business or wants to get in the business and the interest dovetails. They have about the same relationship to this outfit that a Standard Oil gas station owner has to the Standard Oil Corp. He owns his business, as I understand it, he owns the building or the lease and the fixtures and everything about it, but he takes all his gas and oil from the Standard Oil Co. and he gets the advertising and they get just a little bit more, they get a little discipline.

Senator MUSKIE. I was going to ask you about that. I suspect that there is a difference in the way they are disciplined.

416 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, the discipline is quite different.

Senator MUSKIE. I wonder if you would explain the greenbook. Do I understand you also refer to it as "dreambook?"

Mr. EDWARDS. Green sheets and dreambook. This is an advertising device for the numbers. You start reading through here and you will find various and sundry fanciful reasons as to why such-and-such a number would be very attractive on such-and-such a day. People buy these by the thousands and play numbers by the thousands.

Senator MUSKIE. This is sold to the general public?

Mr. EDWARDS. This is sold, priced $2, and is sold through the racket trade, but I have also been told that from time to time we have tried to get a court holding to the effect that this was in, and of itself, a gambling device and have failed to do so.

Senator MUSKIE. Is it readily available on the streets of Detroit?

Mr. EDWARDS. No, no, it is not readily available. This is sold through the numbers people, through the numbers houses, but a $2 price on this could be very—

Senator MUSKIE. Is it clear on its face what it is?

Mr. EDWARDS. No, it is not clear on its face what it is, I don't think, if you never heard of the numbers game. As a matter of fact, if you never heard of the numbers game you would just wonder forever what in the world this was, I believe.

This is called "Green Sheet Almanac and Dreambook." It purports to have to do with astrology. It discusses baseball and ring champions by years and all sorts of devices to bring into print various and sundry numbers.

Senator MUSKIE. Where is it printed? Who prints it? Does the printer know what it is?

Mr. EDWARDS. I am told by our vice squad people, Senator, that sometimes the printer is actually identified on these since these have been judged not to be contraband per se. But the bet slips, of course we get no knowledge as to where they are printed unless we are in a position to make a raid and to seize them as gambling paraphernalia.

Senator MUSKIE. I think it would be useful if we had one of the dreambooks as an exhibit. Do you have one available for that purpose?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, we certainly do.

Senator MUSKIE. Without objection, it will be received.

Mr. EDWARDS. We will give you the newest editions, the 1962 and 1963.

Senator MUSKIE. It is an annual publication?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

Senator MUSKIE (presiding). That will be exhibit No. 19.

(Documents referred to marked "Exhibit No. 19" for reference, and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. EDWARDS. This is the green sheet and it is entitled "A Sports Review." At the top of it you will find "numerology" and on various and sundry dates you will find numbers beside them.

This has, I presume, various types of material printed to get it passed the characteristic of being obviously a gambling device and just barely that.

Senator MUSKIE. That will be received as exhibit 20.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 20" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. EDWARDS. It also, incidentally, gives you the winning numbers for past days and weeks.

Senator MUSKIE. It wouldn't do us any good this week.

Mr. EDWARDS. I don't know that there is very good success to be had from making use of these, Senator. I am not real sure on that score.

(Senator McClellan entered the room.)

Mr. EDWARDS. This is the sort of relationship, then, that I think exists in a great many of these areas. Some of these people have operations just directly under their thumb. For example, in 1962, we had a barbudi game which was running in the city of Detroit.

Senator MUSKIE. What kind of a game is that?

Mr. EDWARDS. Barbudi. It is called barbudi or barbuti, and it is played with a pair of dice. That is the only equipment that is necessary for it. This was called the Lesod Club. It operated at 106 West Columbia.

They had a very interesting device. I had a Supreme Court Justice out in Detroit one night and I took him—a Supreme Court Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court—and I took him around to see this operation at 1 o'clock in the morning. They had an upstairs where the operation took place, a locked door at the top of the stairs and a peephole, a locked door at the bottom of the stairs, buzzers and buzzer controls on the locks.

Outside they had a man, a guard, a watcher. His function was to screen the people who entered. They called this a social club. It was called the Lesod Club which, I understand, originally meant lower east side of Detroit. But this was no longer on the lower east side of Detroit. It got chased out of there and moved over slightly to the west side of Detroit.

For quite a time, Billy Giacalone, Tony's brother who operated this thing, and Otis Tincer, his henchman, who was on the scene all the time, would let our police officers up fairly freely to take a look. But every time they went to go in, the man at the bottom said, "Hey, police are coming," and there would be some scurrying around upstairs, and when our people got up there there would be people gathered around checkerboards and around billiard tables.

One occasion, literally, our people gained access to the club in this fashion at 6 a.m., and the off had been given in this fashion and they went up. There were 28 people seated studiously studying checker games. Such devotion to checkers, Senator, I have never heard of at 6 a.m. in the morning before. There was also a group gathered around the billiard table and the most prominent actor in that group was addressing a billiard ball with the butt end of the billiard cue. He wasn't being stupid. He was showing contempt. He knew which end of a billiard cue you hit the ball with. He was just showing contempt.

Well, you know, contempt breeds a little determination, and we exercised a little determination in relation to the Lesod Club. We exercised a lot of our constitutional rights, rights to talk to people if they were willing to be talked to. Nobody went into that club who wasn't talked to by a police officer, nobody. And quite a number of times we photographed quite a few of them.

In a little bit, they decided they were in a situation where they ought to seek legal relief and they went into a court of law and asked for an injunction against the police harassment.

What is that word, Senator, "Hutzpah"? Talk about gall? Talk about gall. We went into the same court and we filed a petition for abatement of a nuisance and we then subpoenaed every person who went into that club for the following nights, and after 20 of them had gotten on the witness stand and had taken the fifth amendment, it was pretty obvious that a court of equity was not going to intervene on the side of the Lesod Club. Then, by that, we figured we had enough evidence and we went for a search warrant. We got the search warrant issued.

The same afternoon the search warrant was issued, the Lesod Club closed in Detroit without our ever serving the search warrant. And it never has opened again in the city of Detroit. But it is operating outside of the city of Detroit in the intervening period of time.

Senator MUSKIE. On that point, do any of the people listed on the chart operate outside of the city of Detroit or throughout the country?

Mr. EDWARDS. I beg your pardon?

Senator MUSKIE. Do any of these people operate outside of Detroit?

Mr. EDWARDS. Certainly. As a matter of fact, by now, I think the bulk of their operation is outside of the city of Detroit.

Senator MUSKIE. Within the area?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

We are talking about an organization which has generally the southeastern Michigan area, and it also slopes over a little bit into Windsor and has some connections down in Toledo, Ohio. But there are many interrelationships between this organization and other similar organizations in other parts of the country. But I am talking about the area over which it has, and exercises, its jurisdiction.

Senator MUSKIE. I am afraid I have diverted you from your planned testimony.

Senator JAVITS. Would the Senator yield for two questions?

We in New York are interested in a gentleman named Joseph Barbara, who was the host at Apalachin. I know that there is a Barbara on the chart. Is there a relationship?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir. It is the son.

Would you like to hear a little about him, how he is doing?

Senator JAVITS. From what you say, Commissioner, he is doing badly as far as we are concerned and well as far as he is concerned.

Mr. EDWARDS. He is doing well. I would be delighted to tell you about him. I was planning to do it a little later, but I would be delighted to do it now.

Senator JAVITS. I wouldn't want to take it out of turn, sir, because the Chair has been very indulgent with us on questions, so why don't you do it in its turn and I will wait.

But I did have one question to ask you that is rather important to a great many people.

Of course, the community in the United States, and this includes Detroit, of people of Italian extraction on the whole approve thoroughly of what we are doing, but, at the same time, are disquiet about some impression that the principal criminal activity in the United States of this organized character is attributable to those of Italian extraction.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 419

Mr. EDWARDS. This is a leading question, but I think it is an important one.

Senator JAVITS. I have a wire this morning, for example, from an assistant district attorney in Buffalo, Erie County, applauding the work of the committee. I would like to submit that, if I may, for the record, Mr. Chairman. And it is calling attention to this fact, of urging our committee to make it clear that, as is true of every other group in America, Jewish, Irish, any other group, we have bad people in it who are lawbreakers, and so forth.

Would you care to say anything about that as far as the Italian community of Detroit is concerned?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, Senator Javits, I would. Personally, I never use the term "Italian" in relation to this conspiracy. As we have known it in Detroit, it is Sicilian in origin.

I recognize that there is a national jurisdiction over Sicily, but it has not always been thus. Nor does the term "Italian" accurately pinpoint where our trouble comes from, at least as far as the Detroit area is concerned.

This gentleman is an Italian. He is one of the finest police officers.

The CHAIRMAN. When you say "this gentleman," you will have to identify him so that the record will know whom you are talking about.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am putting my good right arm on District Detective Vincent W. Piersante.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is sitting by you and has already been sworn as a witness?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes. For 22 years he has been engaged in seeking to uphold law enforcement in the city of Detroit. He and the people who sit behind him here in our department are dedicated to trying to keep our town clean and to root out this evil thing.

He is not the only vigorous, able, devoted, dedicated Italian police officer in our department.

We have another detective inspector who I promoted who is of Italian extraction.

I think that this can't be said too often.

I don't even think that it is fair, really, to use the term "Sicilian." That is why I choose to use the term "Mafia" because the Mafia did exist at a given place and time in Sicily, it did have an influence, its code has been passed on from generation to generation.

Years ago, when I was a juvenile court judge, if you will forgive me I won't mention names in relation to this because I thought that should not have been done in that court—we had a young man who was a product of this outfit, in terms of familial relationships brought into it.

At 15, we found in talking with him that he had had so instilled in him by his father and his grandmother the absolute refusal to cooperate with law in any form, that dedication to a criminal career, that he was the toughest single case in terms of rehabilitation that I ever recall in that court. We didn't get anywhere with him.

That is how young some of this discipline starts and how effective it can be.

Senator JAVITS. Commissioner, would you say a word about the Italo-American community of Detroit; that is, the community of Detroit which is like those in New York, those of Italian extraction, as to any characterization which might be deduced from this organized Mafia?

Mr. EDWARDS. I don't think that they have any part of the Mafia and I don't think they want any part of the Mafia, and I think they are just as hostile to it and as interested in seeing it rooted out as anybody else in our city is.

Senator JAVITS. By and large, the same great proportion, overwhelming proportion, are desirable, helpful, law-abiding citizens?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir; as a matter of fact, among the finest of our citizens. Our community is a fascinating cosmopolitan community of our industrial America, Senator. We have people from every nationality in the world and they fuse and gather in a very fascinating example of both the diversity and unity that this great land of ours can produce.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you very much.

May I offer, if the Chair will allow me, this telegram for the record?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be received as an exhibit for reference since it is not sworn testimony.

It may be made exhibit No. 21.

(The document referred to was marked exhibit No. 21 and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Senator JAVITS. I am all through because I think the witness would prefer to develop the Barbara testimony in its proper place.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Mundt.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Edwards, how many names are on that chart?

Mr. EDWARDS. Sixty-three, I believe, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. How many of them are immigrants, born outside the United States?

Mr. EDWARDS. I don't think that I can give you that figure quickly out of my head, Senator.

Senator MUNDT. Are any of the top "Dons" foreign born?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. PIERSANTE. Four of the top Dons are foreign born. One was born in this country.

Senator MUNDT. That is good for the purpose of my question.

I am just wondering whether, in your very commendable and fairly successful efforts to clean up Detroit and break up the Mafia, you have tried the devices of denaturalization and deportation and, if so, would you describe what success you have had?

Mr. EDWARDS. We have followed one process which was not in vogue before I became police commissioner, Senator Mundt. We have sought to hold periodic joint conferences with the intelligence units of the Federal agencies, including Immigration, Narcotics, Intelligence Unit of the Internal Revenue, and the FBI, and to review with them the problems which we found and to the degree that they were prepared to do so and able to do so, have them review the same thing with us. Thus they are fully informed as to the nature of our understanding and information concerning the people who are being described here.

Now, of my own knowledge, I know of one unsuccessful effort to denaturalize or to send back, out of the country, one of the top dons. This pertained to Joseph Zerilli, as I recall it, and occurred in 1957.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 421

A Federal judge did not find sufficient evidence had been developed to issue such an order.

I am told by District Inspector Piersante that the same thing was true in relation to Angelo Meli. There was an effort made and it was unsuccessful.

Senator MUNDT. I would like to pursue that a little bit more, especially with one who is headed for a judgeship. I think this is good for the country to have people of your background, knowledge, and demeanor. For you to reach such a high judicial position is gratifying.

To me, this is the real place where we break down in our law enforcement. American citizenship always has been and is increasingly a prize possession. Even the crooks cling to it. No matter how much contempt they show for our society they fight with everything they have to keep from being deported.

It seems to me that, in the area of denaturalization and deportation, we have a great club as a decent society in this country to send back where they came from, wherever it is, people who come here and engage in a life of crime and assault upon decent society and are able through lawyers to thumb their noses at the United States and say, "You can't deport me." We have the laws, Congress has enacted the statutes to do that, we can pass some more if we have to, but some place along the procedure seems to break down.

We are working on a character down in New Orleans that is just preposterous. We spend a hundred billion dollars fighting a Communist menace over there. Here is one guy who gets by challenging the country. There is something wrong if we cannot defend ourselves against that.

These people are fighting us in our country just like an enemy is. Somehow or other we have to find a way.

I would like to probe your experienced mind as to what suggestions you can make as to where we could have successes where we have had failures in this area.

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, I believe in what you are doing today. I am not just saying this to cotton up to a Senate committee.

There have been Senate committees that I have been none too fond of in relation to their procedures and practices. But in a period when at least one Senator was in my opinion going pretty wild, I defended then the process of Senate investigations because it is a mechanism by which hidden problems can be brought out on top of the table.

This, Senator, is still a hidden problem.

Now, somebody is going to tell you before we get all through with this hearing that we have said nothing here today that has not been common knowledge in the city of Detroit.

Well, I beg to differ with that. We probably have not named on that chart anybody who had not previously been named as a police character in some fashion or another. That probably is true. But the conviction that there is an illegal conspiracy of some strength and cohesiveness and continuity existing in the southeastern Michigan area and tied in with other similar organizations throughout the country, that conviction does not exist among our people in the city of Detroit.

Senator, as I know the judiciary, it does not exist amongst the judges. This is one of the reasons why last May, long before I ever heard of Valachi or ever thought of the possibility of this hearing or many other things that have happened, I made a talk on this same topic to the Advisory Council of Judges of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency. Judges came up to me afterward after I said the same thing essentially that I have said this morning, perhaps not in quite as much detail to them as I have to you, and asked: "Do you really believe the Mafia exists?" There were judges who were sitting on trial courts of criminal jurisdiction and dealing with these people at the present stage of the game.

I am confident this is just plain lack of information and I think information is a part of the great gain that we will get from this committee as the Nation got some of it from the functioning of the Kefauver committee in past years.

Senator, might I respond a little more to the question asked earlier?

Senator MUNDT. You are on target now because a week from Saturday we open the world's greatest pheasant hunting spectacular in South Dakota. We have to get our target eyes clear. The target here is denaturalization and deportation. Why are we failing in that?

Mr. EDWARDS. Might I respond to your question in relation to facts by answering that District Inspector Piersante has made a quick computation and out of the top 26 on our chart, 12 were born in the United States. That is out of the top 26.

Senator MUNDT. But the 12 are pretty high up in the echelon?

Mr. EDWARDS. Only 12 were born in the United States. The balance were born outside.

Senator MUNDT. Only 12 in the United States?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir. The majority, in short; the majority of 14.

Senator MUNDT. We tend to emphasize this: that on this investigating committee, year after year—we have had these crime hearings before—we get up to what seems to me to be a complete exercise in futility. We know that those people are here. We know that they are here in violation of the law. They should be deported. We have these characters down in New Orleans, and everybody seems to be trying, but they are getting nowhere.

I just would like to get from you some counsel as to what we can do. I think you did give us some counsel. We were on target for a while when you said that the judges themselves are going to have to assume part of the responsibility for somehow failing to recognize this situation.

In talking about the thing that Senator Javits was discussing, I can't think of anything that would help to take away from the public any feeling against any race or any group or any islands of criminal elements that would work any more effectively than the fact that we were deporting these folks back, when they come here—that they are rejected, that we spew them out, that we don't want them here. Citizenship is the one thing they don't want to lose. It is the greatest penalty we can inflict.

We have the laws, the detectives, and officers of the law. I think the law enforcement people in this country are very good. They keep pulling these fellows in time after time, but they are back at the grindstone or at their old jobs pretty fast.

Mr. EDWARDS. Some of the cases involving deportation proceedings which have been either delayed or unsuccessful are very hard to account for.

How long were we engaged in trying to deport "Cockeyed Joe" Catalanotte? This is a man who, right in his house back in the early 1930's, they found 60 guns, and among them they found the murder weapons in 4 murders. Later he was convicted on a narcotics charge. This ultimately was overruled on appeal, Senator.

Still later, ultimately, he was indeed deported, but he had had a long and infamous career in the city of Detroit before that finally transpired.

Senator MUNDT. Let me ask you a question related to this. Let's assume a utopian situation so far as the denaturalization and deportation proceedings are concerned. Let us assume that when you get a fellow breaking the law and the terms under which he came to this country and that it were pretty easy, pretty expeditious to get him convicted and deported, what do you think that would do? Wouldn't that have a great impact in breaking down this whole thing?

Mr. EDWARDS. It would have a whale of an impact on our outfit; there is no doubt about that.

Senator MUNDT. If it were Valachi—

Mr. EDWARDS. If you take the top 14 out of the top 26 out of our hair, it would be quite a gain.

Senator MUNDT. It seems to me that this is a penalty that they don't want. There is still something pretty good about this country that they despise so much; they attack all its laws and citizens, but if they faced certain deportation, I think you would clean this racket up faster than any one single thing that we can do.

Mr. EDWARDS. We have some suggestions which we make in general on Federal remedies. Among them is the suggestion in relation to sentencing of racketeers as dangerous offenders. It is my belief that a fine for a racketeer is just a license charge.

Senator MUNDT. It is a license to steal; that is all.

Mr. EDWARDS. And that probation for a person in this business makes absolutely no sense at all.

No, Senator, I want to tell you something. I am thoroughly in favor of probation and rehabilitation of criminals. I believe in this. I think this is possible. But I sure don't believe it in relation to the Mafia. I just think this is utter and complete foolishness to think of any shorttime rehabilitative device having anything to do with changing the course of conduct of these people.

I am about to tell you about one whose life history would illustrate this, if we have time for it.

Senator MUNDT. Out in the short-grass country of my State where I come from, we have a saying among the old cowboys that you can't reform a rattlesnake, and I think that is true of these people, too.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you a question in this regard: "How would you establish the fact that they are racketeers except that you establish the fact—well, one way you could if you were able to do it—that they are members of an organization dedicated to crime, or habitual offenders, repetitious offenders?"

Mr. EDWARDS. I was a member of a group of judges that wrestled with this problem for about 5 years, Senator. We didn't find all the answers that we wanted, but we found some that we thought might at least be worth printing. We put out a model sentencing act, which

I am calling your attention to in this last recommendation, and one of the provisions is that a judge may take into account, in sentencing, a presentence report which indicates that a man has a substantial sum of financial means available to him with no known legal source by which he can account for it.

I think this would be quite a thing, because it would differentiate a great many of these people from the beginner or the unorganized criminal who flows through the courts in far greater number than these people do, and who properly, I think, should be treated on a very different basis.

The CHAIRMAN. You would have to establish some way. You would have to have some formula, some criteria to establish the fact that they were professional racketeers.

Mr. EDWARDS. Multiple conviction, Senator—the times of crimes—because these folks deal in specific types of racketeering; income which cannot legally be accounted for. These are at least three areas in which presentence reports could bring before the judge a considerable amount of information upon which he could base the finding that this was a racketeer whom he was sentencing.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Is there anything further?

If not, you may proceed with your statement.

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, I have, in many ways, given you the detail under the next paragraphs on page 4, which is in the record, and I am not going to read that. I think I will turn, if I may, to telling you about one of our top dons. This is Pete Licavoli. In many ways the modern racket situation in Detroit begins with Pete Licavoli's arrival in Detroit.

Pete Licavoli came to Detroit about 1927. He came from St. Louis, Mo. I will remind you that he was one of the persons whom I identified as having been born in the United States, but whose parents were born in this little town of Terrasina, Sicily.

Pete's relationships are interesting and perhaps they ought to be pointed out in the first instance. He lives in one of our wealthy suburbs, Grosse Pointe Park. I am not suggesting that there is anything wrong with that, but I think one really ought to earn the wherewithal to purchase that type of housing by legal means. It doesn't seem that that is an astonishing statement in America, but I am reasonably confident this is not the means by which he has gotten there.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you pardon me for interrupting a moment? Do you have this Licavoli record, Mr. Inspector?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir; we do have.

The CHAIRMAN. If you have it, will you present it and let it be received by the committee and made exhibit No. 22 for reference?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, we will have it before us as you describe the man for the record.

(Document referred to, marked "Exhibit No. 22" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. I thought this should go into the record as an exhibit, at least, as background for your statement.

Mr. EDWARDS. Let's start with the interfamily relationship because this is always interesting. Pete Licavoli's brother, Dominic, is married to Joe Zerilli's daughter Rosalie, so there is a family tie between Zerilli and Licavoli in that fashion.

Jack Lucido, son of Sam Lucido, married Pete's niece, Concetta, who is the daughter of Thomas Yonnie Licavoli. Yonnie Licavoli is Pete's brother, who is serving a life sentence for murder in Ohio, who was recently up for pardon or commutation before the Governor and whom I am glad to say did not receive it.

"Long Joe" Bommarito, who is on that chart at the second level, is a brother-in-law of Pete. Long Joe married Pete's sister Mamie and Pete married Long Joe's sister Grace, so that the Bommarito and the Licavoli combine, as well as the Zerilli combine, is pulled together pretty well by past origin in Terrasina, Sicily, on the part of the parents, and by these marriages.

Pete first came to Detroit in 1927, and quickly entered into the business of rumrunning. When his brother, Yonnie Thomas was in prison and his brother-in-law Frank Cammarata was in prison, Pete sort of took over a gang which became known as the River Gang. They joined interests with a hoodlum of that period named Joe Mocerì and ultimately gained control of the smuggling of liquor into Detroit's East Side from Canada.

There are interesting newspaper clips from that period which report police arrests of Pete in the early days, actually out in the field with a pair of spyglasses looking at rumrunner boats from Belle Isle, and waiting to signal them when to land.

The West Side faction of this rumrunning operation was headed by Joe Tallman, and Tallman ultimately was suspected of having instigated the arrest and the conviction of Yonnie Licavoli and Frank Cammarata on a concealed weapons charge. The net result of that was that a gang war developed between the East Side and the West Side rumrunning mobs. This particularly broke out over the hijacking of 5,000 gallons of West Side liquor and the kidnaping of a fellow named Abe Rosenberg who was held for 10 days.

The West Side mob discovered where Rosenberg was and they kidnaped the kidnapers, and subsequently Rosenberg sought to implicate Pete Licavoli. A warrant was issued for him, but Rosenberg refused to prosecute and the case was subsequently dismissed.

Shortly after that, Tallman and two of his henchmen were killed.

Pete Licavoli was arrested for this crime but was subsequently discharged.

During Pete's rise to power in the prohibition era, many of the murders attributed to gangland slayings were linked to the Licavoli gang. The top killers were Thomas "Yonnie" Licavoli, presently serving a life sentence for murder in Ohio, Leo Noceri and Cammarata. This gang is believed to be responsible for a considerable number of gangland slayings in that early period, in Michigan, Ohio, and Pennsylvania.

Now, subsequent to this, we begin to see some developments in the gangland war in Detroit which paralleled in time the war which Valachi described here as occurring in New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Edwards, Senator Mundt has to go to the floor. He wants to ask you a question.

Senator MUNDT. You can put this question and your answer in a different position in the record so you will be in context.

426 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

I seem to remember reading when I was a boy something about a Purple Gang in Detroit. Is my memory right and, if it is right, is that what you mean by this same group or is it a different group?

Mr. EDWARDS. No, sir, this group eliminated the Purple Gang. That is a very interesting question, Senator. It is kind of illustrative of something important. The Purple Gang got a lot of copy but didn't have very much power and didn't last very long.

These people in all probability were the winners in the feud. As a matter of fact, the major war was not really between these people and the Purple Gang. They sort of handled them with their left hand, I believe, from a review of the history of that period.

The real war was between a Neapolitan gang and a Sicilian gang in the 1930's, and this again, as I understand it, parallels some nationwide development in that period as has been described to this committee before this.

Senator MUNDT. I do not ask for detail. I wondered if by chance this was the same gang by another name.

Mr. EDWARDS. The Purple Gang was a rum-running outfit which was largely Jewish in membership in the depression period. I think between law enforcement efforts and gangland killings, it died out probably by 1933 or 1934. Maybe it lasted a little longer than that but not much longer than that.

Quite a number ended up in the State penitentiary for a considerable period of time and quite a number ended up dead.

It would not be accurate to take that name and apply it to this group at all.

Senator MUNDT. I appreciate your testimony to my good memory.

Mr. EDWARDS. Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. As I recall, Valachi testified that along about that time there was a gangland war for power all the way across the country between—what was it?—between the Maranzano group and the Masseria group.

Has his testimony in that regard thrown any light upon unsolved crimes committed during that period of time in the Detroit area?

Mr. EDWARDS. No, sir, but what it has done has been to supply a little confirmation of the nature of the warfare that went on in Detroit about which we knew but we knew nothing about the historical national aspects of that war until your hearings started.

The CHAIRMAN. The war actually took place but you did not know the origin of it or the cause of it at that time?

Mr. EDWARDS. We knew about the battles on the Detroit front but we did not know about the front which extended nationally.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not know that?

Mr. EDWARDS. No, sir. To this degree, Valachi's testimony has elucidated a very interesting period of gangland history.

I might say, Senator, in commenting on Valachi that he looks to me like an authentic hood, exactly what he says he is, a hired killer, a professional criminal, and a completely immoral man. But I also think that he seems to have run out of alternatives and in most of the instances, in all of the instances where we can check him out in what we have heard, he seems to have told the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you are able to confirm much of his testimony insofar as it relates to your area?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 427

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir, and also in relation to methods and in relation to operations.

The descriptive relationships he gives of the amount of autonomy and the relationship between the top dons—I don't know what he calls them but what we call the top dons—and the operators in the field is about what we have seen in our surveillances and observations of this operation.

Our District Inspector Piersante has been here all through Valachi's testimony at my instruction and he has reported back to me a good number of instances where there were things developed here which either confirmed or shed light on things which we had been previously aware of or previously interested in.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe this would be a good place in your testimony now for us to recess for the lunch hour.

We will come back at 2:15 today in order to expedite this and, if we can, conclude with the Detroit issue today.

The committee will stand in recess until 2:15.

(Members of the subcommittee present at the time of recess were Senators McClellan and Muskie.)

(The subcommittee reconvened at 2:30 p.m., Senator John L. McClellan, chairman of the subcommittee, presiding.)

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will come to order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of reconvening: Senators McClellan and McIntyre.)

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Judge Edwards, you may proceed.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE C. EDWARDS AND VINCENT W.

PIERSANTE—Resumed

Mr. EDWARDS. Thank you, Senator.

I was in process, Senator, of describing briefly the war—I think that is probably the correct terminology for it—which elevated the current group which we regard as the leaders of the Mafia in Detroit to power, and this actually took place in the period following 1927. We picked the date because that was the date when two particular ones of these hoods arrived in Detroit, Licavoli and "Scarface Joe" Bommarito.

From the time of their arrival, things apparently heated up a good deal more quickly. By 1938, Meli Tocco and Cellura had allied themselves with the East Side Gang. Cellura is now in the penitentiary.

We have not put on our chart people who we hope are filed away permanently from activity, Senator. Cellura would fit in here except for the fact that he is in Marquette Penitentiary and we trust will be there for quite a time.

I will take that back. He got out about a year ago, but apparently has not gone back into the activity which we have defined to him.

Incidentally, Senator, before continuing, might I make one correction which I think is a matter of some moment? Senator Mundt asked me which of these top dons had been the subject of deportation proceedings.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. I named two of them. I was in error. Only one of those was the subject of deportation.

The CHAIRMAN. Which of the two?

Mr. EDWARDS. Angelo Meli was the subject of deportation proceedings which were unsuccessful. I mentioned Joseph Zerilli as the subject of deportation proceedings and I am unable to confirm that that is the fact. I don't think it is. I am sorry to have misspoken myself on that topic.

The West Side group was headed by a man by the name of Chester LeMar, and in May of 1930 Chester LeMar got the idea of apparently taking over. He called for a meeting with Angelo Meli, Tocco, and Cellura, ostensibly to settle their differences amiably.

The scene was a fish market at 2739 Verner Highway on the near East Side. The fish market had been a rendezvous for gang leaders on previous occasions. Meli and the others were a little more clever than apparently LeMar had anticipated and they sent representatives there. One Sam Parino and Gaspere Sibilia, a man who is known in the East Side as the peacemaker. He apparently failed in relation to his title on this occasion, because both Parino and Sibilia were gunned down at the fish market, according to all the records of the time by Joe Amico, Joe Locano, and Benenati Sebastiano, known gunmen of LeMar's gang.

These men, however, were subsequently arrested, were tried, and in that period they were found not guilty. I am not too sure as to whether or not the Texas defense was the essential thing involved in this, Senator, or not. The Texas defense, as I knew it in my boyhood in Texas, was the scoundrel who died should have ought to be killed. I am not competent as to whether or not that was the thing that resulted in that acquittal, but in any event they were acquitted.

The East Side overlords then started in screaming for LeMar's death, and LeMar took off from Detroit and took refuge in New York City and stayed there for some time. After a time, LeMar attempted to come back to Detroit, and he did come back to Detroit after a number of other murders had occurred which had deprived him of much of his strength. Eventually, Chester LeMar, who was the last potent figure in the underworld to really pose a powerful threat against the domination of the underworld by this group, was killed, apparently by his own bodyguards who made a deal, according to the underworld stories of the time, for their own lives with the East Side gang of the Zerillis, Toccas, and the Melis. Amico and Elmer Macklin, the two most trusted gunmen of LeMar, were subsequently arrested and they were tried.

The CHAIRMAN. I noticed in your prepared statement you have some exhibits that probably we haven't put in the record yet. Would you care to go over your prepared statement and select those exhibits that you referred to which have not yet been put into the record? I think we might do that.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir. Let me just add that I believe both of them were also acquitted.

During this period, one of the most famous of the murders in the history of the city of Detroit occurred. This was the murder of Gerald Buckley. He was a crusading radio news commentator who had threatened to reveal the identity of the gangland's overlords and their connections with city government. He was shot to death in the lobby of his hotel on July 23, 1930. Those indicted for this crime were Theodore Pizzino, "Scarface Joe" Bommarito, Angelo Levecchi, and Pete Licavoli. Licavoli fled the State and did not return until the other three had been tried and acquitted.

In each one of these murders which I have referred to, where there were indictments, there were trials and there were acquittals, the prosecution apparently completely disappeared, or lost all of their ability to remember. Interestingly enough, in July of that year "Cockeyed Joe" Catalanotte's home was raided by police officers. They found 54 firearms in that home and among them they identified the murder weapon used in the killing of Gerald Buckley and the murder weapon used in the killing of three other persons who are on our gangland slaying chart.

The CHAIRMAN. How were they identified—by ballistic tests?

Mr. EDWARDS. By ballistic comparison with the bullets which were taken out of the bodies of the deceased victims.

The CHAIRMAN. They were able to establish definitely that these were the murder weapons?

Mr. EDWARDS. That those were the murder weapons.

(At this point Senator Curtis entered the hearing room.)

Mr. EDWARDS. This "Cockeyed Joe" Catalanotte is now on our chart. There is an interesting progression in relation to him. He was ultimately the subject of deportation. Subsequently, he wended his way back to Canada and he is perched in Windsor on the other side of the river from us right now. That deportation didn't help us very much because getting across that river is one of the more simple things in life.

The CHAIRMAN. Has he ever crossed the river and come back into this country that you know of?

Mr. EDWARDS. We were just talking about that at noon today, and from one of our good Federal agents we were receiving information that he thought that he was back in our city from time to time. We will be looking for him.

The CHAIRMAN. Set a steel trap for him.

Mr. EDWARDS. We will be looking for him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Commissioner, you mentioned that you had a gangland chart, gangland slaying chart.

The CHAIRMAN. I wanted to get these exhibits into the record.

Mr. EDWARDS. This is the chart of gangland slayings since 1927, Senator.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is that the chart on the easel here?

Mr. EDWARDS. The chart on the easel also, I believe, which shows the progression—

The CHAIRMAN. Do we have copies of this chart?

I want to keep the record straight.

Mr. EDWARDS. May we offer this in evidence, Senator? This is the writeup of the gangland slayings which have occurred in Detroit between 1927 and to date.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have several pages?

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir; 31 pages.

The CHAIRMAN. Let it be made exhibit No. 23 for reference.

(Document was marked "Exhibit No. 23" and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. This chart, if it can be, will be printed in the record; make it exhibit No. 24 and print it in the record if you can.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Proceed.

Mr. EDWARDS. Still referring in some degree to Pete Licavoli's progress, Pete Licavoli also was indicted for a murder back in the 1930's in the Milford Jones murder and again was arrested and again prosecution failed in relation to him.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe his criminal record has already been made an exhibit.

Mr. EDWARDS. It has not been, Senator, so far as I know.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have it there?

Mr. EDWARDS. I have it here. I will be glad to offer Pete Licavoli's record for an exhibit.

The CHAIRMAN. Off the record a moment.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, if I might, I want to talk about another affair which intimately affects Mr. Licavoli's history in Detroit.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Licavoli is, to our belief and knowledge, very much interested in gambling affairs and acts in some sense as director or overlord over the ones who actually operate on the street.

In this process, Licavoli has working for him a fellow by the name of Maxie Stern.

There were also, in earlier days, two people employed in the gambling rackets in Detroit named Peter Lucido and Sam Scroy.

There were some arguments about the handling of gambling in the Detroit area which resulted in a meeting which we subsequently were told about by Chris Scroy.

At that meeting, designed to settle the problems in relation to gambling involving Lucido and Sam Scroy, there were present Pete Licavoli, Joe "Scarface" Bommarito, Max Stern, Frank Caputo, Sam Lucido, Chris Scroy, and Sam Scroy.

Whatever deal was attempted to be made there apparently was not carried out to the satisfaction of all concerned because not too much later—this meeting incidentally was held in Detroit in December 1947—not too much later Pete Licavoli sent word he wanted to see Sam Scroy and Pete Lucido.

They didn't go see him.

On June 12, 1948, both Sam Scroy and Pete Lucido just plain disappeared.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they still among the missing?

Mr. EDWARDS. One of them is. The other one, some traces of him were found which are very interesting tracings.

Senator CURTIS. Could I ask a question here?

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Senator CURTIS. I was not able to be here this morning, because I had a committee conflict. I want to be straight on one thing. I notice your chart refers to the Mafia organization. Is that synonymous with the Cosa Nostra that the committee has been hearing about or is that the name that is used in the Detroit area?

(153) Fra le pagine 430-431 del documento originale è inserito un grafico che — contrassegnato con la lettera M — è pubblicato, insieme alle altre carte, nella Parte Terza del presente tomo. (N.d.r.)

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, I spoke briefly about this this morning and said that the last thing in the world that I wanted to get seriously involved in was an argument about nomenclature.

As far as I can understand from reading what has been printed, the testimony before your committee, the method, the nature, the operation of what has been referred to here as Cosa Nostra is identical with the method, the nature, the operation of what we term the "Mafia."

Senator CURTIS. And, generally, the requirements for admission and manner of initiation, and so on, are similar?

Mr. EDWARDS. Well, we have heard many things about the form of initiation but not in such form as direct as that which has been presented to this committee and I have tried not to report anything which we were not prepared to confirm.

We would not be, in the slightest, surprised at the form of initiation which was described here, but we, unfortunately, do not have in our possession someone who could testify directly.

Senator CURTIS. I won't further distract your line of testimony, but just one thing, and do not elaborate on it, just mention it briefly. Is it your belief and your understanding, based on the knowledge that you have, that there was rather close communication between the groups in New York called Cosa Nostra and the Detroit group?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir; there are many interrelationships of a family variety and many intercommunications, and at least some joint business enterprises.

For example, it is our understanding that the fellow they call Joe Bananas in New York and Pete Licavoli, the person I am talking about, have been for some time business associates in Tucson, Ariz. That is to say, they don't live in Tucson, Ariz., but they have business relationships there.

One of our Detroit top people is related through marriage to the Profacis. I think that there is a marital relationship, which we are going to lay on the record, between the Profacis and the Toccas and Zerillis.

Senator CURTIS. Are all of the same national origin?

Mr. EDWARDS. All of our people on that chart—I will take that "our" out because I really don't want any part of them—but all of them on that chart with the exception of one are either persons who were born in Sicily or persons whose parents or at least one parent was born in Sicily, according to the best of our knowledge.

Senator CURTIS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I won't take any more time at this moment.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Proceed with your testimony.

Mr. EDWARDS. Thank you, Senator.

I was dealing with the disappearance of Sam Scroy and Pete Lucido. Thereafter, Chris Scroy got kind of mad about the fact that his brother had vanished and, after making a number of statements about the matter, Chris Scroy took a gun and undertook to kill Maxie Stern—Maxie Stern being one of Licavoli's henchmen.

He was unsuccessful in that. He hit him a number of times, but he did not kill him. As a matter of fact, Maxie Stern is one of the associates of our organization which we propose to name later on in the hearing, and Chris Scroy was arrested for that and he served—he was sentenced to 7½ to 20 years in the State prison of southern Michigan.

On July 14, 1955, he was paroled. On April 10, 1959, he disappeared.

Now, interestingly enough, at the time he disappeared Peter Licavoli really was in about the best position that a man could be who might conceivably have a motive for doing away with somebody. He was in the Federal penitentiary for income tax evasion. He stayed there for some little time. He was sentenced for income tax evasion for 30 months and served the proper amount of time on that and then was released in the fall of 1960.

There had been a good deal of conversation around and about the Detroit underworld to the effect that Licavoli was all done, that he was going to come back, he was going to be retired from the battle and he was going to live as a pensioner.

Apparently this did not sit very well with Licavoli, because, in the immediate aftermath of his departure from prison, two things happened.

One was a very “highfaluting” wedding which had 2,000 guests at it on September 30, 1960. Pete came out of prison, and the wedding of his daughter and one Anthony Abate occurred. Many people attended this and it was reported prominently in the press and it was well attended by people in Detroit.

It is our judgment that this wedding was designed to say, “Pete still has the money.”

Then another very interesting thing happened, because Chris Scroy turned up. He was found in seven pieces.

The CHAIRMAN. How many?

Mr. EDWARDS. Seven, I believe.

Senator CURTIS. He did not turn up of his own accord?

Mr. EDWARDS. No, sir. He had been killed a substantial period of time before and buried and then, according to the coroner's reports, within 3 weeks of the time that he was found he had been dug up.

We served, in a sense, the police department of the city of Detroit, as agent for the message which, in our opinion, was sought to be conveyed because, although the body had been thoroughly covered with lime, fingerprints were very readily available and so was his belt buckle, for that matter, as I understand it, and we identified the fingerprints as those of Chris Scroy.

As we heard the message circulating in the Detroit underworld, it was not only that “Pete is back with the money but he is also back with the power.” He has been there ever since and he is there right now.

He was one of the participants in the meeting designed to get the numbers business back on an even keel after the Gotham raid.

As a matter of fact, we found a notation that showed that Pete and Tony were the hosts of the affair where Johnny White and his associates met with the top numbers operators of the Mafia to work out the numbers problems and plans for the future and this on December 28 of 1962.

So, if anyone seeks to sell you that the top dons are old prohibition hoodlums who have faded away, allow me to suggest on the record that this simply is not so.

(At this point Senator Mundt entered the hearing room.)

Mr. ADLERMAN. Incidentally, for the record, how do you spell Scroy's name?

Mr. EDWARDS. S-c-r-o-y. Chris, C-h-r-i-s, Chris Scroy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like to introduce into the record at this point the police information available on the other four top dons.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it all in one package?

Mr. EDWARDS. No, sir, they are each individual reports.

The CHAIRMAN. Identify one as you hand it to the clerk.

The committee will receive them and mark them.

Mr. EDWARDS. This is a prison report on "Papa John" Priziola.

The CHAIRMAN. Let it be received and marked "Exhibit No. 25-A."

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 25-A" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. EDWARDS. This is a summarized history of Giuseppe Zerilli, Joe Zerilli.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be received and marked "Exhibit No. 25-B."

(The document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 25-B" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. EDWARDS. This is the summarized history of "Black Bill" Tocco.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be received and marked "Exhibit No. 25-C."

(The document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 25-C" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. EDWARDS. This is the summarized history and record of Angelo Meli.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be made exhibit No. 25-D.

(The document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 25-D" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. EDWARDS. As to all four of these persons, some generalities can be offered.

They were active enough in criminal affairs in the old days to be the subject of numerous arrests. They were rarely convicted.

Incidentally, in one way or another they made an effort to have their arrest records stricken from the record of the Detroit Police Department.

At the request of the committee staff, we have sought to make the arrest records in relation to these as well as all the other persons on the chart complete, although in a good number of instances we had to go to FBI arrest records and newspaper files to complete that record.

The record which we have presented to you is compiled at the committee staff's request in this fashion and not from records which have been kept by the Detroit Police Department after court order had been given to remove them in some cases.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, in order to complete the record for the committee at our request you had to seek them outside the police department through the FBI records or even the newspapers in order to complete the record because some of these records had been suppressed by the courts?

Mr. EDWARDS. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I wonder, Commissioner, you have introduced the charts, I don't think we have explained the chart or the legend attached to it. Perhaps we might do that.

Mr. EDWARDS. I think that we did make some comment on the top Dons and the ruling council. They are, in fact, the people, in our mind, who are the rulers of this organization. They give racket franchises, they settle member disputes, they have the power to mete out discipline and to determine penalties for violation of the Mafia code.

The big men, this is a phrase which we hear used and we determined them administrators or heirs apparent, I think this would be about the executive vice president level in a corporate structure—these are Mafia members of prominence who are most likely to ascend to a position on the ruling council.

They have gained this position through proficient and successful criminal activities through birth or through both. They operate the more lucrative and the more plush Mafia enterprises, legal or illegal, and they act as frontmen for the distribution and investment of Mafia funds.

We are going to give illustrations of this later.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I wonder if we could mention for the record just the names of those who are on the ruling council, according to the chart.

I notice Joseph Zerilli, Peter Licavoli, William Tocco, Angelo Meli, and John Priziola.

Those are the members of the ruling council.

Mr. EDWARDS. Those are members of the ruling council. The people whom we have designated as "the Big Men" are: Michael Rubino, "The Enforcer"; Joseph Massei; Joseph "Scarface Joe" Bommarito; Raffaele Quasarano "Jimmy Q"; Salvatore Lucido, "Sam" Lucido; Santo Perrone, "Cockeye Sam"; Anthony Giacalone, "Tony Jocks"; Dominic P. Corrado, "Fats" Corrado; Michael Polizzi, "Big Mike" and Vincent A. Meli, "Little Vince."

While we are on this perhaps it would be just as well for us to seek to introduce into the record the reports which we have available for your committee on each one of these persons.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, let them be received.

I will receive those in bulk. Make them exhibit No. 26.

(Documents referred to marked "Exhibit No. 26" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. EDWARDS. Would it be appropriate at this point to comment on a couple of these people?

The CHAIRMAN. You may.

Mr. EDWARDS. We will get just a little out of order here.

May I go back, Senator, and pick up one item which I think has some importance?

I wanted to call on District Inspector Piersante, who has headed our criminal intelligence bureau, to establish the blood relationship charts among the top five dons.

The CHAIRMAN. Have we received that chart yet?

Mr. EDWARDS. You have not yet, sir, I don't believe.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you exhibit the chart?

Mr. EDWARDS. Before you take that chart down, may I point out something I meant to point out and forgot about?

You will note back in 1930 there was a top of 17 or 18 gangland killings.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you talking about exhibit No. 24?

Mr. EDWARDS. Exhibit No. 24; yes, sir.

You will see a decrease, in relation to gangland slayings or murders which we understand to be gangland type right down to recent years where they have averaged lately, actually, we know of one in the space of the last 2 years that we could properly ascribe to this category.

But, Senator, one of the interesting things is that these people merchandise their murders better now.

You see, that Scroy murder was a dandy. It did business twice. He disappeared and all the impact of this was felt, and then he reappeared, and all the impact of this was felt.

I am going to illustrate this principle further in relation to the one murder which we had in 1962, because, again, it was merchandised in a way to have the maximum amount of impact. That was what I was talking about.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the one last year?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir; last year.

The CHAIRMAN. Go right ahead and describe it.

Mr. EDWARDS. Should I do that now?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. All right.

Well, last year a young man who was in the rackets, by the name of Ubal Calabresse, had gotten into a certain amount of difficulty. He had been arrested a couple of times and found guilty at least once and, in addition to that, in ways which were quite apparent to the top people in the Mafia, he had made it apparent that he had more money than they thought he should be getting at the level of his operation as assigned to him.

On St. Valentine's Day of 1962, he disappeared. He disappeared after having received a phone call at home and having said in answer to that phone call something to the effect of "You are not going to do what they did over in Chicago."

Then he disappeared, after having told his mother that he was going out to meet one of Capone's men.

The actual quote was "I hope you don't have in mind what happened in Chicago on Saint Valentine's Day, Frank."

This is from his mother's statement to us in the subsequent police investigation.

"I have an appointment with one of Capone's boys."

Prior to this, he had had a bitter argument over employment with one of the Corrados. Anthony Corrado is one of the sons of Pietro Corrado, now deceased, well known in older days as the enforcer.

Pietro Corrado left behind as his two heirs, Anthony, who is not on our chart, and Fats Corrado, Dominic, who is on our chart.

The CHAIRMAN. I regret we will have to recess for a few moments. That signal was for a rollcall vote.

We will be back as soon as we can discharge that duty.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of recess were Senators McClellan, McIntyre, Mundt, and Curtis, at 3:05 p.m.)

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of reconvening after the recess were: Senators McClellan, Curtis, McIntyre, at 3:50 p.m.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

You may proceed, Judge Edwards, from where you concluded a while ago when you were interrupted.

Mr. EDWARDS. Thank you very much, Senator.

As you recall, I was talking about the murder of Ubal Calabrese.

On St. Valentine's Day, he disappeared under the circumstances which I have indicated. He was not found for several days thereafter, and on February 19, the St. Clair Shores Police Department—that is a suburb of Detroit beyond Grosse Pointe—announced that they had found a car parked in a Kroger parking lot. This car was Roy Calabrese's car, and Roy Calabrese was found lying on his back in the trunk of the car with the arms of a coat wrapped around his neck. He had been garrotted to death. Death had occurred approximately 2 hours after he ate dinner at the home of his mother on Valentine's night, February 14.

Some days thereafter there was another episode in this murder of some significance, we feel.

At 2 a.m. on February 21, 1962, Gerlando, owner of Frankie G's bar, discovered a dead pig placed against the rear door of his bar. The pig's front and hind legs were bound with rope and its death had been caused by asphyxiation.

In questioning witnesses, which we have done quite extensively, we have found that the message of the dead pig missed none of the associates of Roy Calabrese, who happened to patronize that particular bar which had been Roy's favorite hangout.

Senator CURTIS. What did the message mean?

Mr. EDWARDS. Squealers die.

The CHAIRMAN. That is pretty emphatic.

May I ask you, how many of those that you show on the chart there—what is the total number you show on the chart?

Mr. EDWARDS. Sixty-three, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. What percentage of those have been arrested for murder, charged with murder?

Mr. EDWARDS. I will ask Inspector Piersante to give you that figure, Senator, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. PIERSANTE. Of the 63 persons on the chart, they have been arrested a total of 785 times with 211 convictions. For the crime of murder, 1 out of every 3 on that chart has been arrested.

The CHAIRMAN. One out of every three have been arrested for murder? What are those figures, again, with respect to the number of arrests?

Mr. PIERSANTE. A total of 785 arrests.

The CHAIRMAN. That is nearly an average of nine each, is it not?

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It averages nine arrests for each one and one out of each three have been arrested for murder?

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And how many convictions altogether?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 437

Mr. PIERSANTE. 211 convictions.

Senator CURTIS. Convictions of murder?

Mr. PIERSANTE. No, sir, these are the total number of convictions on all charges.

Senator CURTIS. Of those that were arrested, how many were indicted or otherwise brought to trial through information?

Mr. PIERSANTE. 211 were convicted. Those persons were definitely brought to trial and convicted. I don't have the figures on the remaining numbers.

Senator CURTIS. The number of arrests would mean all those that were picked up.

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. That would constitute an arrest for the purpose of your statistics.

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. You do not have the figure of how many of them were ever charged?

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, it could be quickly computed but we don't have it at the moment.

Senator CURTIS. How do they raise their big money? Where does it come from?

Mr. EDWARDS. Gambling.

Senator CURTIS. Gambling?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. What form of gambling?

Mr. EDWARDS. Numbers, I would say, and horse bets.

Senator CURTIS. That is off the track?

Mr. EDWARDS. These I would think would be the two big productive sources of money. I would not know and I would not throw any stones at the sort of money they pick up from legitimate business by now, either, which we plan to talk about with you a little later.

Senator CURTIS. That is after they have accumulated capital?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. By horse bets, do you mean bookmaking, not betting at the track?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir; bookies of one sort or another. This is mostly telephone work these days.

Senator CURTIS. I am not praising or defending it, but I want to make it clear in the record that you are not talking about going to the racetrack and engaging in licensed parimutuel.

Mr. EDWARDS. We are talking about off-track betting in this instance, yes, sir. Off-track betting in Michigan is totally illegal.

We do have tracks where there is parimutuel betting.

Senator CURTIS. Without going into detail, does their business domain for gambling of all sorts extend beyond Detroit or is it primarily the Detroit area?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes; it extends beyond Detroit. One of our problems is they pay no attention to boundaries and we have to. It is totally inconsequential to them.

Senator CURTIS. In other words, the numbers racket and the bookie racket in far away places might bring profits into Detroit, you think?

Mr. EDWARDS. Are you thinking, Senator, in terms of in completely different cities, 100 miles away?

438 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator CURTIS. I am talking about the moneymaking of the Mafia in Detroit. Do they make all their money locally or are they spread out?

Mr. EDWARDS. It is our information that their illegal enterprise authority, as far as the mob is concerned, is confined to the general southeastern Michigan area, the area, let's say, of Metropolitan Detroit, not the city of Detroit. But they do have some jurisdiction in relation to operations in Windsor, Canada, as we have indicated on our chart.

Senator CURTIS. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. You may proceed.

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, I would like to have Inspector Piersante go ahead with explanations of the chart and then read and introduce our summaries on the other three classifications on the chart which have not been introduced up to date.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, you may proceed, Inspector.

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, while he is putting that on, could I say this: We have as fine a group of dedicated police officers in our criminal intelligence bureau as I think exists any place in the United States. This is their work product. It couldn't possibly be mine, as you must know. It is the work product of dedicated lifetime police officers who have been following these people for years and years and years, and Inspector Piersante is the head of that division.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, Inspector.

Mr. PIERSANTE. I would like to explain the legend in the upper right-hand corner of the chart.

We have every person on this chart keyed four different ways.

The A's on the chart indicate interfamily relationships. If you will notice there is an A alongside each name.

The B indicates criminal activity relationship which indicates which of these men have operated in a criminal conspiracy together.

C is commercial and financial relationship and D finally is the criminal activities.

You will notice that the red number alongside each name is different and this is the key number for each person.

As an example, Angelo Meli, one of the dons, under A, which is for family relationship, has the number 106. Number 106 is Santo Perrone or "Cockeye Sam." This shows that there is a family relationship between Meli and Perrone, which, in this case, is the marriage between Meli's son and Cockeye Sam's daughter.

Under B and C—B, for instance, under Papa John Priziola, there is a number 69—69, I believe, is Joseph Lobaido. This is a criminal activity relationship which, in this case, was involved in a mutuels numbers conspiracy where these men were in the same conspiracy.

And C is the commercial or financial relationship which gives keys to the different numbers of the different individuals showing that they have interest in the same business.

Under D, the key goes back to the legend, which indicates a type of criminal activity that these persons as individuals participated in.

Papa John Priziola, for instance, is keyed to 1D, and 1D is a suspect in narcotics.

The other numbers go from narcotics suspects, gambling, shylocking, labor racketeering, extortion, down to arson.

I would like at this time, if I could, to introduce the summaries that we have completed that have not been admitted in the record so far for the chiefs and the lieutenants and the section leaders.

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, would it be appropriate if District Inspector Piersante named each one of the persons for the record or is this necessary?

The CHAIRMAN. With the chart, I think we can identify them.

Very well, if he wants to name them again.

Mr. EDWARDS. Quickly, Vince, do the chiefs and lieutenants and just indicate the sort of level of operation which you would find at those particular levels.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, begin with the chiefs.

Mr. PIERSANTE. With the chiefs who are the persons that you can most likely find in the near frontlines of any operation, some of them are legitimate operations and, of course, most of them are illegal operations.

Dominic Corrado, "Sparky," who is mainly in the gambling field. Tony Teramine, alias "Black Tony," a convicted narcotics peddler and currently in gambling.

Peter Vitale, who is in the gambling and legitimate businesses; Joseph Barbara, Jr., who is the son of the host of the Apalachin meeting, who is in legitimate business in our area.

Joseph Mocerl, "Misery," an old bootlegger, gambler, also in legitimate business today.

Joseph Triglia, "The Whip," who has been a narcotics suspect and is in gambling today.

Anthony Cimini, alias "Tony Long," who is a gambling man.

Vito Giacalone, alias "Billy Jack," in gambling, barbudi, handbooks, and brother of Tony Giacalone, who is one of the "big men."

Paul Vitale, brother of Peter Vitale, also in gambling and legitimate businesses, and Joseph Bommarito, alias "Long Joe," brother-in-law of Peter Licavoli, one of the dons who is also in gambling.

At the lieutenant level, we have Frank Meli, brother of Angelo Meli, who is in labor racketeering and other allied rackets.

Benedict Bommarito, alias "Benny," a gambler.

Sam Finazzo, alias "Mr. Jacobs," who has been in gambling, very interested in booking and a close associate of Raffaele Quasarano, one of our "big men."

Dominic Cavataio, who has been in various illegal areas, including counterfeiting, who is now a legitimate businessman and owns a string of cleaning establishments, drycleaning establishments.

Julian Cavataio, his brother, who has been in for burglary and is also allied with Dominic in the cleaning business.

Peter Cavataio, the son of Dominic, who has been in for gambling and assault who is very active in legitimate businesses in the bread industry especially in the lower priced loafs which he imports from Canada.

Salvatore Serra, alias "Sam," another gambling figure well known around the Detroit area.

Sam Caruso, a convicted narcotics peddler who is active in many legitimate businesses in our area.

Eddie Guarella, alias "Brokey," who is a gambler and I don't know of any other thing that he is involved in legitimately.

440 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

At the lieutenant level but in Windsor, Canada, Windsor, Ontario, Canada, we have Onofrio Minaudo, alias "Nono," a noted Detroit resident convicted of labor racketeering, is a murder suspect both in the United States and Italy, and is now a resident of Windsor, Ontario, Canada.

"Cock-Eyed Joe" Catalanotte, a convicted narcotics peddler, probably one of the most vicious characters on this chart, suspected of numerous murders, tried on several occasions for murder in the 1930's, and he has been deported from the United States and is now known to be residing somewhere in Canada.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask, you have referred to "Cock-Eyed" somebody at different times in your testimony today. Is that the same "Cock-Eyed Joe?"

Mr. EDWARDS. That is the same "Cock-Eyed" Joe. You will find he has made several hundred pages in the appellate volumes of the legal tomes of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. I remembered the nickname was referred to several times. I did not see any other listed on here. So this is the "Cock-Eyed Joe" you have been talking about?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. PIERSANTE. That is all for the lieutenants.

The section leaders include actually the men who are most likely to arrest. These are the people who have a small number of men working for them in illegal enterprises and they are the ones we are most likely to catch in some type of gambling or criminal activity.

Under this particular section we have what we refer to as the crewmen. These are the men who work for the section leaders. Many of them—excuse me. Associates. We have a breakdown of the section leader classification that we call associates. These are the non-Sicilian associates of these people who run many of their businesses and some of them are quite influential and have a great deal of influence.

Underneath the associates we have the field men. These are the hooligans for hire, the runners, the errand boys who are trying to make a name for themselves in crime so that maybe they can come up in the hierarchy.

The CHAIRMAN. They are the ones who really carry out the orders?

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, they actually do the chores.

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They are right on the front line operating.

Mr. PIERSANTE. These are the men that get in most of the trouble with law enforcement.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the lowest and they kind of come up from there to rise to the higher positions?

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir. The field men are without any insulation.

The CHAIRMAN. They are exposed.

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further on this score?

Mr. EDWARDS. If we may consider, Senator—

The CHAIRMAN. I guess you should point out if any of those you show on the chart were at Apalachin, the conference up there. Do you recall?

Mr. EDWARDS. Do you want to answer that?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 441

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir. Our information from confidential sources indicate that Joseph Zerilli was within 6 miles of Apalachin at the time it was raided. He was on his way to the meeting but, of course, was a little late and when he found out that there was a little trouble, he just turned around and went back.

The CHAIRMAN. He didn't quite make it?

Mr. PIERSANTE. He didn't quite make it.

Senator CURTIS. This morning my colleague, Senator Javits, asked about Joseph Barbara, Jr.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, Senator.

Senator CURTIS. That was in connection with Apalachin, or some similar connection, and it was indicated that the information would come out at a subsequent place. Is this the proper place?

Mr. EDWARDS. I would be glad if we could at this point call on Inspector Miller. I have demoted him several times here today. Maybe I better get them back in the right order. This is District Inspector Piersante. He has general supervision of our CIB, but this is Inspector Miller, who has charge of our CIB. Inspector Miller has a writeup on Joseph Barbara, Jr., current business activity which he would be glad to present.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you solemnly swear the evidence you are about to give before this Senate Subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. MILLER. I do.

TESTIMONY OF EARL C. MILLER

The CHAIRMAN. Identify yourself and proceed.

Mr. MILLER. My name is Earl C. Miller. I am an inspector in charge of the Criminal Intelligence Bureau at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Of Detroit?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. I believe the original question, too, related to Barbara's father. So if you have anything on both of them, we would appreciate it.

The CHAIRMAN. His father is dead now.

Mr. EDWARDS. What we are prepared to show you, Senator, is how they take care of the sons of the deceased chieftains after the deceased chieftains are deceased. That is what this story will illustrate.

The CHAIRMAN. This will illustrate it, how they have taken care of this one in Chicago, the boy of the one who was the host of the meeting in Apalachin?

Mr. MILLER. Actually, this is an excerpt of the explanation of the legitimate business chart. It has to do with Joseph Barbara, Jr.

We describe the effect of a super sales force in a business in Detroit which involves Joseph Barbara, Jr. And we say that on a much larger scale, the history of the Tri-County Sanitation Co. illustrates the effectiveness of a super sales force, Tri-County Sanitation, a subsidiary of the Tri-County Sanitation Co., Inc., in New York City, in March of 1960.

Secretary and treasurer of that corporation, and the resident agent of the company in Detroit is Joseph Barbara, Jr. He is No. 25 in our organizational chart. Joseph Barbara, Jr., is the son of the host of the Apalachin meeting. Young Barbara married the daughter of Detroit Peter Vitale, No. 23 on our chart. Barbara, his father-in-law Peter Vitale, and Peter's brother Paul, No. 24 on the chart, in February of 1962 incorporated the Tri-County Leasing Co. to do business leasing motorized equipment to the Tri-County Sanitation.

Senator CURTIS. Where did all of this take place? What city?

Mr. MILLER. In Detroit, Mich.

The new corporation purchased the most modern rubbish-collecting equipment available and the Tri-County Sanitation Co. launched itself into the highly competitive commercial refuse-hauling business in the city of Detroit. Its competitors were companies of long standing who could not match them in the area of equipment. These units are reported to cost upward of $20,000 each and, because of hydraulic packing facilities, will haul at least twice as much as the average truck owned by its competitors.

The use of such equipment also reduces the number of laborers required. It is reasonable to believe that for any new company to equip itself with highly expensive mobile units and enter into a well established, highly competitive industry, it must have had some assurance of success.

Association of the people involved in this company with other high-ranking Mafiosa in the Detroit business and union field could have afforded them some of the needed assurance. Almost immediately Tri-County Sanitation became big business. It was noticed that Tri-County took over several of the most lucrative contracts of its largest competitor. One of the company's truckdrivers was interviewed by members of the criminal intelligence bureau in Detroit and stated that, although he worked a considerably greater number of hours, his paycheck amounted to approximately $40 a week less than a driver for a competitor. The reason for this was that Tri-County Sanitation drivers had not been organized by the Teamsters Union.

The CHAIRMAN. How long ago was that?

Mr. MILLER. Just about a year, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. About a year ago they hadn't been organized?

Mr. MILLER. That is right, sir.

As recently as Monday, September 25, 1963, Tri-County still had no contract with the Teamsters Union for its 40 employees.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean right there at the home of the Teamster president, the international president, this company is operating prosperously?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And they have this connection with this gang of hoodlums you show here on the chart?

Mr. MILLER. I think I will divulge that connection that we believe exists there, Senator.

Senator CURTIS. Is it an indictment of somebody if they do not join the Teamsters Union?

Mr. MILLER. I beg your pardon?

Senator CURTIS. Is it an indictment of an employee that he does not join the Teamsters Union or any other union?

Mr. MILLER. No, sir; it is not.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 443

Senator CURTIS. Is it an indictment of the employer if he chooses to employ people who are not union members?

Mr. MILLER. I do not consider it so.

The CHAIRMAN. What I was trying to understand was how this thing could thrive out there without some effort to organize it. There must be some insulation there. That is what I am trying to find out. You are talking about insulation. Go ahead.

Mr. MILLER. This is the point, I think, Senator: Fundamentally, the basis for bidding on rubbish collection——

The CHAIRMAN. It is there under the jurisdiction of Hoffa's own local, it is not?

Mr. MILLER. That is correct, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. MILLER. The basis for bidding on rubbish collection contracts would be the labor cost and the transportation and disposal of the refuse. Private dumps are distant and therefore expensive in terms of gasoline and time. Municipally operated dumps inside our community are a decided advantage. Inadvertently and regrettably in a sense, investigative work of members of my own unit of the Detroit Police Department resulted in increased business for Tri-County Sanitation. This came when, in July of 1962, 29 employees of the department of public works and 8 rubbish-hauling companies were indicted for defrauding the city of legal dumping fees at city incinerators. This was effected by the rubbish companies paying the department of public works employees bribes to cheat on the weight and volume of the rubbish dumped.

Senator CURTIS. Who were those companies?

Mr. MILLER. I can name them for you with just a little research, Senator.

Senator CURTIS. I think you should.

Mr. EDWARDS. There were probably a dozen or better.

Mr. MILLER. The Reitzloff Co. was one.

The CHAIRMAN. Name some that you remember and then supply a list for the record at this point.

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. It would place rather a cloud on everybody who is in the garbage business in your area unless they are named.

Mr. EDWARDS. They have been named, Senator, and they have been tried.

Senator CURTIS. But they have not been named here.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir; that is true. We will be glad to get the information.

The CHAIRMAN. Supply them for the record. Name any you can at the moment that you recall.

Mr. MILLER. One that comes quickly to my mind is Reitzloff Co., Tri-County's largest competitor. There were a total of eight, I believe, altogether. I will submit the names.

(The list of names was subsequently received and is as follows:)

444 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICSLIST OF NONCITY EMPLOYEES AND TRUCKING COMPANIES CONVICTED OF BRIBING EMPLOYEES OF CITY OF DETROIT

ALL DEFENDANTS PLED GUILTY APRIL 4, 1963

Sydney T. Eder (W/47), of 444 Bryn Mawr Road, Birmingham, Mich. Owner of Variety Trucking Co., 18450 Livernois, Detroit. Pled guilty to third count—bribing employees of the city of Detroit.

Marvin B. Hyman (W/37), 20500 Strathmoor, Detroit, Michigan. Owner of Michigan Business Hauling, 20500 Strathmoor, Detroit. Pled guilty to third count—bribing employees of city of Detroit.

Lester Kull, Jr. (W/31), 24981 Ward, Taylor, Mich. Owner of Les's Trucking, 2635 Wabash. Pled guilty to third count—bribery of employees of city of Detroit.

Arnold Reitzloff, Jr. (W/38), of 20038 Dean, St. Clair Shores, Mich.; and Richard Reitzloff (W/38), of 19813 Avalon, St. Clair Shores, Mich.

Coowners of A. N. Reitzloff Corp., 12001 Mack, Detroit. Pled guilty to third count—bribery of employees of city of Detroit.

Fred J. Roulo (W/61), of 2649 Roulo, Dearborn, Mich. Owner of Roulo Trucking Co., 2649 Roulo, Dearborn, Mich. Pled guilty to third count—bribery of employees of city of Detroit.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MILLER. Tri-County Sanitation trucks were observed by surveilling officers engaging in this same operation, that is, paying the bribe, or apparently paying the bribes. However, they were new enough in the business that they had dealt with only a few of the department of public works employees, none of whom were willing to testify against Tri-County Sanitation.

When the city ordered the private rubbish haulers barred from city incinerators pending the outcome of the court case, their business was hampered to such an extent that Tri-County, for whom a warrant could not be issued, and therefore having the advantage of in-city disposal, thrived on their competitors' misfortune.

Legitimate industry, fearful of adverse publicity, marked the contracts they held with the offending rubbish companies for cancellation. Tri-County was further benefited by being able to use the facilities of the municipal incinerator of a nearby suburb, where a Licavoli henchman had and has the unique position of being able to grant or refuse use of this incinerator to private haulers.

It seems to us that Barbara and the Vitales are either tremendously astute businessmen or their family relationships and associations with supersalesmen, such as Licavoli, Zerillis, Corrados, the Melis, William Buffalino, and others, helped them in areas in which competitors could not rate so highly.

That is my report.

Mr. EDWARDS. This is the report which we indicated would be made on the business relationship of Joseph Barbara, Jr., as we know it.

The CHAIRMAN. It indicates the boy is doing pretty well.

Mr. EDWARDS. At the present writing, Senator, I think that is a fair statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Senator CURTIS. Did this concern have anything to do with the charges brought against their competitors?

Mr. EDWARDS. No, sir. Do you mean did they originate them?

Senator CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. No, sir. As a matter of fact, they were under very rigorous investigation. We just didn't get enough to indict them.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator McIntyre?

Senator McINTYRE. That was the question I was going to ask. I wondered if by any astuteness of the Tri-County they had led you into discovering the malfeasance that was going on.

Mr. EDWARDS. They had just gotten started, really, and had not built enough of a record for us to dig back and prove it without any question of a doubt. They hadn't dealt with enough people there and those they had dealt with were scared of them. The net result was that we didn't get anything.

The CHAIRMAN. When was this company organized?

Mr. EDWARDS. Not very much before that.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the year that they started in business?

Mr. MILLER. In February of 1962.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a little more than a year ago.

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, there is a lesson involved in this that perhaps should be stated. Vigorous police enforcement ends up convicting the least effective criminals first. This is inevitable. The net result is that many of those who are not among the most effective tend to make common cause with the most effective criminal elements, which is this thing we have been talking about here. This is a part of the total, overall problem of law enforcement.

Now, might we introduce at this time the charts which help to indicate the operations of these men?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Before that, could I just ask one question?

You mention that the Tri-County was not organized by the Teamsters Union.

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did they generally organize the garbage collectors in Detroit?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Are the other companies, their competitors, organized?

Mr. MILLER. They are.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So they are the exception to the rule. In other words, they are not organized, their competitors are organized?

Mr. MILLER. That is correct, sir.

Senator CURTIS. Why is that?

Mr. MILLER. Senator, I can only speculate as to why they are not.

Senator CURTIS. I just thought maybe you knew.

Mr. EDWARDS. No, sir, I don't think we can say we know.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Proceed with the next.

Mr. EDWARDS. If it is permissible, Senator, I would like to call on District Inspector Piersante to explain the chart on the narcotics operation.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. We have a chart on that.

Will you now present a chart on narcotics operation?

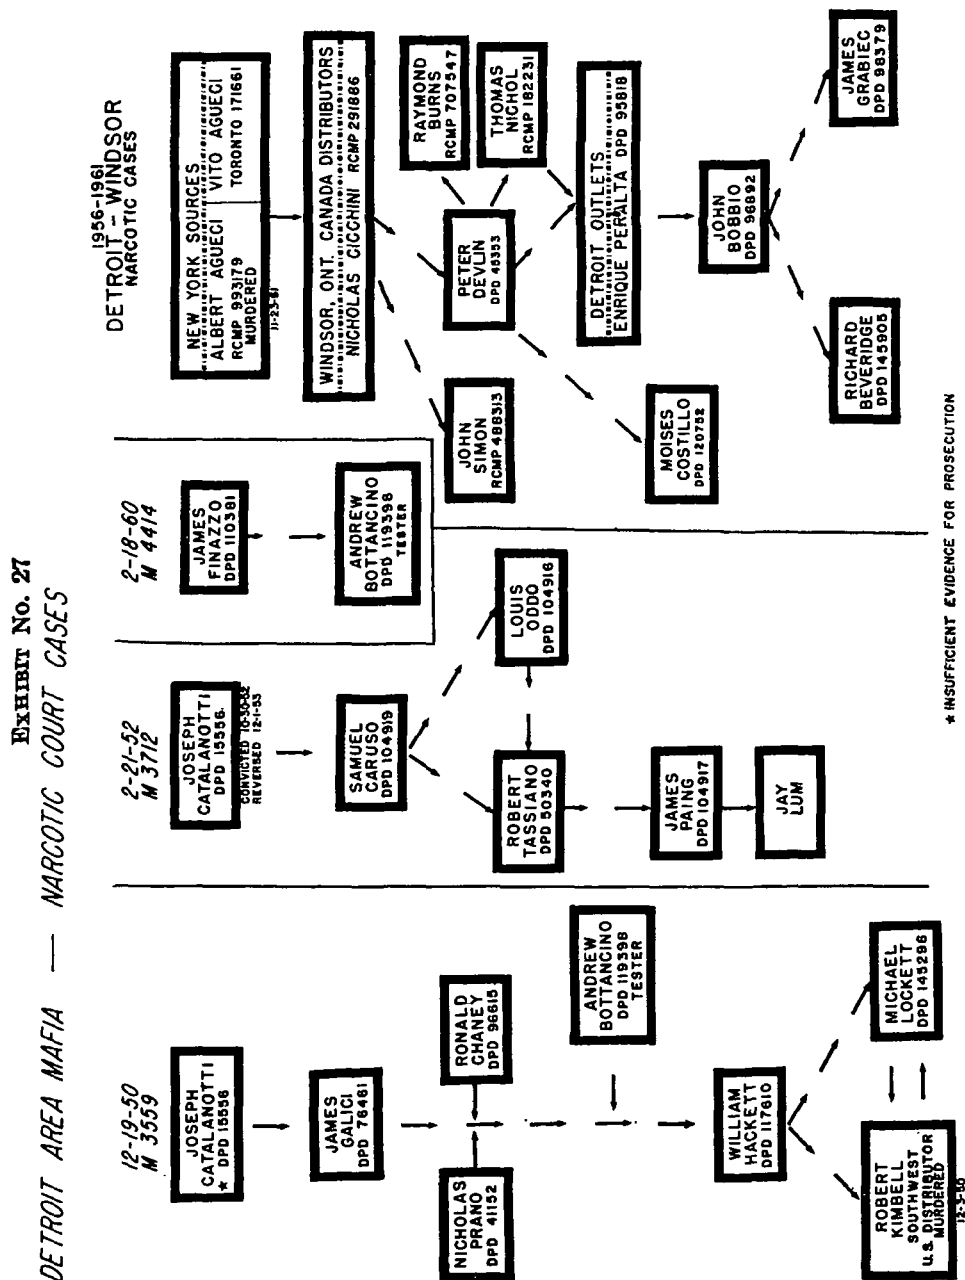

Is that what you are presenting to the committee?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Let it be received and made exhibit No. 27 and also be printed in the record.

(The chart referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 27" for reference and follows:)

446 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. All right. You may proceed, Inspector.

Mr. PERSANTE. Narcotic enforcement in the Detroit area as depicted in this chart of cases successfully prosecuted against Mafia suspects is the direct result of an excellent enforcement environment created by the best possible cooperation and liaison between the Detroit Police Department, the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Over the years, under the leadership of Detective Inspectors Russell McCarty and Joseph Brown of the Detroit Police Department and District Supervisors Joseph Bell, Irwin Grenfell, and Ross Ellis of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, Detroit has been a tough town for the major narcotics violators.

In 1948, information was developed by the Federal Bureau of Narcotics and the Detroit police that Mafia suspects in the Detroit area were engaged in a large-scale international narcotics ring.

The first crack in the armor was effected in 1950 as shown in the first part of the chart at the left when information elicited from a convicted burglar dope peddler revealed that certain Mafia suspects were distributing heroin to major violators in the other cities. One of them was alleged to be "Texas Bob" from San Antonio, Tex. He was transporting marihuana in 125-pound lots to Detroit and sold narcotics to Michael Lockett, at the bottom of the chart, who in turn made arrangements for him to purchase high-grade heroin from James Galici, who is near the top of the chart, there.

The investigation showed that James Galici, Vito Prano, alias "Nick," of Detroit, Ronald Chaney of Chicago, Ill., were among the main figures in the organization and they were dealing in kilogram lots of heroin supplied by a mysterious figure alleged to be a top Mafia known only as "The Old Man."

In October 1950, the office of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics in San Antonio, Tex., made a heroin sale case on one Robert Kimbell, who is near the bottom of the chart, who was identified as "Texas Bob."

Kimbell agreed to cooperate with the Federal Bureau of Narcotics and Narcotics Agent George Bell, now District Supervisor Bell in charge of the New York office, accompanied Kimbell to Detroit, Mich., New York City, and Chicago, Ill., where they were able to purchase illicit narcotic drugs from Mafia suspects in all three cities.

In Detroit, Bell made a sample purchase of heroin from Raymond Carmillo, and was successful in making large purchases from Prano and Galici.

On the occasion of the larger purchases, a portion of each delivery was taken to the residence of Michael Lockett, where it was tested by a known addict, Andrew Bottancino, to determine the purity of the drug.

This was the usual procedure as Bottancino was trusted by both the seller and the buyer.

Subsequent attempts were made to make purchases of heroin in kilogram lots. However, it developed that there was a serious shortage of high grade heroin in the Detroit area and efforts of conspirators to obtain a delivery from New York City were unsuccessful.

In order to keep their customers happy, the conspirators made arrangements for a purchase of heroin from William Hackett, alias "Jeep" of Detroit, a known narcotics violator who was occasionally in possession of large quantities of heroin.

The efforts to obtain large lots of heroin continued but without success.

However, the investigation did identify "The Old Man" as Joseph "Cockeyed Joe" Catalanotte, a ranking Mafia with a reputation for viciousness.

He is on our chart in the Windsor, Ontario, segment.

On December 3, 1950, at 1:30 a.m., Robert Kimbell, alias "Texas Bob," was shot to death in front of the Town Club, a liquor and gambling establishment in San Antonio, Tex.

Kimbell was killed by Jack Hanratty, who was his partner in the ownership of the club.

Hanratty was never charged with the murder. The grand jury investigating the case returned a verdict of "no bill."

Senator CURTIS. Where did that happen?

Mr. PIERSANTE. San Antonio, Tex.

Senator MCINTYRE. How can you say they murdered him if they did not return any bill? There was not sufficient legal evidence. You just indicated he was killed by his partner.

Mr. PIERSANTE. He was killed by his partner in an argument over the split of the proceeds, actually.

Senator MCINTYRE. You mean there was a good defense to the charge?

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir.

Senator MCINTYRE. I see.

Mr. PIERSANTE. On December 19, 1950, Galici, Prano, Bottancino, Hackett, and Lockett were arrested for conspiracy in the sale and possession of heroin. They were charged in Federal court and were subsequently found guilty.

The next opportunity to make a case on these particular suspects was developed in 1951 by Federal Bureau of Narcotics Supervisor Irwin Grenfell, who made undercover purchases of high grade heroin from James Paing in Detroit's Chinatown after gaining an entry through Jay Lum of Lansing, Mich., who believed that Supervisor Grenfell was an out-of-town peddler looking for a good source of supply.

Six undercover purchases of heroin were made between December 4, 1951, and February 21, 1952, from Paing.

The accompanying surveillance and investigation under the leadership of Narcotics Agent Philip Smith, who is now a district supervisor in Baltimore, Md., showed that Paing usually called Sam Caruso, in the upper part of our chart and was also on our organization chart, upon receiving an order for heroin.

Caruso, in turn, would contact Louis Oddo, who maintained a cache of illicit drugs, and made arrangements for delivery to be made to Robert Tassiano, a Detroit gas station owner, who completed the transaction by turning the heroin over to Paing.

Immediately upon the consummation of the sale, Caruso would appear in Tassiano's gas station to collect the money he had received from Paing.

Caruso's meetings with Catalanotti were not so obvious and sometimes did not take place until several days after the transaction.

On February 21, 1952, all of the conspirators were arrested and charged in Federal court for violating the U.S. narcotics laws. They were all found guilty and subsequently sentenced.

Catalanotti's sentence was reversed some time later.

After his release, he was taken into custody by Immigration and Naturalization agents and ordered deported on August 11, 1953. He was released on bond and was not actually deported until September 6, 1957, when he voluntarily left the United States 5 days ahead of the official deportation date.

Catalanotti later turned up in Cuba during the tail end of the Battista regime along with Frank Cammarata and "Nono" Minaudo.

On November 10, 1958, he made an attempt to reenter the United States, was caught in New York and sent back to Mexico.

On May 15, 1958—

Senator CURTIS. Was there any connection between this character and Battista?

Mr. PIERSANTE. No, sir; we were never able to establish a connection between Battista or any one in the Battista regime.

Senator CURTIS. What was the reference to Battista?

Mr. PIERSANTE. The reference to Catalanotti being in Cuba, Senator?

Senator CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. PIERSANTE. Well, Catalanotti, Nono Minaudo and Frank Cammarata were all deported as Mafia suspects from the Detroit and Ohio area.

It appears at that time that Cuba was a haven for these deported criminals.

On May 15, 1958, Catalanotti was legally admitted into Canada on a temporary visa where he resided with his daughter and his wife in Windsor, Ontario, just across the river from Detroit.

At the present time, Catalanotti is wanted on open warrant in Canada because his visa has expired and he is considered an undesirable alien. His exact whereabouts are unknown at this time.

The third conspiracy on the chart again involves Andrew Bottancino, who was arrested and convicted in the first case depicted on the chart.

In May of 1959, information was developed that Bottancino was looking for someone to purchase 2 kilograms of pure heroin for $3,600 each. Arrangements were made by the officers and agents to have an undercover narcotics agent making sample purchase of the illicit drug from Bottancino.

On May 28, 1959, Bottancino delivered a sample of heroin to the agent.

The accompanying surveillance revealed that he had been driven to the scene of the meeting by Vincent James Finazzo, son of Sam Finazzo, both of whom are on our organization chart.

The sample purchase was analyzed by U.S. chemists and determined to be 815 percent heroin hydrochloride, which is almost the top purity for the drug.

Attempts to complete the transaction for the 2 kilograms of heroin failed and Bottancino was arrested on June 9, 1959.

Information developed after his arrest revealed the following facts:

First. The asking price for the heroin should have been $7,200 per kilogram instead of $3,600. This was a mistake that Bottancino had made.

Second. James Finazzo was aware of the fact that the heroin had a high degree of purity.

450 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Third. He was extremely careful of bungling the transaction.

Fourth. He had decided not to complete it when the arrangements went awry.

Efforts were continued in an attempt to purchase the 2 kilograms without any success and on February 18, 1960, Finazzo was arrested and charged with the unlawful transportation of heroin.

He was convicted on May 4, 1960, and sentenced to serve 5 years in prison but, because of several appeals, he did not start to serve his prison sentence until January 8, 1962.

He is currently in prison.

The remaining part of the chart shows three different cases, all leading into the same source of supply, Nicholas Cicchini of Windsor, Ontario, Canada.

Cicchini was a bakery manager from 1953 to 1959 for the late Pietro Corrado, an associate of "Nono" Dominick and Anthony Corrado and Pete Cavataio.

In March of 1956, Moises Costillo was arrested in Detroit, Mich., in possession of heroin at the exit of the Detroit-Windsor Tunnel.

The subsequent investigation led to a purchase of the drug from Peter Devlin, alias "Pat," in Windsor by an undercover officer.

After Devlin's arrest, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police investigated a cache of 20 ounces of pure heroin. Devlin was sent to prison for a period of 4 years on this charge.

Continuing this same investigation, in July of 1960, heroin purchases were successfully completed from a John Bobbio, Richard Beveridge, and James Grabiec in Detroit, Mich.

The investigation also showed that Enrique Peralta was a supplier with a source in Windsor, Ontario.

Investigation continued until November of 1960 developing cases against Raymond Barnes and Thomas Nichol in Windsor.

Peter Devlin was out of prison at this time and was engineering transactions but insufficient evidence was gathered to charge him on this occasion.

Bobbio, Grabiec, and Beveridge were arrested and charged in State court in Detroit, subsequently found guilty and sentenced to prison. Burns was charged in Canada and sent to the penitentiary in Kingston after conviction.

The investigation continued and, in April 1961, an undercover agent was able to make a purchase of heroin from John Simons in Windsor.

This agent was eventually introduced to Nicolas Cicchini for one-half of a kilogram purchase of heroin.

During the negotiations, for additional purchase of kilo lots of heroin, Cicchini offered to sell the undercover agent $100,000 worth of counterfeit U.S. $50 bills and he even supplied two sample counterfeit bills to prove that he could provide it.

All negotiations ceased, however, when Cicchini informed the agent that his source of supply had been arrested in New York City. This source was identified as Albert Invito Agueci, Toronto, Ontario, and New York, N.Y.

The CHAIRMAN. I think we have had his name before.

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, sir; he is the one Valachi testified he met in prison and caused his trouble. Cicchini and Simon were arrested and charged in Canada, found guilty, and are currently in prison.

Albert Agueci, who was the source of supply for Cicchini, was also arrested in a case that had been made out of New York and Toronto. He disappeared on October 8, 1961, when he ostensibly was on his way to New York for the trial. He was not heard of again until his body, crushed and burned, was found in McComb County, Rochester, N.Y., on November 23, 1961.

Mr. EDWARDS. Thank you, Senator.

At this time I would like to call on another one of our officers who deals with the offense in Michigan law cases of prostitution. Sgt. William DePugh, of our vice squad, will present a chart that has to do with this.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you solemnly swear the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Sergeant DePUGH. I do.

TESTIMONY OF SGT. WILLIAM J. DePUGH

The CHAIRMAN. Identify yourself for the record, please.

Sergeant DePUGH. I am William J. DePugh.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your present position?

Sergeant DePUGH. Sergeant, Detroit Police Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Proceed.

Sergeant DePUGH. The four hotels shown on this chart, the Lester, Paris No. 3—

The CHAIRMAN. Let this chart be made exhibit No. 28 and printed in the record, if it can be printed.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 28" for reference and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 28
PROSTITUTION

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Sergeant DEPUGH. The four hotels shown on this chart, the Lester, Paris No. 3, Rex, and Seneca, are licensed and operated by Frank Randazzo. These hotels are known to be centers of large-scale—

Mr. EDWARDS. Might I interpolate? He is one of the persons on our chart, Frank Randazzo.

Sergeant DEPUGH. These hotels are known to be centers of large-scale prostitution and vice activities in the Detroit area. This knowledge is substantiated by several sources. One source is the arrest and padlock records kept by the Detroit Police Department Vice Bureau. The vice arrests shown for each hotel are as follows:

The Lester Hotel, from January 5, 1962, to August 24, 1962, had 18 arrests; the Paris No. 3 Hotel—

Senator CURTIS. What is the first one you mentioned?

Sergeant DEPUGH. The Lester Hotel in Detroit, Mich.

Paris No. 3 Hotel, from September 12, 1959, to January 9, 1963, there were 69 vice arrests.

The Rex Hotel, November 3, 1961, through May 22, 1962, there were five arrests.

The Seneca Hotel, September 6, 1952, to March 15, 1963, there were 95 arrests.

Another source is the observations and investigations made in these areas by experienced officers. Even though these investigations do not always lead to criminal prosecution, they do add to the officers overall knowledge of that which is peculiar to this type of operation.

Through this type of investigation, it was learned that the Seneca Hotel is the focal point and headquarters for the vice activities controlled by Frank Randazzo. It is this location where he can usually be found. It is also significant that this is the most active in his hotels regarding vice activities. It is from this hotel that such personages as Helen "Rocking Chair" McGowan, one of the most notorious madams in the Detroit area, Michael Bartello, blind-pig operator and convicted gambler—

Senator CURTIS. What is a "blind pig" operator?

Sergeant DEPUGH. Illegal whisky sales. Bert Witherspoon, convicted panderer, and Nick DiPaolo, blind-pig operator and convicted panderer, have been arrested.

Another source of information that has been an integral part of the investigation in the overall picture is the confidential informant. These are the bellhops and prostitutes who will frequently disclose the identity and methods of the operators.

It is from these confidential sources that the following was learned in regard to this hotel. For the privilege of bellhopping at one of these hotels, Frank Randazzo is paid $500.

The CHAIRMAN. Is what?

Sergeant DEPUGH. He is paid $500.

The CHAIRMAN. You have to buy you a job there, is that right; is that what you are saying?

Sergeant DEPUGH. Yes, sir. There is a long waiting list.

Senator CURTIS. Do they pay it directly to him?

Sergeant DEPUGH. That is what we have learned from our informants, sir.

Senator CURTIS. I mean, does he physically receive the money or is it handled through some sort of channels?

454 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Sergeant DEPUGH. It is my best experience and recollection, sir, that it is given directly to him in cash. That is the information I have received.

The bellhops are paid $25 a week from hotel accounts which is returned in cash to Frank Randazzo. The bellhops' actual income is derived from extra services, such as selling illegal liquor and supplying prostitutes.

The usual division of profits between the bellhops and the prostitutes is 60 percent for the girl and 40 percent for the bellhop.

In addition to the vice arrests previously stated, several other legal actions have been taken against Frank Randazzo. On February 11, 1958, Frank Randazzo was arrested for attempting to bribe a police officer. This bribery was attempted by Randazzo in connection with the arrest of prostitute Annetta Paula, at the Seneca Hotel. A plea of guilty was accepted by the court in this matter, but at a later date, the plea was withdrawn and a new trial was granted by the court.

He was subsequently found not guilty.

On February 28, 1957, the Seneca Hotel was referred to the Wayne County prosecutor's office for padlock proceedings. This was done by the vice bureau because of the large number of vice arrests at this hotel.

This case was heard on May 10, 1957, by Wayne County Circuit Judge Joseph Moynihan, and a consent decree provided for a permanent injunction and $40 court costs.

On June 7, 1957, when vice arrests continued at this hotel, the Seneca Hotel was again referred to the Wayne County prosecutor's office for padlock proceedings. On October 25, 1957, because of five more arrests, additional information was filed for padlock proceedings.

On February 11, 1958, because of four more arrests, more additional information was filed for padlock proceedings against the Seneca Hotel.

On April 30, 1959, after more arrests, the padlock case was heard by Circuit Court Judge O'Hara. A consent decree provided for a permanent injunction and $40 court costs.

On May 16, 1960, after eight more vice arrests, the Seneca Hotel was again referred to the Wayne County prosecutor's office for padlock proceedings. This case has not been heard as of this date.

The CHAIRMAN. How many times has it been padlocked?

Sergeant DEPUGH. They have had two permanent injunctions against them, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a padlock, I guess.

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, I think the injunction was simply against violating the law. It did not padlock the hotel.

The CHAIRMAN. It did not padlock the hotel? I thought you were talking about padlocks.

Mr. EDWARDS. We asked for padlock proceedings but we didn't get them. We got an injunction against the operator of the hotel for allowing prostitution on the premises.

Senator CURTIS. What kind of a writ did the prosecutor bring? What did he ask for?

Mr. EDWARDS. Petition to abate a nuisance, I believe, would be the terminology in our circuit court, Senator Curtis.

Senator CURTIS. I mean who reduced it from a padlock proceeding to an injunction, the prosecutor or the trial judge?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 455

Mr. EDWARDS. This would show that this was done by consent of the parties before the trial judge, which would involve the prosecutor in the consent.

Senator CURTIS. The prosecutor and whom?

Mr. EDWARDS. This record indicates that this was done by consent decree, which would mean that the prosecutor agreed to the injunction in that form, as I understand it.

Senator CURTIS. But my question is: Did the judge have before him a request for a padlock proceeding?

Sergeant DePUGH. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. He did?

Sergeant DePUGH. That is the standard form that is made out and presented to the Wayne County prosecutor's office.

Senator CURTIS. Then upon whom is the responsibility of not padlocking, the prosecutor or the judge? If a prosecutor comes in and charges somebody with a misdemeanor, the judge cannot find him guilty of a felony. But if he charges someone with a felony and the court reduces the charge, the court in many instances may have reason to, but at least the court is responsible for its acts.

Now, what happened?

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, I am not sure that we can answer this question with fairness, and I don't want to answer it if we can't answer it with fairness. We know this from the police point of view and the police records. We have not researched the court records or ascertained the answer to the question which you are posing. We simply know that when we get all through, this is the answer that we got back from the effort which was failed by the police department in the first instance.

Senator CURTIS. Do you know whether or not they proceeded as far as they could with the admissible evidence that they could present, or is it your intention to convey to this committee that there was a lack of proper handling of the matter?

Mr. EDWARDS. Well, if we were to make a complaint at the present rate, I guess it would be that we have not yet managed to get the last of these proceedings actually before the court. While filed and awaiting trial there, it has not been heard. This is due to considerable delay in the circuit court docket in Wayne County.

The CHAIRMAN. If I may ask, how many times have you undertaken to proceed against this hotel?

Sergeant DePUGH. Three times.

The CHAIRMAN. Only three times?

Sergeant DePUGH. Since Frank Randazzo has had it.

The CHAIRMAN. How many times before that? You were reading off awhile ago and it seemed to me it was several times, that you have tried to get some action.

Sergeant DePUGH. Yes, sir; this was February 28, 1957; June 7, 1957; October 25, 1957, additional information was filed.

The CHAIRMAN. Those are three different times in 1957?

Sergeant DePUGH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And how many times since then?

Sergeant DePUGH. February 11, 1958, additional information was filed; April 30, 1959, the case was heard, and another permanent injunction and $40 court costs. Then on May 16—

456 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. $40 court costs is not much penalty for an operation of this kind.

Mr. EDWARDS. We couldn't agree with you more, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Maybe you ought to ask an order to burn it down. That will abate the nuisance.

Sergeant DePUGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDWARDS. I think there is an unfortunate attitude in relation to this particular type of offense, Senator. I don't think people ordinarily recognize that behind this there is something important and something pretty bad, that the offense is pretty bad, itself, to start out with.

The CHAIRMAN. Behind this is the dope racket, the illegal sale of liquor, gambling—about every kind of a racket that you can think of, is there not?

Sergeant DePUGH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It reaches on back and covers a great multitude of racketeering, does it not?

Sergeant DePUGH. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to defend any procedure or condemn any procedure, but I am still not clear whether these cases failed because of the lack of admissible evidence or a lack of vigorous prosecution or laxness on the part of the court.

Mr. EDWARDS. It may have been just the deception on the part of the operator of the hotel, Senator, that he came in and said, "We are not going to do this anymore. We want to run a decent place. We will sign a consent decree that says we sure won't do that anymore," and everybody agreed to it.

Senator CURTIS. Was there any change of management in the hotel during this period?

Sergeant DePUGH. No, sir; in this period Frank Randazzo was the licensee.

Senator CURTIS. He was the defendant?

Sergeant DePUGH. He was the licensee; yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. Was he the defendant in all the actions or did they make his resident manager a defendant?

Sergeant DePUGH. They make the owner of record the defendant, although he appears and represents him.

The CHAIRMAN. Maybe you can give a further answer to that in the morning, if you have any additional information you would like to get up.

Mr. EDWARDS. We will check a little further into it.

The CHAIRMAN. Check a little further into it and you may supply some information in the morning.

Is there anything further this evening?

If not, the committee will stand in recess until 10 o'clock in the morning.

(Members present at time of recess: Senators McClellan, McIntyre, Curtis.)

(At 4:55 p.m. the committee recessed, to reconvene at 10 a.m. the following morning, Friday, October 11, 1963.)

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1963

U.S. SENATE,
OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
Washington, D.C.

The subcommittee met at 10:40 a.m. in the Caucus Room, Old Senate Office Building, pursuant to Senate Resolution 17, agreed to March 14, 1963, Senator John L. McClellan (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat, of Arkansas; Senator Henry M. Jackson, Democrat, of Washington; Senator Thomas J. McIntyre, Democrat, of New Hampshire; Senator Daniel B. Brewster, Democrat, of Maryland; Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, of New York.

Also present: Jerome S. Adlerman, general counsel; Donald F. O'Donnell, chief counsel; Philip W. Morgan, chief counsel to the minority; Paul E. Kamerick, assistant counsel; Harold Ranstad, assistant counsel; Arthur G. Kaplan, assistant counsel; Eugene J. Marshall, Bureau of Narcotics; Martin Pera, Bureau of Narcotics; Ruth Y. Watt, chief clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will come to order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of convening: Senators McClellan and McIntyre.)

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, Mr. Commissioner, you may proceed. I think you have mentioned, and I would like to try to expedite this matter and at the same time make the record as complete as practical, in the course of your testimony thus far, 10 summaries of the chiefs, 11 summaries of the lieutenants, and 18 summaries of the associates.

I wonder if you have those summaries available so that we can make them exhibits?

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE C. EDWARDS AND VINCENT W. PIERSANTE—Resumed

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, Senator; they are available and they are right here. I would now like to tender them to the committee as exhibits in this proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the 10 summaries of chiefs be made exhibit No. 29 in bulk, the 11 summaries of the lieutenants be made exhibit No. 30 in bulk, and the 18 summaries of the associates be made exhibit No. 31 in bulk.

(Documents referred to marked "Exhibit Nos. 29, 30, and 31," for reference, and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. You had some testimony with respect to the summaries of the associates, Mr. Commissioner. Would you proceed with that now, please?

Mr. EDWARDS. Thank you, Senator. We have not presented a chart on the associates. These are non-Sicilian operators who have, throughout the years, maintained a continuing relationship with the Mafia as we know it so that we feel justified in naming them as continuing associates of this conspiracy which we have been describing to you.

I have not presented a chart on this. If it is permissible, Senator, I would like to read the names of the 18 and simply indicate the area of criminal activity in which we know they function.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they all convicted criminals?

Mr. EDWARDS. I believe that all of them are. Every one has been convicted.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. EDWARDS. Art Caplan is the first one. I might say, Senator, that that is spelled with a "C" and not with a "K".

The CHAIRMAN. Who?

Mr. EDWARDS. Art Caplan. It is not your committee investigator, Senator. He spells his name with a "K".

Might I pause simply to record from our department our appreciation for Mr. Kaplan's diligence and assistance to us. This is totally unsolicited, but it is very sincere on our part.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much. Proceed.

Mr. EDWARDS. The Art Caplan who is an associate in the Mafia in Detroit is——

The CHAIRMAN. Give a brief summary of each one.

Mr. EDWARDS (continuing). Is in the numbers racket.

Curtis Chandler, bookmaking.

Dave Feldman, bookmaking.

Edward Holly, numbers.

John Jabour, numbers.

Moses Joseph, numbers.

Louis Koury, numbers.

Phil Peters, numbers.

Charles "Chickie" Sherman, bookmaking.

Odus Tincher, barbuti.

The CHAIRMAN. Yesterday Senator Curtis requested that you submit the names of those garbage companies. You couldn't recall all of them at the time. Are you prepared to give us those now?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, Senator. The rubbish hauling companies indicted for defrauding the city of Detroit last year were A. N. Reitzloff & Co.; Variety Trucking; Lester Trucking; Roulo Trucking; Michigan Business Hauling. I have a list of these if you would like to have it received for the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. It may be received. (See p. 444.)

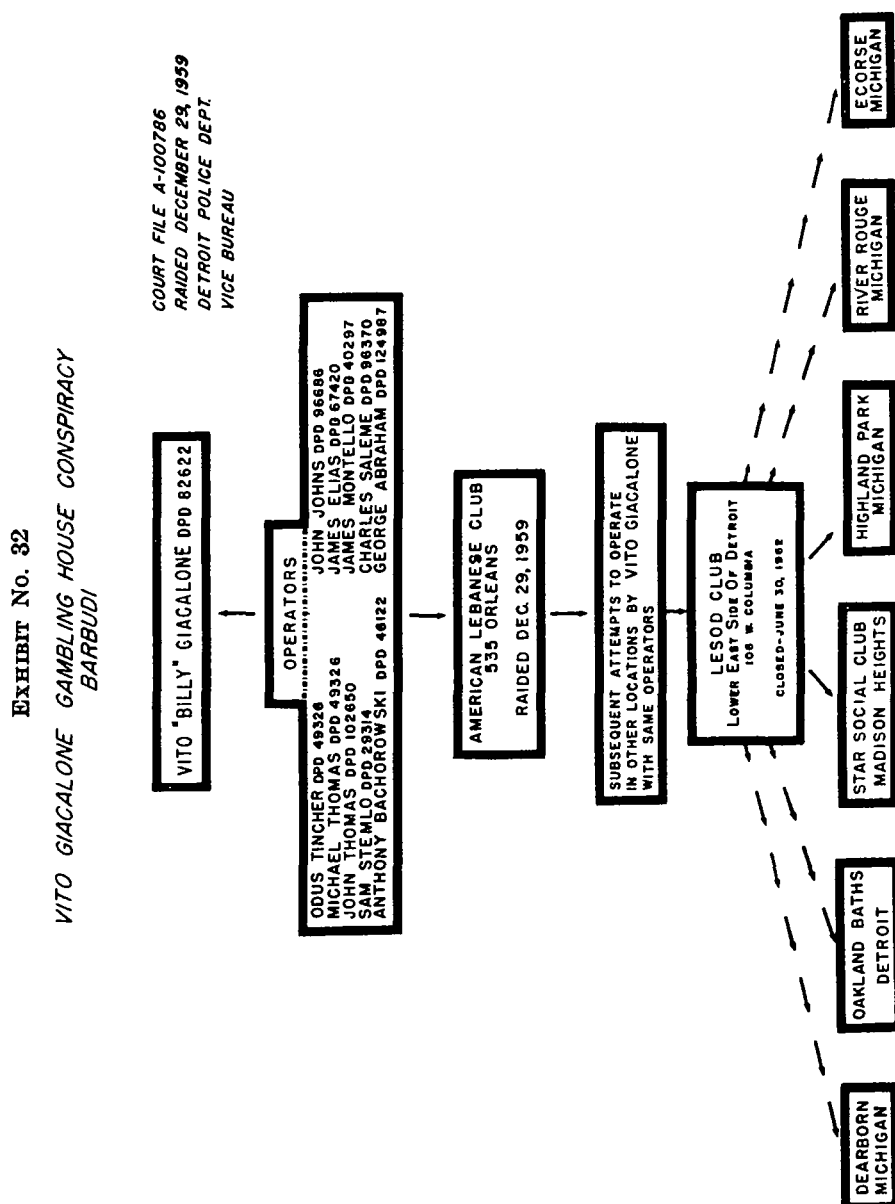

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, yesterday we described in some degree the operation at the Lesod Club and how we chased it out of the city of Detroit.

On the easel there is a chart which describes this operation. If we could have it received as an exhibit, it would be available to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be received as exhibit No. 32 and will be printed in the record if that can be done.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 32" for reference and is as follows:)

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 461

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, we have sought to be meticulous in the identification of any name as being a part of this conspiracy, and as a result, we have sought to document the relationship of each one of these persons to the conspiracy in a particular form.

For that purpose, we have presented charts of conspiracy cases made against these people, arrests made against them, convictions which they have had. I would like now to call on Inspector O'Neill of our vice squad—just a moment. I am sorry. Inspector Sage, District Inspector Sage, who is in charge of our liquor, gambling, and vice operation, to talk briefly about the numbers operation, how it functions, what we do about it, and to present a chart which describes a typical numbers conspiracy.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Inspector Sage, come around, please.

You do solemnly swear the evidence you give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. SAGE. I do.

TESTIMONY OF ARTHUR SAGE

The CHAIRMAN. Identify yourself for the record and state your present position and how long you have held the position.

Mr. SAGE. Arthur Sage, district inspector, Detroit Police Department, supervisor of vice, liquor, and gambling in the city of Detroit.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you been in police work there?

Mr. SAGE. Twenty-six years.

The CHAIRMAN. You have a chart you wish to present?

Mr. SAGE. This chart can be taken as an example of the basic operational structures of the Detroit area mutual combines.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Did you prepare the chart or was it prepared under your supervision?

Mr. SAGE. It was.

The CHAIRMAN. You can verify the accuracy of it?

Mr. SAGE. I can.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The chart will be received as exhibit No. 33. It will be printed in the record, also.

Mr. SAGE. It portrays the following of the betting slips and money from the street pickup men to the head of the operation. It also graphically shows how responsibility is assumed as the bet slips collect and gradually come together at the main tabulating office.

Starting with the people at the extreme bottom of the chart, we see that these people go from house to house, or have customers come to them for the purpose of mutual betting. As the bets in the day are collected from the people on the street, they are carried to the central collecting point known as the substation. After the bet slips are collected at the substation, one of the more trusted employees takes them out and delivers them to the main office for tabulating.

This raid on the organization portrayed on this chart came about when on April 17, 1963, officers of the Special Racket Squad of the Detroit Police Department began investigation of a numbers combine which operated throughout the city of Detroit and the cities of Hamtramck, Pontiac, and New Haven, Mich.

This investigation was continued until November 20. During this period, members of the combine were followed continuously to determine their connection with this group. The investigation revealed that the headman of this numbers house was Joseph Lobaido, No. 69 on our chart.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do I understand that the whole mutual operation is run by one of the members that are shown on your chart as one of the Mafia organization?

Mr. SAGE. That is right, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Underneath him, he has this whole operation?

Mr. SAGE. That is right, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Were you able to get a conviction against him?

Mr. SAGE. We were.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Was it difficult or easy or how did you manage to do that?

Mr. SAGE. Well, the 40 persons arrested on this chart, 38 of them were charged with conspiracy and eventually they were all found guilty.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Have those men on the lowest level ever met or dealt with Lobaido?

Mr. SAGE. They have.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They did?

Mr. SAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. On the lowest level?

Mr. SAGE. These more trusted employees went on through and eventually were found to be conspiring with the main man, Joseph Lobaido.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I mean have they dealt with him personally?

Mr. SAGE. Personally?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SAGE. Not down through these here [indicating].

The CHAIRMAN. When you say "down through these here," it doesn't carry for the record. Identify them.

Mr. SAGE. There would be very few of those, Senator, on the lower level.

Mr. EDWARDS. I don't think that Inspector Sage grasped the nature of your question because Lobaido is not the top man in relation to numbers in the city of Detroit. He is the top man in this particular group in conspiracy.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I want to know how much relationship there was between Lobaido and the people who operated.

The CHAIRMAN. What are those at the bottom? You have a number of people named at the bottom.

Mr. SAGE. These are the pickup people.

The CHAIRMAN. These are the people who deal directly with the patrons?

Mr. SAGE. That is right, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the next row, the next line from the bottom, beginning with what you call "substations"?

Mr. SAGE. These are the substations.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you go from the substations to where?

Mr. SAGE. They go through to the various substations and gradually end up in the main office, which is the tabulating office of the combine.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 463

Mr. ADLERMAN. Let us count how many intervening agencies there are in this operation between the lowest level and the top level there.

Mr. SAGE. You have 1, 2 on this line—1, 2—you have 13.

The CHAIRMAN. What we want to do is to start with the fellow down here who bets this money and trace that dollar up to the man who gets the last cut. Try to do that on your chart.

Mr. SAGE. There are the pickup men starting with this point here.

The CHAIRMAN. They are the men who contact the individual bettor and get his money?

Mr. SAGE. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. They are the runners, so to speak; is that right?

Mr. SAGE. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. What do they do with the money after they get it?

Mr. SAGE. These are turned into this substation here.

The CHAIRMAN. They go to a substation?

Mr. SAGE. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there somebody in charge of that substation?

Mr. SAGE. Lovey Benson is the person in charge of the substation. They pick it up through here, continue on through up into the main office.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, when it gets to the main office, where does it go?

Mr. SAGE. From the main office, it is tabulated there. They tabulate it for the hits—how much money. They make out two tabulating slips, one for the pickup man and one for the main combine, the book-keeper.

The proceeds from there, for that particular day it goes up to Joseph Lobaido.

The CHAIRMAN. The commissioner just pointed out he is not actually the headman of the operation but only in charge of this branch of the operation.

Mr. SAGE. That is right, he is the section leader.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does it go from there?

Mr. EDWARDS. At that point, Senator, I might suggest you start looking at the bottom of the Mafia chart. This is an accurate description of the insulation which you were talking about.

We talked about that word last night and decided that is a real good description.

From the public, the member of the public who places a bet, you have four levels of insulation before you get to the lowest level of the Mafia organization, which we have shown over there on the chart.

In between the section leader, you have lieutenants, chiefs, big men, before you ever get up to the don.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I want to show. The dollar that is bet down here on the numbers goes through all of these hands before the top bosses get their cut.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And all the way up it is cut a bit.

Mr. EDWARDS. That is correct, as we understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The fellow who does the betting winds up with nothing.

464 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. EDWARDS. If he bets twice, his percentage is nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. All right, is there anything further on this?

Thank you very much, Inspector.

Is there anything further you wish to say?

Mr. SAGE. Joseph Lobaido was found guilty and given 3 to 5 years in Jackson Prison.

The CHAIRMAN. How long ago was this conviction?

Mr. SAGE. This was in 1953.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they still operating?

Mr. SAGE. Not Lobaido.

The CHAIRMAN. Is someone taking his place? Is the operation still going on in Detroit?

Mr. SAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, let me talk about that for a minute.

We are seeking to portray how this thing operates. We make no bones about the fact that these people are still trying to operate in our city. But, Senator, they are running scared in the city of Detroit. As a matter of fact, most of their operation has moved out of the city of Detroit and we intend to keep on seeing to it that they run scared in our communities.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Commissioner, I was not questioning that. I am pointing out, I am trying to emphasize the strength of this menace. How difficult it is even where law enforcement officers are diligent, alert and active and persistent, how difficult it is to reach them and to abate this menace. It is a terrific job.

I trust the public might get some impression about this problem.

You are to be commended in places where you are vigilant, where they are doing everything they can.

I think if the public knew more about the seriousness of the problem and the difficulty that is involved in trying to prosecute these folks, to detect their offense and bring them into court and mete out justice to them under the law, if the public knew that maybe you who are faithful in doing your duty would get more cooperation from the public generally.

I am hopeful that that result is a byproduct at least of some of these hearings.

Mr. EDWARDS. We are too, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Mr. SAGE. Senator, since 1940, when the special racket squad and the vice bureau were originated, we have developed and prosecuted 138 cases similar to this with the resulting 2,276 felony arrests, 973 misdemeanor arrests, 1,683 were charged with conspiracy. Of that group, 1,673 were convicted and sentenced.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the total number of arrests, Inspector?

Mr. SAGE. Felony arrests were 2,276.

The CHAIRMAN. How many of those were convicted?

Mr. SAGE. 1,673 were convicted of felony.

The CHAIRMAN. How many misdemeanors?

Mr. SAGE. 973.

The CHAIRMAN. How many of those were convicted?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 465

Mr. SAGE. That was in the same total. There was 1,683 charged with conspiracy and they were sentenced; 1,673 of those were convicted. As to the 973 misdemeanor warrants, the vast majority of those were convicted.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not have the exact number?

Mr. SAGE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Certainly that is indicative of the fact that there is a serious effort being made on the part of law enforcement officials in the city of Detroit to deal with this crime problem, this organized syndicated crime problem.

I think you are to be highly commended for the results you have achieved.

Mr. SAGE. Senator, one other thing. Of these 1,673 who were sentenced, 292 of them went to prison.

The CHAIRMAN. Very good.

Mr. Commissioner, is there anything further you wish to say?

Mr. EDWARDS. Not on this topic, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Senator McIntyre, do you have any questions?

Senator McINTYRE. No question.

Mr. EDWARDS. Our next chart will deal with a typical handbook operation. It will be presented by Inspector O'Neill, who is in direct charge of our vice squad.

The CHAIRMAN. Inspector O'Neill, will you come around, please?

Do you solemnly swear the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. O'NEILL. I do, sir.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN J. O'NEILL

The CHAIRMAN. Be seated. Identify yourself for the record.

Mr. O'NEILL. My name is John J. O'Neill, inspector, Detroit Police Department, in charge of the vice bureau.

Senator, if I may briefly explain the handbook operation in Detroit and then I will go into the chart and explain that briefly, too.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. You do have a chart?

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. This chart was made under your supervision, prepared under your supervision?

Mr. O'NEILL. It was, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you verify it as to accuracy?

Mr. O'NEILL. I do, sir.

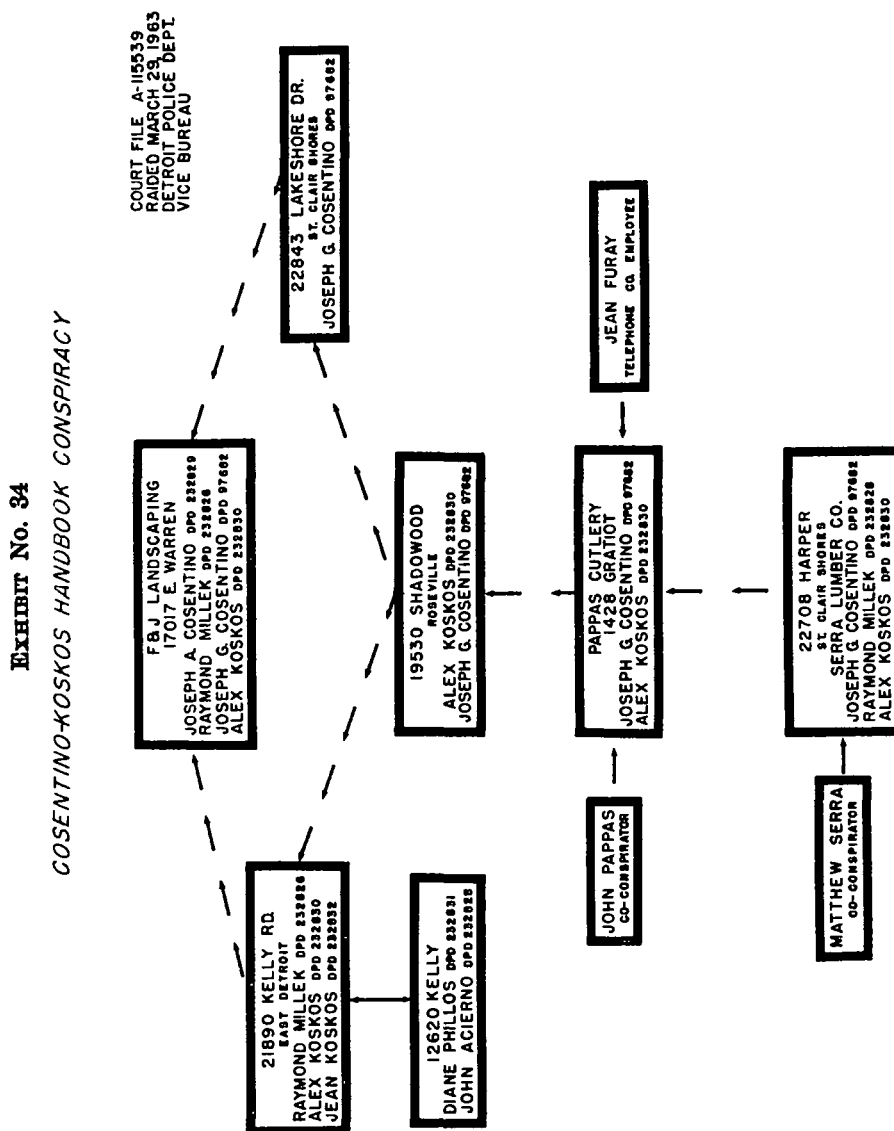

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Mr. O'NEILL. In the Detroit area, we have two types of handbook operations.

The CHAIRMAN. Let this chart be made exhibit No. 34 and printed in the record.

(The chart referred to marked "Exhibit No. 34" for reference is as follows:)

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 467

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. O'NEILL. As I said, we have two types of handbook operations. We have what we describe as the curbstone bookie.

This party is known by the fact he carries around a pocketful of dimes and race sheets. He accepts his bets verbally from his customers at various locations, like barbershops, poolhalls, grocery stores, bars, et cetera.

Then he goes to a local point and phones these bets in.

The CHAIRMAN. How small a bet do they take on a number?

Mr. O'NEILL. Actually, curbstone booking, off track booking, he can take bets as low as 50 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. You are talking about horseraces?

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, horseraces. Now, these men work on a commission basis, commission or percentage basis. They perform their collections in the evening or latter part of the week.

Our second type of bookie is one that barricades himself in a dwelling, it is heavily barricaded. He uses flash papers to record his bets and with just the mere touching of a lighted cigarette to the paper the paper will actually destroy itself. This, of course, is an advantage.

When we raid these premises oftentimes the evidence is actually not there.

Now, he is equipped with telephones and these phones are usually toned down to eliminate noise so that outsiders who might be in the hallway of the apartment building can't hear the constant ring of the telephone. These phones are installed legally by the Bell Telephone System in the Detroit area but to make it advantageous to the actual operators they want additional phones, they might install them at another location within the same building and then at a later hour or later date, the Bell Telephone Co. employees or those who have an actual knowledge of installing phones will reinstall them at the convenience of the handbook operator.

Now, in the Detroit area, we no longer—

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do I understand you correctly that the telephone company, itself, does not become a party to giving a bookie a number of telephones, in other words, if the bookmaker wants 10 telephones or 6 telephones, the telephone company, when it becomes suspicious of that, will not install 6 telephones but he may order 6 telephones in different rooms in the hotel, later on with the connivance of an employee of the company he will move them all in 1 room; is that the idea?

Mr. O'NEILL. That is correct, sir. Actually, the Bell Telephone Co. cooperates 100 percent with the local law enforcement.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So there is some corruption of employees to get the telephones into one room?

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes.

In this present case, I am going to explain on the chart those that are arrested are presently under indictment and we arrested a Bell Telephone employee.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know whether or not they use any device, such as has been described in our hearing previous to this, where they put attachments on a telephone and they get the calls from remote places into one particular—

Mr. O'NEILL. They have what is described as a "cheesebox."

Mr. ADLERMAN. You mean the cheesebox?

468 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. O'NEILL. I am not too familiar with this operation.

Actually, I have not seen one.

In the course of our investigations and arrests during confiscations, we have not confiscated this type of device.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You don't have the cheesebox operating in Detroit?

Mr. O'NEILL. Not to my knowledge, but we do know that it is being installed at locations, but we haven't actually found one in the Detroit area as of yet.

About 3 years ago we formed what is called the handbook squad within the Vice Bureau, itself, and we work primarily on conspiracies, with the idea of making arrests and charging them with a felony rather than a misdemeanor. Our enforcement has been vigorous. We have made considerable numbers of arrests. Prosecution has been good, and we have caused many of our local handbook operators to leave Detroit, itself, and practice in the suburbs.

Another thing, we do not have wire service in the Detroit area. We have what is called a service provided by Station CKLW of Windsor. They transmit the race results of major tracks throughout the country every half hour.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, as I understand it, the wire service is not necessary in Detroit. They can get the results of the race broadcast from Canada?

Mr. O'NEILL. That is true.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is there any restriction in Canadian law against broadcasting race results?

Mr. O'NEILL. None whatsoever.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So they receive the benefit of the race results broadcast from across the boundary line and, therefore, they do not require a wire service?

Mr. O'NEILL. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. One more question. You say you have been successful in obtaining convictions.

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The law, of course, as presently interpreted, prohibits you from wiretapping; is that right?

Mr. O'NEILL. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And where they use the instrumentality of the telephone to accept the bets and they barricade themselves in the room and then they use special, easy burning paper that they buy from special sources that ignites immediately and then destroys itself completely, how do you get convictions?

Mr. O'NEILL. We handle it in this manner, Senator——

Mr. ADLERMAN. I am not a Senator. I am counsel.

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, sir. We conduct surveillance over a period of time upon those that we know are actually engaged in a particular outfit. We follow them. We take them to the locations. We know the actual operating time of a handbook, the normal time that they would enter, the normal time that they would leave in the evening. They ordinarily enter with scratch sheets or thumb sheets, as they are described. That is their equipment to operate.

Many of them are known to us as handbook operators. The fact that they enter and leave the premises daily, six days a week, excluding

Sunday—of course, there is no horse racing on Sunday—it no longer becomes coincidence. With this information gathered over a long period of time, we are successful in obtaining search warrants. We raid the premises.

I will correct myself on one thing. In not all cases do they use flash paper. By the time we do enter the premises, oftentimes we are successful in gathering much of the gambling paraphernalia before it is destroyed.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In those cases where they use flash paper, they destroy the evidence before you get inside?

Mr. O'NEILL. That is true, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. If you had wiretap ability, would you be able to eliminate the off-track betting that is made through telephone wires?

Mr. O'NEILL. I think that the information which would be received by us through the ability to tap wires would help us considerably in eliminating this problem.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have any comment on that?

Mr. EDWARDS. I just want to say one thing, Mr. Adlerman.

We are helped, as all law enforcement officials are, from time to time, by the fact that these fellows make mistakes. And when we chase them hard enough, they make more mistakes. If they followed a perfect pattern 100 percent of the time, we would have much greater difficulty than we do. But they do make mistakes, and we are there to take advantage of them from time to time.

Mr. O'NEILL. I also wanted to add that with this dissemination of news by CKLW, the race results, themselves, this has caused considerable consternation to the syndicate because many people that formerly were not actively engaged in this illegal enterprise eventually set up the handbook business themselves. All they require is a radio that gives results and a clock to accept the bets, to time the bets, so that they are not postdated. They actually set up an operation for themselves.

But seven or eight good bettors will do it. Of course, the syndicate is out then. It has no knowledge of these independent handbook operators.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Do you want to explain your chart? Are you ready to do that?

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, Senator.

On January 4th of this year we had received information that an address at 1428 Gratiot in the city of Detroit was being used as a handbook operation. Sergeant Bernard Mullins of our handbook squad, the gentleman with the pointer, conducted this investigation and a daily surveillance was begun on these individuals. They are Alex Koskos, who lives at 21890 Kelly Road, East Detroit, and Joseph Gabriel Cosentino, white, 45, 22843 Lake Shore Drive, St. Clair Shores.

Incidentally, Joseph Cosentino is a nephew of Joseph Massei who is named on our chart as one of the big men. Joseph Massei now resides in Florida, and among his legitimate enterprises are a meat provision company which supplies hotels in the Miami district with meat, and he also has a barber supply equipment company.

This particular handbook group, through their own efforts and to avoid detection, made several moves during the course of our investigation.

470 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. Did what?

Mr. O'NEILL. Made several moves. They moved to different locations.

The CHAIRMAN. Moved to different locations?

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. O'NEILL. After remaining at 1428 Gratiot they then moved to——

The CHAIRMAN. That is all right. They made several moves, That is enough.

Mr. O'NEILL. They made several moves during the course of the investigation. They were arrested and they are presently being tried, presently under indictment in Detroit. We made these raids with search warrants. During the course of the investigations we observed Dominic "Sparky" Corrado visit the main location. Dominic is listed on our chart as one of the lieutenants.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What number is he on the chart?

Mr. EDWARDS. He is listed as a chief on our chart.

Mr. O'NEILL. Correction. Thank you.

He is listed as one of the chiefs on the chart. We also observed Sam Misaracca, who had a previous arrest as a handbook operator, and is equipped with a gambling stamp, go into this location. Sam Leon, another convicted handbook operator, has also visited this location.

We also had an unidentified man leave this location and go to the home of Tony Teramine, "Black Tony," also listed on our large chart. Tony was previously convicted as a handbook operator in 1945. His present occupation is unknown.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is the typical amount that they cover in an operation of this sort? What is their take on it?

Mr. O'NEILL. Approximately 25 percent.

Mr. ADLERMAN. No, I meant by dollar volume.

Mr. O'NEILL. Well, actually it would be difficult to give an intelligent answer to a handbook operator's receipts because it is all done by telephone, and, actually, in this case here, being presently under indictment, I wouldn't think it would be wise for me to make any suggestion.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Have you any idea of the size of the handle of bookmaking operations in Detroit?

Mr. O'NEILL. That, again, would be difficult to say. I know it is considerable, that it runs into several millions of dollars.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Commissioner, could you tell us whether or not in your opinion the handbook operations are under the control of the people mentioned in your Mafia organization chart?

Mr. EDWARDS. We believe this is the largest continuing criminal conspiracy in our area as we think it is nationally. And that they do have a major part of the operation of any handbooks that successfully do operate in the Detroit area.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Have you found difficulty in tying in the handbook at this level to the extent of getting enough evidence to convict the higher-ups?

Mr. EDWARDS. We have found it impossible up to this point. The insulation comes into this problem just as it does into the numbers problem.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 471

The person who calls on the telephone and places the bet may never even have contact with the fellow who is sitting at that telephone.

From that point forward, he may have contact with Tony Teramine and the section leader level and Dominic Corrado at the chief level.

You have five or six or seven different areas of insulation or wrappers of insulation before you get anywhere close to the top.

The CHAIRMAN. Judge Edwards, we have a purpose in these hearings of trying after we get these facts, get the information and evidence as to how these things operate, we have the purpose of trying to study it and determine what legislation, what further laws would be helpful to strengthen the arm of law enforcement, what laws can the Congress pass, what can we do to try to reach these conditions where they are difficult if not impossible, to bring to justice.

Do you have any comment about that?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir. Senator, we were planning on concluding our presentation with a number of suggestions.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, you will offer some suggestions along that line?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir: that is our basic purpose in being here.

The CHAIRMAN. At this point, it seemed appropriate to make the record clear that what we are trying to do when we speak of the difficulty of reaching these top people, who are insulated, using that word again, how can we break through and reach the real source of the trouble? We need help in that regard. I think law enforcement agencies everywhere recognize that they do have a very difficult problem and certainly if further legislation will be helpful, we want to find out what it is and try to recommend its passage.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you have anything further to say, Inspector?

Mr. O'NEILL. Nothing further.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir. We were requested by your committee to make a presentation of a family relationship chart among the top leaders of the Mafia in our area. There is such a chart here and available. Explanations are available but I think it speaks for itself, Senator. It simply illustrates the variety of interrelationships, intermarriages that bind these top families together. We would present it as an exhibit if that is agreeable to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Let that be made exhibit No. 35 and printed in the record also if it can be done.

The CHAIRMAN. You find a great deal of intermarriage among these families, do you not?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir. We not only find intermarriage amongst the top families of the Mafia in Detroit but we find intermarriage between the top families of the Mafia in Detroit and top families of Mafia organizations in other major cities in the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The chart is pretty much self-explanatory.

Mr. ADLERMAN. We had some considerable testimony about Pro-faci in New York. He is tied into the Zerilli family by marriage, is he not?

Mr. EDWARDS. One of Joseph Zerilli's sons, Tony Zerilli, is married to a daughter, a Profaci daughter.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This is one of the illustrations of the connections in different cities through the same type of family?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

Perhaps I ought to document that one step further.

The son of "Black Bill" Tocco, Tony Tocco, is married to another of the Profaci daughters.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have any further exhibits?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir. If that has been received in evidence, Senator——

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. EDWARDS (continuing). We would like at this point to respond to the inquiry from the committee which dealt with the infiltration and influence on otherwise legitimate business of the people who are in this racket organization.

We are prepared to do that by the presentation of a chart which shows the businesses, either owned by or infiltrated by or, in our judgment, influenced in some major fashion by top figures in the Mafia organization.

This chart is now on the easel. I would ask that it be accepted in evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be accepted as exhibit No. 36 and printed in the record.

(156)

Mr. EDWARDS. We think it might be appropriate, Senator, for you to hear a couple of the situations which illustrate this.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you give us one example of what this chart illustrates by reference to it? Give us an explanation.

Mr. EDWARDS. Inspector Miller is prepared to do that. He has been sworn, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Inspector, you have been previously sworn.

TESTIMONY OF EARL C. MILLER, GEORGE C. EDWARDS, AND VINCENT W. PIERSANTE—Resumed

Mr. MILLER. I have, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. You may proceed, Inspector.

Mr. MILLER. As you well know, our business chart is titled "Some Legitimate Businesses Owned, Infiltrated, or Influenced by the Mafia."

Many of the businesses are profitable ones, having a high-quality product in good demand.

The CHAIRMAN. You are talking about these on your first chart that you introduced, the Mafia organization in the Detroit area chart?

Mr. MILLER. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. People who are high up in the organization are also in these legitimate businesses?

Mr. MILLER. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. MILLER. It has been said many times, however, at least in private, that members of the Mafia associate themselves with legal businesses to front or cover up income derived from their illegal activity.

We fully realize that the businesses itemized here represent only a small part of the total number with which the Mafia is connected.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, this chart just gives enough to illustrate?

Mr. MILLER. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not undertake to give a complete presentation of all of the legitimate businesses in which they are engaged?

Mr. MILLER. By no means, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MILLER. Because public records help us document these businesses that appear while others do not. The connecting lines are self-explanatory. They indicate the joint business ventures of the individuals.

The black dots in the legend indicate businesses no longer owned or controlled by Mafia members. They have either gone out of business or have been sold. One such business was the Hart Center, Inc., incorporated on February 6, 1957.

Reference to the Michigan Corporation & Securities Commission indicates a woman known to be a secretary working for Pete Licavoli at Apache Realty was designated as president of the corporation. There were three directors, this lady, Anthony Cimini, who is No. 21 on our organizational chart, known to be a very close associate of Scarface Joe Bommarito. The third person was a man known to work for Mike Rubino, who is No. 6 on our organizational chart, as an accountant or bookkeeper.

The records later revealed that the accountant became the president and Anthony Cimini was named as secretary.

The stated purpose at the time of the incorporation was to "buy, sell, lease, improve, and otherwise deal in real estate." The property was that which formerly housed the Bohn Aluminum Co., located at 3516 Hart Street in the city of Detroit. It consisted of several buildings, all of which were rented or leased to various businesses.

The logical belief that Hart Center, Inc., was in fact a three-way partnership between Licavoli, Scarface Joe Bommarito and Matthew "Mike" Rubino, was confirmed when the property was sold on March 26 of this year to a New York City investor.

Wayne County records indicate a sale price of $620,000; after indebtedness of about $125,000 was satisfied leaving proceeds of $495,000, the president of the corporation purchased a total of 36 cashiers' checks made payable to Licavoli, Bommarito, and Rubino.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The last three you mentioned are on your chart?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, and these are very high-up figures.

Mr. Chairman, it might be desirable at this point for me to point out that Peter Licavoli, who has run through this whole presentation, is at this point in debt to the people of the United States by official court decree to the tune of $411,000 for income tax not paid and penalties for failing to pay income tax.

The CHAIRMAN. I wonder why these checks could not be impounded and money collected?

Mr. EDWARDS. We have a unit of the Intelligence Division of the Department of Internal Revenue for whom we have a great respect. I am sure if they knew that those checks were going to be issued at a given time, they would have been there.

I also am reasonably sure they feel they have already levied liens which will protect the people in relation to the collection of that $411,000.

It is just interesting to note that here is a fellow who has been operating this way for all these years, he owes $411,000 on income taxes up to 1951, Senator. I don't have any idea what he owes from that point forward.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean that was prior to 1951 that he owes that much?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir, this indebtedness concerning income tax evasion prior to 1951.

Mr. MILLER. The cashiers' checks rendering each of the principals $165,000 for a total of $495,000.

The CHAIRMAN. I assume there is no lien placed on that building. Maybe the Revenue Department did not know it. They were able to conceal that ownership.

Mr. EDWARDS. The record ownership was indeed concealed until actually after the transaction was over.

The CHAIRMAN. As I point out, it is not always the fault of the officials.

These folks are cunning. They are very resourceful in evading not only the law but in evading taxes.

Mr. MILLER. Another business which appears on our chart, the Home Juice Co., is a further example of the attempt of some of the racket people to hide their ownership. The business is said to have changed hands as a result of a barbudi game. Although public records did not until very recently show the names of either Vito or Angelo Giacalone, Nos. 22 and 20 on the organizational chart, Vito is now shown on the record as being vice president.

Our surveillances and the statements of the Giacalones themselves that "The Home Juice is ours" precludes any possibility that the non-Sicilian, noncriminal president of record is much more than a figure-head. Recently when Anthony Giacalone was arrested on the premises of the Home Juice Co., our detectives observed two very plush offices. The glass door of one bore the name of Vito Giacalone. Anthony Giacalone was found in the other office trying to hide in a private wash and dressing room. Articles of clothing and toilet articles belonging to Anthony Giacalone were in evidence and he is intimately familiar with the contents of all the drawers of the executive desk.

The one thing connecting the president to the office was his name on the door. In the case of Home Juice Co., normal conduct of daily business involves 65 delivery trucks traveling throughout the city, calling upon retail stores and delivering and selling a legitimate product. It is known that some of the truckdrivers had criminal records. This sort of delivery service would have many obvious advantages for the Giacalones.

Although there have been no formal complaints which have come to the attention of the criminal intelligence bureau, some legitimate businessmen will, off the record, tell of the methods used by some of the companies controlled by the Mafia. For example, Joseph "Long Joe" Bommarito, No. 26 on our organization chart, was a brother-in-law of Pete Licavoli, operates as a salesman for the Gold Cup Coffee Co. This company is, according to available records, owned by Mitchell Rahhal known to the police department as a relatively small-time gambler in the employ of Pete Licavoli.

Bommarito in his sales approach calls upon many Italian owned and operated restaurants where his reputation is not only known but is very meaningful. When he presents his calling card and requests the coffee business of his prospective customer, the chances of his obtaining the business are very good.

Recently a confidence game investigation conducted by members of the CIB resulted in the arrest of a man who had in his possession a mutuel bet pad, several of Bommarito's Gold Cup Coffee Co. business cards, and a list of some 56 business addresses, mostly restaurants representing some of Bommarito's customers. This person was an employee of a doughnut manufacturer at the time of the arrest and was driving a delivery truck belonging to that business.

When questioned about his possession of the list of businesses and Bommarito's cards, he stated that "Long Joe" had given him the list of cards, suggesting that he solicit doughnut business at these addresses. He was quoted as saying "Use my name. I think you will get the business."

This inference or implied duress applies not only to the example just given, but extends to the other products and services provided by the many business interests of the Mafia. Because no words of threat are voiced, and no weapon displayed, enforcement is faced with that frustrating condition of insufficient evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Is there anything further, Commissioner?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, Senator. We name on this chart another substantial business of a wholly legitimate nature which we believe is subject to major influence by these people, the Mafia. It is the Hazel Park Racetrack. This is a State-licensed monopoly operation operating outside of the city of Detroit in one of the suburbs. On August 26, 1963, the officers and directors were listed with these names, tied closely by family association to the Mafia: Anthony J. Zerilli, executive vice president. Anthony Zerilli is the son of Joseph Zerilli, whom we believe to be the most important figure in the ruling council of the dons.

Jack W. Tocco, son of "Black Bill" Tocco, one of the two probably most influential figures in the ruling council of the dons.

Anthony J. Tocco, another son of "Black Bill" Tocco.

And Dominic Corrado, who is now on our chart as a big man.

The racing commissioner in the State of Michigan began in the 1950's, a very intelligent and vigorous gentleman by the name of James Inglis, set out to try to get rid of some of these people, and it resulted in exposing the fact that substantial funds from several of the important Mafia people had been invested at the origin of this track and those funds were now still held through stock ownership with a great accretion in value in the names of children of these same people.

For example, there is a deposition in the Wayne County circuit court which establishes that Anthony J. Zerilli, at the age of 21, made an investment of $50,000 in the Hazel Park Racetrack. He stated under oath that this was a loan from his father, Joseph Zerilli. A similar relationship existed between Augustino Orlando, son-in-law of the notorious Santo Perrone, who is listed on our chart as one of the big men. And, of course, the relationship with "Black Bill" Tocco, although not spelled out in sworn testimony, might well be inferred from the age of his sons at the time they made their investments in stock in the Hazel Park Racetrack.

We think there is a major influence on the voting trust which controls the Hazel Park Racetrack from the top echelon of the Mafia, and that some of the proceeds of this million-dollar-a-year operation undoubtedly are available for Mafia purposes, in our opinion.

Now, Senator, we have a summarized history of the Hazel Park Racing Association which we would like to submit as an exhibit in this proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be received as exhibit No. 37.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 37" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, we are coming to the close of our testimony, which will deal primarily with recommendations pertaining to legislation. Preparatory to that, we would like to talk about two episodes involving criminal affairs, in one of which some success in prosecution was obtained and in the other frustration resulted.

I think it would be helpful to have these two before the committee because I think they illustrate some of the problems that we have in dealing with this type of organization. At this point, I would like to call on District Inspector Piersante to tell about the Victor Oil bombing prosecution of Santo Perrone.

Mr. PIERSANTE. In August of 1961 our Criminal Intelligence Bureau developed information indicating that Santo Perrone was responsible for a series of five bombing extortion plots which had occurred in the Detroit area during the preceding year. These bombings were a reverse twist of the old black hand technique wherein an extortion victim would be approached for protection money first and then if he refused to pay he would be bombed.

The current operation had a bombing take place first, utilizing a small, high explosive device calculated to do only a little damage in the home or business of the intended victim. Subsequently, the victim would receive a phone call demanding protection money. Perrone is one of the big men on our Mafia chart.

The CHAIRMAN. What is his number on the chart?

Mr. PIERSANTE. He is on the second row of the big men at the extreme right. It is No. 106 on the chart.

Our investigation and surveillances revealed that Richard Lambert, who has been named as an associate, and his summary was presented earlier by Commissioner Edwards, an old and trusted friend of Perrone, was working for him at the AAA Auto Wash. Our surveillances also revealed that Perrone was a frequent visitor to the Village Super Market in St. Clair Shores, Mich., a suburb of Detroit, and that this market was owned and operated by Peter Wastello, who has a criminal record dating back to 1938, including arrests for robbery, armed burglary, OPA violations, and cigarette violations.

Our investigation also identified a Paul Tendiglia as a close associate of Perrone. Tendiglia has a police record dating back to 1932 showing 12 arrests, including charges of burglary, liquor law violations, gambling, extortion, tax stamp violations, and bombing. He has been convicted twice on burglary charges and once on a gambling charge.

The investigating officers observed a meeting of all four of these men on September 13, 1961, at the Village Supermarket. After the meeting, the officers observed Perrone going to a gunshop where we established that he purchased a 1-pound can of gunpowder and then returned to his auto wash.

On September 30, 1961, the officers observed Perrone and Lambert spending a considerable amount of time casing the vicinity of Warren and St. Jean Streets in the city of Detroit.

Mr. EDWARDS. Lambert is the fellow who I previously identified as the pilot fish, Senator.

Mr. PIERSANTE. They looked thoroughly over the property of the Victor Oil Co. At 7:45 p.m., on October 17, 1961, the Victor Oil Co. was bombed with a high explosive device which had been placed near a rear overhead truck door.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the reason for the bombing?

Mr. PIERSANTE. This follows the modus operandi that I described earlier, and I will explain it.

The CHAIRMAN. They demanded protection money, did they?

Mr. PIERSANTE. Yes, after the bombing. Early the next morning, the owner of the Victor Oil Co., Eugene Epstein, received a threatening phone call. The caller did not identify himself nor did Epstein recognize his voice.

According to Epstein, the caller said, "The next bomb will blow your place out of business and you into your graveyard." That afternoon, October 18, 1961, a private citizen, John Harness, reported to the fifth precinct detective bureau that he had observed the perpetrators of the Victor Oil bombing. He declared that sometime during the evening of October 17 he had parked his car in the Chrysler employees parking lot directly behind the Victor Oil Co. and that he observed another vehicle drive into the parking lot and park behind it, but farther into the lot.

Two men exited from this vehicle and proceeded to the Victor Oil Co. property. A short time later, Harness observed the same two men walking away from the oil company and to the street alongside of the parking lot. Some minutes later, both men walked back to the parking lot, one ahead of the other, and entered the vehicle. The second man, who had fallen behind, was overheard and quoted by Harness as saying, "You don't have to move the car because the fuse is long enough to give us plenty of time to get away."

However, the first man moved the vehicle to the far end of the parking lot directly behind the Victor Oil Co. He exited from the vehicle carrying a brown paper bag. Harness observed both men walk to the rear of the oil company property and a short time later saw both men running from the property to their vehicle and leave the parking lot at a high rate of speed. Harness immediately started up his vehicle and drove rapidly out of the parking lot. When he stopped for a traffic signal about a half a block from the lot, he heard an explosion from the direction of the Victor Oil property.

Harness stated that he volunteered this information because of his sense of outrage at this violent action which he believed had placed his life in jeopardy. As a result of the correlation of the above information received from Harness with our criminal intelligence bureau observations and with the description of the perpetrators supplied by

Harness, Santo Perrone, Richard Lambert, Peter Guastello, and Paul Tendiglia were arrested.

Three separate showups of men with the same approximate height were held for Harness and he positively identified Lambert and Tendiglia as the perpetrators of the bombing. The scientific laboratory of the Detroit Police Department conducted nitrate tests on the hands of the suspects and obtained a positive reaction on Perrone, Lambert, and Tendiglia—

The CHAIRMAN. Were they convicted?

Mr. PIERSANTE. No, sir. We obtained a warrant—and there was a negative reaction on Guastello. At this point, Harness first appeared to realize the significance of the identity of the defendants. In order to allay his fears of reprisal against him, our department took maximum security measures to insure the safety of him and his family, and an around-the-clock police guard was placed on his home. He was escorted to and from his place of employment. His wife was escorted on all trips away from home, and his children were watched to and from school and at play.

A warrant was obtained against all four men charging (1) placing explosives with intent to destroy; and (2) conspiracy to place explosives.

On October 26, 27, and 30, 1961, the preliminary examination required by Michigan statutes was held in recorders court, city of Detroit. Attorney Joseph Louisell represented the defendants. At this examination, Harness testified under oath, repeated the facts given to us, and identified Lambert and Tendiglia as the actual perpetrators of the bombing. At the conclusion of the examination, Perrone, Lambert, and Tendiglia were bound over for trial.

The case against Guastello was dismissed. After a few months, Harness told us that he felt his police guard and escort were no longer necessary and that it was seriously restricting his normal life. We disagreed, but arrived at a compromise. The 24-hour-a-day guard at his home would remain, but his escort away from home would cease.

After a number of delays, the trial was set for September 27, 1962. A month earlier, our criminal intelligence bureau learned that Harness had visited the offices of the defendants' attorney, Joseph Louisell. Harness confirmed this and said that indeed he had visited Louisell's office. He declared that he had gone there on his own volition and had there signed an affidavit that he had been at the scene of the bombing in the company of a girl friend and although he had observed the two men he had previously described, he could not possibly see them well enough to recognize or identify them.

Our department had not been aware of this additional witness up to this time. We interviewed her, but although she admitted being at the scene of the bombing, she could not or would not describe or identify anyone. Our further investigation disclosed that Harness had been ridiculed by friends and acquaintances, including his union steward, for getting involved as a witness against a man with Perrone's reputation for violence.

The trial started on September 27 in recorders court and continued through October 1, 1962. The prosecution's testimony developed the corpus delicti and the circumstantial evidence connecting Perrone with the bombing. At this point, the key witness, John Harness, was put on the stand. He recanted completely the testimony he had given previously under oath at the pretrial examination and stated that Lambert and Tendiglia were not the subjects he had observed running from the scene of the Victor Oil bombing on the night of October 17, 1961.

As a direct result of this witness' refusal to identify the perpetrators at the trial, the defendants were acquitted and once more effective police efforts to bring to justice a major Mafiosa and his cohorts were nullified by Mafia intimidation of witnesses against them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, I wanted to talk a bit about a gangland murder which we solved. These are not too frequent. I think I will seek to brief this in view of the time schedule. I know you desire us to conclude our testimony prior to the noon break. This, however, pertains to the murder, in my good friend O. W. Wilson's city of Chicago, of John H. Kilpatrick, the president of the United Industrial Workers of America.

It is apparent that Mr. Kilpatrick had earned the enmity of someone who I understand to be rather famous in Chicago circles as a labor racketeer, Angelo Inciso, I believe is the pronunciation, whom he ousted from leadership of Local 286 of the UIWA, and subsequently apparently Mr. Kilpatrick was active in initiating prosecution of Mr. Inciso, which ultimately resulted in his conviction under the Taft-Hartley Act for unfair labor practices and his subsequent sentence to the penitentiary.

At the trial, the report from the Chicago Crime Commission for 1961 indicates as follows:

About 10 a.m. on April 28, 1961, John A. Kilpatrick was standing outside of superior court room on the eighth floor of the County Building in Chicago and Inciso approached him and snarled, "I am going to kill you." When Kilpatrick was taken aback at the threat, Inciso said, "I am not going to do it personally but I'll have it done."

Three days later Kilpatrick and Grana, vice president of the International Union, reported the threat to the Chicago police. Actually, Kilpatrick was killed that same year on October 20 and Inciso, when questioned by the police, presented an alibi and was not prosecuted as a result of that murder.

It is our understanding that Mr. Inciso is an associate of Anthony Accardo, whom I do not know much about, myself, but gather has some fame in the Mafia organization in Chicago.

Our connection with this came as follows:

We picked up a man on armed robbery charge by the name of William G. Triplett. One of our police lieutenants in the detective division, Dudley Arnold, in questioning him and in questioning his associates and through information supplied to him in the neighborhood, learned that Triplett had been in Chicago on October 20 and then he picked up a rumor to the effect that Triplett had come into a considerable amount of money as a result of some sort of action which he had taken in Chicago.

With this, Lieutenant Arnold contacted the FBI and two agents from the FBI and Lieutenant Arnold questioned Triplett and Triplett confessed to the three men that he had been employed by his uncle, Dana H. Nash, told by Nash that the job which they were going on was for one Ralph Pope, who was an associate of Angelo Inciso and known as his right-hand man, and that the job they were going to Chicago on was to give someone a good beating.

They went to Chicago on the 20th. Triplett with a gun kidnaped, in effect, Kilpatrick, brought him back to a car where Nash was. Nash took the gun and shot Kilpatrick in the head and killed him.

The two of them then sought with some considerable effort to cover up the traces of this by getting rid of bloody clothing, the gun, the bullets, and then went back to the city of Detroit.

They were both arrested, both tried, and both convicted of this murder.

It is my understanding that Triplett received a 25-year sentence for his part and that Dana Nash received a 99-year sentence for his part.

Mr. Nash did not confirm, as I understand it, any conversations between him and the right-hand man of Mr. Inciso, Mr. Pope. So, again, the insulation at some point worked.

The reason that I point this out, Senator, is because frequently we believe that major criminal activities of this variety are carried on across State lines. The difficulty of the Chicago police in finding the actual perpetrators of this crime has been almost absolute, just as perhaps our difficulties in finding the perpetrators of some of our own crimes, if they have been imported from across State lines or across international boundaries, are also almost absolute.

The CHAIRMAN. What about the recent statutes enacted by Congress in that field making it a crime to cross State lines to commit a crime?

Mr. EDWARDS. This I think will undoubtedly be of major assistance to us if we can end up particularly with a great national effort to deal with this problem, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. The Congress cannot legislate the great national effort.

Mr. EDWARDS. I understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. That has to come from the will of the people, from them and the law enforcement officials who have the responsibility in making that effort.

In making the best effort law enforcement officials can make, the question arises do they need any more laws to help them or tools with which to work?

Mr. EDWARDS. May we now turn to that topic? I would like to suggest such measures as seems to us would be useful in this regard.

The first item on my list is statutes which will allow for improved and more effective coordination of local and Federal law enforcement activities. We initiated in our area, Senator, periodic meetings between our department and the Federal law enforcement officials in the Detroit area. These had been going on for many years with the Narcotics Bureau which I might say has been most helpful to us through the years not only while I have been commissioner but long prior to that and I might say that the same thing has been true in relation to the FBI and the Intelligence Division of the Department of Internal Revenue and Immigration.

But the fact of the matter is that each feels restricted to its own carefully and legalistically defined jurisdiction and that each is very concerned about how much interchange of information can possibly be justified.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 481

We have many occasions to want to know things which we know the Internal Revenue knows and we don't find them out. Maybe that is wise in the overall operation of the Government of the United States but it is kind of frustrating.

The CHAIRMAN. You have to have a discretion somewhere because while you would be in good faith in seeking the information, you and your force, maybe, others who are under the control and influence of the Mafia or some other criminal syndicate might seek similar information and not being in good faith the release of it by the Internal Revenue Department or the FBI or somebody would result in a service to the very ones that it is your duty to apprehend and convict.

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, that is a tremendous problem.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, it has to be a discretion somewhere.

Mr. EDWARDS. Let me toss on the table a suggestion which has been going over in my head since this past summer when I was a member of an American team which went to Great Britain to make a comparative study of the British and American criminal procedures.

There, one of the things which I presume I knew but which I never really absorbed the significance of, came more clearly to my attention than it had ever before.

You see, they have local law enforcement in some sense as we do but if there is an important crime committed in a local jurisdiction in England, it is the custom for the local unit of government, the local police department, to request assistance from the national detective agency which is operated directly by the Central Government in Scotland Yard. If this were an available and permissible technique in the United States of America, it might bankrupt the manpower situation of the Federal Bureau of Investigation but I have no doubt that their services would be called on without their being asked to work under local law enforcement at all, but asked to work in pursuance of the efforts of local law enforcement under their own authority.

The CHAIRMAN. I agree with you a thousand percent, there should be a whole lot better cooperation and working together between Federal law enforcement officials and local, State and municipal officials.

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, this thing is not a city affair. This is a national conspiracy. If we chase them over the city line of the city of Detroit and they just wait a little while until there is a more favorable climate, or they hope there will be one, they will be there ready to move back. In the meantime they will have still been operating.

We need a great deal more cooperation and coordination of law enforcement efforts.

Now, I am not certain as to whether or not this second point has indeed been taken care of by the legislation which you described. Perhaps it has. But we list a statute which would give the U.S. Government jurisdiction over gangland murders, particularly those involving travel across State lines by any party to the murder conspiracy.

And, third, we advocate Federal legislation allowing law enforcement agencies to secure jurisdiction warrants for interception of telephone communications on the identical showing of probable cause which is required for a search warrant.

482 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator, I yield to nobody in my concern about the basic rights and freedoms of the American people. I want all of the privacy of the individual, all of the magnificent opportunity for diversity in this land preserved. I want our Bill of Rights preserved.

But I fail to really see the difference between a situation where, on showing of probable cause to believe that a felony is being committed, a judge may issue a search warrant for a man's private desk and one which allows the same thing in relation to a telephone.

I do know this from the experience of these years in the police department: that a great amount of crime is committed exclusively by telephone and that this is a major part of our total problem.

I would want proper safeguards in relation to any such legislation, particularly directed at seeing to it that a proper showing of probable cause was indeed made and that there was judicial control of the warrants and the execution of those warrants.

Fourth, we would like to see statutory provision for the grant of immunity to witnesses in important felony prosecutions. This both at the State level and the national level.

And then, finally, we would like to see legislation providing for the sentencing of racketeers as dangerous offenders in accordance with the recommendations of the model sentencing act of the Advisory Council of Judges of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency.

We talked a little but about this on the first day.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is worthy of serious study if there is some way to do it. These repeating offenders are the ones who finally perpetrate the most serious crimes. Where it is demonstrated that one is a habitual criminal and that is his livelihood, the pursuit of criminal activities, I think that in these convictions, sentences, the judge should take those into account and be required to take them into account by law, and thus mete out sentences not designed to correct the criminals or bring him to a state of correction so much when you know you can't correct him, but insulate him from committing any further crime. Take him out of circulation in society. Thus, you would protect society.

Mr. EDWARDS. I couldn't agree with you more.

The CHAIRMAN. I think these criminals who are repeating these crimes habitually—like this fellow Valachi who has gone on for years and years and years, and many others that you have on these charts—when they convict them after they have a record of continuous lives of crime, it seems to me that they ought to be put away for a while instead of just for a minimum sentence and then out again and back in at the same old activity.

Mr. EDWARDS. We believe very strongly that racketeer-organized criminals ought to be treated in the court under proper legislation as dangerous offenders and not subject to the ameliorative and rehabilitative measures of the law in relation to a youthful offender or a person in unorganized crime.

The CHAIRMAN. That is different, such as a first offender or someone who is young, and so forth, who may be on the wrong track; maybe there is hope for them. But these old, confirmed scoundrels that have lived a life of crime and who are still committing them in their middle age and old age, I think they ought to be removed from circulation in decent society.

Mr. EDWARDS. We would like, Senator, to see the outcome of this hearing be that the American public in its majesty rose up and smashed this infamous national conspiracy.

The CHAIRMAN. I am one who believes it is going to take some kind of inspiration or something from the American people to demand that it be done. Otherwise, we are going to be fighting a hard and difficult and often a losing battle in this area unless the Americans do become aroused and insist that their law enforcement officers be vigilant, diligent, and that the citizens themselves when they have the opportunity give that cooperation and assistance to their officers that is absolutely essential if they are to succeed in their labor.

Is there anything further?

Mr. EDWARDS. Senator, I have only one other thing to say. We have come here because we deeply believe in the purpose the committee is presenting. I came here with the approval of our mayor, our common council, and we came here to tell you what we know, which is a good deal, about this operation. I want to reiterate that I believe, and believe on the basis of not too little information, that our city is the cleanest and the least racket-ridden city in the United States of America. I trust that neither this committee nor the press will give an impression, because we both know and will talk about what exists, that this means that we have more of it than others. This is not our problem.

This is, in our view, our portion of a national problem and we have been delighted to illustrate it.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very kindly.

Senator McIntyre?

Senator MCINTYRE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate the commissioner and his staff for what I think has been an excellent portrayal. While many questions have occurred to me during the testimony here, I have delayed and put it off in view of our need to expedite the hearing, but I have been very much impressed by the detail, and I understand the wonderful cooperation they have given.

For one, from the small State of New Hampshire, who is not completely familiar, I have learned a great deal from your testimony, and I thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought perhaps the Senator had a question.

I wanted to say to you that I think your presentation and that of your very able staff who are here with you has been most illuminating and most impressive. I only hope that from this, along with others who will appear here, there will be a reawakening throughout the whole country with respect to this problem, and that we, here in Congress, will give it diligent study with a view of enacting any legislation that we can enact within the framework of the Constitution that may be needed or that may further strengthen the hands of our law enforcement agencies.

You have been very helpful to us. We appreciate your presence. I hope with all of us working together some exceptional good will come from our efforts.

Mr. EDWARDS. Thank you for your courtesy.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

The committee will stand in recess until 2 o'clock.

(Whereupon, at 12:07 p.m. the subcommittee recessed, to reconvene at 2 p.m. the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

(The subcommittee reconvened at 2:15 p.m., Senator John L. McClellan (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of reconvening: Senators McClellan and Jackson.)

The CHAIRMAN. Come around, Mr. Kaplan.

Have you previously been sworn?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You do solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. KAPLAN. I do.

TESTIMONY OF ARTHUR G. KAPLAN

The CHAIRMAN. Be seated. State your name, identify yourself and your relationship with this committee.

Mr. KAPLAN. My name is Arthur G. Kaplan. I reside in Washington, D.C. I am assistant counsel to this subcommittee.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have some documents we wish to place in the record and will you identify the documents?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir. These are the current FBI records of all of the men named on the Mafia organization chart for Detroit.

The CHAIRMAN. Which chart?

Mr. KAPLAN. The Mafia organization chart.

The CHAIRMAN. Which has been made exhibit 18, is that correct?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. They may be received in bulk and will be identified as exhibit No. 38 for reference.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 38" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

Will you be sworn, please, sir?

Do you and each of you solemnly swear the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. WILSON. I do.

Mr. DUFFY. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Be seated.

Mr. Wilson, will you identify yourself for the record, please, sir?

TESTIMONY OF O. W. WILSON AND WILLIAM J. DUFFY

Mr. WILSON. I am O. W. Wilson, superintendent of police, Chicago, Ill.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your present official position?

Mr. WILSON. Superintendent of police department in Chicago.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you held that position?

Mr. WILSON. About 3½ years.

The CHAIRMAN. What was your previous position? Have you been in police work for many years?

Mr. WILSON. On and off, yes. I was dean of the School of Criminology, University of California, Berkeley, prior to my appointment in Chicago.

Prior to then I was chief of police of Wichita, Kans., for 11 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman with you identify himself for the record?

Mr. DUFFY. My name is William J. Duffy. I am the director of intelligence of the Chicago Police Department.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you held your position, Mr. Duffy?

Mr. DUFFY. Approximately 3 years.

The CHAIRMAN. How long?

Mr. DUFFY. Three years.

The CHAIRMAN. What was your previous experience?

Mr. DUFFY. I have been a police officer for 17 years with the Chicago Police Department.

The CHAIRMAN. In Chicago?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. Wilson, I believe you have a prepared statement, have you?

Mr. WILSON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you like to read your statement?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, I would.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, you may proceed.

Mr. WILSON. It is indeed a great honor and privilege to appear before this committee and to offer the assistance and support of the Chicago Police Department in the vitally important investigation this committee is conducting.

As superintendent of police for the city of Chicago, I am not directly involved in the detailed and painstaking collection and analysis of intelligence concerning the activities and personalities involved in organized crime.

Captain Duffy, who is seated at my right, the director of the intelligence division of the Chicago department, is available to give evidence before the committee. He is far better informed on this score than I.

I am responsible for directing the efforts of over 13,000 individuals in the task of safeguarding the lives and property of Chicago citizens.

During the course of an average day, the members of the Chicago Police Department respond to as many as 7,000 calls for police assistance.

While our principal objective is to prevent crime and apprehend criminals, our resources are dissipated among a large variety of functions, from enforcing traffic laws to handling dogbite complaints. We are called upon to deal with the petty offender, the destitute, and the mentally ill. We inherit the problems of the indigent, the unemployed, and our wayward youth. The needs which compete for our attention are many and it is within this complex that we face the problem of organized crime.

We are intimately familiar with the genesis of organized crime and constantly alert to the rearing of its ugly head.

We characterize a crime syndicate as the combination of a number of persons who resort to criminal means in order to establish a monopoly in a financially profitable activity, whether such activity be legitimate or illegitimate. Killings, beatings, bombings, fires, and other terrorist acts are threatened and used to drive out competitors and to warn others who may desire to enter the lucrative field. Corruption of public officials is sought by these criminals in order to assure against the interruption of their profitable operations.

Organized crime stems from the various forms of vice operations, gambling, prostitution, and the illegal sale of narcotics and liquor which produce so large a source of illegal and continuing profits.

The illegal harvests are further enhanced by the common practice of extorting money from persons engaged in unlawful operations as well as those engaged in lawful business activities. Vice activities are now and always have been the seedbed of organized crime and they stand as an open invitation to the gangster to organize the criminal activity in order to assure continuing and greater profits.

While organized crime has its genesis in vice operations, individuals engaged in the upper levels of organized crime have graduated from the direct operations where they become skilled in terroristic tactics and grew rich and powerful.

Today they are far removed from the cesspools of vice activities. Many of these hoodlums play the role of respected citizens, their air of respectability being strengthened by residing in expensive homes in the most fashionable neighborhoods, placing their children in the best of schools, and donating generous gifts to the worthiest causes.

Their operations are equally sophisticated through the investment of their ill-gotten gains in legitimate business enterprises where they apply their terroristic tactics in the operations.

The approach to the problem of organized crime by the Chicago Police Department is threefold:

(1) We undertake to minimize the opportunity for unlawful profiteering by suppressing activities in the four fields of vice that I have mentioned.

(2) We undertake to gather the information on the activities of known hoodlums; and

(3) We try to develop evidence upon which higher-ups in organized crime might be prosecuted.

We have succeeded in substantially reducing vice activities. This has had the side effect of drying up the local seedbeds of organized crime and tightening competition among those engaged in it.

We have gathered considerable information on the activities of known hoodlums. This has been shared and coordinated with information gathered by Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies.

The gathering of such information has the further benefit of impressing upon these mobsters the fact that their activities are under close surveillance and subject to public exposure.

Their operations would otherwise have been bolder and more expansive and their position more powerful.

Our efforts, in other words, have had a neutralizing effect upon them.

We have not succeeded in our third objective, that of prosecuting those who reap the profits of organized criminal activity. This is so despite the fact that we have devoted a significant percentage of our total resources to ferreting out such evidence and have applied the talents of our most skilled personnel to this end.

A great deal of information has been accumulated, but with the uncomfortable realization that very little of it is sufficiently concrete to stand up as evidence in a court of law or before this committee.

Much of what we know confirms common impressions: that certain key racketeers have amassed great wealth, that they make income tax returns in which tremendous incomes are reported from undisclosed sources; that they continually associate with others of their kind who have no known legitimate sources of income or wealth; that when called before Senate and House investigating committees, they invariably plead the fifth amendment; that they are continually the subjects of comment in the public press and on the radio and television where they are labeled as gambling czars and vice lords, and that they never deny such accusations or bring suits for libel or slander against news media for making such accusations.

We know who they are and where they live. We are well informed about their comings and goings and we make all of this information available to Federal law enforcement agencies.

We strongly believe that they control vast gambling and other vice operations, that they divide up and secure monopolies of various territories and drive out all competition, and that they are responsible for gangland killings to further these ends.

We have not been able, however, to prove any of these beliefs.

The most nefarious action of those engaged in organized crime is their resort to murder in order to maintain discipline within their organization.

Since 1919, there have been 976 gangland-type slayings in the Chicago land area, an average of 23 per year. These killings were executions, executions of competitors, executions of those who would "muscle in" on profitable illicit enterprises, executions of those who "welched" on money due, executions of those who informed to law enforcement agencies or competitors, executions of those who stood in the way of ambitious labor racketeers.

These executions were usually committed by hired killers often imported from other cities for this specific purpose, as in the case of the Kilpatrick slaying described by Commissioner Edwards this morning.

Of the 976 gangland-type slayings in the Chicago area, only two have been cleared by the arrest and conviction of the killers: Jake Hinkle, and the killing described by Commissioner Edwards this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean out of the 976 killings that you have testified to here as executions, only how many have been solved?

Mr. WILSON. Only two, Mr. Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Only two of that number have been solved. The rest remain unsolved?

488 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. WILSON. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. You may think you know, but you don't have the proof to secure a conviction?

Mr. WILSON. That is correct.

Senator JACKSON. Isn't that something of a record in your long experience as a law enforcement officer and as an internationally known criminologist? Can you cite any other area of crime where it has been so difficult to apprehend the murderers?

Mr. WILSON. I am not informed on the situation in other large cities in detail. For example, I do not know the number of killings in New York City over a comparable period of time.

Senator JACKSON. But of the average run of homicides, you would have a higher percentage of apprehension and conviction, I would hope, than 2 out of 976.

Mr. WILSON. I will give you some odds on this. Gangland executioners seem to enjoy odds of 500 to 1 against being caught and convicted. In contrast, on the question you raised, 62 percent of the run-of-the-mill murders committed in cities countrywide resulted in apprehensions and convictions.

The CHAIRMAN. Were either of these two convicted? You said two were solved.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, convicted.

The CHAIRMAN. Those two were convicted?

Mr. WILSON. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Were many others tried and acquitted?

Mr. DUFFY. I can't give an exact statistic, but there were others tried and dismissed.

The CHAIRMAN. Some of the others were tried, but you didn't have sufficient evidence or, in other words, failed to get a conviction.

Mr. DUFFY. That is true.

Mr. WILSON. While the proportion, Senator, since I have been in Chicago in the last 3½ years is not quite as great as 23 per year, I think it is running about 13 per year, we have not, except for the 1 killing described by Commissioner Edwards this morning, we have not had a single conviction, nor have we brought to trial any of the killers.

The CHAIRMAN. This 976 does not include all homicides, but only those that you would put in the category of gangland executions?

Mr. WILSON. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. In the other field, those that you do not put in this category, you said you had a higher rate of conviction?

Mr. WILSON. Yes. I do not have these figures, but I think it would compare favorably with the 62 percent nationwide.

The CHAIRMAN. Just as it is in other cities?

Mr. WILSON. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. So it is this organized element where they are able to operate, in effect, a government of their own, applicable to their members and those whom they come in contact with in operating their illicit businesses, and sometimes legitimate businesses, they are under that domination, that power, the power of life and death than can be dispensed at the order of some gangland boss or some ruling authority of the underworld.

Mr. WILSON. You may be interested to know in Cook County during the same period of time we had 103 legal executions of criminals. In other words, the gangsters seem to be 10 times more prolific in imposing executions on their members than organized society as a whole.

The CHAIRMAN. We would think, too, that generally organized crime represents a very small minority of the population of the community.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, this is true.

The CHAIRMAN. And that population, they had 976 executions—in other words, the death penalty was imposed and carried out whereas, for the greater population, in that element operating under laws of justice and jurisprudence, with presumed innocence until convicted by a jury of their peers, there were only 103 that were executed?

Mr. WILSON. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. So the judgment and execution of the government of the underworld is both more certain and swift.

Mr. WILSON. Correct, and more frequent.

The CHAIRMAN. And more frequent. Very well.

Mr. WILSON. The record that I have just recited hardly reflects well upon those local law enforcement agencies that are sincerely endeavoring to cope with the problem, but the record also serves to reflect several other factors that should be a source of equal embarrassment to the public. The continuous and unrelenting record of gangland killings has been with us for a long time. The number I mentioned was since 1919. The problems of which we speak are not new problems. The public attitude toward gangland killings has been one of complete apathy, writing them off as the deserved deaths of known hoodlums, and whereas the slaying of a child, or the murder of a prominent citizen, may bring about legislative reform and administrative reorganization, gang killings have come to be shruggingly accepted as one of the ingredients of life in a large city.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you feel that the public is not sufficiently interested, they are complacent about it, and say, "Well, one hoodlum killed another," and just pass it off, shrug it off that way?

Mr. WILSON. Not only completely complacent but unwilling to support efforts of the police to obtain, through legislation, the tools necessary to deal with these problems.

The CHAIRMAN. You do feel that additional legislation is needed?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, I do.

These slayings are but a reflection of the much larger problem—a reflection of a failure on the part of the public to provide the machinery within the total system for the administration of criminal justice to deal effectively with organized crime.

The members of the committee may ask: What accounts for the failure of municipal police agencies to cope more effectively with these problems? The answer, based upon our experience in Chicago, falls into six categories:

The first category is lack of jurisdiction, mentioned this morning by Commissioner Edwards. The authority of the Chicago Police Department is restricted to the boundaries of the city of Chicago. Most of our hoodlums reside outside the city and most of their meetings and their activities take place outside our jurisdiction. But the spread of their activities is much greater than even the Chicago metropolitan area.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask a question there? Were these 976 executions all inside the city limits of Chicago?

490 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. WILSON. No; they were in the Chicago area.

The CHAIRMAN. In the general area. You did not have jurisdiction over all of them?

Mr. WILSON. Well, in the case of these slayings, it is frequently impossible to say where the killing took place. There have been times in the history of Chicago when the killings were committed in Chicago and the cadavers dumped outside the city in order to avoid embarrassment to the administration. In other times, they killed them outside and leave them on lower Wacker Drive in the trunk of a vehicle, I sometimes suspect to embarrass the administration. So you can't ever tell where the actual killing took place.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you mind, as a matter of interest, answering this question: Are you able to have good cooperation between the county or State officials and the municipal law enforcement officials?

Mr. WILSON. We are very fortunate in that respect, Senator, in Chicago during my term of office. We have excellent cooperation with the sheriff, with the State Police, and with all of the Federal law enforcement agencies.

The CHAIRMAN. That is very gratifying. I don't think that has always been true in the Chicago area, has it?

Mr. WILSON. It has been since I am there. I am not prepared to comment on what occurred before.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not sure. I don't want to cast any reflection, but I think I could cite a specific case, but I won't do that, based on information I have where one day they were just crossways, and whatever one did the other one apparently undertook to obstruct.

Mr. WILSON. The cooperation is excellent today.

The CHAIRMAN. That is most gratifying. Proceed.

Mr. WILSON. As is apparent from these hearings, the tentacles of organized criminal activity, like those of an octopus, reach out to encompass areas and people throughout our country without regard to the legal jurisdictions of local police agencies. Funds are exchanged, information transmitted, equipment shipped, killers transported, and meetings held. We feel, at times, much like a watchdog on a leash that can bark a great deal about what he sees, but is powerless to act.

The second category is the lack of resources. It is absurd and naive to assume that anything less than an all-out effort on the part of all echelons of government will produce results in the fight against organized crime. But the variety of demands upon local police agencies serve to curtail the percentage of resources that the chief administrator can devote to the problem.

Understandable demands by taxpayers for economy in local governmental operations require that each man be utilized in a capacity which will produce demonstrable results. The need for the investment of funds and resources in the investigation of organized criminal activity is not readily apparent to the local taxpayer and it is difficult for the police administrator to demonstrate the return on those dollars which he might invest. Much more is required in manpower and financial resources if we are to begin to do an effective job of ferreting out information.

The third category relates to the lack of talent. There is a gross misconception that the battle against organized crime can be successfully conducted by the average police officer who otherwise is called upon to catch robbers, direct traffic, and respond to the variety of requests received from citizens for police assistance. Pitted against him are the highly skilled legal staff and other professionals who advise the higher ups in the organized criminal operations.

Those police officers who appear to possess an ability for the type of work required must be specially trained and given expert direction. We must, however, recognize that the average police department does not have on its staff nor is it given the resources to hire the caliber of skilled criminal attorney, accountant, and tax expert that is required to equal the skill and skulduggery engaged in by its opponents.

The fourth category relates to the inadequate means for discovery. To get at the higher-ups in organized crime, it is necessary to peel off several layers of protective covering surrounding the hard core of leadership.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what we have been referring to as their being insulated against apprehension.

Mr. WILSON. This can be done only by (a) persuading accomplices to testify against their coconspirators; (b) planting undercover operatives within the upper echelons of the crime syndicate; or (c) intensive surveillance over an extended period of time using wiretapping, electronic listening devices, and other sophisticated audio and visual techniques to obtain evidence of continual association and repeated acts in concert from which a conspiracy to commit crime may be inferred beyond a reasonable doubt.

The first two possibilities, that of persuading an accomplice to talk and planting undercover operatives within the crime syndicates, are rather remote for reasons only too obvious.

The third method is not possible under present Illinois law because the use of electronic eavesdropping equipment is forbidden.

The CHAIRMAN. Not only can you not tap telephones, you cannot even use electronic device to pick up the sound?

Mr. WILSON. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. If you do that, the evidence that you secure that way in Illinois is not competent proof?

Mr. WILSON. If this be done by a concealed microphone, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not admissible?

Mr. WILSON. That is true. However, a person may be wired for sound and under the Illinois law he may record conversations he holds with a second person.

The CHAIRMAN. He may do that?

Mr. WILSON. He may.

The CHAIRMAN. That testimony is admissible without the person he holds the conversation with being knowledgeable of the apparatus that he is using?

Mr. WILSON. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know all these technical terms but I think I can say it so that you know what I mean.

Suppose you are in a hotel and you want to "bug" the room next door, try to listen in, can you put any instrument up to the wall that might bring the sound through?

Mr. WILSON. No, Senator, this would be illegal in Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be illegal in Illinois?

492 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't think that is general throughout the country. In other words, you have a greater handicap than they have in other areas. You lack some of the weapons that they can use?

Mr. WILSON. In my judgment, the electronics eavesdropping law in Illinois is the most stringent such law to be found anywhere in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it at any time serve any other purpose—I am not criticizing Illinois, they know what kind of laws they want and do not want, but the point I am making is that in the overall, it serves the interest and the protection of the criminal more so than it does the individual citizen.

Mr. WILSON. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The law-abiding citizen.

Mr. WILSON. I am informed by items that I have read in the press that there are substantial numbers of detective agencies in Chicago that employ electronic eavesdropping devices in gathering evidence for divorce and things of this sort.

The CHAIRMAN. For what?

Mr. WILSON. Gathering evidence for divorce and the activities of this sort.

The CHAIRMAN. Can they be used in civil proceedings as testimony?

Mr. WILSON. They get the evidence which can be used. No, the evidence gained directly cannot be used.

The CHAIRMAN. But from that they pursue, on the basis of the information they receive, they pursue that information in other ways and thus obtain or secure evidence that is available to them in court?

Mr. WILSON. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know whether or not there is any large-scale commercial espionage going on by wiretapping in the city of Chicago?

Mr. WILSON. Espionage?

Mr. ADLERMAN. I mean one company trying to find out the secrets of another company.

Mr. WILSON. I have heard rumors of this. I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. There is nothing in the law to prohibit that at the present time?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, the electronics eavesdropping law would make it illegal but this is extremely difficult to prove. That is, if the Chicago Police Department wished to ignore the law of the land, I am confident that we could use electronic eavesdropping devices and no one would be able to prove that we were doing this. But since we are a law enforcement agency, we have adopted the policy of not following this procedure. So long as the law of Illinois says it is illegal, we will abide by the law.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I am talking about, let us say, a company in the field of chemical research trying to ascertain the secrets of another company. Do you know whether much of that is going on in Chicago?

Mr. WILSON. I have no certain knowledge of it, Mr. Adlerman. I understand that this does go on.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. You may proceed with your statement.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 493

Mr. WILSON. An effort was made by the Chicago Police Department in the last session of the Illinois Legislature to provide for wire-tapping under a court order based upon probable cause. The proposal was defeated by a strange alliance between those known to oppose anti-crime legislation and those committed to the support of civil liberties. The latter opposition developed despite what we believed to be entirely adequate safeguards to protect the right of privacy of the law-abiding citizen.

The fifth category involves inadequate substantive laws at the State level.

The police are often criticized for their failure to bring hoodlums to justice. Given additional manpower, skilled assistance, and the means for discovery, it remains unlikely that a greater degree of success would be achieved in prosecutions. Those individuals occupying top positions in organized criminal activity are not overtly in violation of existing laws. They are, however, reaping the profits from criminal activity engaged in by others—at their direction—whether it be gambling, prostitution, narcotics sale, arson, or murder.

On the local level, we occasionally manage to bring a hoodlum before a court for a traffic or other minor offense. If sufficient evidence were obtained to support a charge of conspiracy to commit an offense, the penalty provided under Illinois law is equal only to that for the substantive offense which in the case of vice activities, with the exception of narcotics, is a misdemeanor.

On a Federal level, prosecutions are more common but are based on an equally oblique attack through charges of tax evasion, transmission of information on, or receipts from, illegal activity, or failure to purchase gambling stamps.

The hard-to-realize fact is that we have not legislated it to be a crime to engage in that activity which we have come to refer to as “organized crime” and it follows that there are no meaningful punitive sanctions to be imposed.

And, Mr. Chairman, I was pleased to note in your introductory comments before this committee some weeks ago that one of the objectives you had in mind was legislation which might meet this purpose.

It was in recognition of this need that the Chicago Police Department had legislation introduced in the last session of the Illinois Legislature.

The present law against gambling in Illinois makes no distinction as to penalties between large-scale commercialized gambling and small-scale social gambling. Gambling, in either case, is a misdemeanor punishable only by a small fine for the first offense.

Under the circumstances, a long-drawn-out investigation, such as was described in Detroit this morning, to implicate higher-ups in a large-scale gambling enterprise would simply not be worth the effort. They would be convicted of a misdemeanor.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean even if they reached the top men who were engaged in a conspiracy to pursue gambling, a profitable enterprise and you could prove it on up to the top, the only penalty they would suffer would be a fine?

Mr. WILSON. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, it is not worth the cost, the effort you would have to go to detect him and to prosecute?

494 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. WILSON. That is right. Gambling in Illinois is a misdemeanor. (At this point Senator Brewster entered the hearing room.)

The CHAIRMAN. That would be true even though they were running a gambling casino in violation of the law?

Mr. WILSON. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Where they were probably making thousands of dollars a day out of it, taking in millions of dollars a year, it still would be a small fine?

Mr. WILSON. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the maximum fine?

Mr. WILSON. It is a fine or a jail sentence in the county jail, less than a year—up to a year. This is the maximum penalty. The average fines are $200, in that neighborhood.

The bill which was proposed established the crime of syndicated gambling and made it a felony punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary. The bill reached the calendar of the House of Representatives with unanimous committee approval. There it was permitted to languish and die in the closing days of the session without ever being called up for a vote. It was not ever discussed on the floor.

The sixth category is the failure to impose available sanctions.

In the design of our system for the administration of criminal justice, it was never contemplated that arrest, by itself, would constitute a punitive action without the imposition of sanctions by a court of law. But in a large number of our communities and especially in our large cities, we today engage in a daily treadmill operation in which petty offenders charged with gambling, prostitution, and narcotics violations are dismissed without punishment.

Such is the case despite the fact that evidence is legally obtained, admissible, and sufficient to establish guilt.

In most instances, failure to convict results from invoking trumped-up legal technicalities.

Light treatment by our courts reflects community attitudes toward such crimes—an attitude of tolerance which fails to recognize the relationship between a single violation and the need for suppressing all forms of vice.

The individual violation in any field of vice, when considered by itself, is not of great importance; when it is tolerated, it becomes increasingly difficult to deal with all other violations, and the opportunity for fertilizing and incubating organized crime is thereby created.

Those efforts which have been made by the police to enact legislation which would improve our ability to attack organized crime have drawn opposition from those concerned with the protection of our civil liberties. This opposition and other recent developments in the law of criminal procedure have had the unfortunate effect of creating the impression that the police are opposed to the guarantees of civil rights.

The fact remains that, under our form of government, the police have as their major responsibility the protection of the civil rights of all citizens. Recent police activities in Chicago, New York, and other cities in the protection of those engaged in peaceful picketing in behalf of the racial equality has served as a dramatic reminder of the delicate responsibilities of the police in this area. Protection is similarly afforded those whose appeal is for a more unpopular cause.

The police are not opposed to protecting and guaranteeing the civil rights of the criminal offender. They are disturbed by the fact that rules of evidence designed to protect the weak, the oppressed, and the indigent are, at the level of the trial court, being perverted and exploited to the benefit of the gangsters, the hoodlums, and the murderers.

It is our observation that these rules of evidence have not been particularly helpful to the weak and the oppressed. His greatest need is a lawyer. They have, however, been enormously helpful to the higher-ups in organized crime by enabling them to escape detection and prosecution.

(Members of the subcommittee present at this point: Senators McClellan, Jackson, and Brewster.)

Mr. WILSON. Most of the procedures to which I have reference are technicalities that arise out of supreme and appellate court decisions with respect to arrest, search and seizure, wiretapping, the use of electronic devices to record conversations and the admissibility of confessions. Many of these technicalities can and should be corrected by legislation.

In the absence of legislation, our courts have been filling the vacuum. This is an undesirable state of affairs because the courts must decide these questions on the basis of the facts in the individual cases before them without an opportunity to consider the broader implications of the effect of their decisions as precedents on the system of administration of criminal justice as a whole. It is axiomatic that hard cases make bad law.

(At this point Senator Jackson withdrew from the hearing room.)

Mr. WILSON. The picture which I have painted is one filled with frustrations. It is a picture of a handicapped and somewhat feeble effort on the part of a well-intentioned municipal police agency to cope with a problem of gigantic and overwhelming proportions. It is frankly a picture of failure and impotence. I expect that there are others in the field of municipal law enforcement who would be prepared to share my blunt but honest appraisal of our efforts.

(At this point Senator Javits entered the hearing room.)

Mr. WILSON. Municipal police agencies cannot escape their responsibility for the suppression of organized crime. Prior studies have pointed to the fact that efforts initiated at the Federal level would be to no avail without the honest and efficient enforcement of good State laws at the local level. But it is readily apparent that local efforts are equally curtailed and perhaps equally dependent upon investigations having a broader basis.

In making this observation, I recognize the commonly expressed fears of greater participation of the Federal Government in the exercise of the police function. Having devoted a lifetime to the strengthening of local law enforcement agencies, I have strong feelings of my own in opposition to a greater centralization of policing authority. I acknowledge, however, that there are some areas in which Federal participation is essential. I have not only accepted, but welcomed the role of the Federal agencies in the investigation and suppression of bank robberies, narcotics traffic, auto theft across State lines, and kidnaping. Serious as these crimes are, no one of them is as ominous nor constitutes as widespread a danger as does organized criminal activity. Federal participation in these areas has not undermined local law enforcement agencies; it has served to strengthen and support them.

As a municipal police administrator, I have often maintained that organized crime threatens the very existence of our society; that it is a far greater threat internally than is communism. I feel it is essential that we recognize, based on what I have said up to this point, that local police agencies are no better equipped to stage a successful fight against a nationwide network of organized crime than they are equipped to cope with the nationwide web of Communist infiltration.

There is need for recognizing and acknowledging organized crime to be a matter of Federal concern which will be of a continuing nature and which will require something more than improvised laws, token staffs, and occasional publicity. A frontal attack must be launched with laws, manpower, and resources adequate to the task. I offer the following recommendations:

1. Responsibility at the Federal level for the overall investigation and suppression of organized crime must be pinpointed by legislation and preferably placed in a single agency.

2. Manpower in sufficient numbers and of sufficiently high quality must be made available to fulfill this responsibility and to exploit the potential for achieving prosecutions under existing Federal law.

3. Full use must be made of existing Federal legislation as a basis for ferreting out organized criminal activity. Mindful of the limited powers of the Federal Government, there is need for further study of the possibility of enacting additional legislation based upon Federal powers in the fields of taxation and interstate commerce as a means of providing a more adequate basis for the prosecution of hoodlums.

4. A special effort should be made through Federal and State legislation to spell out the authority of the police in the area of arrest, search and seizure, and the admissibility of confessions so that vacuums in the law are not resolved in favor of criminals on the basis of individual cases without adequate concern for the overall workings of the entire system of criminal justice.

5. Legislation enabling Federal and State law enforcement agencies to engage in wiretapping under court order should be enacted with specific provisions for its use in the investigation of those crimes which are committed at the direction of higher-ups in organized crime. In enacting such legislation, however, we must be scrupulously careful to avoid introducing technicalities, such as the exclusionary rule, which would negate the objectives we are seeking to accomplish.

I do not wish to convey the impression that local police agencies should abdicate their responsibility in the field of organized crime. We, in the Chicago Police Department, will try again at the next session of the Illinois Legislature to obtain a more substantial basis for prosecution and additional means for discovery of evidence.

We will, in the meantime, continue to dry up the seedbeds of organized crime; continue to keep close tabs on the activities of the hoodlum element; and intensify our efforts to educate an apathetic public. The public must be made aware of the threat to society posed by organized crime and the tremendous cost in life and property, increased taxes and insurance rates, which is at stake. If this committee accomplishes nothing else, it will have been well worth the effort to have brought the problem out in the open for public view and discussion.

Let us hope that we can develop a ground swell of public opinion demanding that this parasitical menace called Cosa Nostra, or by any other name, be eradicated just as in an earlier day we took decisive action to rid ourselves of the burden of tribute to the Barbary pirates.

That, Mr. Senator, is the end of my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much, Mr. Wilson. It is an excellent statement. I followed you with a great deal of interest. Much of your problem is, in your particular area, you are handicapped by lack of adequate State and municipal laws to do your job as effectively as you would like to. I don't know how much it could help under that handicap. It would help some, however, if we had the Federal arm in these areas where you have specifically referred to them and recommended.

Mr. WILSON. Anything that would strengthen the enforcement powers of the Federal Government in this area would be a great help to the municipal police agencies, and legislative action by the Congress in the area of wiretapping, for example, would probably simplify to some degree our efforts in obtaining similar legislation in our own legislature.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the witness one question?

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Javits.

Senator JAVITS. I will not go into the merits. I just have one question, sir. We have had testimony in other cities as to allegedly legitimate fronts employed by these organized gangs for carrying on their activities. For example, in New York we had some testimony about some kinds of favoritism to dress shops, dress manufacturing establishments. Is there any parallel in Chicago? Do they like any particular kind of allegedly legitimate businesses?

Mr. WILSON. This is an area in which the director who is with me today is better informed. Would you care to speak to this question?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir. I am not prepared to particularize. I didn't bring records with me to be particular but they are in many legitimate businesses in our area.

Senator JAVITS. Is there any one particularly, or one or two, they favor?

Mr. DUFFY. I would say they favor those—mostly the amusement business—those businesses allied to amusement and they also are well established in the liquor industry.

Senator JAVITS. How are they established in the liquor industry?

Mr. DUFFY. Starting at the retail level to the level of the distilleries.

Senator JAVITS. Will you submit for the record, since you did not bring it with you, a memorandum on this question of legitimate business?

(Information may be found in appendix beginning on p. 621.)

Mr. DUFFY. I certainly will.

Senator JAVITS. Would you compare and expand on it here?

Mr. DUFFY. I would not care to expand on it without benefit of the records.

498 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator JAVITS. The two things that strike you at once are amusement and liquor that are favorite areas of alleged legitimate business?

Mr. DUFFY. Most recently in the past few years they are becoming very active in the finance industry, particularly in small loan companies, in banks.

Senator JAVITS. They ally themselves in any of these fields: liquor, amusement, banks with important companies?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir; they do. There is usually an interchange of these people in these various industries. Men identified in one industry are identified in two others as well through legitimate frontmen.

Senator JAVITS. You will give us a memorandum on it for the record?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that be included.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be received and printed in the record. If it is not too lengthy it will be printed in full. If it is, it will be made an exhibit.

You said "amusements." Does that include pinball machines?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How about vending machines; would they be included?

Mr. DUFFY. Some vending machines would be.

Senator JAVITS. May I ask just one other question of the superintendent? Superintendent, I notice that your charts speak of Chicago Italian organizations. Now there is a marked sensitivity on the part of the Italian community in this matter. I have just had a telegram—I put one in the record the other day—I have one now from a very responsible source, from the surrogate of New York County, one of our most distinguished judges. S. Samuel DeFalco, whom I happen to know very well. He sends me a wire, as president of the Italian-American Anti-Defamation League. He says:

I feel that the hearings currently being held and televised before the subcommittee of which you are a member is giving to the public a false impression and image to millions of law-abiding citizens of Italian origin thereby causing great damage to them. We feel certain consequences are not intended to be wrought by the committee. It is our earnest desire to be as helpful as possible to the committee in attaining its objectives. We believe it can be accomplished without further prejudice to the great body of American citizens of Italian extraction. We therefore welcome an opportunity of presenting our views to the committee through former Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora as adviser to our league.

I know Pecora as a very distinguished American. I will ask the chairman to consider this petition as to whether the subcommittee could or could not honor it but I think perhaps the best evidence on this question is from people like yourself, at the police level. Does this in any way characterize the Italo-American community of Chicago?

Mr. WILSON. Senator, I would like to say this. You referred to these charts as "our charts."

Senator JAVITS. These, I mean.

Mr. WILSON. These charts were not prepared by the Chicago Police Department. The persons who did prepare the charts apparently were influenced by the predominance of Italian names. But we have in our police department and in our city many, many fine Italians. I count among some of my best friends Italians and I would be as unhappy as would you and the judge to have any statement made by me construed as damaging the Italians as a group.

Senator JAVITS. In other words, as a high police official, you see no greater incidence of crime in that group than you see in other groups whether of Irish extraction, German extraction, or Jewish extraction, whatever they may be?

Mr. WILSON. No, I did not say that, Senator. I can only refer you to the names of the men involved not only in the Chicago charts, the Detroit charts, and active in New York. These names are predominantly Italian. But this does not mean that every Italian is a member of this kind of organization. They are cliqued together. Why, I don't know. But we do find associated large numbers of persons with Italian ancestry.

Senator JAVITS. But you see nothing whatever from your experience, including the charts, and so forth, which should in any way reflect upon any American of Italian extraction or make him feel there is any intention of casting any reflection upon the people as a group?

Mr. WILSON. I would hope not.

Senator JAVITS. I thank you. I would not even raise it—I might tell you that I feel it is even unwise to raise the question—except that apparently it is a matter of concern to very distinguished Americans of Italian extraction. So the best we can do is to make it very clear that there is no such remote intention.

The CHAIRMAN. I heard Valachi mention something about the Irish gang he belonged to that made my blood boil. I decided there were good Irishmen as well as bad Irishmen.

Senator JACKSON. Are you talking about the Irish north of Ireland or south of Ireland?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, there may be both.

Mr. WILSON. Senator McClellan, if there are further questions I will be glad to answer them. If there are no further questions I would ask to be excused. I have a plane leaving in 35 minutes which I shall be able to make.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any question by any other member of the committee?

We do want to thank you. I might ask you some more questions if you could stay but Captain Duffy is going to remain.

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. We surely want to thank you. We would like to talk a little more but you wish to catch a plane; you have been very helpful. I appreciate it, the committee appreciates it. I think the country appreciates what you folks are willing to do to come in here and give us this information and tell us what you need to help you protect law-abiding people of this Nation. We appreciate it very much. Thank you.

Mr. WILSON. Thank you, Senator.

(At this point Senator Javits withdrew from the hearing room and Senator Curtis entered.)

500 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman, Deputy Superintendent Joseph Morris of the Chicago Police Department has presented to us a statement which he intended to read. Unfortunately he could not be present today. The statement we have received from Mr. Morris is an affidavit with regard to this statement so that it can be introduced as a sworn document. The statement is an excellent history of organized crime from the period of 1919 down to the present day. This traces the Al Capone day, the Frank Nitti operations, and so forth. For our purposes, however, although it is excellent from a historical standpoint it does not appear to me that we need to go into all of the material at the present time but if we start on page 9 we begin with probably the more current insofar as organized crime in Chicago.

The CHAIRMAN. Now this is an affidavit that the committee has received. It is duly sworn to. The affiant intended to appear here in person.

Mr. O'DONNELL. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, without objection I am going to direct that the affidavit be printed in the record in full at this point.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I would like to suggest that Captain Duffy start reading from the top of page 9 on because I think the other is more historical insofar as we are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the affidavit then be printed in the record at this point down to page 9 or at the point where Captain Duffy begins reading and it will just continue then in its continuity.

Very well, Captain Duffy, you may proceed.

(The document referred to follows:)

AFFIDAVIT

STATE OF TEXAS,
County of Harris, ss:

Joseph F. Morris, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he is deputy superintendent of the Chicago, Ill., Police Department and commands the bureau of inspectional services;

That he prepared the attached statement of testimony before the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, U.S. Senate, and is familiar with the content thereof; and

That the said statement of testimony is true and correct in all respects.

(S) JOSEPH F. MORRIS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 9th day of October 1963.

(S) BARBARA M. CLEVELAND,

Notary Public in and for Harris County, Tex.

My commission expires June 1, 1965.

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH F. MORRIS, DEPUTY SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE, CITY OF CHICAGO

I consider it an honor to appear before this committee and to assist in the important task that you are performing. As deputy superintendent of the Chicago Police Department I am in charge of the bureau of inspectional services which is comparatively new in the Chicago Police Department, having been inaugurated in the 1960 reorganization. It is an arm of the department designed to keep the superintendent and his command group informed on conditions of police concern and on the suitability of police action in dealing with them.

This bureau is concerned primarily in two main areas of police activity—police conduct and organized crime. To keep a watchful eye on the conduct of the police department, to promote its efficiency and integrity, there are two divisions in this bureau: The inspection division and the internal investigation division. The inspection division conducts overt inspection of units, operations, installations, equipment, and records; recommends remedial action to correct deficiencies; and receives, investigates, and reports upon grievances of individuals. The inspection division has proven to be a valuable administrative tool.

The other division concerned with police conduct is the internal investigation division. The function of this division is to promote the initiation of disciplinary action at the lowest level of supervision and command, recognizing that discipline is a function of command. This division initiates field surveys and investigations to insure a high level of conduct by members of the department.

It also maintains a complaint register and records of the investigations of alleged misconduct, and the action taken; and conducts or assists in such investigations as indicated by the nature of the case. It also reviews reports of such investigations, resolves differences, in recommendations and, if indicated, makes independent recommendations. This unit also prepares cases for the department disciplinary board and the police board.

The internal investigation division insures that complaints against police officers are investigated thoroughly and impartially and we feel that it not only promotes the integrity of the police department but it also insures individual members against any attempt to smear or frame them.

While vice offenses (gambling, prostitution, narcotics, and liquor law violations) are the responsibility of the patrolman on the beat and the individual district commanders, this bureau has two divisions which concern themselves mainly with vice and the organized criminals who profit by vice activities, the vice control division and intelligence division. The vice control division conducts investigations for the detection and elimination of vice; maintains a continuing estimate of the vice situation and the department's vice control efforts; performs all police functions relating to the approval of city licenses; and acts on behalf of the superintendent in approving their issuance. It prepares department cases for presentation to the local liquor commission.

The main function of this division is to see whether the efforts of the department are directed properly in eliminating vice and to report to the superintendent on its findings.

The other unit concerned with organized crime is the intelligence division. This division reports to the superintendent on matters of intelligence; conducts field operations to produce intelligence on crime syndicate and subversive activities; maintains records pertinent to the intelligence function in order to further the operations of the division and other units of the department; disseminates intelligence within the department and other agencies, both on a volunteer and on a request basis; conducts special investigations at the direction of the superintendent and the deputy superintendent for inspectional services.

In this very difficult field of police activity, in which I feel that we are denied the proper tools with which to work, we are slowly making progress against organized crime. In fact, the Chicago Police Department is better equipped now than ever before to combat the powerful crime syndicate. Not only are we better organized, we have a much better atmosphere in which to work.

When I speak of Chicago, where I was born and reared, and where I have been a police officer for the past 31 years, I like to boast that our city is one of the Nation's leading centers of business and culture.

The virtues of Chicago are evident for all to see; however, there is another side to this picture which I do not enjoy recounting but which must be faced. The Al Capone gang was spawned in Chicago and its successors are still with us.

Al Capone was brought to Chicago in 1919 by John Torrio who inherited the mantle as vice lord of the city from Big Jim Colosimo. Colosimo was murdered when he kept an appointment made for him by Torrio. Capone was a member of the Five Points gang in New York and a prime suspect in a number of murders there before coming to Chicago. He lined up gambling and prostitution for Torrio who became the undisputed vice czar of Chicago and some southern and western suburbs. By 1924, Torrio was one of the most powerful hoodlums in the Nation. He owned and operated three breweries and had an interest in others. Gambling and illegal beer operations brought him tremendous wealth.

Torrio's downfall began in May 1924 when he and others were arrested in a raid on a brewery by Chicago police. The defendants were prosecuted by the Federal Government. John Torrio's immunity was over; he was sentenced to 9 months in jail. Early in January, before he began serving his sentence, an attempt was made on his life. He was wounded but recovered. His conviction, coupled with the attempted assassination was enough for Torrio. After serving his time he returned to the protection of Frank Costello and Lucky Luciano in New York. His abdication left Al Capone as head of the Chicago crime syndicate.

The value of the illicit empire inherited by Capone was established by records confiscated by police in a raid on the gang's headquarters in April 1925. Arrested at this time were Tony Arasso, John Patton, Joe Fusco and Frank Nitti. The records seized indicated that Capone and his henchmen were receiving millions of dollars from their illegal activities in beer, gambling, and prostitution. Also uncovered were customers' names and the names of Federal and local officials who were being paid off.

When Dever was elected mayor of Chicago in 1923 Capone moved his headquarters to Cicero and business continued to improve. He made strong political alliances in Chicago and the suburbs and with his imported killers ruled with an iron and bloody hand. During the first third of 1926 there were 29 gang killings in Chicago. The victims were, for the most part, rival gangsters or henchmen guilty of the doublecross. But the killing of William McSwiggin, an assistant State's attorney, and two companions, showed their utter contempt for established government.

With the reelection of "Big Bill" Thompson as mayor of Chicago in 1927, Capone, who had more or less confined his activities to the county outside of Chicago during Dever's administration, became more powerful than ever. Thompson had run on a "wide open town" pledge and when he became mayor all restraints were lifted. Capone's prestige was such that he was included among those in the greeting party to welcome Commander Francesco De Pinedo, "round the world flyers," representing Italy's Premier Mussolini. Officials explained that they believed Capone's presence would prevent possible anti-Fascist demonstrations, implying that Capone could maintain order where the responsible authorities could not. Legitimate enterprises were forced to pay gangsters for the privilege of staying in business. In less than 6 months in 1928, 62 bombings occurred in Chicago. Gambling was running wide open. The press alleged that policy racketeers were taking millions of dollars from poor people. When newspapermen asked the police official of the district where policy flourished to explain the presence of such wide-scale gambling he said in effect "Thompson was elected on a wide open platform. I am not going to interfere with policy unless I get orders from downtown. I am not going to be sent to the sticks." A few months later this police official became commissioner of police.

Other incidents occurred during the prohibition era which further reflects the attitude of the Capone syndicate toward government and law enforcement:

A newspaper reporter was murdered by gangsters.

A hoodlum leaving police headquarters in protective custody of a police lieutenant was attacked by gunmen. A bullet meant for the hoodlum killed the motorman of a passing streetcar.

The homes of Senator Deneen and John Swanton, a candidate for State's attorney, were bombed.

Armed thugs invaded polling places, kidnaped election officials and stole ballot boxes.

Seven men were lined up against the wall of a garage and men in police uniforms mowed them down with machineguns. This became known as the Saint Valentine Day's massacre.

In the fall of 1931 Al Capone was tried in Federal court for evasion of income taxes. He was convicted and sentenced to Alcatraz. Capone went to jail and never again returned to Chicago in an active capacity but his organization remained intact. Frank "The Enforcer" Nitti became the leader of the Capone forces.

The repeal of the 18th amendment left the syndicate with a much depleted income and it focused its attention on gambling; in 1933 there were 35 murders over the control of gambling in Chicago. But in spite of the attention that these murders attracted in the press, gambling continued to flourish. Kidnaping became another source of revenue for the mobsters.

It was at this time that the Capone mob became affiliated with Frank Costello. Joe Adonis, one of Costello's lieutenants had an interest in a big Chicago brewery. Following prohibition, Capone gangsters continued to operate the brewery through a front. Chicago's syndicate, in union with New York underworld leaders, continued to branch out. They met in Chicago to develop plans to take over labor unions. At these meetings were Paul Ricca, Frank Nitti, and Louis Campagna.

Among the first to come under their influence was the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, and Motion Picture Operators. The head of the local motion picture operators, Tom Maloy, who opposed the hoodlums, was murdered. A few days later a Capone henchman took over Maloy's union. The mob extorted thousands of dollars from Chicago theater owners in 1935. Operators from coast to coast were victimized in this manner.

In 1935, despite all the other avenues of revenue, gambling remained the principal source of the outfit's wealth. The syndicate still had strong political alliances, the protection afforded mob bosses Nitti, Ricca, Jack Guzik, Campagna, Charles Fischetti, Dago Lawrence Mangano, and others, was total.

They operated with no interference. The syndicate dominated the policy racket which was primarily a Negro operation. Negro policy figures either went to work for the outfit, were frightened out, or murdered.

During this period there were indications of official collusion. The police morals squad which was supposed to control gambling was accused of protecting gamblers. Civil service charges were filed against the commander of the squad and three of his subordinates for neglect of duty.

They were cleared by the civil service board but there was such a public outcry that Mayor Kelly appointed a committee of outstanding citizens to review the case. This committee was very critical of the civil service hearings and stated that the four officers should have been discharged. While all this was going on, two of the officers were promoted.

Chicago, of course, felt the impact of the events happening in Europe in 1939. The depression was definitely over, there were more jobs than workers, money was plentiful. The racketeers were prospering as never before even though we were on the verge of war. Gambling arrests were made but strictly for the record in most cases. If the police did make a good case the courts threw it out on some trumped-up technicality. The mob killings continued.

One of the killings, that of Edward J. O'Hare, president of Sportsman's Park racetrack, was very embarrassing to a judge who was criticized severely by the press for throwing out gambling cases as fast as the police brought them in.

The investigation into O'Hare's murder revealed that the judge owned stock in one of O'Hare's dog tracks and that he was a partner in a business venture with O'Hare and a bookmaker.

The syndicate gambling bosses did not have to worry about local law enforcement. However, some of them—Guzik, Skidmore, and Johnson, to name a few—neglected to share their loot with the Government and went to jail for their carelessness.

Testimony in Skidmore's trial disclosed that when he wanted to put the heat on a gambler he arranged to meet him in the office of the chief of the Cook County Highway Police who was a Chicago police captain on leave of absence. The trials of Johnson and Skidmore involved other public officials.

Frank Nitti committed suicide in 1943 after he was indicted with other prominent Capone gangsters, including Frank Maritote (alias Frank Diamond), Paul deLucia (alias Paul the Waiter Ricca), Louis "Little New York" Campagna, Phil D'Andrea, Ralph Pierce, and Charles "Cherry Nose" Gioe, for extorting millions from the moving picture industry.

Ricca took over the leadership of the Chicago syndicate until he went to prison. Tony Accardo, alias Joe Batters, then assumed leadership. A grand jury investigation, which was started in September 1943, conducted a searching investigation into Cook County gambling.

Many syndicate figures were indicted along with police and public officials. As a result, most gambling in Chicago and Cook County closed down. Even though most of those indicted were discharged on legal technicalities, the grand jury investigation had far-reaching effects. Some law enforcement officials were removed, protection was withdrawn, and many gamblers moved elsewhere.

In 1944 a series of gang killings occurred, apparently over control of gambling, which had resumed. It was not long before the Capone syndicate established itself again as the dominant factor in this field. The Capone gang went further.

They obtained control of the racing information service which is essential in the operation of illegal handbooks. When James M. Ragen, who controlled Continental Press, which had a monopoly over this business, refused to sell out to the syndicate they started a rival service and threatened gamblers who continued to use Ragen's service.

Two who did not heed their warnings were slain. Ragen, even though protected by bodyguards, was shot while riding in his car by killers riding in a truck. He died of his wounds 2 months later. Needless to say, the syndicate's wire service expanded throughout the Nation.

Under Mayor Kennelly, wide open gambling all but disappeared—gambling continued but on a "sneak basis." But the syndicate was not dead. In August 1947, Ricca, Gioe, Campagna, and D'Andrea were released on parole after serving but a bare minimum of their 10-year sentences.

A congressional committee inquiring into this unusual release heard testimony which revealed the tremendous power of the Capone syndicate nationally.

In the late summer of 1950, investigators for the Kefauver committee arrived in Chicago to lay the groundwork for hearings scheduled for a later date. As soon as the investigation began most of the syndicate members left town.

Testimony produced at the hearings disclosed that a vicious and powerful criminal syndicate had operated practically unmolested for more than a quarter of a century in the Chicago area. The arrogance of the Capone gang was evident when William Drury, a former police captain, was shotgunned to death while putting his car in his garage on the night before he was scheduled to give information to a committee investigator.

The committee did not concentrate its investigation on the Chicago Police Department, although two of Chicago's police captains were involved. One of them who was considered a shoo-in candidate for sheriff in the election just a few weeks away, astounded the committee members with his explanation of how he acquired his vast wealth.

Apparently his explanation of how he became the world's richest policeman did not convince the voters of Cook County because he lost the election decisively to an unknown opponent a few days after his testimony was published.

The other captain admitted being the recipient of a $32,500 cash gift from a notorious gambler. To build a home, he also borrowed $10,000 from William Skidmore, who was the man who arranged protection for syndicate gamblers.

Tony Accardo, who became the syndicate boss in 1943, came up through the ranks of the outfit. He was one of a group suspected in the St. Valentine Day murders. He was an intimate of such terrorists as Al Capone, "Machine Gun" Jack McGurn, Claude Maddox, Tough Tony Capezio, "Dago" Lawrence Mangano, "Cherry Nose" Gioe, Frank Liparoto (alias LaPorte), Mooney Giancana, Marshall Caifano, and others. He had the dubious distinction of being named on Chicago's public enemy list published by the Chicago Crime Commission. Virgil W. Peterson, the operating director of the Chicago Crime Commission, and the country's outstanding authority on organized crime and the Capone syndicate, describes these gangsters very aptly as "barbarians."

Accardo operated gambling joints that repaid him handsomely. He engineered the mob's efforts to take over the racing information service. He muscled his way into the policy racket in Chicago and into a lucrative gambling setup in Florida. His influence is also felt in the labor field. Until recently, he lived in a luxurious mansion in River Forest, a Chicago suburb.

His most serious brush with the law was his conviction for income tax evasion which was reversed by the U.S. circuit court of appeals in a 2-to-1 decision because of newspaper publicity during the trial. Accardo boasts that he has never spent a night in jail. He came close to it one night but was saved when a municipal court judge got out of bed and appeared at the police station and released him on his own personal recognizance.

Tony is supposed to have stepped aside and Gilormo Giangono, alias Momo Salvatore Giangono, alias Sam Mooney Giancana, replaced him. Giancana has the same general background as most of the syndicate hoods. He was a member of the infamous 42 gang which in the early 1950's were known as the young bloods. Moe can't boast of never having spent any nights behind bars, since he served a sentence in Joliet penitentiary for burglary.

The young bloods, consisting of such characters as Sam Battaglia, Marshall Caifano, Phil Alderisio, Sam DeSteffano, Charles Nicoletti, Albert Frabotta, the English brothers, Jackie Cerone, and others were the "soldiers" used by Accardo to take over the South Side policy racket.

The disclosures by Valachi concerning what he refers to as Cosa Nostra come as no real surprise to those who have had any contact with the syndicate. There are indications that the Capone mob was in close contact with mobsters from all over the country. It is also apparent that there is some sort of glue such as the Mafia, the Commission, the Cosa Nostra, or whatever it is called, that held them together.

I have barely touched on the highlights of Chicago's crime syndicate history. While through the years there have been numerous civic improvements in Chicago, the destruction of the Capone mob is not one of them. With this background, it is no wonder that we find it difficult to deal with the crime syndicate. However, until recently, there has never been an all-out effort made to eradicate organized crime. It is true that sporadic attacks were made in the past, but the problem has never been attacked in Chicago and Cook County as it is now.

The Cook County sheriff's police have been reorganized and revitalized; the State's attorney of Cook County has declared all-out war on the syndicate; cooperation between all local law-enforcement agencies and those of the Federal Government is excellent. As I mentioned earlier, the Chicago Police Department is in better shape now than ever before to subdue organized crime. Along with a general reorganization of the department, we are now developing an efficient intelligence unit. More important is the support received from the present city administration.

I agree with the proposals made to this committee by Superintendent Wilson. Restrictions that cripple the police must be removed. We have the huge task of restoring public confidence in local law enforcement. It is only in the last few years that the department has begun to overcome the effects of a long-standing public attitude that encouraged syndicated crime. We must educate the public.

The basis of organized crime's success is the lack of public knowledge concerning it. The tolerant and indifferent attitude which shrugs off gangland murders, wide-open gambling, and other forms of vice and the corruption of public officials is the same attitude which deprives us of key legislation, keeps corrupt officials in office, and withholds from law enforcement the testimony and support it needs to combat organized crime.

No one can remain aloof from this task. The syndicate has become such a powerful force in our society that its tentacles are reaching into all facets of our life and economy. Each level of government must play the part for which it is best suited in eradicating this evil, cancerous growth. and, in my opinion, the Federal Government must assume the leadership in this all-out war on syndicated crime. We have done this to combat the internal threat of communism; we must make the same kind of a coordinated attack on organized crime.

Mr. DUFFY. This concludes the statement.

(At this point Senator McClellan entered hearing room.)

The CHAIRMAN. You have been reading from the affidavit of Mr. Morris. I didn't hear all of it, I am sorry, as I had to be out of the hearing room for a few moments, but I am very much interested in what he says above. You might have some comment about it. He says:

The basis of organized crime's success is the lack of public knowledge concerning it.

I think we might add to that in some instances also the lack of interest. There is a complacency in some areas where even they know about crime, is there not?

Mr. DUFFY. I would say so; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. But particularly he seems to feel the lack of public knowledge concerning it. Something came out here today that is actually shocking. There are 976 murders that have been committed, executions which Superintendent Wilson referred to, and only 2 have been convicted for those crimes, only 2 out of the 976, I believe. That is shocking. I didn't realize that.

I am pretty well informed in this area, but I didn't realize it could be happening on that scale, of that consequence. It is shocking.

He points out that there will come a consciousness on the part of the public that this thing is their problem, that it is not just the law-enforcement officials up there in Chicago, or in New York, or in some other metropolitan area. This thing is endangering society, endangering the peace and security of all of our people.

There is another thing that attracted my attention. He said:

The tolerant and indifferent attitude which shrugs off gangland murders, wide-open gambling, and other forms of vice, and the corruption of public officials, is the same attitude which deprives us of key legislation and keeps corrupt officials in office—and so forth.

It has been said, and you might want to make some comment on this, frequently that organized crime or syndicated crime simply cannot survive, cannot thrive in a community except it is able to reach and corrupt law enforcement officials. I don't agree with that altogether. I think there are instances, maybe, where they are corrupted, and I don't doubt that, but at the same time, this testimony here has revealed how difficult it is to reach the men at the top, to reach those who are the brains of it, who plan it and who profit from it the most, who direct it.

It is a difficult job, even though officials are honest and doing everything they can. For that reason, I think we are learning here from these facts that are coming out that we ought to go all out. The Congress has a duty to pass all laws that can possibly be of assistance to law enforcement officials, all that can come within the framework of the Constitution, and at the same time protect the liberties and the individual rights of our citizens.

Are there any comments? Are there any questions?

If not, do you have a statement of your own that you wish to make?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir, I do.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Captain, you may proceed.

Mr. DUFFY. I would like to take this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation for the work this committee is doing in exposing the crime syndicate. I feel privileged to be called upon to assist the committee in this most important endeavor.

The mission of the intelligence division of the Chicago Police Department is to contribute to the operations of the department through the detection, prevention, and neutralization of subversive and crime syndicate activities.

When I use the term "crime syndicate" I am referring to a particular criminal organization known variously in the Chicago area as "the outfit," "the mob," the "Mafia," and, most recently, "Cosa Nostra." For the purpose of distinguishing this particular group of criminals from other criminal groups such as robbers, burglars, and so forth, the U.S. Attorney General's Division on

Organized Crime described it as having the following eight characteristics:

1. A substantial number of members.
2. The group is aggressively engaged in attempts to subvert the process of government by well-organized endeavors to capture or otherwise make ineffectual the three branches of our local and Federal Government by various forms of bribery and corruption.
3. The primary purpose of this group is to dominate those categories of crime which we refer to as organized crime. By "organized crime" I mean the following: Gambling, illegal distribution of narcotics, commercialized prostitution, labor and management racketeering, loan sharking, and the infiltration of the crime syndicate into legitimate enterprises.
4. The group anticipates a continuous, indefinite life span of operations.
5. Members habitually engage in similar criminal activity as a primary source of income.
6. Top leadership and management people primarily engage in crimes of conspiracy, and are usually divorced from operations by two or more levels. Oftentimes, the people involved at these various levels do not know the identity of each other.
7. The group is dedicated to commit murder and other acts of violence upon any member who informs on the group, or who, in any way, poses a threat to the group, and to commit similar violence on any outsider who seriously threatens the security of the group.
8. The last characteristic, and most significant to this committee, is that the group does not recognize any geographical boundaries of operations and is often associated in crime with similar groups in other cities, States, and, in some instances, in other countries.

These characteristics certainly apply to a group of criminals and their associates who have operated in and around Chicago for a great many years.

We estimate that there is a nucleus group of some 300 men in the Chicago area who devote their full-time efforts to the organization, direction, and control of a far greater number of people involved in gambling, narcotics distribution, pandering, loan sharking, labor racketeering, and acts of terrorism.

These men have been around Chicago for a long time. Some of them date back to the Capone era. They not only survived the gang wars of the late twenties and early thirties, but most of them have not been convicted of any crime for the past two decades or so. Some of them may have been rivals or enemies during the open gang war era, but this is not so today. They associate with each other socially; members of their family often intermarry, and, unlike less influential members of the syndicate, their lives are not expendable. They are identified interchangeably in the categories of organized crime. Most of them are men of considerable means, yet they are without a plausible explanation as to their source of wealth.

This group, unlike a burglary or robbery gang, which is satisfied to scatter after completion of a certain number of successful burglaries or robberies, anticipates a continuous, indefinite life span of operations. We have seen evidence of a system of training and promotion, wherein those who appear to be the bosses of today are grooming the overlords of tomorrow. They have made themselves a permanent part of our community by investing in homes of some of our most fashionable suburbs, by raising families and cultivating respectable people as friends and otherwise assuming the posture of permanent residents. They, themselves, are rarely involved in the actual commission of crimes for which they are responsible.

Of the 300 or so full-time members, there are 26 who appear to be the most influential and whom we believe to be responsible for the cohesiveness of the entire group. As I name these 26 men, I will briefly summarize pertinent information regarding them. The 26 are as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Do we have a chart showing them?

Mr. DUFFY. They are identified on the chart, sir; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That chart has not been placed into the record yet.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Are you familiar with both of these charts that are up here, Mr. Duffy?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'DONNELL. You can identify these charts as the ones that have been prepared?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'DONNELL. The committee staff actually, physically, prepared them, but they sent them out to Chicago and I think you went over them; is that correct?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have two charts, one of them being "Overall Chicago Area, Bosses and Lieutenants," is that correct?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you help prepare that chart?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir. We identified the people named on this chart as being most influential.

The CHAIRMAN. You have gone over that chart for accuracy?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you can verify its accuracy to the best of your knowledge?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The chart may be received. It may be printed in the record and it may be made exhibit No. 39.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 39" for reference, and faces this page:)

(157)

The CHAIRMAN. We have another chart, a smaller chart that you presented of the "Nonmember Associates of the Chicago Organization, Overall Chicago Area," is that correct?

Mr. DUFFY. That is what it says on the chart; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I am trying to identify the chart, to distinguish between the two charts.

Mr. DUFFY. We in the Chicago area, in identifying the crime syndicate and being particularly interested in Valachi's testimony, have thought quite a while now that the syndicate, what we refer to as the crime syndicate, is comprised of two groups. One group we refer to as the Mafia-type group.

The CHAIRMAN. Which group is that?

Mr. DUFFY. This would be the group titled here as "The Chicago Italian Organization."

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 509

The CHAIRMAN. You have two of them. The large chart has just been marked "Exhibit No. 39." Now you have a smaller chart and I want you to identify that so that I can make it an exhibit and we can refer to it, the smaller chart.

Mr. DUFFY. The smaller chart would represent the people we identified to the committee as being those people who we believe did not belong to the Mafia-type group, but nevertheless did belong to the crime syndicate.

The CHAIRMAN. You can verify that chart for accuracy to the best of your knowledge?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That chart may be made exhibit No. 40, and printed in the record. Now, we can keep the two charts in mind and refer to them by exhibit number and thus properly identify them.

(Document referred to, marked "Exhibit No. 40," for reference, faces this page:)

(158)

Mr. O'DONNELL. May I interrupt for a moment? As I understand it, you are going to discuss the 26 at the top of both charts. You are not going into details insofar as discussing the activities of the other individuals, although you have that information with you, which you will submit as an exhibit?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Go ahead.

Mr. DUFFY. In referring to these names, I will briefly summarize the information I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you concluded?

Mr. DUFFY. No, sir. From the countless investigations and after long analysis—

The CHAIRMAN. Before you start that, you have concluded with the names. I see seven on this list that certainly do not have Italian names. So this clearly indicates that you have not selected just people with Italian names, but you have a number of people that don't have Italian names at all, at least seven on this list that you have just given.

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir; that is absolutely correct.

The CHAIRMAN. It just occurred to me that this should serve to demonstrate that there are others engaged in criminal activities besides Italians in this country, plenty of them.

You may proceed.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Those seven mentioned by the chairman are listed on the second chart which is the nonmember associates; is that correct?

Mr. DUFFY. Nonmember of the Mafia-type group; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. DUFFY. From countless investigations, and after long analysis, we have concluded that the one single characteristic which is most responsible for the success and continuity of this crime syndicate is the ability of the group to commit murder and other acts of violence without compunction.

I cannot emphasize this point too strongly. Time and again we have been frustrated in our efforts because of the terror with which this group is regarded by not only their own people, but also by a considerable percentage of our legitimate citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. Could you give us some illustration of what you just stated about these folks being able to instill fear into people other than their own members, even the legitimate citizens of the community? What do you mean by that? Give us some illustration of it.

Mr. DUFFY. As I stated in the formal statement, we have been frustrated in investigations, when we have become aware of people, legitimate people, being victimized by these crime syndicate members, and when during the course of the investigation we would confront the legitimate citizen with the information we had, without having had a complaint from this legitimate citizen, and asking him to cooperate with us to the extent of appearing before a grand jury and testifying about his involvement with these people, wherein he would be threatened with bodily harm, people have just refused to cooperate, stating that they were afraid for their lives.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be cases primarily, I assume, of extortion, where they required them to pay for protection?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir; in most instances.

The CHAIRMAN. That is one instance, at least. And the people imposed upon in that way became the victims of this terrorism and extortion and are afraid to cooperate with the law enforcement officials because of threats that are made against them, threats of violence.

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir. They are terrorized.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have many such instances, or are there relatively few instances like that?

Mr. DUFFY. No, I would say we have quite a few; enough to become very alarmed about it.

The CHAIRMAN. And that makes it difficult. In other words, they are simply paying tribute to these armed criminals.

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

On page 11 of Deputy Superintendent Morris' statement (page 504 of the hearings) he says:

Tony Accardo, who became the syndicate boss in 1943, came up through the ranks of the outfit.

Is that the Tony Accardo on the chart you mentioned as No. 2, I believe?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'DONNELL. And subsequently, at page 504, he stated:

Tony is supposed to have stepped aside and Gilormo Giangono, alias Momo Salvatore Giangomo, alias Sam "Mooney" Giancana, replaced him.

Is that the same individual on the chart that you discussed?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir; it is.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Do you have in your possession and can you tell us anything concerning the so-called "hit car"?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir, I do. If I might read an excerpt from one of our reports concerning this hit car—

Mr. O'DONNELL. Can you explain what you mean by a "hit car"?

Mr. DUFFY. It is the slang reference of the underworld to an automobile which is used to make a fast getaway from the scene of a killing in which they are involved, or, in some instances, to haul away the kidnaped victim to be murdered to another location.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Fine.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Mr. DUFFY. On May 2, 1962, the Chicago police received a call that a suspicious automobile was parked in front of 1750 Superior Street, in Chicago. Upon investigation, police officers discovered a 1962 Ford sedan parked at the specified location. Crouched on the floor of the car to avoid detection were two notorious Capone syndicate hoodlums, Philip Alderisio, of 515 Longcommon Road, Riverside, Ill., and Charles Nicoletti, of 1638 North 19th Avenue, Melrose Park, Ill. Alderisio and Nicoletti informed the investigating officers that the car did not belong to them and they had no idea as to the identity of its owner.

514 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

They insisted that they were merely sitting on the floor of the automobile waiting for some unidentified person when the police arrived at 1 a.m. on May 2, 1962.

Alderisio and Nicoletti were taken into custody and subsequently released on a $1,000 bond.

The automobile in which Alderisio and Nicoletti were riding at the time of their arrest was registered in the name of Walter Getz, of 9340 South New England Avenue in Oak Lawn, Ill. This address turned out to be a vacant lot, and the Walter Getz nonexistent.

Under the dashboard of this automobile were concealed three switches. Two of these switches enabled the operators of the car to disconnect the taillights. Without taillights, the police would have difficulty in following the car at night.

The third switch turned on an electric motor which opened a hidden compartment in the back rest of the front seat. This compartment was fitted with brackets to hold shotguns and rifles. And by demonstrating this particular opening in the back rest, we found that a machine gun could be secreted in the compartment also.

The CHAIRMAN. May I present to you at this point some four or five photographs which you may identify as photographs of the car to which you referred?

They may be received in bulk as exhibit No. 41.

(The photographs were handed to the witness.)

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You do so identify them?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be received as indicated.

(The photographs referred to marked "Exhibit No. 41" for reference, may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Duffy, as I understand it, this hit car is an automobile that to all intents and purposes appears to be a regular car and you would not know that the guns were hidden in the back compartment unless a diligent search was made and the car taken apart?

Mr. DUFFY. A most diligent search. As a matter of fact, it escaped our detection on the first search.

Mr. O'DONNELL. And the two individuals that you mentioned are on the chart?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir, they are.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Insofar as narcotics, and I am trying to speed this up so that you can go home tonight if possible, as I understand it, there are four individuals on that chart up there, and I am talking about the Chicago Italian organization chart, that have been arrested for narcotics. Am I correct?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'DONNELL. These are Charles Nicoletti, Frank Teutonico, James Cordovano, and Joseph DiCarco; is that correct?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir. They were convicted for narcotics violations.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Right. And I understand that there are approximately four on the chart also who are suspicious in dealing in narcotics because, although they have not been convicted, they have been arrested. Am I correct?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 515

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir. There are a total of five.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Thank you very much.

These would be Felix Alderisio, who is on the chart as are the others, Rocco DeGrazia, Samuel Cesario, Joseph LaBarbara, and Charles DiCarco. Is that correct?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Now, as I understand it, all of these arrests with regard to these last five who are suspected of dealing in narcotics, occurred prior to 1949. In other words, it would be 1948 or previously?

Mr. DUFFY. I think so. I am not positive about that.

Mr. O'DONNELL. What I am thinking of is Valachi testified to the effect that in 1948, the word went out to stop dealing in narcotics in Chicago, and each member of the organization would receive $200 or $250 a week.

I think this more or less indicates this to be the case because of the relative negative amount of activity in narcotics of those on the chart and the fact that there has been very little narcotic play in Chicago from the police standpoint since 1948.

Do you follow me?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I would like to present to you and have introduced as an exhibit, a little pamphlet that you have prepared for us which goes into all of the individuals on the chart, into their backgrounds, their criminal arrests, their history, their police department records and so forth.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have this presented as an exhibit at the present time in bulk.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you prepare these for the committee?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you so recognize them?

Mr. DUFFY. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be received, then, as exhibit No. 42.

(The documents referred to marked "Exhibit No. 42" for reference, may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I have previously been sworn, and at my specific request all of the names on these two charts were presented to the FBI and they furnished us with the available records on all individuals.

I would like to have these put in as an exhibit at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. They may be made exhibit No. 43.

(The documents referred to marked "Exhibit No. 43" for reference, may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Anything else?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I would like to state, Mr. Chairman, that a surprisingly large number of the individuals on the chart have previously appeared before the committee as our records will indicate.

I have in front of me a list showing that Anthony Accardo, Joseph Aiuppa, Sam Battaglia, Marshall—

The CHAIRMAN. Have you one there that appeared before the committee who did not take the fifth amendment?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I have no one before me that did not take the fifth amendment on the Italian Chicago organization chart. They all took the fifth.

516 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Of four who appeared who are on the associate chart, three took the fifth and one did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Hurrah for him.

Is there anything further?

Let those be filed and printed in the record.

Let the record show that Mr. O'Donnell is now testifying as he places these into the record.

SENATE APPEARANCES OF NONMEMBER ASSOCIATES OF CHICAGO-ITALIAN ORGANIZATION

ALEX, GUSSIE

Appeared before Select Labor Committee on July 31, 1958, in connection with investigation into the activities of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders Union (Chicago area). Took the fifth 39 times. Declined to testify as to occupation, union activities, association with old Capone mob, all activities, associations, family relationships by blood or marriage, source of income, etc.

SMITH, FRED THOMAS

Appeared before Select Labor Committee on February 25, 1959, in connection with investigation into the coin-operated amusement and vending machine industry. Answered three questions, as to name, lawyer, and waiver of counsel. Took fifth all other times (53). Declined to give information re business, associates, income, etc.

VOGEL, EDWARD

Appeared before Select Labor Committee on February 25, 1959, in connection with investigation into the coin-operated amusement and vending machine industry. Took the fifth 39 times—practically in response to every question. Declined to testify as to Capone connections, business, associates, etc.

ZAPPAS, GUS

Appeared before Select Labor Committee on August 15, 1958, in connection with the investigation into the activities of Hoffa and the Teamsters Union. He did not take the fifth at any time although questioned at some length. He answered readily enough, but appeared to be hedging at times with reference to his connection with State Cab, and his relations with certain individuals.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 517

Mr. O'DONNELL. On another occasion, and I think this should be reflected in the record, Deputy Superintendent Joseph Morris and William Duffy, who is here before us today, testified before the select committee on July 10, 1958, with regards to the Chicago syndicate's attempt to organize a new restaurant association and new tavern association.

The plan was to take over the wholesalers and distributors association and form a statewide association representing all levels of the industry.

Many of the individuals involved in that particular situation, such as Tony Accardo, Ross Piro, Jimmy Allegetti, Joseph Divarco, "Teets" Battaglia, "Smokes" Aloisio, and John Lardino are also on this chart.

(The document referred to follows:)

JOHN LARDINO, HOTEL AND RESTAURANT WORKERS' LOCAL No. 593

Deputy Superintendent (at that time Lt.) Joseph F. Morris and Director (at that time Patrolman) William J. Duffy testified before the select committee July 10, 1958, about the efforts of the Chicago syndicate to organize a new restaurant association and a new tavern association (the Metropolitan Restaurant Association and the Federated Liquor Dealers' Association) to act in collusion with Hotel and Restaurant Workers' Local No. 593 for the purpose of seizing control of the liquor industry.

The plan was to take over the wholesalers' and distributors' associations and to form a statewide association representing all levels of the industry.

They could then extort a certain percentage of every barrel and case of beer distributed in the State.

The cooperation of the union was necessary to the operation and cooperation was furnished by John Lardino, executive director of Local 593, Hotel and Restaurant Workers Union.

James Weinberg and Paul "Needlenose" Labriola were assigned by the syndicate to organize the two associations. Both have since been murdered.

Both associations failed because of internal dissension and police pressure.

Participating at various times for the syndicate were Tony Accardo, Ross Piro, Jimmy Allegetti, Joseph "Little Caesar" Divarco, Eddy Sturch, Tough Tony Capezio (since deceased), "Teets" Battaglia, "Smokes" Aloisio, Bruno Roti, (deceased), and Sam "Golf Bag" Hunt (deceased), who reportedly was the real boss of the new restaurant association.

James Weinberg was heard to say that Bruno Roti was "one of the 'mustach' boys" and a Mafia member.

Tony Accardo, Ross Piro, Jimmy Allegetti, Joseph Divarco, "Teets" Battaglia, and "Smokes" Aloisio are on the chart. So is John Lardino.

After taking the fifth 60 times before the select committee on July 16, 1958, Lardino was discharged from his union position.

Mr. O'DONNELL. We have nothing further, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Duffy, we thank you very much for your appearance before the committee today.

The committee will stand in recess until 10:30 Tuesday morning next.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of recess were Senators McClellan and Jackson.)

(Whereupon, at 4:15 p.m., the subcommittee recessed to reconvene at 10:30 a.m., Tuesday, October 15, 1963.)

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1963

U.S. SENATE,
OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
Washington, D.C.

The subcommittee met at 10:50 a.m., in the caucus room, Old Senate Office Building pursuant to Senate Resolution 17, agreed to March 14, 1963, Senator John L. McClellan (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat, Arkansas; Senator Edmund S. Muskie, Democrat, Maine; Senator Thomas J. McIntyre, Democrat, New Hampshire; Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, New York.

Also present: Jerome S. Adlerman, general counsel; Donald F. O'Donnell, chief counsel; Philip W. Morgan, chief counsel to the minority; Paul E. Kamerick, assistant counsel; Arthur G. Kaplan, assistant counsel; Eugene J. Marshall, Bureau of Narcotics; Martin Pera, Bureau of Narcotics; Ruth Y. Watt, chief clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will be in order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of convening: Senators McClellan and Muskie.)

The CHAIRMAN. Counsel, call your witnesses.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Chief Brown and Sergeant de la Llana.

TESTIMONY OF NEIL G. BROWN AND JACK de la LLANA

The CHAIRMAN. Do you and each of you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. BROWN. I do.

Mr. DE LA LLANA. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, will you identify yourselves, beginning with you on my right, and identify yourself for the record, please?

Mr. BROWN. I am Neil Brown, chief of police, Tampa, Fla.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Brown, how long have you held the position you now hold?

Mr. BROWN. Four years.

The CHAIRMAN. What was your previous experience and occupation?

Mr. BROWN. I have been in the police department 16 years, and served as inspector of detectives just prior to my appointment as chief.

The CHAIRMAN. All of your police service has been in Tampa?

520 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. And then Sergeant de la Llana, will you identify yourself, please, sir?

Mr. DE LA LLANA. Jack de la Llana, Tampa Police Department. I have been with the police department for 9 years, and attached to the homicide division for 4 years before starting the criminal intelligence unit of the Tampa Police Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you had previous police service?

Mr. DE LA LLANA. My first experience was 9 years ago, when I started first with the force.

The CHAIRMAN. Chief Brown, do you have a statement, a prepared statement?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, I do, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. I have a copy of it before me, and I see it has several pages. Do you wish to read all of it?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir; I would like to read it to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, then, you may proceed.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman and members of the subcommittee, I am Neil G. Brown, chief of the Police Department of the city of Tampa, Fla.

I have been a member of the Tampa Police Department for the past 16 years, and I have been chief of the department for the past 4 years. Prior to my appointment as chief, I served as inspector of detectives. I am a graduate of the National Police Academy of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and a member of the Tampa Bay Area Chiefs of Police Association and of the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

With me here today is Sgt. Jack de la Llana who, at my direction, formed our department's first criminal intelligence unit in February of 1962, and has been its director since that time. Sergeant de la Llana also holds the important post of chairman of the Florida Intelligence Unit, a statewide agency which coordinates information amongst intelligence units in cities throughout the State of Florida.

In addition to Sergeant de la Llana, whose diligent work and knowledge of criminal operations has provided much of the foundation for my statement to you, I feel fortunate in being accompanied also by Sgt. William Branch of the intelligence division of the Orlando Police Department. Sergeant Branch is presently attending the National Academy of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He has been a member of the Orlando Police Department since 1951, and a detective sergeant since 1956. He is particularly familiar with organized gambling operations in the central Florida area, and I believe his presentation of that situation will be of material value to this inquiry.

I feel privileged to be able to testify before you today. I believe that the facts I can present here about organized crime operations in Tampa will help you and the American public realize the seriousness of this problem, and our Nation's emergent need for further Federal legislation to combat an evil that has clearly expanded beyond the powers of municipal law enforcement to contain, suppress and eliminate it.

Tampa has a large and respected Italian population, who are considered in all respects to be an asset to our community. Unfortunately, a small percentage of this group of citizens have achieved a notoriety greatly disproportionate to their numbers, because of their continuous activity in criminal and racketeering enterprises. The people of our city refer to this group as "the Sicilian underworld" or "the Mafia."

Our growing concern with this criminal group was crystallized in 1956 when a Hillsborough County grand jury was empaneled in Tampa to investigate and determine the truth of allegations that the Mafia was then operating in Tampa. The pertinent part of that grand jury's report stated:

* * * there are some individuals who believe that a Mafia or Black Hand exists and operates in this community, but they are in the minority. * * * The evidence presented, the volume of written material examined, and witnesses interviews point to the existence in this community of an organized crime element whose methods of operation are similar to the pattern of the Sicilian Mafia as we understand it. * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Chief, let me ask you, prior to this development before the grand jury, before the grand jury made this finding, were you the law enforcement officials or in the police department?

Mr. BROWN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you suspicious that such an organization existed in your city?

Mr. BROWN. Oh, yes; law enforcement has been aware that this has been there.

The CHAIRMAN. There was something, you felt confident, but you were unable to bring it out in concrete proof; is that correct?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. So you had been trying to combat it without being able to get it out in the open?

Mr. BROWN. That is exactly right.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Proceed.

Mr. BROWN (reading):

* * * our records indicate that the vast majority of our unsolved crimes stem from underworld activity involving persons of Sicilian or Italian ancestry * * *

The CHAIRMAN. We had some startling information here the other day from the Chicago chief of police with respect to some 976 murders, gangland style, that had been committed over a period of years, and only 2 of them had been solved. That is, officially solved by court determination or court action.

Mr. BROWN. That is typical.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the ratio in your community, if you can give us some idea about it?

Mr. BROWN. I will bring that out in my statement, but it is just like Chicago.

The CHAIRMAN. Something along that line?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That struck me as one of the most frightening developments of information that I have heard regarding crime. I just couldn't believe that 976 murders, and apparently just murder in the first-degree fashion, could be committed in an area like Metropolitan Chicago over a period of years, and only 2 of them could be solved. It thoroughly demonstrates to me the great menace and the danger of organized mobs committing crime.

You say: "Well, they probably killed each other pretty much." That may be true, but they kill each other because of the extortionate operations that they are engaged in, to the detriment of the public at large, and to the detriment of innocent people who can't help themselves. It focuses and emphasizes how serious this menace is.

Very well, you may proceed.

Mr. BROWN. Notwithstanding these findings, the grand jury concluded that there was no national or local Mafia in Tampa. I would like to submit as exhibit 1 a certified copy of the report of the grand jury dated March 30, 1956.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, this report of the grand jury will be received and it may be made exhibit No. 44, and exhibit 1 to this witness' testimony.

I may later direct it be printed, but as of now we will just let it be filed as an exhibit for reference.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 44" for reference, and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. BROWN. It seems likely to me that the grand jury failed to acknowledge without qualification the presence of the Mafia in Tampa because it sought a pattern of Mafia operations similar to the historical Sicilian tradition of primitive and direct extortion, rather than the sophisticated and polished control of rackets that now characterize that organization.

The CHAIRMAN. I take it from that last statement that you feel that they have considerably improved their technique.

Mr. BROWN. Very much so.

The CHAIRMAN. Of crime operations.

Mr. BROWN. Very much.

Senator MUSKIE. May I ask a question, Chief, there?

As I understand what you have just testified relative to the grand jury's report, they acknowledged that there was some evidence of the existence of Sicilian Mafia in the community, but apparently felt that evidence was not conclusive; is that a correct summary?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct; yes, Senator. The Tampa Police Department, however, has long been aware that many criminals in our area have local reputations as Mafiosi. My staff and I have made a careful evaluation of those reputations, based upon personal knowledge, criminal records, surveillance reports, personal histories, familial relationships, statistical analyses, reports from confidential informants, information from Federal and local law-enforcement agencies, and other customary police intelligence sources.

It is our considered conclusion that the Mafia exists in Tampa, that it controls most illegal gambling in Tampa and central Florida, and that its members have interstate and international ties to other Mafia groups.

The organization of the Mafia in the Tampa area is best understood from a chart we have formulated which I submit to this subcommittee as our exhibit No. 2.

Senator MUSKIE. Before we get to that, Chief, may I ask another question? The grand jury to which you referred sat in 1956, am I correct?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct, sir.

Senator MUSKIE. That is 7 years ago. Do you think you have accumulated additional evidence as to the existence of the Mafia in Tampa which would justify a new reference to the grand jury?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; I believe so.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 523

Senator MUSKIE. Are you planning that?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. This chart may be received as exhibit No. 45 and we will direct it be printed in the record if it can be, as far as it can be. The title of it is "The Mafia Organization in the Tampa, Fla., Area."

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 45" for reference and faces this page.)

(159)

The CHAIRMAN. Would you say the operations of this organized group are not confined just to the city limits of Tampa, but they are in the area?

Mr. BROWN. By all means; the entire area.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. This chart is now a part of the record and, if you wish to comment about it, we will proceed with your statement.

Mr. BROWN. The chart is keyed to show only the criminal, business, and familial interrelationships and activities of the persons named, although other criteria figured in our categorization of these persons. Of course, this chart cannot be considered as a definitive "table of organization" of the Tampa Mafia, because it is but a simplified representation of an organization that is in a constant state of flux, and about which we know we still have many things to learn.

However, I believe it is completely accurate in showing that Santo Trafficante is the boss of this criminal group. Indeed, it is to Santo Trafficante that Tampa owes the dubious distinction of having been represented at the notorious crime convention at Apalachin, N.Y., in November 1957.

The CHAIRMAN. I notice you designate or refer to this group as the Mafia. Would you say that it is the same group that has been referred to by the famous witness, Joe Valachi?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir; it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Whether he calls it Cosa Nostra or the Mafia makes no difference. This is the organized crime group to which you referred?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct, Senator; this is the group.

Senator MUSKIE. May I ask a question there?

Under this group, there is another group which you describe as nonmember associates and employees. Is that intended to suggest that the people who are so described know nothing about the identity of their employers and the organization of which they are a part?

Mr. BROWN. Senator, that is a part of the insulation of the group. They have many employees, and as we go into the statement, to show how in this gambling operation the seller is non-Sicilian in most cases, and he reports to another member up the ladder, and so on up. Many of these people are nonmembers of the Mafia as it is.

Senator MUSKIE. Do they know they are engaged in criminal activities?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Senator MUSKIE. They know they are a part of a criminal organization?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Senator MUSKIE. But they are not members?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

524 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator MUSKIE. What do they need to do to become members in the Tampa area?

Mr. BROWN. Well, I think I can clarify that later on in the statement, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. All right; you may proceed.

Mr. BROWN. Santo Trafficante, Jr., was born in Tampa on November 14, 1914. He was one of five brothers. He maintains residence today in Tampa and in Miami. He previously lived in Havana, Cuba, where he owned and operated gambling casinos under the Battista regime. When Fidel Castro took over, Trafficante's gambling operations were stopped. He was expelled from Cuba and returned to the United States. He inherited the control of the numbers racket in central Florida which his father, Santo Trafficante, Sr., who died in 1954, and he continues to head this operation.

Testimony in the 1958 hearings of the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field identified Santo Trafficante, Jr., in the operation of the Sans Souci gambling casino in Havana. That testimony stated that Trafficante took over the Sans Souci from the Mannarino brothers in Pittsburgh, Pa. Gabriel Mannarino was a fellow delegate with Santo Trafficante, Jr., to the Apalachin crime convention in 1957.

Additional testimony named Trafficante, Jr., as the key figure in the Mafia in Tampa, stating, as the Tampa police had long known, that he succeeded his father as the major racketeer in the city.

Other information substantiated by our files reveals that Trafficante is an associate of such notorious criminals as Meyer Lansky, Joseph Bonanno, Sam Giancana, Aniello Dellacroce, Joseph Stassi, Sam Mannarino, Joseph Arcuri, and of Joseph Riccobono, also known as Staten Island Joe, who had been closely allied with the elder Trafficante, and was also discovered at the Apalachin meeting.

When Joseph Profaci's daughter Carmella married Anthony Tocco, son of Detroit mobster William "Black Bill" Tocco, in Brooklyn on June 4, 1955, one of the guests at the reception in the Hotel Commodore in New York was Santo Trafficante, Jr. Among those who also attended were 13 other persons who later attended the Apalachin conference, as well as other notorious Mafia figures, such as Frank Livorsi, Thomas and John Dioguardi, Tony and Albert Anastasia, and Thomas "Three Finger Brown" Lucchese.

There have been at least two known attempts on the life of Santo Trafficante: On January 2, 1953, he was shotgunned in a car on the streets of Tampa, receiving wounds in the arm. Later, in Cuba, four American mobsters who intended to kill Trafficante were told by Cuban police that they would have to do it on American soil.

Trafficante has been arrested in Tampa several times for investigation, because of our knowledge that he was deeply involved in gambling, even though we have not yet been able to obtain the quantum of proof necessary to a successful prosecution. He has also been picked up by the police for questioning about the gangland slayings of Rene Nunez, Angelo Giglio, and Joe Antinori.

Trafficante was a suspect in the Albert Anastasia murder on October 25, 1957, in New York because he had appeared in New York just before the murder. He was considered a likely suspect because there had been reports that Anastasia was then attempting to move in on Trafficante's gambling operations in Cuba. Trafficante, using the alias "B. Hill," stayed with Anastasia in the latter's hotel suite, on the night of October 24, 1957, and moved out approximately 1 hour after Anastasia's murder in a nearby barber shop.

The Department's evaluation of Trafficante as the boss of the Mafia organization in Tampa was confirmed, of course, by the positive identification of the "Louis Santos of Havana, Cuba," apprehended at the Apalachin conference in November of 1957, as Santo Trafficante, Jr., of Tampa, Fla.

Furthermore, we have witnessed and documented many visits of out-of-town racketeers with Santo Trafficante and his fellow hoodlums of the Tampa area. These visitors give further indications that Trafficante is associated with Mafia members in other cities. For example, Louis Coticchia of Chicago, also known as Lou Brady, has been frequently seen visiting Trafficante and on one occasion they were seen boarding a plane together, heading for Miami.

Other known outside racketeers who have visited in Tampa with Trafficante gang members are John Joseph Vitale, Salvatore Lopiccolo, and Anthony Giardano, all known racketeers from St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I think at the present time, in interest of continuity, so that the record will read properly, Sergeant de la Llana has a statement with regard to a courier operation within the Mafia. In the interest of time, I am not going to ask him to read it, but I would like to have it introduced in the record.

Do you have that?

Mr. DE LA LLANA. Yes, I do.

Mr. O'DONNELL. How many pages does it consist of?

Mr. DE LA LLANA. It is five pages.

The CHAIRMAN. Give a better description of it and tell us what it is.

Mr. DE LA LLANA. It is with reference to Louis Coticchia, alias Lou Brady, and his visits to Tampa on various occasions, which first came to our attention on April 13, 1962. This subject has a long criminal record. I have an FBI record which I will also submit into evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the FBI record be received and made exhibit No. 46 for reference.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 46" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Now, your statement, is that a summary statement that you have made and prepared for the record?

Mr. DE LA LLANA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, it may be received and printed in the record, either at this point or immediately following the prepared statement of the witness now testifying.

(The statement referred to follows:)

STATEMENT OF SGT. JACK DE LA LLANA

One of the clear ties of the Trafficante organization with other criminal groups is reflected by the contacts with Trafficante made by a man who appears to act as a courier for the Mafia. Louis Coticchia, alias Lou Brady, FBI No. 1427493, first came to the attention of our Department on April 13, 1962, when we observed him, in Tampa, in the company of Augustine Primo Lazzara and Frank Diecidue, two of the men on our Mafia chart. Because of this and other contacts made by Coticchia, our intelligent unit developed the following information about him which I think is of interest to this committee in giving a profile of a hoodlum who is entrusted by the Mafia to act as a courier for them between the various groups.

Coticchia was born on February 25, 1920, in Cincinnati, Ohio. When he was arrested a couple of years ago, he gave as his occupation "industrial financier." He is presently reported to be interested in the operation of a company offering wired music in the Chicago area known as Symphonaire Sound Systems, Inc.

His criminal record shows that he was first arrested in 1936 in Ohio for robbery. In 1937 he was arrested in Miami, Fla., for investigation of a "shake-down." He was held for 4 days and released without charges. He was arrested again in Hot Springs, Ark., in 1938 for investigation and released with the understanding that he would leave the city.

In 1938, in Cleveland, Coticchia was arrested and charged with assault with intent to commit rape. He was convicted and received 1 to 15 years, of which he served 4 years, being released in 1941. He was arrested in 1942 in Los Angeles, Calif., on a warrant issued in Baltimore for grand theft. He was tried in Baltimore for receiving stolen goods and received 5 years in prison.

Coticchia was again arrested in Dallas, Tex., in 1961, by the U.S. marshals for violation of and for conspiring to violate the Federal Securities and Exchange Act of 1933, which case is still pending in the Southern District Court of New York. His last arrest known to us was on January 4, 1963, when he was arrested in Tampa for investigation of grand larceny. He was released due to insufficient evidence.

Coticchia worked as a "pit boss" in gambling casinos in Las Vegas, Nev., and Havana, Cuba. He was involved in a scandal in 1960 in which mobsters attempted to take over a nationwide bail bond business.

Coticchia has been in and out of Tampa since our first observation of him and on every occasion he is in direct contact with Trafficante and Diecidue. On December 31, 1962, he purchased a new automobile in Tampa, paying the dealer $3,625.95 in cash. He then registered the car under the name of Jane Campbell. He remained in Tampa several days and was in constant contact with Trafficante and Diecidue.

On January 4, 1963, Coticchia was arrested in Tampa on suspicion of grand larceny and at the time of his arrest he had $1,775 in cash on his person. He had papers on him that showed he had resided previously at the Aloha Motel in Miami under the name Luiz Paulino Bailey from Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. He also had a paper with a list of gambling equipment and the name "Empress Lines, Ltd., Nassau—via Wappen Von Hamburg—German boat loading pier No. 3."

An investigation revealed this equipment had been shipped airfreight from Las Vegas to Nassau and placed in a German vessel, the Wappen Von Hamburg, which sails between Nassau and Miami. This equipment included 50 one-arm bandits, or slot machines, and was valued in excess of $65,000. The information received was that this vessel was to travel between Miami and Nassau as a floating gambling casino.

After Coticchia's arrest in Tampa, the telephone calls were checked at the motel. It showed that he had made several calls to Trafficante, Diecidue, and other associates of Trafficante. He had also made a long-distance call to Sonny's Restaurant in Miami Beach, which is owned by Thomas Altamura, FBI No. 511563, a Mafia member and another associate of Santo Trafficante, Jr.

I would like to submit for the record Coticchia's FBI record, and a photograph of him taken by my department when he was arrested in Tampa on January 4, 1963.

Another example of the Trafficante group's connections with Mafia figures in other parts of the Nation is: John Joseph Vitale, FBI No. 793259, of St. Louis, Mo. Vitale is well known to the St. Louis Metropolitan Police Department, and is reputed to be the Mafia leader in that area. He has a record of 13 arrests and a conviction for violating the Harrison Narcotics Act for which he received a sentence of 7 years' imprisonment. He has been arrested as a fence and is believed to deal in anything in which there is a large percentage of profit.

Police authorities consider him among the most dangerous of Mafia principals in the St. Louis area, and he is known to have underworld connections throughout the country. He appeared twice before the Senate Rackets Committee (August 19, 1958, and February 11, 1959) and each time refused to answer any questions, invoking the fifth amendment.

On April 17, 1963, Vitale flew from St. Louis to Tampa, using the name "Jack Howard." He visited the Diecidues for 4 hours and then flew back to St. Louis using the same alias. We alerted the St. Louis police and upon Vitale's arrival there, he was interviewed by detectives of that city. He declared that he had traveled to Tampa to settle a debt of the Lombardo Produce Co., of St. Louis, Mo., to the Diecidue Bros. of Tampa.

To me it does not seem probable that Vitale would go to the expense and trouble of flying to Tampa and returning the same day in order to settle a debt between two produce companies with which he has no known connections. More significantly, his use of an alias to run this errand, too, points out his own doubts that he was engaged in a legitimate errand.

These two examples, Coticchia's and Vitale's, indicate to us the interstate connections of the Trafficante organization, and point up the need for attacking the Mafia group on a national basis.

Mr. O'DONNELL. All right, we will continue.

Mr. BROWN. Some of Trafficante's men shown here on our chart gave sworn testimony before the Hillsborough County solicitor in 1953 concerning gambling in Tampa. They admitted that they had long been engaged in illegal gambling activities. They were forced to testify or face jail terms for contempt of court, because they had been granted immunity from prosecution for such crimes. Among those who testified were Frank Diecidue, Augustine Primo Lazzara, Nick Scaglione, Henry Trafficante, and James C. Longo.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Are any of these individuals on the chart that you have introduced as exhibit 2?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, they are all on the chart.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Thank you.

Mr. BROWN. Santo Trafficante has himself been caught up in a typical Mafia technique of seeking to preserve and protect its illegal enterprises by the corruption of law enforcement and other public officials. This incident substantiated our intelligence that Trafficante was deeply involved in gambling operations, and it showed that he had major interests in gambling outside the city of Tampa.

The case was initiated in 1954 by a veteran St. Petersburg police officer, Detective Sgt. Harry Dietrich, who had obtained evidence of the operation of the Trafficante bolita ring. Bolita is a numbers racket of considerable importance in Florida, involving weekly payoffs based upon information taken from radio reports of the weekly Cuban lottery.

An attempt was made to bribe Sergeant Dietrich to ignore the operation of the ring. He was given a new car, a television set, some suits of clothing, and cash. Sergeant Dietrich accepted the bribes with the full knowledge and orders of his superiors, to whom he had immediately reported the initial bribery attempt.

As a result of his work, Santo Trafficante and his brother Henry were arrested. Both were charged with bribery and were convicted.

The CHAIRMAN. When did this occur?

Mr. BROWN. This was in 1954.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the same man that is now operating, and he is the boss?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Each received a prison sentence of 5 years. Santo Trafficante's conviction was later reversed in a higher court. His brother served his term and was recently released. Both brothers were subsequently indicted by the Federal Government for tax law violations.

We know of no legitimate businesses that are owned or controlled by Santo Trafficante. He owns no real estate, nor any other property, real or personal. His house, automobile, and all his other possessions are held in the names of others. However, we do not believe him to be destitute, for his control of gambling in the central Florida area alone must net him huge amounts of money. His operations there show, also, a characteristic Mafia method of utilizing non-Sicilian associates where it serves its criminal objectives.

Sergeant Branch, who has for the past 7 years been investigating gambling and other organized criminal activities in the Orlando area, will describe the Mafia's control, through the Harlan Blackburn organization, of lottery operations in central Florida. We know of no legitimate businesses that are owned.

The CHAIRMAN. Sergeant Branch is here with you?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

On the lower right-hand side of our chart we have depicted that group of Trafficante associates.

Sergeant Branch will here testify about the Blackburn group.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before this subcommittee will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. BRANCH. I do.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM BRANCH

The CHAIRMAN. Will you identify yourself for the record?

Mr. BRANCH. I am a sergeant with the Orlando Police Department attached to the intelligence division, and I have been with them since 1951. I have been working in this type of work since 1956, with the cooperation of the Federal and State agencies in our area.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have a prepared statement?

Mr. BRANCH. Yes, sir, I do.

The CHAIRMAN. It appears to be four or five pages. Do you wish to read it?

Mr. BRANCH. Yes, sir.

In the central Florida area the main gambling activity is known as bolita or Cuba. Bolita is a numbers lottery where the winning number is drawn daily. Cuba is a numbers lottery where the winning number is drawn weekly. Bettors can place bets on any number from 1 to 100 and receive a 60-to-1 return if they win. The Cuba winning number is the last two digits from the Cuban national lottery number which is five digits and is broadcast over a Havana radio station each Saturday shortly after 2 p.m.

The public is contacted by "peddlers" or "sellers," who receive a commission of 15 percent of their sales. "Pickup" men, who take the bets from the sellers to the "checkup houses," receive 20 percent of what they collect. Employees such as checkup men, adding machine operators, and supervisors above this position usually receive salaries for their duties.

Lottery operations in central Florida prior to 1948 were dominated first by Charlie Wall of Tampa and then by Sam Warren, an Orlando native. In that year Harlan Blackburn, FBI No. 1026922, a convicted felon, came into Orlando and began taking over bolita and Cuba gambling.

This man is on the chart also.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 529

Blackburn was born in Sand Lake, Fla., on April 13, 1919. In 1935, he was convicted of forging a U.S. Government check, for which he served 4½ years in prison. In 1943, he was sentenced to 2 years in the Florida State prison for cattle theft. He was again arrested in March 1956 for operating a lottery in Polk County, Fla., and received a 5-year prison sentence, but was released in 1959.

Senator MUSKIE. Did you say Mr. Blackburn was on the chart?

Mr. BRANCH. Yes, sir. He is listed in the lower right-hand corner.

Senator MUSKIE. It is not on this chart?

Mr. BRANCH. No, sir; not on that one.

Senator MUSKIE. Blackburn is not a member of the Mafia, as such?

Mr. BRANCH. He is a subordinate that works under their direction; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he the same as Sam Warren?

Mr. BRANCH. No, sir; he is not. Sam Warren is dead.

He was then incarcerated for 60 days in Polk County for an earlier conviction of conspiracy to violate the lottery laws of Florida. He was most recently arrested on November 5, 1962, for failure to buy a Federal wagering tax stamp. He is presently out on bail awaiting trial.

Blackburn supervises the five lottery bankers who control central Florida gambling. These bankers are Rudy Mach, Joe Wheeler, Clyde F. Lee, Cecil Merritt, and Ralph Strawder. Mach has in his operation Don Mach, Dan Fussell, Buddy Parron, Glen Brechen, Tommy Berry, and Clifford Bell; Joe Wheeler has Max Reid, Mary Carden, and Phil Riffe; Clyde F. Lee has Jesse Joyner, Vasco Joyner, Mathew Smith, Macon Tribue, Julia Ciphon, Hoy Anderson, and Katherine Bradshaw; Cecil Merritt has Clayton Thomas, Sonny Brown, and George Solomon; and Ralph Strawder has Benny White, William Harrell, and Elvin Carroll.

With the exception of Carden, Riffe, Harrell, White, and Ciphon, all of these persons have criminal records and arrests for gambling and other crimes.

I have here copies of their FBI records and submit them for the subcommittee's record.

The CHAIRMAN. They may be received in bulk as exhibit No. 47 for reference only.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 47" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. BRANCH. These five exceptions have been connected with this operation for a number of years, however, and their names and amounts of gross and net collections appear in much of the evidence that we have secured from checkup houses. We have also sworn testimony from witnesses that these persons have been engaged in illegal gambling.

Senator MUSKIE. What is the size of their take?

Mr. BRANCH. I have that further along in my statement, sir.

The lottery operation of the Blackburn group extends from Orange County into all of central Florida and into the southern State of Georgia.

From 1948 until the latter part of 1953, our department established that Santo Trafficante, Jr., and his brother, Henry, personally were visiting Orlando and supervising the checkup houses that were conducting the lottery.

It has also been obvious to us that the Trafficante organization has controlled the Blackburn operation for at least the last 10 years. From our examination of seized records, and from the fact that in all raids on the checkup houses we have arrested persons having close family ties with the Trafficante organization who were acting as auditors for his interests. In addition, there has been heavy telephone toll traffic between the Trafficantes in Tampa and the Blackburn group in Orlando.

When Blackburn was arrested in 1953, a memorandum was found containing telephone numbers of Augustine Primo Lazzara, Salvatore J. Lorenzo, J. M. Cacciatore—uncle of Santo Trafficante, Jr.—and Santo Trafficante, Jr., and of the Nebraska and Flamingo Bars, both owned by the Trafficante family.

In 1957 a search of a gambling house in Orange County by a State officer, with the assistance of the Orlando Police, resulted in the arrest of several persons. One of these was Lorenzo and another person by the name of Leto, from Tampa. They both gave sworn statements at that time to the county solicitor that they were working for Santo Trafficante, Jr.

In November 1961, another raid was conducted by agents of the Internal Revenue Service in conjunction with the Orlando Police Department on a house in Orange County. There were six persons arrested, and among those were Armando Rios and Sam Cacciatore. These two were cousins of Santo Trafficante, Jr.

In July 1963, a raid on a gambling house in Sanford, Fla., by the IRS agents, with the assistance of the Orlando Police Department, established that it was another operation of Harlan Blackburn's, supervised by Clyde Lee. In the records seized there was the phone number of Trafficante's cousin, John Favata Cacciatore, and the phone number of the printing establishment employing Stefano Scaglione, who is also on the chart.

During the past 12 years that we know of at least three murders that have been due to fights for control of lottery operations in the Orlando area.

The fantastic amount of money taken in by these lottery operations has been repeatedly established by our raids of these gambling houses. For example, the raid in 1957 in Orange County, where Frank Ferreri and Sam Lorenzo were arrested, disclosed that the house was doing a gross business of $100,000 per week.

Senator MUSKIE. What were they paying out?

Mr. BRANCH. The profit on this operation runs about 50 percent.

The November 1961 raid in Orange County where Armando Rios and Sam Cacciatore, cousins of Santo Trafficante, were arrested revealed that operation was doing a conservatively estimated gross of $160,000 per week.

The CHAIRMAN. With the same ratio of half applying there?

Mr. BRANCH. Yes, sir.

Senator MUSKIE. When you say "net profit," this means after deductions of the commission which totaled 35 percent?

Mr. BRANCH. Yes, sir.

Senator MUSKIE. And the prizes.

Mr. BRANCH. Yes, sir.

The commission and also the prizes and what other operating expenses they may have such as automobiles, rent, telephone bills.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 531

The latest raid, in July of this year, indicated a gross revenue of $250,000 per week.

From those figures——

The CHAIRMAN. Where was that raid?

Mr. BRANCH. That was in Sanford, Fla., just 17 miles north of Orlando. These figures are established by the Internal Revenue agents and auditors.

From these figures, it is easy to see why the Mafia has moved so heavily into lottery gambling in central Florida and why gambling revenues are universally acknowledged to be the "lifeblood" of organized crime.

Any additional legislation that this subcommittee can promote to further restrict and inhibit gambling will, in our opinion, be a substantial blow to organized crime.

Senator MUSKIE. Did they actually pay off on those lotteries or was it dishonest in that respect, too?

Mr. BRANCH. Usually they pay off.

They don't pay off when we pull a raid on them or arrest them. They stop at that. But they are in operation the next week.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean they do not pay off for that day?

Mr. BRANCH. No, sir; they don't.

The CHAIRMAN. It is unfortunate for the fellow that won, who cannot get his winnings.

Mr. BRANCH. Yes, sir.

Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. If the law enforcement is pretty vigilant, I would be afraid to place a bet under those circumstances.

All right, Chief, if you will, you may proceed.

Stand by, Sergeant, as we may want to ask you some questions.

Mr. BRANCH. Yes, sir.

TESTIMONY OF NEIL G. BROWN—Resumed

Mr. BROWN. To understand the crime network Trafficante operates it is necessary to examine the modern era of crime in Tampa, which dates from the early 1920's. Its most violent episodes were between 1937 and 1945, when the Sicilian underworld was attempting to move in on all illegal gambling in Tampa. This period in the history of our city was referred to as "the era of blood."

Senator MUSKIE. Who coined that phrase, the gang or the newspapers?

Mr. BROWN. I think it was the newspapers, Senator.

During the 1920's, before the Sicilian underworld moved into the rackets to any great extent, one of our most notorious residents, Charles M. Wall, started his rise to become the acknowledged boss of most of the illegal gambling in the Tampa and central area of the State of Florida. He styled himself "dean of the underworld," and in 1953 he admitted to a Hillsborough County solicitor that he had made his living from illegal gambling. During 1945, Wall forfeited his leadership by entering into a partnership with Santo Trafficante, Sr.

The elder Trafficante was born in Sicily in 1886. He came to Tampa in 1904 and became a naturalized citizen in 1925. In 1950, he was one of the missing witnesses in the Kefauver crime hearings held in Tampa. He died on August 11, 1954. Police records do not show any arrest for Santo Trafficante, Sr.

In 1952, Wall declared that he was retiring, although he did not state what he was retiring from. In April 1955, Wall's body was found in his home. He had been brutally beaten and his throat had been slashed. We have never discovered who the murderers were, nor have we determined their motive. Perhaps Wall was murdered because the killers learned he had admitted that he was Trafficante's partner in illegal gambling, and that he disclosed confidential facts about the Mafia.

In 1960, Sergeant de la Llana obtained—from a confidential source of known reliability—an astounding report about the Mafia and its operation in Tampa. The report had been obtained from Charles Wall in 1945, approximately 6 months after Trafficante, Senior, had made himself a partner in Walls' gambling enterprises.

Wall declared that from 1920 through 1945 he controlled gambling in Tampa and in the Florida counties of Hillsborough, Pinellas, Pasco, Hernando, Polk, and Orange. His rival for control of the gambling rackets was the local Mafia organization. This was headed, he said, by Santo Trafficante, Sr., the Diecidue brothers, James Lumia, Ignacio Antinori and Salvatore Italiano. Antinori was murdered on October 22, 1940; Lumia was murdered on June 5, 1950; and Italiano fled to Mexico in 1951.

Wall admitted that he had good reasons for going along with Trafficante, Senior, in 1945; previously the Mafia group had made three attempts on his life; the first was in 1937 as Wall was leaving a bank on the main street in Tampa; the second try occurred as Wall was leaving the garage behind his house; the third, in 1940, happened a few blocks from his house. In the third attempt, a truck passed the automobile in which Wall was riding and then stopped abruptly in front of the car. James DeSimone and Nicola Impostato, FBI No. 2716692, each armed with a shotgun, stepped from the truck and fired at Wall and his chauffeur. Both escaped with slight injuries. DeSimone and Impostato were known Mafia killers from Kansas City, Mo. They were staying with the Antinori family at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Wall still living?

Mr. BROWN. No, sir; he was killed.

The CHAIRMAN. Later killed?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. These three attempts failed but later he was killed?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Wall declared that the Mafia tried to make the public believe that the organization no longer existed in this country and that Mafia members pointed to the end of terrorism among Italian groups as evidence that the Mafia was gone from the underworld scene. Wall believed, however, that the organization had merely changed its type of operation. He said that other racketeers had once used the Mafia to monopolize rackets in major American cities. They had educated the Mafia so well in the process that the Sicilians had taken over the rackets themselves. Wall stated that the Mafia learned to consider extortion from Italian businessmen a "nickel-and-dime" business. They had discovered that public officials could be corrupted by bribery and that they could organize to take over the major rackets in the United States.

Wall declared that the Mafia was not dying out, but "was bigger and better than ever." He said that his partner, the elder Trafficante, had told him that there were some 10,000 active Mafia members in the United States. Wall stated that the Mafia leader in Tampa was

Santo Trafficante, Sr., and that he was well informed on the activities of the organization in the United States, in Sicily, and in other countries of the world. Trafficante had told him, Wall said, that the Mafia in the United States was directed by a local board in every city having a sizable Sicilian population. There was a national board, headed by Joseph Profaci in New York City, which was composed of the heads of the major local boards. Trafficante is reported to have said that Frank Costello, Vincent Mangano, and Joe Massie were influential members of the national board, and that Frank Nitti and Lucky Luciano were former members.

According to Wall's account, the Mafia was composed of two distinct groups, an "inner circle" and an "outer circle." The general rule was that only natives of Sicily were admitted to the "inner circle," while American-born Italians were recruited into the "outer circle." Wall was told it was possible for a member to be transferred from "outer" to "inner" status when he performed an act of special merit, even though he had been born in the United States. The restrictions were not due to lack of trust by native Italians toward those of American birth, but because the "inner circle" usually took the major part of the proceeds of the Mafia's illegal activities and, therefore, preferred to keep the membership of the "inner circle" as small as possible.

Senator MUSKIE. Would you say that this chart represents the inner circle, Chief?

Mr. BROWN. At the very top portion, Senator, would be the inner circle.

Below that——

Senator MUSKIE. By the "top portion," do you mean——

Mr. BROWN. I would include in that that the three top men would be in the inner circle and those below that would be in the outer circle.

The CHAIRMAN. Those would only be in the inner circle so far as the Tampa area is concerned?

Mr. BROWN. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Not in the inner circle overall?

Mr. BROWN. No, sir; this is just in the inner circle in the Tampa area.

The CHAIRMAN. But that gives an indication of how the overall organization is set up.

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. You may have it in here, but I may have missed it, but who was Wall talking to when he gave all this information?

Mr. BROWN. That was a confidential informant.

The CHAIRMAN. I see. Very well.

(At this point Senator Javits entered the hearing room.)

Mr. BROWN. Wall believed the influential Mafia members in Tampa from 1930 through 1945 were: Santo Trafficante, Sr., Salvatore Italiano, James Lumia, and the Diecidue family—Alfonso, Antonio, Thomas, and Frank. The Diecidues and their in-laws opposed the leadership of Trafficante in the Tampa organization. Trafficante told Wall that Vincent Mangano, of the national board, supported the Diecidues but that he, Trafficante, was able to stay in power because he had Joseph Profaci's friendship.

Senator MUSKIE. May I ask a question here?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Senator MUSKIE. You refer to the national board. I do not recall any point in this hearing where there was this kind of a direct reference to a national organization in the Mafia. Was it referred to as such?

Mr. BROWN. This is the information as Wall has reported that it consisted of a national board.

Senator MUSKIE. Do you know who he identified as members of the national board?

Mr. BROWN. Well, Joe Profaci and Vincent Mangano were two of the members of the national board.

The CHAIRMAN. They are shown to be leaders of families, both of them.

Senator MUSKIE. But those same people are leaders of families in New York as testified by Valachi.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So it is your impression that the heads of the New York families made up a national board that had jurisdiction over Tampa, among other places?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct; yes, sir.

Wall declared that there were approximately 40 members of the Mafia living in the Tampa area and he believed that Trafficante's share of proceeds of their gambling operation was being divided with other members of the Mafia.

Information in our files from another confidential source confirms Wall's statement. In addition it reveals that Antonio Diecidue made annual trips to Miami for the purpose of renting a house for Vincent Mangano, who came down from New York every year to spend 2 or 3 months in Miami. This source stated that many important members of the Mafia visited Mangano in Florida, but that Trafficante never appeared.

Senator MUSKIE. May I ask another question on the national board? Was it your impression that the national board members shared in the proceeds of the criminal activities in Tampa?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir; they had a percentage.

Senator MUSKIE. Have you any idea what that percentage was?

Mr. BROWN. No, sir; I have no idea.

The gray shadings on our chart depict the influence of each of these men. To me, it appears to be no small coincidence that in Tampa the Diecidue family lost stature from at least the early 1950's when Vincent Mangano disappeared; nor that Trafficante, Jr., the Profaci man, was in the immediate vicinity, when Albert Anastasia was murdered in 1957.

Sergeant de la Llana's intelligence unit has prepared summaries of the men in Trafficante's organization, along with a commentary of relevant facts about each of them. So that our information may be available not only to the subcommittee, but to all police units to whom your reports are so valuable, I wish to submit these summaries and commentary for the record, as our exhibit 3a through t; and exhibit 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The summary to which you have referred may be received as exhibit 48—

Mr. O'DONNELL. Chief, as I understand it, these are summations, very brief summations, of the 19 individuals that are on the chart insofar as their criminal activity, their mode of business, their criminal history, et cetera; is that correct?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be received as exhibit No. 48.

(The documents referred to marked "Exhibit No. 48" for reference, and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. You make reference to another exhibit. What is it?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Will you explain the other exhibit? Go into a little detail as to the various murders that you have on your exhibit 4, which will be a different exhibit in our hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair get this straight first.

The summary that he referred to has been made exhibit 48.

That is what you referred to as "our exhibit 3a"?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you say "through t; and exhibit 4." What is exhibit 4, your exhibit 4?

Mr. BROWN. Exhibit 4 is a brief summation on each of the subjects.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your exhibit 3?

Mr. BROWN. They are arrest records of each of the individuals.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Exhibit 48 is the arrest records.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Your exhibit 4 is a brief summary of each person on the chart?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It is of his records and activities?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be received as exhibit No. 49 for reference.

(The document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 49" for reference, and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Now the record is straight.

You may proceed.

Mr. BROWN. Our department has always found it a most difficult task to obtain evidence sufficient for successful prosecution of Mafia members, because the witnesses who might offer such evidence have always been reluctant to do so. The paramount reason, of course, is their fear of Mafia reprisals, since it is common knowledge in Tampa that the Mafia does not hesitate to use murder for such reprisals and the relative infrequency with which such professional murders are successfully prosecuted.

We have categorized certain homicides in the Tampa area, from 1928 to the present, as "gangland slayings." An examination of the circumstances of some of these murders emphasizes how the Mafia uses murder to discipline its membership, to revenge itself against violators of its code and to otherwise eliminate opposition to its criminal activities and goals. Of the 23 homicides on the list, only 1 has been solved. A ratio of less than 5 percent of solution—and that particular murder was cleared up because it apparently resulted from an argument, although it is possible that the slayer deliberately provoked the argument. It was not, therefore, a typical gangland slaying, although the killer and the victim were both underworld figures.

In startling contrast to the number of unsolved gangland slayings, an examination of all other Tampa homicides from 1958 through 1962 shows that we have had 145 murders and that only 4 are presently unsolved, a solution ratio of better than 97 percent. From 1960 through 1962, all 83 homicides in our city were solved.

The CHAIRMAN. What period is covered by the 23 gangland slayings that you make reference to?

Mr. BROWN. From 1928 through the present day.

The CHAIRMAN. In a period of about 30 years.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you identify them as gangland slayings as distinguished from the usual homicide cases that you have?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. On those, according to your testimony, it has been impossible—or you have been unsuccessful, at least, in solving any of them except the one that appeared so obvious, and it would not possibly come within the category of “gangland slayings”?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. But you have included it as being the only one that was solved.

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

Senator MUSKIE. What are the characteristics of the gangland slayings that makes it so difficult to solve them as contrasted with your excellent record in other homicides?

Mr. BROWN. Of course, primarily it is because of witnesses who are reluctant to give the law enforcement any information whatsoever. In some of our killings—I recall one where we had nine witnesses in the room and nobody actually saw the murder or knew anything was going on.

Senator MUSKIE. So this fact has a direct bearing upon the question of immunity statutes, for example.

Mr. BROWN. That is right. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. This, in other words, emphasizes the rigid discipline, the code of underworld law, that cannot be violated without suffering the penalty of death.

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, the nine who were in the room when the murder was committed, possibly every one of them knew what happened.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir; I would think so.

The CHAIRMAN. I would doubt that somebody did not know it. But, anyway, they know that the penalty for them talking would be death.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Even if they were inclined to, and I do not mean to say they were inclined to, even if one of them were inclined to talk, he knows what the penalty would be. And that makes it difficult. That is why you have the trouble in the gangland slayings, the silence, the threat, the intimidation of a death sentence, of their being executed by their underworld government if they talk.

Mr. BROWN. That is true.

Senator MUSKIE. Then, Chief, just to nail that point down, they seem to be more than concerned and clearly are more concerned for themselves and for their allies than they are about immunity against prosecution.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir; that is true. They are afraid for their lives.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. You may proceed.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 537

Mr. BROWN. I have had these gangland slayings listed, with a few pertinent comments about each, and submit to the subcommittee this list as our exhibit 5.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be received and be made exhibit No. 50.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 50" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

(At this point Senator Javits withdrew from the hearing room.)

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Mr. BROWN. With few exceptions, those murders well reflect Joseph Valachi's testimony that Mafia members do live by violence and die by violence.

At least two of the unsolved murders on our list—that of Gus Perez in 1936 and of Joe "Pelusa" Diaz in 1958—were, in my opinion, directly attributable to the Mafia's knowledge or belief that the victims had given to legal authorities evidence incriminating Mafia members. A third murder—of Carl Carramusa, in 1945—taking place in Chicago, involved some Tampa Mafiosi, and is of particular interest in illustrating the Mafia zeal for vengeance against a member who violates its rules. It is of further significance, too, in demonstrating the difficulty of protecting witnesses against the Mafia—and is underlining Attorney General Kennedy's request for additional funds for that purpose, which request I strongly endorse.

The Carramusa case developed in Kansas City, Mo., with certain aspects related to the Mafia organization in Tampa. The principal figure in the case was Carl Carramusa, known as a minor member of the Mafia and a front man for the Mafia's narcotics traffic operation in Kansas City.

Carramusa was indicted in 1942 for conspiring to violate the Federal narcotic laws. His codefendants were Joseph DeLuca, Nicola Impastato, Paul Antinori, Joe Antinori, Charles Gergimina, Louis Ventola, Patsy Ventola, Charles Tiabi, Samuel Pernice, and Fellipo Fernice. Tampa's Mafia organization was one of the sources of supply for the Kansas City group, and at that time the narcotics trade in Tampa was headed by Paul Antinori and Joseph Antinori, who had inherited the narcotics leadership from their father, Ignazio Antinori. The elder Antinori had been murdered a few years before in a narcotics deal. All of the defendants in the Kansas City case were prosecuted successfully, primarily because Carramusa violated the cardinal Mafia code of l'omerta, or silence, testifying openly against them at their trial. After the trial, Carramusa went into hiding in Chicago with his wife and family, changing his name and beginning a new life under new circumstances.

Three years later, in June of 1945, while he was seated in his automobile, Carramusa's head was blown off by a shotgun blast. James Lumia, an associate of the Antinoris, was a suspect in this killing, but was himself murdered at Tampa in June of 1950. A prime suspect was the same Nicola Impastato, who had some years before attempted to kill Charles Wall.

In Tampa we have suffered also the frustration I know that many of my police colleagues in other cities have experienced—the deliberate recanting at trial of the original statements of complaining or key witnesses, because of their fear of Mafia reprisal. A clear instance of this frustration of law enforcement effort involved three of the ranking members of the Tampa Mafia.

538 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

One day in 1953, one Joe Castellano went to the Italian Club in Tampa to play cards with a group of friends. During the course of the evening, he talked to Salvatore Scaglione privately. Scaglione asked Castellano if he wanted to make a profit on a "hot load" of whisky. Castellano said he was interested, and they agreed to meet later that night.

At the meeting, Scaglione was accompanied by Joe Mistretta and Angelo LoScalzo. Castellano got into the front seat of a car provided by the others, and the four men drove to a thickly wooded area outside of Tampa city limits. Castellano was then attacked with a hammer, being hit repeatedly on the head. He managed to get out of the car, although he was badly hurt. He broke loose from his elderly assailants and ran away. He stumbled into a nearby house and asked to be taken to the constable's house, where he gave a statement about the incident, naming the three as his assailants. He swore to the county solicitor that he had no idea why he was beaten. Scaglione, Mistretta, and LoScalzo were arrested and charged with assault with intent to murder.

Joe Castellano disappeared for a period of time. After he was found, the case went to trial. Castellano changed his story completely and testified that he had injured himself while hunting on the night of the attack. The predictable result, of course, was a verdict for the defendants of "not guilty."

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR FURTHER FEDERAL LEGISLATION TO FIGHT ORGANIZED CRIME

I believe firmly that it is almost impossible for the Police Department of the City of Tampa, or any other municipality, to cope effectively with the activities of a national or international crime syndicate such as these hearings show exists in the United States. One of the main problems is that the most dedicated, well-trained, and well-staffed police force is almost always limited legally and financially to the territorial boundaries of its municipality. For example, the Tampa Police Department is obviously interested in and informed about the activities of Santo Trafficante. However, in the past the department was unable to do anything about Trafficante's operations in pre-Castro Cuba; it has no jurisdiction or control of his illegal affairs in Miami and elsewhere in central Florida. The department could only record that he attended the Apalachin meeting in November of 1957, but it could do nothing about this obvious evidence that he was a high-ranking member of a national crime syndicate.

In the light of our experience with the Mafia in our own city's underworld, I submit for this subcommittee's consideration some suggestions for Federal legislation which I believe would certainly help local law enforcement agencies to fight organized crime more effectively.

1. More ample funds must be obtained by local agencies to recruit high caliber police personnel and to retain superior personnel having the experience and capabilities to understand, investigate, and prosecute organized criminal conspiracies. Because of the demonstrated interstate nature of organized crime, Federal legislation similar to educational and welfare grants to State agencies, could provide such funds and training to local police agencies.

2. I endorse strongly the Attorney General's strong recommendation before this subcommittee that the Congress authorize the use of wiretapping in fighting organized crime.

3. I recommend legislation that would set up a national clearing-house for criminal intelligence, so that information about organized crime and racketeering would be readily available in a central depository, to all local, State, and Federal law enforcement groups. A good example of the value of such centralized information is the Florida Intelligence Unit, of which Sergeant de la Llana is chairman. Within the 3 short years it has been organized, it has proven invaluable in informing us of the extent of organized criminal operations in Florida and has given to us an ever-increasing knowledge of the criminals who are associated in these illegal activities.

For example, in March of this year, the Florida Intelligence Unit initiated a project which is termed "Gambling Operations in Florida." Each member group is preparing charts and information about individuals in gambling operations in their particular jurisdiction. When all of this information is disseminated it will establish a pattern of gambling operations in the State, who the top people are behind these operations and, therefore, how we can best combat and eliminate this menace.

I believe also that when this project is completed it will confirm our increasing suspicion that Santo Trafficante is the man controlling gambling operations throughout the State of Florida.

The Florida Intelligence Unit was started 3 years ago by several law enforcement officers who realized our need for a unit that would correlate the dissemination of information about criminals and organized crime in the State of Florida.

This unit today has a membership of 21 law enforcement agencies throughout Florida. Its main function is the development of intelligence data about organized crime. Information developed by each member is forwarded to the Intelligence Section of the Florida Sheriff's Bureau, which reproduces and distributes it to all members.

Only sheriffs' offices and police departments in the State of Florida can become members of this organization. Their applications for membership are investigated to determine the applying department's honesty and integrity. The findings are presented to all of the members and acceptance of the applying department is determined by unanimous vote.

Intelligence information on a national scale, similar to the state-wide operation of our Florida Intelligence Unit, would be that much more helpful in making those of us at local levels of enforcement aware of organized crime and racketeering operations within—but extending beyond—our borders. It would allow the interchange of information with those jurisdictions sharing our concern about some particular criminals or rackets—and bring municipal and State law enforcement directly into the national fight on organized crime—thus utilizing our best talents at all levels of enforcement in a common effort to eliminate this great threat to our national welfare.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Chief Brown.

Is there any further statement you wish to make?

540 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. BROWN. I believe not, Senator. I think that concludes my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two or three things here in connection with your recommendations for laws.

I believe, and I may be mistaken, this is the first suggestion the committee has had that the Federal Government make grants to State agencies to enable them to pay the cost of their operations to the end that they might get more capable officials and develop more effective law enforcement operations.

Do you have any thoughts about the conditions, the criteria that would be required before any such grants would be made?

You come along here with respect to this clearinghouse and you set it up on a kind of rigid rule that you just do not give out the information to anybody. You clear them. You investigate them and try to make certain of their integrity and their purpose for getting the information, and so forth. But if you just make these grants, how would we say, well, the sheriff's office or the sheriffs' association in one State will get it and the sheriffs' association in another State where there might be, using it as an illustration, where there might be a question about the kind of use they would make of it, that they would not get it. How would we determine that?

Mr. BROWN. Senator, I think if the local department or the local agency first does everything that they can to attract qualified personnel, and to purchase the equipment necessary in this fight against organized crime, then if they could get some assistance from the Federal Government on perhaps a 50-50 basis or something of that nature. I know that in many municipalities it is almost impossible to attract, salarywise, the qualified people into law enforcement professions. There is a need there, which I think has been depicted through these hearings and through our experience, of attracting qualified personnel within municipal law enforcement agencies.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not challenging the idea at all. It strikes me it would be very difficult without the question of unwarranted subsidies arising. It would be difficult.

Mr. BROWN. It would be difficult.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not trying to belabor the question, but I see some serious difficulty there.

You speak in your recommendation No. 3 of the central depository or intelligence agency where this information about the criminals is assembled, and then later made available for distribution to law enforcement units in other parts of the State. You would think that a Federal agency of that kind, comparable to the one you have in Florida now, the one you have recently created in Florida, would be of great service.

Mr. BROWN. I think it would be one of the greatest benefits to law enforcement.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two things about that. I have thought of this before. You set up a central clearinghouse in Washington, even granting that power to the FBI or set up a separate agency, whichever was found to be desirable. How, then, do you keep that information from getting into the hands of some crooked law enforcement official who might seek the information for the purpose of using it, not to enforce the law but to help law violators evade the law, or to evade detection or prosecution?

Mr. BROWN. I think perhaps along the same lines as we have our own State agency, that they first have to prove themselves. They are placed on probation for a 6-month period of time. If they are worthy, then, of course, we furnish this information to them.

The CHAIRMAN. In theory it is wonderful. It is certainly needed. You can see what great good can come from it if you could have it administered at all levels by people of honor and integrity. But if you do have some corrupt official who is working with the underworld, often the information he might be able to get through that source would serve as a great benefit to the criminal rather than for the purposes intended, to help enforce the law. It has its problems.

(At this point Senator Javits entered the hearing room.)

Mr. BROWN. It has its disadvantages, too, that is true. But I think the advantages far outweigh the disadvantages.

The CHAIRMAN. There are some disadvantages in it. And all of these proposals need to be weighed.

I think there is a burden resting on the Congress now, and I think it is becoming more urgent all the time, for us to explore and examine all of these proposals and any others, with a view of giving to law enforcement agencies of this country all of the tools that we can possibly give them within the framework of the Constitution to wage this war against the organized crime.

I am glad to have these suggestions from you. But these are some of the problems.

Are there any questions, Senator Javits?

(At this point Senator Muskie withdrew from the hearing room.)

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I had one question of the witness.

I have been kind of emphasizing here this question of not condemning the Italian community because of these gangs in particular places. I am so glad that you have dealt with that so very well yourself.

Mr. BROWN. Thank you, Senator.

Senator JAVITS. It is very nice when it comes spontaneously. The other thing is that on this problem of wiretapping, it has occurred to me that perhaps one of the things that has not had as much consideration as it should is the interdiction of the use of a communications network by these underworld, organized criminal syndicates as being far more, perhaps, important in the picture than we had supposed as contrasted with what you might find out by listening in on them. In short, the fact that they do use the phone a lot, but they are not afraid of anybody overhearing them, in the sense that they are using codes and watching for taps, et cetera, but if there is a general wiretap authority, then they probably would not have the selectivity that they have now and probably would have to avoid the use of the whole network.

Would you say that that ought to slow them up considerably?

Mr. BROWN. I think it would slow them up a great deal, Senator.

Senator JAVITS. So you do say that the interdiction of the use of a free communications network, which they could not possibly duplicate is, itself, one of the very important reasons for advocating a stronger wiretap stand?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Of course, I have said many times, and I will repeat again, that I think the civil liberties protections are possible, and we should all, of course, direct our attention to them.

542 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. BROWN. Thank you.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you very much for your very fine testimony, Chief Brown.

TESTIMONY OF ARTHUR G. KAPLAN—Resumed

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Kaplan, you have been previously sworn. Do you have some documents to present to the committee?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir. I have the current FBI criminal records of each of the men named on the Mafia organization chart of Chief Brown.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Let them be received and marked "Exhibit No. 51" for reference.

(Documents referred to marked "Exhibit No. 51" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions of Chief Brown?

Mr. O'DONNELL. No further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The committee will stand in recess—

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, may I say one thing? I am told that the county solicitor of Orange County, Fla., came up especially to testify and was subsequently advised that he had better just submit a sworn statement. Perhaps, with the permission of the Chair, because I realize our time is very limited, if he is available he might just actually turn his statement in and if he had an observation or two to make perhaps he could make them.

The CHAIRMAN. I had no information about his presence.

Senator JAVITS. Is he here?

The CHAIRMAN. Is he here?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Sometimes when we have so many, the staff will suggest that they submit a statement for the record. If there is no objection, he may appear.

Very well, sir, will you be sworn?

You do solemnly swear the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. RUSS. I do.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES M. RUSS

The CHAIRMAN. Please identify yourself for the record.

Mr. RUSS. My name is James M. Russ. I am the county solicitor of Orange County, Fla., which encompasses Metropolitan Orlando. My responsibilities include the prosecution of State offenses which occur within this county.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have a prepared statement?

Mr. RUSS. Yes, I do, Senator. I have a prepared statement, together with exhibits which have been placed in affidavit form. I have sworn to the content of the statement and exhibits. With the subcommittee's permission, I would like to offer them into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Will it be satisfactory to you to receive your affidavit or statement and print it in full in the record at this point and let you highlight it, if you desire?

Mr. RUSS. Yes, it would, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Javits?

Senator JAVITS. I was going to make that suggestion. I think the Chair has been most gracious in allowing the witness to testify personally, and I hope the witness, in recognition of that, will make his comments brief.

(The affidavit referred to follows:)

AFFIDAVIT

CITY OF WASHINGTON,
District of Columbia, ss:

I, James M. Russ, county solicitor for the County of Orange, State of Florida, swear that the attached "Statement of James M. Russ, county solicitor, Orange County (Orlando), Fla." consisting of 11 pages and 5 exhibits, all of which are incorporated herein by reference and made a part hereof, is a true and accurate statement of facts based upon my information and beliefs and a true statement of my views recited therein.

JAMES M. RUSS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 12th day of October, 1963.

(S) WM. R. LEWIS, Notary Public.

My commission expires December 14, 1963.

STATEMENT OF JAMES M. RUSS, COUNTY SOLICITOR, ORANGE COUNTY (ORLANDO), FLA.

My name is James M. Russ. I am the county solicitor of Orange County, Fla., which is Metropolitan Orlando. My responsibilities include the prosecution of State criminal offenses which occur within this county. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of this subcommittee for inviting me to appear and present testimony in this investigation concerning organized crime and racketeering.

In our area, central Florida, the most significant criminal activity is illegal gambling, particularly the lottery operation locally known as Bolita or Cuba. The organization and operation of this lottery has been previously outlined by Chief Brown of the Tampa Police Department and Sergeant Branch of the Orlando Police Department.

The great general problem facing a prosecutor in fighting organized crime is that of obtaining enough admissible evidence to support a conviction in a trial by jury. I was, therefore, very interested when the Attorney General appeared here several weeks ago and suggested Federal legislation which would provide two additional means for obtaining evidence. I think that our experiences in central Florida in prosecuting organized crime's gambling operation might help this subcommittee better understand the need for such legislation.

I. BROAD FEDERAL IMMUNITY STATUTE

In Florida we have an immunity statute which applies to such crimes as illegal gambling, liquor activities, and bribery. Chief Brown has indicated here today how the county solicitor in Tampa successfully used the immunity statute in his 1953 gambling investigation of the Trafficante group. My office uses it on a regular basis, particularly in regard to the activities of the 29 persons named in the lower right-hand corner of the Tampa chart. I consider it to be an indispensable weapon in the investigation and prosecution of organized crime.

Generally speaking, we have available two methods of prosecuting lottery cases in a jury trial. The first and more common method is by presenting testimony of law enforcement agents who state what they have seen and heard, and support their testimony by introducing contraband and other tangible evidence which they have seized.

This tangible evidence usually consists of pieces of paper containing handwritten numbers, money, and adding machine tapes when found on the persons of arrested lottery sellers and pickup men, who act as couriers between the sellers and the checkup house. A raid on a lottery checkup house will, in addition to these items, disclose adding machines, telephones, and possibly a shortwave radio used to receive the winning number from Havana. These raids are usually conducted on Saturday afternoons by entry of law enforcement agents into the house with a search warrant. Usually the defendants are in the active process of checking up, and are surrounded by thousands of lottery tickets, tally sheets, and the equipment already mentioned. I have with me samples and photographs of this lottery paraphernalia as exhibits for the record, because I believe it is easier for the subcommittee to understand our problems of evidence by seeing examples of evidence seized in a raid.

I have several bolita tickets (Russ exhibit 1). The left-hand column represents the numbers selected by the bettor and the right-hand column represents the amount of money bet on each number. All of the numbers in the left-hand column are within the betting range of from 1 to 100 and the amounts bet are divisible by 5, a characteristic of bolita.

I have also two tally sheets, one a handwritten form and the other a printed form. (Russ exhibit No. 2.) These sheets are used in the checkup house to compute the amounts bet on each number, from the loose lottery tickets. The running totals are to the immediate right of the numbers.

I have also photographs of a 1961 lottery raid on a checkup house in suburban Orlando. This was a small operation competing with the Blackburn organization. It lasted for only several weeks. You will note the facade of respectability behind which this operation was conducted. The lottery tickets were found in small envelopes under a mattress, each envelope containing tickets from an individual seller (Russ exhibit No. 3). Both men arrested in this raid are presently serving prison sentences.

I have also photographs of two other lottery raids within the last 2 years where members of the Blackburn organization were arrested. (Russ exhibit No. 4.)

Admissions and confessions from lottery defendants are not common. Consequently, the jury, from this evidence, does not obtain a clear explanation of exactly what the defendants were doing when arrested.

In the second type of case, we present the testimony of witnesses who are actually involved in the lottery operation—accomplice testimony.

They testify what they and the defendants did in the course of their lottery activity, and further state why they did it. These witnesses explain to the jury-men how a lottery operates. Here the jury fully understands what was going on. The jurors then simply have to resolve the question of whether or not the witnesses are truthful. These accomplice witnesses are, of course, given immunity from State prosecution that could otherwise result from their testimony.

With reference to that portion of the Tampa chart outlining the central Florida lottery operation headed by Harlan Blackburn, since 1960, 12 of the 29 persons named in the lower right hand corner have either been convicted of lottery law violations or are presently under prosecution. One of the 29 was given immunity approximately 10 months ago in exchange for testimony. Our utilization of the Florida immunity statute has been an assisting factor in the investigation and jury trial of many lottery cases. We have used it to bring in peripheral figures as witnesses, whose testimony was used to corroborate and support the police testimony. In our efforts to reach the top men—the bankers—we have given immunity to witnesses from within the lottery organization. For example, in one case immunity was given to the operator of a checkup house in order to launch and later support a prosecution against a banker, who was the financial backer of the lottery, and two pickup men who each controlled a group of lottery sellers. One of the pickup men pled guilty to a conspiracy count, and then testified with the checkup house operator and several sellers and bettors in the trial of the banker and the second pickup man. This prosecution could not have been developed without the utilization of the immunity statute.

Under the immunity statute, the recalcitrant witness finds himself with a three-way choice: (1) refuse to testify and be held in contempt; (2) lie and be prosecuted for perjury; and/or (3) tell the truth and be immunized from prosecution for past related criminal acts. Where initially the prosecutor does not have a triable case without immunizing testimony, he is really giving up nothing by this grant of immunity.

As you undoubtedly know, the function of the immunity statute is to provide a substitute for the witness' constitutional privilege against self-incrimination. In order to be effective, the immunity provided must be as broad as the protection contained in the constitutional privilege. Witnesses in lottery investigations conducted by my office, although given immunity by Florida, have declined to testify on the basis that the Florida immunity statute was not broad enough to immunize them from Federal prosecution, and they had reason to believe that their testimony would tend to incriminate them as violators of Federal laws. For example, this question came up during August of this year in a contempt action which we brought against the girl friend of Clyde Lee, one of the men on the chart. She had refused to give testimony during the course of our investigation into Lee's illegal gambling activities. When the contempt action was brought into court, the witness contended that she had reason to fear Federal prosecution since she had been called as a witness before the Federal grand jury which convened in Orlando earlier, and which was also investigating illegal gambling. The judge, in this case, rejected the witness' position and required her to answer the questions about Mr. Lee. I foresee, however, that with the increase of Federal activity against organized crime under the 1961 legislation, this claim will be more frequently raised in State prosecutions; and in time, a court decision will be handed down in a Florida contempt proceeding upholding the witness' position. When this occurs, the effectiveness of the Florida immunity statute as a prosecutor's weapon against organized crime will be seriously diminished.

Therefore, as a State prosecutor, I am vitally interested in the enactment of a broad Federal immunity statute which a U.S. district attorney could utilize in such instances, so that our State prosecutions can continue with their present effectiveness.

My experience with Federal law enforcement agents and Justice Department attorneys has been such that I believe the U.S. district attorney would make every effort to assist the State prosecution.

It has been questioned whether a broad Federal immunity statute is desirable, since it theoretically would allow the Federal prosecutor to give immunity to a person who was the possible subject of a State prosecution. First of all, based upon the care and caution with which Federal prosecution moves, it seems most unlikely to me as a practical matter that immunity would be unwisely granted. Secondly, I note that excellent coordination and liaison presently exists among Federal and local investigating agencies and prosecutors concentrating their efforts against organized crime. Lastly, the permanent eradication of organized crime from American society is in no way dependent upon whether the racketeers are charged under Federal or State statutes, prosecuted in Federal or State courts, or sentenced to Federal or State penal institutions.

I recognize the enactment of a broad Federal immunity statute will not provide direct assistance to a State prosecutor; however, it will protect his valuable weapon contained in the State immunity statute, and it will certainly assist in the successful prosecution of the same criminals at the Federal level.

II. PROPOSED WIRETAP LEGISLATION

It has been my experience that it is very difficult to obtain evidence from our present sources, which will support a successful prosecution against the important persons at the head of a lottery organization. These available sources of information include confidential informants, tangible evidence obtained through search and seizure, the testimony of accomplices, visual surveillance, and telephone company toll records.

When an effort is made to reduce the information obtained from these sources to matters of proof, we find that the information received from a confidential informant cannot be used in the courtroom, because the effective service of the informant ends with his public identification. We find that the tangible evidence commonly connected with a lottery, such as lottery tickets, tally sheets, and adding machines are not found in the possession of the key people. We find that accomplice testimony is subject to close scrutiny by a jury, particularly when uncorroborated. Visual surveillance and telephone toll records, while helpful as corroboration, are usually not sufficient standing alone to support a conviction.

As Sergeant Branch has stated, the ordinary lottery organization contains pickup men who physically transmit the lottery records between the sellers and the checkup house. However, we have a recent case where the lottery sellers retained in their possession the records of the bets and the money, and utilized telephones to transmit the betting information to the checkup house. The checkup house operator also relayed the information concerning the winning number back to the sellers by telephone.

This more sophisticated lottery operation avoids the physical transmittal of tangible lottery records between the sellers and the checkup house by pickup men. It is true that the sellers are vulnerable to arrest and conviction since they deal with the betting public and retain the lottery records, but the sellers are so numerous and so easily replaced that their conviction is of minor consequence in meeting the problem. The checkup house operator remains insulated, since the gambling information he receives and transmits is by telephone. Here the police find it difficult to obtain sufficient evidence to support the issuance of a search warrant for the checkup house. Also, checkup houses are moved frequently to further frustrate police efforts to obtain and successfully serve a search warrant.

The communications from the checkup house operator at the top echelon of the lottery organization concerning net profit or loss are again conducted by telephone rather than by personal contact. In addition to the inaccessibility of these telephone conversations to the police, this type of communication permits the crossing of jurisdictional lines to place the checkup house and keyman in geographic locations beyond the authority of the investigating agency, and further insulate them from arrest and prosecution. The only tangible items that are physically transmitted through the lottery organization are adding machine tapes and cash money; standing alone, they are not particularly incriminating.

Furthermore, the operation of a lottery is on such a tight timetable as to the betting deadline, the computation of the total bets, the selection of the winning number, the recomputation of the winning bets, and the distribution of the winning information back to the bettors, that a fast and accurate communication system is a necessity. The telephone system is the gambler's lifeline.

We often find that one of the difficult legal problems contained in a lottery prosecution is proof that the lottery in question was conducted during the time period encompassed by the statute of limitations. The lottery operators are fully cognizant of this problem and, therefore, place no dates on lottery tickets or records. In central Florida, the winning number from the lottery of the previous week is placed in a circle on the current week's lottery ticket to date this lottery record. You will find these circled numbers on the sample lottery tickets placed in the record. As Sergeant Branch has indicated, then this winning number comes from the Cuban national lottery conducted in Havana every Saturday. Due to the present situation in Cuba, we are not able to present admissible evidence in a lottery trial which will prove the Cuban national lottery winning number for a given Saturday. Therefore, bare possession of undated lottery records, generally speaking, is not sufficient evidence to support a prosecution for anything more than a misdemeanor under Florida law. This entire statute-of-limitations problem would be readily resolved by the admissibility of overhead telephone conversation, such as we have in a pending prosecution called the party-line case.

My office presently has a lottery case pending against two key men based upon their conversations which were overheard on a party-line telephone. These conversations extended over a period of several weeks and outline the entire lottery organization from the sellers of lottery bets to the person who is financially backing the operation. This evidence obtained from a party line is legal and competent evidence under Florida law. If it had resulted from an illegal wiretap, it would not be admissible.

Although both defendants have been active in lottery for many years, more than 6 years have passed since they were last arrested on lottery charges which resulted in convictions. Therefore, this case is of particular significance.

In addition to supporting the main prosecution, these overheard conversations were utilized in obtaining a search warrant for a residence, and this search, in turn, yielded lottery equipment. These conversations also have helped to identify other persons of lesser importance who are involved in this lottery operation. Furthermore, the telephone company has disconnected a dozen telephones which were identified from these conversations as being used to violate the gambling laws.

These overheard party-line conversations between two known and convicted gamblers resulted in direct evidence, corroborating evidence, investigative leads, identification of other gamblers, and termination of vital telephone service.

I have with me a photograph of the lottery equipment seized during the raid in the party-line case (Russ exhibit No. 6).

Several of these adding machines were brand new and still in their packing boxes. The money in the photograph exceeds $2,000. Once again this raid was conducted on a residence in one of the more fashionable suburbs of Orange

County. The man found in possession of this lottery equipment was previously arrested in a lottery checkup house in 1957 where an audit of the lottery records found in that house reflected weekly betting activity in the amount of $100,000. Here are two photographs which show the inside of this checkup house and the lottery records seized in that raid (Russ exhibit No. 7).

Much has been written and said about the subject of wiretapping while considering the right of society to protect itself against crime and the right of the individual to privacy. During these recent weeks evidence has been presented to this subcommittee which shows the problem of organized crime to be substantial. It further supports earlier evidence on this same subject presented to other congressional investigating committees. By passage of antiorganized crime laws in 1961, Congress has already recognized that organized crime is a serious problem; that it is conducted on an interstate basis, and that the telephone is utilized to implement these criminal schemes. It seems to me to naturally follow that Congress should now provide the legal tools to the Federal agencies and departments responsible for the enforcement of the 1961 legislation. Legal wiretapping is one of these tools.

I note that wiretap bill proposed by the Attorney General (Senate bill 1308) contains many procedural safeguards to insure that this invasion of privacy is limited to persons engaged in specific criminal activities. This bill will clear up the present uncertainty resulting from inconsistent State and Federal wiretap laws, and promote prosecution of illegal wiretappers. It will provide Federal agents, and prosecutors with an important source of evidence for the enforcement of the Federal laws passed in 1961.

Since gambling has not been included among those crimes for which a State prosecutor could obtain wiretap authorization, this omission will limit its utilization in State prosecutions. Also, where a State statute does not legalize wiretapping, State prosecutors will not be able to obtain a wiretap order.

I feel this proposed wiretap bill will accomplish a desired twofold purpose: (1) It will strengthen the right of the law-abiding individual to privacy through the prosecution of illegal wiretappers; and (2) it will strengthen the right of society to protect itself against the ever-increasing threat of organized crime by authorizing audio surveillance of persons engaged in specific criminal activities.

The CHAIRMAN. We will be glad to have you make any comments.
Mr. RUSS. Thank you, Senator.

My statement deals with the problem of organized crime, particularly that of the illegal gambling as we know it in central Florida, which is encompassed by the lottery called Bolita of Cuba, which the police officers have referred to earlier this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair interrupt just a moment.

The affidavit you filed has attached to it a number of pictures and other documents possibly. Particularly the pictures cannot be printed in the record. Your statement will be printed in the record, your affidavit, and all of the material that you submit as exhibits that can be will be printed in the record, but the others will just have to be made exhibits for reference.

I will ask the clerk of the committee to give them appropriate numbers, starting with exhibit No. 52.

(Documents referred to marked "Exhibit Nos. 52-A, 52-B, 52-C, and 52-D" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Mr. RUSS. Senator, I find that as regards the prosecution of these gambling cases, the main problem that faces a prosecuting attorney is that of the obtaining of evidence of admissible character to support the prosecution and result in convictions. In my statement I speak in favor of the two proposals made by the Attorney General several weeks ago as regards, No. 1, the broad Federal immunity statute, and, No. 2, as regards legalized wiretapping.

548 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

As regards, first of all, the immunity statute, we have an immunity statute in Florida which my office has used quite extensively in conjunction with the law enforcement agents in investigating organized crime, particularly gambling. We have found it to be of significant value in both the investigation and the prosecution of gambling cases.

One problem that we do run into or that we foresee is that in view of the fact that the Federal Government is now in the area of anti-crime activity under the 1961 legislative package, that witnesses coming into a State investigation being granted State immunity are claiming that the immunity is not broad enough to replace their constitutional privilege against self-incrimination. Consequently, they are declining to testify on that basis. But I feel that a Federal immunity statute, which a U.S. district attorney could use in implementing the State investigation, would be of considerable assistance in protecting this valuable weapon that State prosecutors now have in the State immunity statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you might offer them immunity there, but if they are also subject to prosecution by the Federal Government, your immunity doesn't extend far enough to give them protection. That is the point; is that correct?

Mr. RUSS. That is the point exactly. As things now stand, with the 1961 legislative package, I feel that State prosecutors stand in danger of losing this valuable weapon that they have in the State immunity statutes. Of course, there is a second very important reason why you should have a broad Federal immunity statute, to give to the Federal prosecutors and the Federal law enforcement agents who have the responsibility of enforcing these laws the tools that they need to carry out their work.

As regards the second proposed legislation, that of the wiretap bill, I understand and appreciate fully this balance that we are attempting to reach between the right of the individual to privacy and, of course, the right of society to protect itself against crime. As I analyzed the bill that the Attorney General referred to, I believe it was Senate bill 1038, I find that there are built into that bill significant procedural safeguards which will result not in an interdiction of a communications system, but the inquiry on a very select basis into the criminal activities, specific criminal activities, of identified persons wherein a judge and a prosecuting attorney are placed to give judgment as to whether or not the wiretap authorization shall ever be ordered to begin with.

I feel further that it will assist and further the goal of protecting the privacy of the individual in that it, of course, has a strong prohibition against illegal wiretapping, a prohibition which could be effectively enforced and stop this type of activity. So it would have the one purpose of protecting the individual in his privacy and, of course, the second purpose of assisting the law enforcement agents in obtaining additional information and evidence to enforce the 1961 Federal Anticrime Act.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Javits, have you any questions?

Senator JAVITS. No questions, but I express appreciation to the Chair for allowing the witness, who made a long trip, to present his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. We are very glad to have you, Mr. Russ, and to have your testimony.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 549

We know that officers throughout the country occupying your position, having prosecution duties, are very anxious, most of them, at least, to have their hand strengthened wherever it can be.

Mr. RUSS. Yes, we are, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. And at the same time protecting the rights and liberties of individuals. I am hopeful that out of this, while this isn't the committee to actually recommend the legislation to the Congress, it can recommend but the legislative committee will have to further sift any testimony along this line, and procure testimony along this line, I am hopeful that there will come out of this hearing a stimulated interest in this, and the Congress will be moved to try to meet its responsibility in this field, to give to law enforcement agencies throughout the land, as far as it can from the Federal standpoint, and within the framework of the Federal Constitution, every tool that we can give them which will help them to wage this war against crime.

Thank you very much.

Mr. RUSS. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will stand in recess until 2 o'clock.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of recess: Senators McClellan and Javits.)

(Whereupon, at 12:08 p.m., the subcommittee recessed, to reconvene at 2 p.m. the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

(The subcommittee reconvened at 2:08 p.m., Senator John L. McClellan, chairman of the subcommittee, presiding.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of reconvening: Senators McClellan and McIntyre.)

The CHAIRMAN. Will you gentlemen be sworn, please?

Do you and each of you solemnly swear the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. McCAULEY. I do.

Mr. MULLEN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Beginning on my right and on your left, will you please identify yourself for the record, please?

TESTIMONY OF COL. WALTER E. STONE, LT. JOSEPH J. McCAULEY, AND CPL. JAMES W. MULLEN

Mr. STONE. I am Col. Walter E. Stone, superintendent of the Rhode Island State Police.

Mr. McCAULEY. I am Lt. Joseph J. McCauley, of the Rhode Island State Police.

Mr. MULLEN. I am Cpl. James W. Mullen, of the Rhode Island State Police.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, Colonel Stone, do you have a prepared statement?

Mr. STONE. Yes, I have, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to read it?

Mr. STONE. I do, sir.

550 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. If you will, before you proceed with your statement, give us a little more of your background.

Mr. STONE. I have been a police officer for 31 years. Twenty-seven of my years have been with the Providence Police Department. I retired as chief of police in 1962 to take over as superintendent of the Rhode Island State Police.

I formerly held the State police position from 1959 to 1961, when I returned to the Providence Police Department and was appointed chief of police.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, then, you may proceed to read your statement, if you would prefer to read it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Chairman and members of this committee, like other witnesses appearing before this honorable committee today, I, too, am firmly convinced that a structure of organized crime does exist in America.

Several weeks ago the local and out-of-State newspapers named Raymond L. Patriarca as 1 of the 12 top heads of organized crime in the United States today.

I would now like to go into detail and give this committee the criminal background on this exconvict.

Raymond L. Patriarca, age 55, lives with his family in Providence, R.I. To the Rhode Island State Police and the Providence Police Department this man is the controlling force behind organized crime in Rhode Island and New England.

Raymond L. Patriarca was born on March 17, 1908, in Worcester, Mass. His criminal career began as a bodyguard for bootleggers in the early twenties when he quickly gained a reputation for being a strong-arm man.

That this man was without honor "even among his fellow thieves" was indicated early in his "career" by the fact that he was known to set up hijacking of the very shipments of alcohol he was hired to guard.

His police record began while in his teens in 1926 and includes arrest for hijacking, jail escape, violations of the gambling laws, violations of the Mann Act for which he served a Federal sentence, safecracking, armed robbery, adultery, motor vehicle code offenses, carrying of firearms, conspiracy, assault, auto theft, and accessory before the fact, murder—two counts.

The CHAIRMAN. You say those are arrests. How many times has he been convicted? Do you have his conviction record with you?

Mr. STONE. We have, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. You can supply it.

Mr. STONE. The FBI record, Mr. Chairman, shows five convictions.

The CHAIRMAN. Five convictions?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. You may proceed.

Mr. STONE. He is a shrewd, scheming individual as well versed in the ways of crime today as he was in yesteryear. He is as ruthless in the sixties as he was in the thirties.

Behind the front of his business enterprises, Patriarca, through his lieutenants, is still involved in one of his old specialties, that of strong-arming. Now its being done for unions in the New England area instead of for his fellow gangsters during prohibition.

The CHAIRMAN. Being done for unions? What do you mean by that?

Mr. STONE. By that I mean, Mr. Chairman, that if there is trouble in the union and they are looking for goons or strong-arm people to move in, that Patriarca would supply them.

The CHAIRMAN. He is not a union leader as such?

Mr. STONE. That is right, sir, he is not a union leader.

The CHAIRMAN. But he is called in. They make his services frequently available to unions?

Mr. STONE. He will supply strong-arm people to straighten out situations.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. STONE. He has the controlling interest in lotteries, bookmaking, dice games, and the provision of wire service in this area.

Moreover, he settles any disputes within the organization working this section, sometimes using force or intimidation to accomplish his designs. He is known to be connected with other racketeers operating not only in New England, particularly in Boston and Worcester, but also in Broward County, Fla.

The following is a partial list of his known criminal associates, all with previous arrests by local and Federal authorities, and individuals who comprise a tight-knit organization in New England and elsewhere.

There are many more of lesser note who also are allied with Patriarca in one way or another. His fold of friends presently, or in the past, includes the following from Rhode Island:

Dominic "Terry" Biafore, Americo "Pat the Barber" Bucci, John Candelmo, Alphonse "Fobey" Capalbo, Frank Forti, Albert "Key-stone" Lepore, Antonio "Tony Holmes" Lopreato, Frank "Butsey" Morelli, Francis "Joe" Patriarca (Raymond's brother), Santino "Sandy" Ruggerio, and his brother, Richard "Rex" Ruggerio, Giuseppe "Blondy" Simonelli, Louis "The Fox" Taglianetti, Henry Tamello, Alfredo "The Blind Pig" Rossi, Albert "Albo" Vitale.

From Boston, there are Frank Ferrara and Michael "Mickey the Wise Guy" Rocco.

From New York is Frank Costello.

Mr. O'DONNELL. We have a chart known as the Rhode Island and Boston organization.

Did you prepare that part of the chart—furnish the information to the committee, with regards to Rhode Island?

Mr. STONE. I did, sir; yes, sir.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Are all of the names that have been mentioned by you in the preceding paragraph on that chart?

Mr. STONE. They are, sir.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Continue, please.

The CHAIRMAN. Let that chart be made exhibit No. 53, and printed in the record insofar as it can be.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 53" for reference faces this page.)

Mr. STONE. Another associate of Raymond Patriarca was Frank Iacone of Worcester, now deceased.

Raymond Patriarca is no stranger to murder, having been indicted by a Rhode Island grand jury for his part in the 1930 Easter Saturday attempt to free two vicious criminals from a Rhode Island prison which resulted in the death of four people. Patriarca was a part of the conspiracy involved in setting the stage for the attempted prison break.

One may ask how this man Patriarca came to attain control of the rackets with its goons and its far-reaching effects. He first came into power in the early forties when he took over the rackets in southern New England from Frank "Butsey" Morelli, then the No. 1 man, who was on the apparent downgrade at the time.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Was this in the southern New England area as distinct from the entire New England area?

Mr. STONE. This was in the southern New England area.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Thank you. Go ahead.

Mr. STONE. One of Patriarca's first acts after taking over the rackets was to take control of the wire service in southern New England. He raised the fees for its services. This pushed a lot of people out of the bookie business and left the gravy for Patriarca and his mobsters.

One of the men who dared challenge Patriarca was Carlton O'Brien, an ex-convict and strong-arm man in his own right. Carlton O'Brien ran several bookie places in and around Rhode Island and he refused to go along with paying the raised wire service ante. He set up his own wire service in an adjoining State where he bootlegged this service into his own bookie parlors, and also furnished other bookies service who refused to pay the heavy rate put on by Patriarca. This brought on trouble.

O'Brien's bookies were held up, bookie parlors wrecked, and telephone lines pulled out, bookmakers slugged and robbed.

In 1951, O'Brien, while walking into his home early one morning, which is located in a respectable neighborhood outside of Providence, was gunned down from ambush with a shotgun. This is one of the unsolved gangland murders. Police officials feel this slaying was a reprisal for his defiance of Patriarca.

There is little doubt that Raymond Patriarca, like his racketeers in organized crime today, is using profits gained from illegal enterprises to infiltrate legitimate businesses mostly on a "silent partner" basis.

In any analysis of the past criminal cases involving Raymond Patriarca one is certain to find indications that witnesses who have made damaging testimony against this man have through fear repudiated said testimony.

Rhode Island law enforcement officers feel that such withdrawal of testimony was motivated out of the fear witnesses had of reprisals. The threat of reprisal action is not only directed toward the law abiding who would make damaging testimony.

There is cause for peace officers to believe that reprisals in all forms, including murder itself, have been carried out against those criminals in all echelons of the organization.

In the year 1956 Raymond Patriarca, with his brother Joe, strong-armed their way into the cigarette vending machine business. Trucks were hijacked and equipment destroyed and, with the fear of reprisal, the owners of legitimate business that were affected kept their mouths shut.

Also during the year 1956 Raymond Patriarca stated: "I am going to put out 500 machines before I'm through and there is nothing that anyone can do about it."

Patriarca, through his goons, threatened the legitimate cafe and store owners into renting his cigarette machines and jukeboxes. Failure to comply with these hoodlums' requests resulted in the wrecking of the store, fixtures, and bodily harm.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you: Would none of them testify against him when he came and made those threats?

Mr. STONE. No, they wouldn't, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean legitimate business people, law-abiding citizens in legitimate businesses, were thus coerced and intimidated?

Mr. STONE. I mean exactly that, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And they will not testify?

Mr. STONE. No, sir; they would not.

The CHAIRMAN. What reason do they give you?

Mr. STONE. Through fear of this man or his henchmen.

The CHAIRMAN. Do they feel like the law enforcement agencies are presently unable to cope with that situation, and would you say they are unable to cope with it, and, thus, this man can operate in this fashion almost with impunity?

Mr. STONE. Certainly if we had the cooperation of the citizen, we could cope with the situation, but when you don't have it, certainly you can't.

The CHAIRMAN. But you do have a situation where if the citizen cooperates with you, he makes himself or exposes himself to great bodily injury and possibly death?

Mr. STONE. He does, sir; yes, he does.

The CHAIRMAN. That is one of the difficult problems. I don't know what law could be enacted that will solve that, but that is one of the very difficult, almost insurmountable, handicaps in law enforcement, where you are dealing with a gang that is dedicated to terror and violence and so forth in perpetrating that.

Mr. STONE. I would say, Mr. Chairman, it is the main obstacle as far as law enforcement is concerned, where you do not get the cooperation from the victims.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. STONE. Raymond Patriarca is known to be linked very closely to gaming czar Frank Costello. This affiliation comes from their activities, which also include the late John F. (Big Jack) Letendre, of Woonsocket and Florida, in the operation of a gambling joint in Florida.

"Big Jack" Letendre later was murdered in the city of Woonsocket, R.I., and police theorized that this slaying was a result of a squabble within the underworld.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that another one of those unsolved gang murders?

Mr. STONE. That is right, Mr. Chairman.

Another one of the rackets that Patriarca worked was the so-called past posting. This is the placing of a wager on a horserace that has been run and a winner has been determined. These risky but profitable activities were carried on by the goons of Patriarca throughout the East.

Mr. O'DONNELL. As I understand it, Lieutenant McCauley can give a little further information on past posting; is that correct?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir. He has the gadget used.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Thank you.

Mr. STONE. Very active in this operation of past posting was George "Tiger" Balletto and Michael "Mike" Mandella.

554 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

As a reward for their endeavors Balletto was shot to death in the Bella Napoli Cafe in the Federal Hill section of Providence in front of 22 witnesses, most of them with a criminal record.

The assassin of George "Tiger" Balletto was John "Jackie" Nazarian, one of the most vicious and feared gunman on the east coast. This "triggerman" was one of Patriarca's enforcers. Very reliable police information has that Nazarian had been used in gangland slayings outside of Rhode Island.

It is also a positive fact that this gunman was responsible for two of the gangland slayings in Rhode Island that have occurred in the past few years.

One of the 22 witnesses of the Balletto murder, Eddie Hannan, an ex-boxer, was strangled to death by Nazarian who left his body in a dump in the Federal Hill section of Providence with bailing wire around his neck. This indicated that he was going to be a damaging witness in the Balletto murder.

Patriarca had to have an "animal" like Nazarian in his fold for obvious reasons, although he lived in fear that he was not immune to being a victim of "Jackie," who was known as a mad dog. Just mentioning the name of Nazarian brought fear to the underworld as well as the average citizen.

Michael Mandella received the same fate as his cohort, Balletto, when his bullet-riddled body was discovered on the outskirts of Providence.

This gangland slaying is still unsolved. John "Jackie" Nazarian, who was Raymond Patriarca's chief torpedo man, was slain while walking the streets of Federal Hill last year, a short distance from Raymond Patriarca's hangout.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you solved that crime?

Mr. STONE. There were two indictments on it, Mr. Chairman. There was one trial. The man charged with the murder was acquitted.

In recent years, another racket has flourished, "Boosting." "Boosting" as it is known, is a professional operation by trained goons who are specialized in the fleecing of department stores of millions of dollars in merchandise annually.

They invade these department stores in teams, consisting of pitchman, blocker, bag man, and roller. With this combination they have been known to steal in excess of 100 suits a day.

To show you the extent of their operation, one team has been arrested in Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island. The men engaged in this lucrative operation leave Rhode Island and travel throughout the greater part of the United States as far as California.

These groups of boosters out of Rhode Island are considered one of the best in the country. They no longer travel only by car, but use every mode of transportation.

They ship the merchandise directly to the fence by rail, air, boat, or any other conceivable way. Where does all of this stolen merchandise go? To the fence.

In Providence and Pawtucket, R.I., we have two of the biggest in the country. They are: Alfredo "The Blind Pig" Rossi and Albert "Albo" Vitale. They are known associates of Raymond Patriarca.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Stone, are these two individuals on the chart that has been introduced as exhibit 53?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 555

Mr. STONE. Yes, they are, sir.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Thank you.

Mr. STONE. It is a known fact that a good police officer has to have information. There was one time when we could depend upon an informer but today the informer is not around, he is a rare guy. They fear reprisal and also they are afraid of some of the courts' decisions, where you have to expose them.

What is the result? No informers. They want to give you something but they won't. The only way we get information now is by an anonymous letter or an anonymous telephone call. So it is almost a must that legislation be enacted to allow law enforcement officials to wiretap. We should do everything we can to put a crimp in the rackets.

I positively agree with the U.S. Attorney General, Robert F. Kennedy, on his views regarding organized crime and the necessity for legalized wiretapping.

Because of the antiquated search and seizure law in the State of Rhode Island the racketeer is almost encouraged to engage in book-making activities, within the confines of this State. The law practically gives the "bookie" a license to operate.

There have been held discussions with the U.S. attorney for the district of Rhode Island, Raymond J. Pattine, the Governor of Rhode Island, John H. Chafee, and myself about a Federal grand jury investigation of the gambling rackets and organized crime in our State.

We anticipate a cooperative effort involving the State police and the U.S. Attorney General's office and are hopeful that something along these lines can be worked out shortly.

Some time ago at a meeting of the New England State Police Administrators Conference (NESPAC), I proposed the establishment of a central criminal investigative and intelligence office for the coordination and evaluation of information about the movements of criminals and the activities of the organized racketeers.

It is a joint effort by the State police of the six New England States. My proposal was based on the fact that at the time there was no central location in New England where information of this kind could be evaluated and coordinated properly.

The entire operation will undoubtedly become the basis for an indispensable type of information needed to combat organized crime. There will be a master intelligence file which will permit interested State police agencies to become acquainted with and follow the entire careers and activities of lawbreakers.

I am very happy to announce at this time that these proposals to the parent group of NESPAC administrators have already started to become a reality.

My own personal feelings are that one of the reasons why organized crime is on the increase is because the underworld has taken advantage of the internal problems within police departments throughout the United States. These internal problems are low salaries, low morale, union consciousness, moonlighting, and lack of trained personnel.

If all police departments would set their standards on the high level as that of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, under the leadership of America's most outstanding police official, J. Edgar Hoover, and his dedicated agents, crime would be on the decrease.

This is shown by the remarkable record established throughout the years by this great organization.

I personally feel that if this honorable committee were to ask any of the 12 so-called Cosa Nostra leaders who they fear, and respect most, I am sure their answer would be J. Edgar Hoover and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

At this time I wish to thank the members of this honorable committee for affording me the opportunity to come here to testify today.

I am sure that the knowledge gained at these hearings will deal a serious blow to organized crime throughout the country.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much, Colonel Stone. I am quite interested in the last statement that you just made.

Would you amplify it or comment upon it? You say you think the knowledge gained at these hearings will deal a serious blow to organized crime. Tell us how you think it will be effective.

Mr. STONE. There isn't any question in my mind, Mr. Chairman, that it will, because if you go back to the 1951-52 hearings of the late Senator Kefauver, I, as a policeman, know for a positive fact that crime for 3 or 4 years was almost at a standstill.

I base my feelings on the former hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you feel there will be a retardation in their progress?

Mr. STONE. I certainly do. I think this is the greatest thing that can happen to law enforcement, to have those like myself to come here and have a chance to talk, and not only the chance to talk but to realize that we have such Senators as yourself and other Senators behind us.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you feel this causes the confirmed criminal, those engaged in syndicated crime, do you feel that it puts a public spotlight on them that makes it more difficult for them to operate for a period of time?

Mr. STONE. I am sure it does. I am sure there will be many people who will walk out of these organizations since these hearings have taken place. Not only that, but I think we are getting a lot more support from the public than we ordinarily would have had these hearings not been held.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you think the hearings kind of stimulate an interest among the public, with the average citizen coming to a realization that these things are happening in his country and wants to try to do something to help, and he feels like he has an obligation to do something?

Mr. STONE. I am positive they do, Mr. Chairman, because everybody has been listening to the hearings. I know for a positive fact that it is going to help law enforcement. This is what law enforcement looks for, but very seldom gets. I think it is a tremendous thing. Nothing could happen any better for law enforcement than these hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

You have some of your assistants with you. Senator McIntyre?

Senator McINTYRE. This Raymond Patriarca, is he a man over 60 today?

Mr. STONE. He is 55, Senator.

Senator McINTYRE. What are his legitimate enterprises? Does he have a front of some kind?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 557

Mr. STONE. He is in the cigarette vending machine business, the jukebox business, and a sweater business. He has people on the road selling sweaters that go all over the country. Those are the ones we can—

Mr. O'DONNELL. Is he in the Sherwood Manufacturing Co.?

Mr. STONE. He is part owner of the Sherwood Manufacturing Co.

Senator McINTYRE. What is the object of that business?

Mr. STONE. They make sweaters, coat sweaters.

Senator McINTYRE. Is he a wealthy man by appearances, at least?

Mr. STONE. I wouldn't say not by his appearance, Mr. Senator; no. He doesn't show it, but there isn't any question that he is.

Senator McINTYRE. I believe in your testimony you indicated that one of his specialties was strong-arming in union affairs.

Mr. STONE. Yes, I did, Mr. Senator.

Senator McINTYRE. Do you have any knowledge of any particular union that he has done any work for or anything like that?

Mr. STONE. I have, sir; yes, sir. I will give you one case, Mr. Senator.

Senator McINTYRE. All right.

Mr. STONE. The name is Stephen Broccoli, alias "Peanuts the Dwarf."

Senator McINTYRE. Is this man on your chart?

Mr. STONE. No, he is not, sir. He works for local—is a shop steward for local 251 of Providence, the Laborers Union. He presently is employed by the Gilbain Building Co., one of the largest construction companies in the world. They work not only in this country, but outside of the country.

Our information, police information, is that he was put on this job by Raymond Patriarca, or this position was secured for him by Raymond Patriarca. This man's criminal record goes way back to 1936. He has done time for armed robbery in Rhode Island; he has done time for armed robbery in Massachusetts. Again, armed robbery in Rhode Island.

Senator McINTYRE. What is his function in this construction company? Is he a strong-arm organizer?

Mr. STONE. If there are union troubles within the union, anybody working on the Gilbain job, he goes to the people that run the job or who run the construction company, and straightens them out. In other words, he does business with the top echelon of the construction company. If they are having labor trouble there, he goes around and talks for the people who are working for the union. He is quite a guy to send to the top of a company like that to talk to them, with his background. (Letter from president of Gilbain Building Co. concerning testimony of Colonel Stone and an affidavit from Colonel Stone concerning this testimony may be found in the appendix on p. 622.)

Senator McINTYRE. Tell me, as far as Patriarca is concerned, you probably heard the term "insulation." You have heard that term in connection with these hearings?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. How would you describe Mr. Patriarca's insulation?

Mr. STONE. Well, he is in the background. He doesn't get into the actual commitment of the crime or running of the book joint. He has somebody else do it for him. He is in the background. He doesn't have to get into the act.

Mr. O'DONNELL. This makes it extremely difficult to obtain evidence against him.

Mr. STONE. To get a conviction on the man; that is right, to tie him in.

Senator MCINTYRE. I take it you are in favor of some strengthening of the wiretapping laws of this country.

Mr. STONE. Positively, Mr. Senator.

Senator MCINTYRE. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Colonel Stone, have you received from the State prison, or some correction institution, any correspondence directed to Ray Patriarca by anybody?

Mr. STONE. Yes, I have.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Could you explain what that is?

Mr. STONE. In 1950, I think it was, a fellow by the name of Pauley Caliche was sentenced to 15 years in the Massachusetts State Prison for armed robbery. He was involved in a robbery in Dartmouth, Mass., where there was $250,000 in jewelry stolen from a family by the name of Coffin. While Caliche was doing time in Massachusetts a letter was intercepted by the officials down there that was sent out or intended to be sent out to Raymond Patriarca.

The CHAIRMAN. These are notes that were sent?

Mr. STONE. That is a letter, Mr. Chairman, that was written by Caliche and supposed to have been going to Raymond Patriarca.

The CHAIRMAN. You say "supposedly." Did you have proof of it?

Mr. STONE. The prison officials intercepted the letter on its way out, and they turned it over to me.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Do you have the original of this letter?

Mr. STONE. I have the original back at State police headquarters.

Mr. O'DONNELL. And we have a photostatic copy. The photostatic copy of the letter that I have which has not been introduced as an exhibit starts out. "Hello, Boss: Do you know how I respect you and call you boss? But, my dear, big boss, do you have to leave me in jail? I wrote to you and Henry but I didn't get any answer and I haven't heard from Billy Lepore or Carnera. Did they forget me like you and Henry?"

And it continues on in that vein. It is signed "Bye, Big Boss, Paul." This was by, as you say, Paul Caliche.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he still living?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he still in jail?

Mr. STONE. No, he isn't, sir. He is out.

The CHAIRMAN. How long has he been out?

Mr. STONE. About 4 years, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. When was this letter intercepted?

Mr. STONE. Shortly after he was sentenced to prison, around 1951, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So it was in the last few years?

Mr. STONE. Within the last 10 or 11 years, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. So this one at least recognized somebody as the big boss.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 559

Mr. O'DONNELL. May this be introduced as an exhibit, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be made exhibit No. 54.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 54" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. O'DONNELL. Do you have any other correspondence intercepted at the prison?

Mr. STONE. Yes, I have, by the same man, sent to a different man.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Sent to whom?

Mr. STONE. Henry Tamello, who is on the chart.

Mr. O'DONNELL. And this indicates what, in summary?

Mr. STONE. He said:

I didn't hear from you. I also wrote to Raymond, and I thought to write to you again. Maybe Billy Wink and Carnera forget me, too. Please write and let me know if you people want to help me or not.

Mr. O'DONNELL. In other words, this letter supplements the other letter and was sent out shortly thereafter?

Mr. STONE. That is right.

Mr. O'DONNELL. May this letter be made an exhibit, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. This may be made exhibit No. 54-A.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 54-A" for reference.)

Mr. STONE. Do you want me to finish?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes.

Mr. STONE. He is looking for help and he says:

Are you people going to help me or not? I know people who want to help me and get you people and put you people in. Curley came down to see me—and he left me $20. If I didn't need it to buy cigarettes, I would have sent it back to him. Too bad they killed my friend Grande. Do you think I know who did it? My girl was telling me that when she was working for that drunk Butzzy Morelli, you, Raymond Patriarca, and the rest, were going to help me. How about Billy Wink, and Carnera? You people better wake up and do something for me. Get me a new lawyer and a new trial, and I expect to get out of here in 2 weeks. Ha. I am gaining weight and you are losing.

Curley is Curley Rossi—

As ever,

PAUL.

P.S.—Tell Ralph Merola I am broke. Please send me some cigarettes.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I have previously been sworn. I have prepared here a short memorandum which summarizes the testimony of Ray Patriarca, who appeared before the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor-Management Field on February 11, 1959. I would like to have it introduced as an exhibit for reference.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be made exhibit No. 55.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 55" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. That exhibit is a little summary for information. The records of the committee, which we have, would be, of course, the best evidence, but that might give some light on it if anyone is interested in reading it.

Senator MCINTYRE. Colonel, I realize that your jurisdiction is Rhode Island, but I notice in your statement that this Ray Patriarca has an associate, now deceased, named Frank Iacone.

560 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

Senator McINTYRE. He is from Worcester.

Mr. STONE. That is right, Mr. McIntyre.

Senator McINTYRE. Do you have any knowledge of Worcester racketeering, gangland operations in the city of Worcester?

Mr. STONE. I personally have no knowledge, Mr. Senator.

Senator McINTYRE. You don't know whether Patriarca's influence extends into Worcester or not?

Mr. STONE. On Patriarca?

Senator McINTYRE. Yes.

Mr. STONE. My information is that he does have.

Senator McINTYRE. How far does Patriarca's influence extend? Does it extend up into my State of New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. I would say it extends from New England to Florida.

Senator McINTYRE. From New England to Florida?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

Senator McINTYRE. Do you mean in those two areas or all the way down the east coast?

Mr. STONE. All the way down the coast.

Senator McINTYRE. I notice in your statement that you don't know of any Cosa Nostra as such.

Mr. STONE. I have never heard of such a name; no, sir.

Senator McINTYRE. But you would indicate that in your opinion that Patriarca would probably sit with the other families, leaders, in conferences concerning crime throughout the east coast?

Mr. STONE. I would say, Mr. Senator, that he has contacts with all the top hoods of his part of the country.

Senator McINTYRE. Which you consider the east coast?

Mr. STONE. Yes, I would, Mr. Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I have a few, Senator.

The staff of the subcommittee has in its possession a copy of a public document consisting of 141 pages which is a record of the impeachments of Daniel H. Coakley, former counselor in the State of Massachusetts. The impeachment proceedings were held in the Senate of Massachusetts from May 5, 1959, to October 2, 1959. Coakley was impeached. Among other things, he had endeavored to obtain a pardon for Raymond Patriarca in December 1938, at which time Patriarca was serving three concurrent sentences in State prison for the crimes of breaking and entering, armed robbery, and arson.

I would request that it be made an exhibit for reference at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be made exhibit No. 56 for reference.

(Document referred to market "Exhibit No. 56" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. O'DONNELL. Colonel Stone, do you have any comments to make with regard to John "Jackie" Nazarian, who is now deceased, and whom you mentioned in your statement as being a murderer for Patriarca?

Mr. STONE. On April 15, 1958, the chief of the Providence Police Department, John A. Murphy, received a request from the chief of the New York City Police Department, a request to furnish to the department the photographs of the following subjects: Raymond Patriarca,

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 561

John "Jackie" Nazarian, John "Tiger" Beletto, deceased, and John "Sonny" Franzese. [Reads:]

Information has been received that Patriarca might be involved in the killing of Albert Anastasia, who was shot and killed in this city on October 25, 1957.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Have you finished, Colonel Stone, with your statement and any remarks you care to make?

Mr. STONE. I have finished with my statement and also with remarks that I want to make. But most certainly I am available to answer any questions that the committee feels it would want to ask of me.

Mr. O'DONNELL. What we would like to discuss briefly at this time is past posting. Would you answer those questions or will Lieutenant McCauley?

Mr. STONE. Lieutenant McCauley.

The CHAIRMAN. You indicate in your testimony that organized crime is on the increase. Are you speaking particularly of your area, of your section?

Mr. STONE. No, I am not, Mr. Chairman. This is the national situation.

The CHAIRMAN. You have no doubt that what we speak of as syndicated crime is growing, increasing, rather than diminishing?

Mr. STONE. It has been, up to these hearings, I am positive.

The CHAIRMAN. It was in the ascendancy at the time the hearings began. This may have slowed them down some.

Mr. STONE. There is no question, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. But law enforcement has not been able to compete or to combat the strength of organized crime sufficiently to keep it from increasing?

Mr. STONE. Law enforcement on a State and local level I would say is not in any position to compete with them.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you feel like this ratio of increase is a danger or a menace to our country if something is not done about it?

Mr. STONE. There is no question, Mr. Chairman. Somebody better do something.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a tendency on the part of people over the country, especially in some areas where a condition like this may not exist, where they don't actually have organized crime, to say, "Oh, well, this is something we read about. It doesn't bother us." But I wonder about your views. You have been in the law enforcement work for a long time.

Is this thing becoming such a menace that it endangers law and order throughout the country?

Mr. STONE. Positively. There is no question.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless something is checked, unless we find something to abate it, then the whole country is in danger?

Mr. STONE. That is right, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. And that you don't feel is any exaggeration?

Mr. STONE. Not a bit, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not trying to speak as an alarmist, but you are trying to deal with the realities of the situation as you see them and trying to deal with them as they exist?

Mr. STONE. Those are my observations from being a policeman for 31 years. I am on my 32d year.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any questions, Senator?

562 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator McINTYRE. No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Lieutenant McCauley, I understand you have with you some instruments, although they are not fully complete, with regard to past posting. Can you explain how that operated?

I notice that Colonel Stone, in his statement on page 6, mentions that Patriarca worked the so-called past-posting racket.

Mr. McCauley. Mr. Chairman, honorable members of the committee, we have here a device which is used in past posting. We will bring it up and show it to the committee and explain how this particular item works.

This device consists of a small suitcase which has in it a transmitter. This transmitter has an aerial on it and is used in conjunction with a receiver. This receiver is on the person of a party who is in the past-posting operation.

The CHAIRMAN. They put that in their chest or pocket or something?

Mr. McCauley. No, Mr. Chairman. They have a girdle which they wear around their waist.

The CHAIRMAN. They have a what?

Mr. McCauley. A girdle.

The CHAIRMAN. They wear it around their waist?

Mr. McCauley. Right. And they have a pocket in it in which they insert this transmitter. This transmitter has two wires coming from it.

The CHAIRMAN. They have on a jacket especially made?

Mr. McCauley. They have a coat on over it. In other words, you wouldn't know it was there.

The CHAIRMAN. It is made especially for this purpose?

Mr. McCauley. That is correct. This receiver has two wires attached to it which have two electrodes made from dimes. These two dimes are attached to the thighs and adhere there with adhesive tape.

This transmitter gives off an impulse. I must mention right now that this past-posting team consists of four people. First, the party that is in the racetrack who gives a visual signal to a second party who picks it up a short location from the track by telescope or binoculars.

The CHAIRMAN. That is some physical signal?

Mr. McCauley. Some physical signal.

The CHAIRMAN. And somebody on the outside of the track picks it up?

Mr. McCauley. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that a signal indicating which horse won?

Mr. McCauley. Which horse won the race. This is transmitted by phone to another phone a short distance from where the bookie parlor might be located. The third person picks the information up from the second party and relays it by this transmitter to the individual in the bookie parlor by a series of impulses and it gives him the winner of the race.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, he can give a signal over that indicating the race, the number of the horse that won?

Mr. McCauley. They put a heavy enough wager on it to insure a monetary gain. There is a gadget on the outside which will be shown to you, and the only thing visible would be the antenna and the push button. That was used very extensively through the New England area and elsewhere in the early 1950's.

Mr. O'DONNELL. If I may inject, the fourth man who has this receiver on him which gives him impulses is located right in the bookie room.

Mr. McCauley. He is in the bookie parlor and most likely has been there all day, from early morning.

Mr. O'DONNELL. At the time he receives the announcement as to who won the race, does he then bet with the track and beat the track because he has advance, inside information?

Mr. McCauley. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. How can he bet with the track? He bets with the bookie.

Mr. McCauley. He bets with the bookie.

The CHAIRMAN. He couldn't beat the track because the race was won.

Mr. McCauley. Many times the fourth man will lose a substantial amount to gain the confidence of the bookie.

The CHAIRMAN. He will lose something to begin with?

Mr. McCauley. And get a big monetary gain later on when this device would be used. It takes 55 seconds, we understand, to relay the information from the track to the bookie and get his winning bet in.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this a photograph of this equipment?

Mr. McCauley. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. It may be made exhibit No. 57.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 57" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. O'DONNELL. Colonel Stone, I have in front of me records which were supplied by the Providence police department which relate the activities of those individuals on the chart, namely, their names, address, birth places, localities, frequent criminal associates, criminal history, legitimate business, and criminal records.

I would like to have you look at this and have it introduced as an exhibit.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you familiar with these records that are being presented to you?

(The documents were handed to the witness, Stone.)

Mr. Stone. Yes, I am, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. They are correct?

Mr. Stone. Yes, sir, they are.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, they may be received as exhibit No. 58.

(Documents referred to, marked "Exhibit No. 58" for reference, and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. They will be received for reference.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Senator, I previously have been sworn. The FBI has furnished us the records pertaining to the individuals on the chart in Providence, R.I., and I would like to have them introduced as an exhibit at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. They may be made exhibit No. 59 for reference.

(Documents referred to marked "Exhibit No. 59" for reference, and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any other questions, Senator?

Senator McINTYRE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, do either of you have anything to state further to the committee?

Mr. STONE. No; I have not, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any further suggestion about legislation or what the Congress can do, what the Federal Government can do, to aid local law enforcement officials?

Mr. STONE. Well, most certainly if you can get us a wiretap law, it would be of tremendous help to us.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you think it will be so helpful, Colonel?

Mr. STONE. By getting in on the conversation, Mr. Chairman, which will probably lead us to solving a crime, or knocking off a large illegal establishment.

The CHAIRMAN. If you are in on a conversation, you can probably get there during the time it is committed or during the course of its commission, could you not?

Mr. STONE. I think if you had access to telephone conversation, you would know about it before they got started.

The CHAIRMAN. You would know what they were planning?

Mr. STONE. What they were planning, and you would probably save a policeman's life, or somebody else's life.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further? If not, gentlemen, thank you very much. Your testimony has been very helpful.

Who are your next witnesses?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Commissioner McNamara and Deputy Superintendent Howland.

The CHAIRMAN. You and each of you do solemnly swear the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. McNAMARA. I do.

Mr. HOWLAND. I do.

TESTIMONY OF EDMUND L. McNAMARA AND JOHN T. HOWLAND

The CHAIRMAN. Commissioner, would you identify yourself for the record, please?

Mr. McNAMARA. My name is Edmund L. McNamara, police commissioner for the city of Boston.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you served in that position?

Mr. McNAMARA. Since April 6, 1962.

The CHAIRMAN. And what was your prior experience in law enforcement?

Mr. McNAMARA. Sixteen years prior as a special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. Superintendent Howland, will you identify yourself, please, sir?

Mr. HOWLAND. John T. Howland, and I have been a member of the Boston Police Department for 24 years. I have served in many capacities in the department. I am a member of the FBI National Academy Associates, and the International Chiefs of Police. I served for 7 years as chief investigator for Suffolk County.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. McNamara, I believe you have a brief statement.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 565

Mr. McNAMARA. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you like to read it? If so, you may proceed.

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. Chairman and members of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations: I welcome this opportunity to appear before your committee to discuss present-day law enforcement from the standpoint of a large municipal police department. I have been informed that this hearing, basically speaking, is to concern itself with those problems commonly associated with that organization known as the Mafia, the Cosa Nostra, or as the Syndicate.

Police administrators across the country are seriously disturbed at the avalanche of crime now sweeping across all of our large cities. I believe that it is the most urgent domestic problem confronting our Nation today and that it has a direct effect on our personal safety and our internal security. Recent revelations concerning the vicious criminal syndicate—known as the Cosa Nostra—has attracted nationwide attention to the activities of this organization of professional criminals. Their legitimate and illegitimate operations, which apparently span the entire country, has brought them untold wealth, great influence, and power.

The Cosa Nostra is composed of a number of so-called families, each dominated by a boss. Their use of the term “family” indicates a fraternal rather than a blood relationship.

It is a loosely constructed organization, but includes certain definite levels of command. Rules of conduct are fixed for all members to protect the federation from external intervention and internal conflict; and these rules are rigidly enforced. Serious violations carry the penalty of death.

There is no doubt that the principal source of income for this criminal cartel is obtained from illegal gambling. The Criminal Division of the Department of Justice has conservatively estimated that the profit from all forms of illegal gambling in the United States totals $7 billion annually. A large percentage of this huge sum filters into the treasury of the Cosa Nostra and finances all of their other enterprises, including loan-sharking, trafficking in narcotics, and extortion.

The existence of this criminal syndicate has been influenced and encouraged by the presence of legalized parimutuel gambling. For example, the steady increase in the availability of horse and dog racing in Massachusetts and adjacent States over the past 30 years has indoctrinated many persons in our community with the desire and compulsion to gamble. Their inability to visit these State-licensed gambling enterprises as often as their desires or finances permit has resulted in the flourishing of illegal gambling to satisfy their needs. Although the individual bets are small, the volume is great and, thereby, has created a crime problem as difficult to eradicate as was the illegal sale of liquor during the prohibition era.

Despite the relentless activity of Federal agencies with substantial budgets and the combined efforts of State, county, and municipal law enforcement organizations, we have not yet dented the framework of the illegal gambling operations in the United States.

Much has been accomplished through the new Federal legislation restricting the use of the telephone and the wire services for gambling purposes and cramping to some extent, the horserace bookmaker. In the meantime, however, betting on other sports—baseball, football, and basketball—have increased widely; the steady flow of illegal gambling profits.

Federal legislation to permit restricted wiretapping has been advocated. Although it is a sensitive subject because of its obvious civil rights implications, the efficacy of the wiretap is quite clear. The amount of time, effort, and police man-hours now required to gain the evidence necessary to prosecute a single gambler could be reduced substantially through the use of the wiretap.

A word must be said concerning the position of the police toward the recent judicial interpretations which have placed a roadblock in the path of criminal justice. Legislative action is an absolute necessity in this area to provide the police with the necessary weapons to effectively combat crime. It is difficult for the average police officer who faces daily the harsh realities of police duty to understand the extreme emphasis presently being placed on the rights of the individual as against the rights of the general public at a time when the police task is almost overwhelming.

The Massachusetts Crime Commission has reported that the type of crime with which we are here concerned is a state of lawlessness of long standing and is indeed a continuance of the lawlessness of the prohibition era, with many of the same individuals as participants.

This report indicates, further, that this state of lawlessness has thrived on conditions of tolerance, hypocrisy, and corruption within our society and that the public at large has been indifferent, due in part to apathy and, in part, to lack of awareness as to the significance of this condition.

I am greatly impressed and concur wholeheartedly with the recent statements of Mr. J. Edgar Hoover relative to the part that the public must play in aiding and supporting their law enforcement agencies in smashing this criminal combine.

The news media—press, radio, and television—can be of tremendous assistance in arousing the general public to the seriousness of this situation and creating a better understanding of the problems of the police in coping with it.

In the final analysis, the people of every community must come to the realization that it is their small individual bet that finances this illegal empire and complete enforcement is not possible without the active support and assistance of all good citizens.

We are not cognizant of the fact that the personalities we intend to discuss are, in fact, members of the Mafia or the Cosa Nostra, but we do recognize the fact that these persons are apparently responsible and pay tribute to one individual who may be termed as the "Boss" in the New England area.

This information has been developed by the Criminal Intelligence Division of the Boston Police Department and is in the possession of Deputy Superintendent John T. Howland who is present with me today.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Would you like to proceed, Mr. Howland, with your statement?

Mr. HOWLAND. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, you may proceed.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 567

Mr. HOWLAND. I am chief of the Bureau of Inspectional Services of the Boston Police Department. This bureau consists of three divisions:

1. The intelligence division.
2. The internal affairs division.
3. The staff inspection division.

We are cognizant of the purpose of our appearance before the U.S. Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations and we are interested in aiding the subcommittee in any manner possible.

We are also aware that the members of the subcommittee are most anxious to hear any information which will contribute to or substantiate statements given before the committee by other witnesses. The group under discussion has been given many titles; e.g., the Mafia, the Black Hand, the Syndicate, and the latest, the Cosa Nostra. This organization does not comprise the total criminal element in our city but it is without question a major element. In our description of the total subject we believe that the phrase "reputed to be" has a significant role in its discussion.

As in any secret society, the framework of its origin, its structure, its functions and patterns of behavior is an extremely closely guarded secret. In evaluating the organization known as the Cosa Nostra one must take into consideration the consequences one would suffer were he to break the oath of fealty.

Information developed by the intelligence division of the Boston Police Department confirms the statement made by Commissioner McNamara that the so-called boss of the rackets in the Greater Boston area is one, Raymond Patriarca, of Providence, R.I.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Are you talking about the chart that is exhibit 53 insofar as Boston is concerned?

Mr. HOWLAND. Yes, I am.

The CHAIRMAN. We have Rhode Island and Boston on one chart. I wonder if we can separate them.

Mr. McNAMARA. Excuse me, Mr. Chairman. I think that the man in question here——

The CHAIRMAN. I see. You have one boss over the two cities and that is the reason for it.

Mr. O'DONNELL. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. It will be distinguished as the chart shows.

Mr. HOWLAND. At the top of the chart is Raymond Patriarca. It is our conclusion that he is the dominating influence in all forms of gaming activity, loan sharking, and other illegal affairs within the city of Boston. At the present time we do not have any information that he is involved in any illegal drug traffic or in the labor rackets in our city.

Some of these listed on this chart who formerly exercised considerable influence now appear to be semiretired.

Among the older bosses, Philip Buccola now resides in Italy. We believe that he was headman prior to Patriarca in the organization. His present influence, if any, is unknown. He visits Boston periodically with his wife for medical treatment.

We have information that he visited Luciano in Italy until his death in 1962.

568 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

An attendant at the Apalachin meeting in New York, one Frank Cucchiara operates a cheese company in Boston. Our best description of this man is that he is old, sickly, and semiretired. Since the Apalachin meeting Cucchiara appears to have been relegated to a position of little importance. His present connection with the criminal element is that of financier and to some degree, adviser.

Another of the older bosses, Joseph Lombardo, is the operator of a large Italian restaurant in Boston; it is a popular eating establishment well known for its cuisine. He does not take any outward active part in the rackets although two of the corporate members of the restaurant are known bookmakers. He is shown unusual respect by persons connected with the syndicate and other members of the criminal element, many of whom frequent his restaurant.

Henry Selvitella (Henry Noyes) is a leading figure in the rackets in Boston and has been so for many years.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Is he on that chart?

Mr. HOWLAND. Yes, he is. He was closely associated with Cucchiara and Lombardo in the past. He recently sold a large cleaning establishment which he operated in the city for several years. He is old, sickly, and supposed to be retired. Although he is believed to have participated in crimes of violence years ago with Lombardo and Cucchiara he does not appear to demand the same degree of respect. There is little indication that he is consulted to any extent.

Michael Rocco: Although in his late sixties he is still active in the organization. He controls the gaming activity in one section of this city.

Anthony Sandrelli (Tony Canadian): His main source of income has been derived from the illegal sales of alcoholic beverages. He operated a well-known after-hours restaurant in the city. His establishments have been raided on a number of occasions by the police. The restaurant license was revoked recently for violation of the liquor laws.

Gennaro "Jerry" Angiulo: The oldest of six brothers who are all involved in controlling the largest single gaming operation within and without the city of Boston. Our information is that the business offices for the gaming activity of this group are outside the city of Boston. From information received we know that Jerry is in constant contact with Raymond Patriarca through Henry Tamello and when Patriarca visits Boston.

They are reputed to have invested considerable capital in loan-shark operations. They have recently ventured into the lucrative cigarette vending business. All the brothers are incorporated in a realty firm that controls a number of business establishments. They also operate a night club in the downtown section of the city.

Other members of the organization on the chart are involved in loan-shark operations and gaming but have no open or visible connections with illegal activities. They are insulated from it. Among those are Peter Limone, Paul Intiso, Nicola Giso, Ralph La Mattina, Alexander Rizzo, and Teddy Fucillo.

Another man of this group was arrested October 13 for participation in the floating dice game that has been operating around the communities near Boston.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Who was that?

Mr. HOWLAND. Peter Limone, the right-hand man of Jerry Angiulo.

Mr. O'DONNELL. He is on the chart?

Mr. HOWLAND. Yes.

John Guglielmo (Johnny Williams) a very important man during the period that Buccola was the boss. From 1956 up to the time of the Castro revolution he was in Cuba where he was connected with the Tropicana, an establishment that boasted of the reputation of being the world's largest nightclub. He was a casino operator there. Upon his return to Boston he still retained prominence within the syndicate but not to the degree he formerly possessed. However, he demands considerable respect and is frequently consulted by lesser figures within the organization.

Samuel Granito: A convicted gunman. He is also on the chart. He holds a minor post in the syndicate. He is regarded as a sound soldier by the organization for his many talents.

Larry Zannino (Larry Baiona), also on the chart, is a favorite of Raymond Patriarca. He was formerly the right-hand man of Anthony Santaniello, now deceased (1960). At the present time Zannino is in State's prison serving a term for extortion. For income, he operated barbut games and had a nightclub for a front.

Leo Santaniello, also on the chart: He has been involved in the rackets for many years. He too is serving time for complicity in the same extortion as Larry Zannino. He is reported to have incurred the displeasure of Raymond Patriarca for his behavior during the extortion case.

It is believed he could have protected Zannino, by the members of the organization.

We have prepared another chart showing the association among those referred to.

I also have a folder on each individual listed, and several other photographs. If it is the desire of the committee, I am prepared to go into more detail as to the criminal records, associations, and other information relative to each person I have named.

Mr. O'DONNELL. The chart showing the associations which you have prepared I will request to be made an exhibit at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. This chart may take some explanation to understand it.

It may be received as exhibit No. 60.

(The chart referred to marked "Exhibit No. 60" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. What do you undertake to do in this chart, in this chart No. 2?

Mr. HOWLAND. We started to prepare this chart, Senator, for our own information. During the development of it, we thought it might serve some purpose to bring it along with us and present it to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it show the connection between these people in different towns?

Mr. HOWLAND. No, this chart was just prepared to show association between the various members that appear on this chart. We have used a different type of line to indicate the ways that we associate them.

The broken line indicates that we have pictures showing these people connected by the broken line in the same picture to show that they are associates.

The very heavy line indicates some of those that were arrested for the same offense.

The other line, as indicated in the legend, is by information that the intelligence unit has developed.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. It may be received as exhibit 60.

Mr. HOWLAND. We had another chart.

The CHAIRMAN. It is identical with exhibit 53, giving the same information?

Mr. HOWLAND. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. So it will not be necessary to reinsert it.

You said you had other material that you could supply as an exhibit?

Mr. HOWLAND. Yes. We have the criminal records, associations, business activities, legitimate businesses of all the people named, and we also have these photographs.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Let's take one thing at a time.

The CHAIRMAN. Let those descriptions of these individuals be received as exhibit No. 61 for reference.

(The documents referred to marked "Exhibit No. 61" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. You have also some photographs, have you?

Mr. HOWLAND. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Let them be received in bulk as exhibit No. 62, and you may identify the photographs, stating what they are.

(The photographs referred to marked "Exhibit Nos. 62-A, 62-B, 62-C, and 62-D" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. HOWLAND. The first photograph that we have marked—

The CHAIRMAN. Mark the individual pictures exhibit Nos. 62-A, B, C, and so forth, as they are presented and testified to.

Mr. HOWLAND. The first picture is a picture taken by members of the Boston Police Department.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the date of it?

Mr. HOWLAND. September 10, 1959. The first picture shows Raymond Patriarca with a group of men, one of whom is Peter Limone, who is on the chart. This picture was taken in Boston, in the south end of Boston.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the picture that you have marked "No. 1." It may be made exhibit 62-A.

You may proceed.

Mr. HOWLAND. Picture No. 2 was taken on the same day, and this shows four of the persons who are listed on this chart all in the one picture, Leo Santaniello, Peter Limone, Larry Zannino, and Jerry Angiulo.

The CHAIRMAN. That was made September 10, 1959?

Mr. HOWLAND. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be exhibit 62-B.

Mr. HOWLAND. Here is another picture made November 18, 1958.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the purpose of these pictures, to show their association?

Mr. HOWLAND. Just to show association between Raymond Patriarca and the others.

The CHAIRMAN. All of these are ex-convicts or have been convicted of crime, is that right?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 571

Mr. HOWLAND. All of them have been convicted of crimes.

Mr. McNAMARA. Senator, I think the purpose here is to show that Raymond Patriarca originates and operates in Providence, R.I., but comes into our city and associates with some of our citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. But generally these pictures show a group of ex-convicts or a group of people who have been convicted of crime.

Mr. McNAMARA. Yes, sir. And also under investigation by us currently and during that period of time as being involved in the gambling rackets in the city.

The CHAIRMAN. And your next picture?

Mr. HOWLAND. Picture No. 4—

Mr. O'DONNELL. I believe you skipped No. 3.

Mr. HOWLAND. Picture No. 3 shows Lawrence Zannino and Raymond Patriarca.

Mr. O'DONNELL. What is the significance of this picture?

Mr. HOWLAND. This picture was taken on November 18, 1958, at a time when we had information that they were worrying in the city of Boston as to who would succeed Tony Santaniello as one of the leaders in the gang in Boston, and that Raymond was coming up to talk to Tony. Tony, at the time, was in serious medical condition in the Pratt Diagnostic Hospital.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Isn't Santaniello the one that is serving time right now for extortion?

Mr. HOWLAND. He is.

The CHAIRMAN. And your picture No. 4 will be exhibit 62.

Mr. HOWLAND. This picture has in it only two members, although all criminals only two of them on this chart. It shows the association between Larry Zannino and Henry Selvitelli, who is Henry Noyes.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I have previously been sworn. I would like to have introduced into the record the various FBI records that they have furnished to the subcommittee.

The CHAIRMAN. They may be received as exhibit No. 63.

(Documents referred to marked "Exhibit No. 63" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. O'DONNELL. I have no further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any questions, Senator McIntyre?

Senator McINTYRE. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, in examining this chart of Boston I find about 15 individuals, and in contrast with some of the charts that we have previously seen from Detroit and New York it would seem as if there aren't as many of these individuals in the Boston area as there may be in other cities. Do you subscribe that these are the leaders or are these what Valachi referred to as soldiers?

Mr. McNAMARA. I subscribe that those are identified as leaders are leaders and those that are not identified as leaders are not leaders but are part of the organization. This chart that you are looking at, Senator McIntyre, was drawn up by members of your committee, the staff, with the cooperation and assistance of the Boston Police Department, and, I assume, other agencies. In trying to be responsive to your question, this is about the extent of what we have. We think we have a pretty good intelligence unit within our department. We have a very effective liaison with the FBI and the Internal Revenue Service and the State police. We are able to develop this information and identify these individuals, and investigate them. Another partial answer to your question is that the city of Boston is only 47 square miles in area. Therefore, there is not much room for too many people to operate.

Senator McINTYRE. I take from your testimony that you both feel that Patriarca is the boss of the Boston-Providence area?

Mr. McNAMARA. That is correct.

Senator McINTYRE. That is, in this particular family group?

Mr. McNAMARA. In the New England area.

Senator McINTYRE. Do you have any idea of the group listed under Boston as to who is his chief hood or chief hoodlum in your city?

Mr. McNAMARA. We feel the committee and ourselves have identified on the chart as the underboss, Jerry Angiulo.

Senator McINTYRE. Does he live in the Boston area?

Mr. McNAMARA. He lives in Medford, Mass. Senator, I think you are familiar with the fact that Boston is surrounded by 38 cities and towns, and he lives in one of the suburbs. He has legitimate business enterprises within our city.

Senator McINTYRE. You think he is the leader in the Boston area?

Mr. McNAMARA. I think so, and I don't know of any law enforcement agency in the area that doesn't.

Senator McINTYRE. Outside of this recent arrest—is it Peter Limone? Can you tell me quickly, without having to go into your records what is the most recent arrest, other than Limone's, from this group of 15 or so listed on the chart?

Mr. McNAMARA. Zannino and Santaniello are serving time for extortion presently in the Massachusetts State Prison.

Senator McINTYRE. When was this arrest made, roughly?

Mr. McNAMARA. Within the last 2 or 3 years. This case, incidentally, was handled, the investigation and subsequent prosecution by Mr. Howland.

Mr. HOWLAND. Since December 1960, Senator.

Senator McINTYRE. Your principal criminal activity as I understand your testimony in the Boston area is organized gambling, illegal gambling?

Mr. McNAMARA. Illegal gambling.

Senator McINTYRE. I also take it from your testimony that you feel that the presence in the Boston area or the presence in any area that the presence of legalized parimutuel racetracks has tended to increase the environment from which this criminal activity gets going?

Mr. McNAMARA. I think that is understandable and historical. Prior to the advent of legalized gambling, historically in our area and in other areas of the country there was very little gambling—illegal gambling.

Senator McINTYRE. In your testimony, you indicate that this group shown on the chart represents a major part or a part of crime in your area. Is it a substantial part? Is it the most substantial part of crime, or just how does this particular Patriarca family fit into the overall crime picture in the Boston area?

Mr. McNAMARA. Substantial in the area of illegal gaming operations, sale of illegal alcohol, after hours and so forth. We do have from time to time, for instance, an organized group of bank robbers. Back a few years we had a famous Teddy Green, Theodore Green, a group of bank robbers who operated in the Greater Boston-Rhode Island area. From time to time as one group goes away another group starts up. We do have from time to time what we refer to as tailgate thieves, an organized gang that steals from trucks. I think Colonel Stone pointed out something similar in the organized group of boosters. We do have the various organized types of criminal activities spring up from time to time, and it seems when they are sentenced, in a few years you will see them out again and starting at the same old trade. We try to keep a close tab on those that come out and start up again.

Senator McINTYRE. Of these members listed on the chart, about 15 or 17 are shown to be in association with Boston. Would you venture a guess as to how many people will actually constitute what I am going to refer to, because it seems to me to be the way of reference on it, the Patriarca family? How many do you think are part of this secret family in the Boston area?

Mr. McNAMARA. This is it, as far as I am concerned, in the Boston area; just what you see here on the chart.

Senator McINTYRE. Then the rough figure is 17 to 20, or about that?

Mr. McNAMARA. That is correct.

Senator McINTYRE. What about narcotics in Boston?

Mr. McNAMARA. We keep our narcotics problem to a low level. I have had recent discussions with the Federal Narcotics Bureau and they have indicated that it is not a troubled area in the narcotics field. In trying to arrive at the reason why, here, again, we have concluded that the fact that we are only 47 square miles in area makes it not too difficult for our vice and narcotics squad to keep track of the individuals who come into our area who are suspected of being involved in narcotics. We have recent arrests, within the last few weeks, on two or three occasions, of individuals getting off the plane, coming in from out of State, with a considerable amount of heroin on them, and it seems that we are able to control it because of the small square area that we have and the knowledge of our vice squad.

Senator McINTYRE. As the chief law enforcement officer in the Boston area, are you aware of a so-called or alleged meeting called a little or small Apalachin that took place in Worcester, Mass., in the latter part of 1959.

Mr. McNAMARA. In 1959 I was not police commissioner for the city of Boston. I was a special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Senator McINTYRE. Do you know anything about that meeting, the one that allegedly took place at the Hotel Bancroft in Worcester, at the Picadilly Restaurant in that city, at which there were supposed to be about 150 of these hoodlums that met.

Mr. McNAMARA. I would have to say to you that I do have knowledge of it, but I am not free—

Mr. O'DONNELL. Are you in a position to testify concerning this activity, having acquired any information that you did acquire while you were in the FBI?

Mr. McNAMARA. That would be the only way I could testify to that particular meeting, and I understand I would still have to have permission of the U.S. attorney's office. I am governed by departmental rule 3229 in this matter. I am familiar that a meeting took place there.

574 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator McINTYRE. I heard a very interesting story from the Detroit police and I just wondered if anything has ever come to your attention like this: It seems that some of these gangsters here with a reputation for strongarm tactics and perhaps in their background murder trials or attempted convictions of murder have engaged in legitimate enterprises where they simply come into a place of business and drop their card and because of their known reputation for rough play they have a great deal of success in selling their product, which is usually a legitimate one. Has anything like that come to your attention in the Boston area?

Mr. McNAMARA. No, I can't say it has. The individuals on the chart that we are referring to now—I don't know of any that are engaged in the salesmanship type of operations.

Senator McINTYRE. They sell coin machines. Not coin machines, but they sell jukeboxes, in effect?

Mr. McNAMARA. You are talking then about Raymond Patriarca?

Senator McINTYRE. I wasn't thinking of Patriarca. I was curious to find out whether or not we had any operations in the Boston area that sounded so unapproachable as, I think his name was, Perone, or something, in Detroit, with Golden coffee.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I don't recall the exact name, but there were some operations in the Detroit area where the men would walk in, and because of their known reputation, would create an atmosphere of fear and they would be readily able to sell their product or put in their machines.

Mr. McNAMARA. I am not aware that that condition exists in the Boston area. In fact, the people in the cigarette-vending business or the music-vending business are of all different nationalities, et cetera.

Senator McINTYRE. Have you ever received any complaint—

Mr. McNAMARA. No.

Senator McINTYRE. That someone was muscling or strongarming insofar as putting in cigarette-vending machines or coin-o-matic, whatever it happened to be?

Mr. McNAMARA. Not since I have been police commissioner and I don't know of any prior to that.

Senator McINTYRE. No further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. I think Valachi identified four of those on the chart from Boston and Rhode Island as being members of Cosa Nostra. They were Phillip Bruccola, Raymond Patriarca, John Williams or John Gugliemo, and Joseph Lombardi.

Mr. McNAMARA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have information prior to his testimony as to their connection with the Cosa Nostra?

Mr. McNAMARA. Not by the name "Cosa Nostra," but we did recognize that these very individuals that were mentioned did operate.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, has his testimony with respect to them pretty much confirmed what you already knew or strongly suspected about them with respect to a criminal organization?

Mr. McNAMARA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. So you were not wholly-surprised when he disclosed them as members of Cosa Nostra?

Mr. McNAMARA. These were the very same individuals we had under investigation as a group having control in the area.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 575

Mr. O'DONNELL. The information on the chart, Senator, was submitted to us prior to Valachi taking the stand.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand, and these were the men that you knew to be in control of things up there and engaged in these activities?

Mr. McNAMARA. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. But I wondered how Valachi could know it. He didn't know it from you, did he?

Mr. McNAMARA. No, not from me.

The CHAIRMAN. How could he know it except that he gets his information from another source which confirms what you had already suspected or believed to be true?

Mr. HOWLAND. We feel that the organization in Boston is an unusually old one for the type of group. The last so-called gang war that happened in the area of Greater Boston happened back in 1931, in December, when there was a gang fight in the city and some of the leaders of another group were killed. At that time, five of the members on this chart were all suspected of participating in that gang war, were arrested, and interrogated. There were indictments sought against some of them, but there was never any conviction. But five of those people were consorting together and were believed to be in an organization back in 1931.

The CHAIRMAN. They probably gained control of the organization at that time.

Mr. McNAMARA. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been indicated.

Mr. McNAMARA. Yes.

Senator McINTYRE. One last question.

Chief, you say there has been an absence of gangland wars, so-called, in Boston during the last 30 years. Have you had any gangland killings in Boston in the last, say, 10 years, which remain unsolved?

Mr. HOWLAND. There have been gang killings, believed to be the result of someone violating some rule of the gang rather than a struggle for power. There has been only one murder that could be called a real gang murder in Boston in the last few years, although there have been several murders or bodies found in the communities adjacent to Boston over the years. Although I don't know of a single murder in 10 years that the victim was a member of the so-called organization. But in disputes over loot among members of the criminal element but not members of the syndicate, there have been murders. There is no doubt about it.

Senator McINTYRE. How many of these have been solved?

Mr. HOWLAND. Very few of the gang-type murders are solved.

Senator McINTYRE. How many in the Boston area in the last 10 years, roughly?

Mr. HOWLAND. I would say probably four or five that could be called gang murders, and they haven't been solved, none of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Gentlemen, thank you very much. We appreciate your presence and the assistance you have given to the committee.

The Chair wishes to make an announcement. Tomorrow morning we will resume hearings at 10:30 and will hear witnesses from the Buffalo area. We will probably get through with them by noon.

Then I wish to make this announcement of a necessary change in the schedule of this current series of hearings.

It was originally planned, and we intended immediately following this line of testimony after we had made this study of the Cosa Nostra criminal organizations, that we would go into a detailed inquiry into the field of crime in which this organization has functioned a great deal, and that is the illicit traffic in narcotics. That was to be our subject of further inquiry at the conclusion of this line of testimony. But we have been requested by the Treasury Department, which includes the Bureau of Narcotics, to defer these hearings in that field until a later date. The reason is a trial that is now pending in New York City in which there are 20 defendants charged with violation of the narcotics laws. It has been a longstanding policy of this subcommittee to avoid any action which might jeopardize the outcome of a court trial. Accordingly, that portion of these hearings which we had planned to devote to the study of illicit traffic in narcotics will be temporarily postponed until after this trial, and we do that in accordance with the request of the Treasury Department.

I may say that where a case of this importance is pending, is imminent, we would not want to proceed and cause a kind of publicity that might jeopardize the rights of the defendants or that might cause a court to have to dismiss the case or a higher court to reverse a case because of any action this committee might be taking at the time that would result in publicity. So we will have to rearrange our schedule after tomorrow.

I am not prepared to announce at this moment just what the further schedule will be.

The committee will stand in recess until 10:30 in the morning.

(Whereupon, at 3:55 p.m., the subcommittee recessed, to reconvene at 10:30 a.m. the following morning, Wednesday, October 16, 1963.)

(Members present at time of recess: Senators McClellan and McIntyre.)

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1963

U.S. SENATE,
PERMANENT SUBCOMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS,
OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
Washington, D.C.

The subcommittee met at 10:30 a.m. in the caucus room, Senate Office Building, pursuant to Senate Resolution 17, agreed to March 14, 1963, Senator John L. McClellan (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat, Arkansas; Senator Daniel B. Brewster, Democrat, Maryland; and Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, New York.

Also present: Jerome S. Adlerman, general counsel; Donald F. O'Donnell, chief counsel; Philip W. Morgan, chief counsel to the minority; Paul E. Kamerick, assistant counsel; Harold Ranstad, assistant counsel; Eugene J. Marshall, Bureau of Narcotics, Martin Pera, Bureau of Narcotics; Ruth Y. Watt, chief clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will be in order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of convening: Senators McClellan, Brewster, and Javits.)

The CHAIRMAN. Before we proceed with the witnesses who are scheduled to testify this morning, I will announce that I am in receipt of a letter from the Attorney General providing for the record certain information requested by Senator Javits. This is information pertaining to the granting of immunity to witnesses to compel testimony by them.

The Attorney General has sent to the chairman a rather exhaustive statement on the subject, together with a copy of two proposed bills, I believe, that he asked the committee to study. Without objection, I am going to direct that this letter and the bill be printed in the permanent record as a part of and immediately following the testimony given by the Attorney General when he appeared as a witness in person.

(See p. 35, part 1.)

Gentlemen, will you be sworn, please? All of you who are going to testify, please rise.

Do you and each of you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I do.

Mr. AMICO. I do.

Mr. GIAMBRONE. I do.

578 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to introduce to the Committee the police officials from my home State, coming as they do from the Buffalo area.

I would make the suggestion, Mr. Chairman, respectfully, that as the statements of the witnesses are quite long, it might be well to have them actually put in the record, and then the witnesses and we could proceed rather freely on the basis of whatever is contained in them.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Will the witness on my right identify himself for the record, please?

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM H. SCHNEIDER, MICHAEL AMICO, AND SAMUEL GIAMBRONE

Mr. SCHNEIDER. My Name is William H. Schneider, S-c-h-n-e-i-d-e-r, and I am commissioner of police of Buffalo. I have been a policeman for 27 years, and I have held all of the ranks in the Buffalo police department, competitive civil service ranks, from patrolman to the rank of inspector, until my appointment as commissioner on October 1, 1963.

The CHAIRMAN. You were appointed to the last position just recently?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Just 2 weeks ago, Senator.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. And what was your immediate position before that?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I was inspector in the police department just prior to my appointment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the witness on my left identify himself, please?

Mr. AMICO. My name is Michael A. Amico. I am assistant chief of detectives in charge of the Criminal Intelligence Bureau, Buffalo Police Department. I have been in the police department 16 years, at which time I have had experience with homicide investigations, special fraud investigations, narcotics, and I was appointed to take over the newly established criminal intelligence unit of the city of Buffalo on July of 1960 and I have been with it ever since.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, Lieutenant Amico.

Sergeant Giambrone, will you identify yourself for the record, please?

Mr. GIAMBRONE. Detective Sergeant Samuel Giambrone, with the Buffalo Police Department for the past 10 years. I am in direct command of the intelligence unit under Lieutenant Amico's command as bureau head.

The CHAIRMAN. We have the name here also of Robert Casey, deputy corporation counsel for the city of Buffalo. Is Mr. Casey going to testify?

Mr. CASEY. No. I am merely here to assist the policemen.

The CHAIRMAN. We are glad to have the record reflect your presence and also your interest in the work of the committee.

Mr. CASEY. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Commissioner Schneider, you have a prepared statement. Do you wish to read it or do you wish to have it inserted in the record?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I wish to read it, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. You prefer to read it?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Yes, sir.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 579

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, then, you may do so.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. As commissioner of police in the city of Buffalo, may I, at the outset, express my sincerest thanks to this subcommittee for the privilege of appearing before your honorable body. On behalf of each of the 1,300 men and women of the Buffalo Police Department, I pledge to you our complete cooperation.

It is not my purpose today to render a long, elaborate statement, because most of what I desire to say has already been said by other police officials who appeared before this subcommittee.

I have been a member of the Buffalo Police Department for 27 years, having held the lowest civil service rank of patrolman and the highest competitive civil service rank of inspector prior to my appointment as commissioner of police on October 1, 1963. During World War II, I was assigned as a special agent, Criminal Investigation Division of the U.S. Army, and saw service in the continental United States and the Pacific theater of operations.

I want to make it clear that this so-called syndicate of organized crime is not responsible for all the crimes being committed in the Buffalo area. There are criminals of all ethnic groups operating in the Buffalo area. These criminals are responsible for many of the crimes being committed and they do not have any ties or connections with the so-called Cosa Nostra.

Organized crime, or "the syndicate," seems to be concerned primarily with the operations of gambling, vice, narcotics, labor, and extortion rackets. The violent acts perpetrated by these people are to assure continuation of their monopoly in these areas. Let me assure you that I consider this area of police work of vital importance.

The pyramidal structure of organized crime poses two serious problems to police enforcement on a local level:

1. Syndicated crime is organized on an international level which disregards city, county, State, or National boundaries. A conspiracy to commit a crime may take place many miles from its actual perpetration. Likewise, those who plan and design a criminal act may be many steps removed from those who actually execute the act itself.

Both elements, therefore, tend to insulate from criminal prosecution those at or near the top of the pyramid. We find, for example, that 15, 20, or 30 years ago individuals who are in this organization operated at a fairly low level and were arrested. As their stature became more important to the group, and as they moved up into higher echelons, the task of the police officials in gathering evidence concerning their operations becomes increasingly difficult, in many cases impossible, to obtain. For example, word conceivably can be put forth by a Cosa Nostra don to any one of his lieutenants who, in turn, passes the word to another individual. This individual, in turn, will then go out and secure others who will carry out the assignment so that it is virtually impossible to trace it back to the don.

2. A small crime committed on the local level is magnified many times when its evil fruits are funneled with those of similar crimes to the top of the pyramid. It is in this latter area that public awareness can supplant public apathy. In the area of gambling, for instance, the average citizen is generally unaware that the $2 so-called innocent bet placed with a casual acquaintance is his contribution to a multibillion-dollar syndicate which depends on brutal assault and murder as its means of cold, dispassionate discipline.

There is no public outcry against suspended sentences or nominal fines in our courts for gambling or prostitution. There is no public demand placed on our legislators for laws calling for strict punishment of so-called lesser crimes of this type.

If, however, the integral relationship is shown of many misdemeanors to extortion, assault, and even murder, public interest and public protest can be an active force in cutting off the grasping hands of syndicated crime.

The Buffalo police have been on the alert through various investigative techniques to secure intelligence information indicating that the syndicate does exist and that certain people are, in fact, active members of it. We are attempting, without too much success, to secure evidence regarding various criminal activities concerning the top echelon.

In July of 1960, the Buffalo police organized an intelligence division. This unit, under the leadership of Assistant Chief of Detectives Michael Amico, has proved most effective and is the one responsible for the information being presented today.

Mr. Amico and Detective Sergeant Samuel Giambrone have prepared the charts which you see before you.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Chief, are you referring to the chart up on the wall which is classified "Buffalo, N.Y., Organization?"

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Yes, sir; that is the one I was referring to.

The CHAIRMAN. Let it be received as exhibit No. 64 and printed in the record if it can be, or as much of it as can be.

(161)

The CHAIRMAN. We will proceed.

This chart was prepared and you have examined the chart and you testify as to its accuracy?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Yes, sir; I have.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I believe that this type of intelligence work can be, and undoubtedly will be, greatly improved upon because many police departments throughout the United States have within recent years organized somewhat similar intelligence units and these units are now in the process of exchanging information. Much remains to be done in this area but the base is there and a beginning has been made.

Obviously, if you are to successfully combat this criminal syndicate, there are certain means that must be taken. A police department must acquire the best possible recruits and then give them thorough and effective training. This recruitment program cannot be carried out unless policemen are well paid, commensurate with the responsibilities that go with this job. They must be furnished with the most modern investigative equipment. Unfortunately, budgetary problems preclude this ideal situation in many municipalities. However, I believe that the police heads must make a continuing effort to bring to the public attention the necessity for providing their policemen with these tools.

Referring once again to the limited jurisdiction of local police departments, let me say that the cooperation of State and Federal agencies in the area of combating syndicated crime is a prime requisite to the accomplishment of our mutual goals. Within hours of my confirmation as commissioner of police, I requested meetings with the FBI, New York State Police, Canadian Police, New York State Investigation Commission, and the Ontario Police Commission with a view of further coordinating our efforts in the area of combating organized crime in the Buffalo area.

One of the pillars of financial support to the syndicate is gambling. Ninety-five percent of their operations utilize the telephone in the making of various bets on sporting events. The telephone has largely replaced the old-time bookmaking parlor. It, therefore, becomes important to us, if we are going to make inroads in thwarting what the syndicate is doing, to obtain proper wiretapping legislation.

The State of New York makes it possible to utilize wiretapping on the basis of a court order. However, this is not truly effective because there is: (1) no Federal legislation permitting wiretapping; and (2) court decisions have created a cloud as to whether or not information secured at a local level is, in fact, admissible. As a result, prosecutors are extremely reluctant to proceed on any wiretap information and will undoubtedly continue to refrain from utilizing this type of information at the State level until Federal legislation is passed which can clarify the entire issue. I feel that Federal wiretapping legislation, with proper safeguards, as indicated by Robert F. Kennedy, is vital to investigating efforts of local police departments, particularly to the Buffalo, N.Y., Police Department.

Until such time as this legislation is passed, until such time as the atmosphere becomes clarified so that proper use of wiretapping can be engaged in by the local police departments, the thwarting of criminal activities is being hindered. The passage of Federal wiretapping provisions, as have been proposed by the Attorney General of the United States, would be of tremendous assistance to us at the local level.

I want to make it clear that I am very much concerned with the civil liberties of every individual. It is absolutely imperative that proper safeguards be provided and incorporated into wiretapping legislation. However, the existence of this syndicate makes it patently clear that the use of wiretapping is vital if we are going to handle investigations properly.

I feel very strongly that if it is possible, Federal legislation should be enacted to make it a crime for an individual to belong to any organized criminal activity which, in furtherance of its conspiracy, crosses State lines or crosses international boundaries.

We have problems involving this syndicate in the United States and a segment of this group which operates in Canada. I feel sure that other municipalities are faced with the same problem of international boundaries as we are in Buffalo. It appears to me that this particular type of legislation will be most important to us.

In conclusion, let me assure you of my keen interest in combating organized crime. Let me further commend you for bringing before the public an awareness of the insidious nature of organized crime. Let me reiterate to the public that the coin dropping into a gambling device or the innocent bet placed on a horserace may well be a contributing factor to a vicious crime of violence.

This completes my statement. I have with me today the Assistant Chief of Detectives Michael Amico, and Detective Sergeant Samuel

Giambrone, who are prepared to furnish detailed information concerning members of this syndicate.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much, Commissioner. Did you wish, before you conclude, to make any comment about the chart which you introduced, as exhibit 64? Is there anything about that that you wish to amplify or comment about before we interrogate you?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I want to commend Assistant Chief Amico for the work involved in drawing up this chart. I have examined it and I have gone over it with him and examined the files on these people. The chart is accurate, and it represents our knowledge to the best of our ability of the setup of the syndicated crime in the Buffalo area.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Commissioner, do you regard this problem as one of increasing severity? It continues to get worse, or have you got it somewhat under control, or what is the situation?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Well, from all of the evidence, Senator, it appears to me that it continues to get worse at the present time. I think that we must take steps to reverse this process.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, there is definitely a menace in this country by reason of the existence of this organized crime activity and the fact that it is on the increase, that we haven't been able to successfully combat it in the past. You would say it makes it a national menace?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I would say that it is a definite menace to law and order in the country at large.

The CHAIRMAN. If we don't have law and order, we can't long maintain civilized society, can we?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. That is right, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, Senator Javits, I didn't mean to monopolize this. These gentlemen are from your State and I would like for you to interrogate them.

Senator JAVITS. Commissioner, probably I should have a number of other questions of you after Lieutenant Amico presents the actual chart and the names and so on, but I would like to ask you, if I may, one or two questions.

First, you say we are attempting, without too much success, to secure evidence regarding various criminal activities concerning the top echelon. Now, with reference to that chart, it would indicate that the very top echelon is Don Stefano Magaddino, who is apparently the kingpin of this empire in your area. Now, is Magaddino, who allegedly is a funeral director, under continuous surveillance by the police, or if you choose not to answer those questions, just tell us that you can't for security reasons answer them?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Senator, I really can't answer that because there are many police agencies, Federal and State and local, who are watching Magaddino. I have no knowledge as to exactly what they are doing at this time.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Senator, if I may, I believe that the chart reflects that Magaddino, Steve, is boss not only of the Buffalo area, but the entire western New York area, and Ohio Valley, so it does spread out and what we have tried to do here is confine our remarks pretty well insofar as Buffalo is concerned.

Senator JAVITS. Would you wish to implement in any way what you mean when you say "We are attempting without too much success to secure evidence regarding various criminal activities among the top echelon?"

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Well, we have very many files and instances of meetings and so forth of the top echelon, but we have not been able to secure evidence of a criminal conspiracy, for instance, or of any other crime that they are engaged in, exactly well enough to present it in court at this particular time.

Senator JAVITS. Also, I notice you say one of the pillars of financial support of the syndicate is gambling; 95 percent of their operations utilize the telephone in making of various bets on sporting events.

Now, if we pass Federal wiretapping legislation, don't you feel that they will stop using the telephone? They are not just going to walk into the net which is spread for them by the law enforcement officers, are they?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Well, if they stop using the telephone, then their volume would drop 80 percent, I would say, because this would mean that they would have to put runners out, and runners certainly are more vulnerable and more apparent to the police than a telephone conversation.

Senator JAVITS. Now, isn't it possible that we may oblige them by instituting off-track betting, and thus giving them local betting shops in which to operate quite legitimately? At least have a legitimate front? Isn't that so?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Well, this is a controversial subject in the State of New York, Senator, as you are aware. There has been a lot of discussion of the value of off-track betting. Naturally, if we had off-track betting, the volume now going to the syndicate, the greater part of it would be channeled into State coffers. It would help; yes, it would, I believe.

Senator JAVITS. But the syndicate would have an opportunity to go into the business of off-track betting through fronts of its own, which it seems to be able to manage pretty well.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Well, this would be a matter for the legislature to set up safeguards so this couldn't happen. I certainly would want to keep them out of legitimate enterprises of that type.

Senator JAVITS. But one of the advantages of some kind of Federal wiretapping legislation is to interdict, to use a military term, the use of the telephone for these organized gambling syndicates; is that right?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. That is correct.

Senator JAVITS. That is even a more important benefit, is it not, than what you might find out from tapping, because, as I say, they have already testified and they are not going to use the phone; is that correct?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Well, that is about right, actually. You can imagine that if they know that we can't use wiretap evidence, they have the free use of telephones and there is no compunction on their part or very little caution taken, actually.

Senator JAVITS. That isn't quite true, is it, because although you can't use the evidence, you certainly get plenty of leads and so on, so Valachi testified, for example, that they were very interested in taps, and tried to make sure that their phones were not tapped, even now. That is so, it is not?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Yes, they have a lot of means of doing this.

584 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator JAVITS. Now, they have a pretty good intelligence service of their own.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. An excellent one.

Senator JAVITS. Now, the last question I would like to ask you, sir, and I would like, Mr. Chairman, to reserve the right to return to the police commissioner, when Lieutenant Amico has testified, is a statement here about the recruitment program relating to policemen. Now, do you feel that policemen are underpaid today?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. They certainly are in Buffalo. I am speaking for Buffalo only.

Senator JAVITS. What is the starting level of salaries, and the average salary in Buffalo?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. The starting level in Buffalo is $4,700 per year for patrolmen, and he advances to $5,300 after 5 years of service.

Senator JAVITS. And you don't feel that is adequate?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I feel it is disgraceful.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Commissioner, would you care to—and please don't answer if it would in any way cause problems for you—give us your idea of what would be adequate under present conditions; so we get an order of magnitude, because this is an important law enforcement problem, and nobody knows it better than I do.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Well, I think we could use the new salary schedule paid to the New York State Police as sort of a criteria, and try to work out something close to it if the municipalities couldn't afford it all. I think that should be their ultimate goal, to pay that type of salary.

Senator JAVITS. What is the relative salary for the New York State Police.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I can't answer that exactly, but the top salary is about $7,800.

Senator JAVITS. But you feel that whatever that schedule is, it is more nearly adapted to getting the best men and keeping them and keeping them contented than the schedule, for example, which you have given us?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. That is my belief, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Lieutenant Amico, do you have a prepared statement?

Mr. AMICO. Yes, sir, I do, but I would agree with Senator Javits.

The CHAIRMAN. It is quite lengthy.

Mr. AMICO. I would like to synopsise it.

The CHAIRMAN. We will insert it in the record in full at this point, and let it be printed in the record in full, and now you take those parts of it that you wish to emphasize and discuss it with us.

Mr. AMICO. Mr. Chairman, and members of this committee, I am most happy and honored to be present today to cooperate with this subcommittee and to explain some of the activities of the various members of the underworld, who are operating as part of the organized crime cartel in the Buffalo, N. Y., area.

At the outset I would like to say that the Buffalo Police Department formed the criminal intelligence bureau to combat racketeering on July 27, 1960.

This bureau was charged with the important responsibility of accumulating, evaluating, and recording criminal intelligence data and to prepare complete files on the identities, residences, methods of operations, suspected criminal activities, associations, business activities, meeting places, family ties, and all other information available on organized crime.

I am the lieutenant commanding the criminal intelligence bureau, which is comprised of the intelligence squad headed by Detective Sgt. Samuel N. Giambrone, and the narcotics squad.

As a result of surveillances, investigations, interrogations, and information gathered with the cooperation of various Federal agencies and the district attorney's office of Erie County, a full picture relative to organized crime in the western New York area has been compiled.

A studied evaluation of all of the information compiled will lead to only one conclusion and that is that a criminal-type organization does exist in and around the city of Buffalo. Whether it be called the Cosa Nostra or by any other name it is manifestly apparent that it does exercise a certain degree of control over crimes such as gambling, vice, narcotics, labor racketeering, arson, and those of a similar vein.

As a result of the efforts by the intelligence unit with the cooperation of the district attorney's office and the Federal enforcement agencies, the following chart setting forth the names, photographs, and criminal data of individuals and their suspected place of prominence in the cartel of crime is respectfully submitted.

At this point I would like to say, Senator, that I will go into the Buffalo organizational setup and I will also just generally cover that part that goes beyond the Buffalo area as depicted by the chart.

I might also say that I agree in essence with Mr. Valachi, and I was here at the testimony, about the numbers he stated in our area, of approximately 100 to 125 members.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he substantially accurate about that, according to your knowledge?

Mr. AMICO. That is correct; and I would like to qualify that, however. By that I feel that it is not necessarily 100 to 125 in the city of Buffalo, I feel that we have some 75 to 80 and we have files to support this.

We feel that we have some 20 or better in Niagara Falls, and we have some 20 and better in nearby Canadian areas.

The CHAIRMAN. In a matter like this, where Valachi has testified, of course we recognize he has been in prison now and he has been out of circulation for some period of time, but testimony such as yours tends to confirm his estimate and also tends to indicate that he did have a pretty good knowledge of the situation, at least before he was taken out of circulation; obviously, he was on the inside enough to get this information and to pretty well know about the situation in these different areas.

Mr. AMICO. I certainly agree with that.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, we want to know how to evaluate testimony. You just take his testimony standing alone, and none of it corroborated and you might raise some question marks, but when you who are in these areas, the police officials in these areas, come in and substantially corroborate what he said, it lends more credence to his testimony as a whole—the man apparently knows what he is talking about.

Mr. AMICO. That is correct. As a matter of fact, Senator, I was the one, with the help of my unit, to set up this chart, and surprisingly the hierarchy that I named were those individuals that Valachi was especially familiar with, that he indicated were those people in top echelon of crime.

I had no outside help at this time, and I was surprised to have that support or confirmation in effect, that Valachi mentioned here publicly.

The CHAIRMAN. He mentioned four of them, I believe.

Mr. AMICO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Those are the four that appear at the top on exhibit 64.

Mr. AMICO. That is correct.

Mr. O'DONNELL. At the time, we already had the charts prepared based on information that we had secured from Buffalo, was that correct?

Mr. AMICO. That is absolutely correct.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, the charts were prepared before Valachi was ever consulted about it?

Mr. AMICO. I have never had an opportunity to talk to Mr. Valachi, and I would like to know how much more he might make available to our unit and be of further help if at all possible, but certainly I have never talked to him and no one indicated to me what he was going to say or what he was thinking.

I felt again reassured when he came out with the names he did, that it conformed with our thinking.

I would like to take this time—or first, I might go uncover this Magaddino empire of organized crime.

The CHAIRMAN. You have another chart showing that.

Mr. O'DONNELL. He is still talking about the chart up there, I think.

Mr. AMICO. Perhaps I am jumping. I had reference to this general overall chart that the Senator is making remarks about.

The CHAIRMAN. This Magaddino empire of organized crime chart, that is the one that you are talking about now?

Mr. AMICO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you verify the information on that chart?

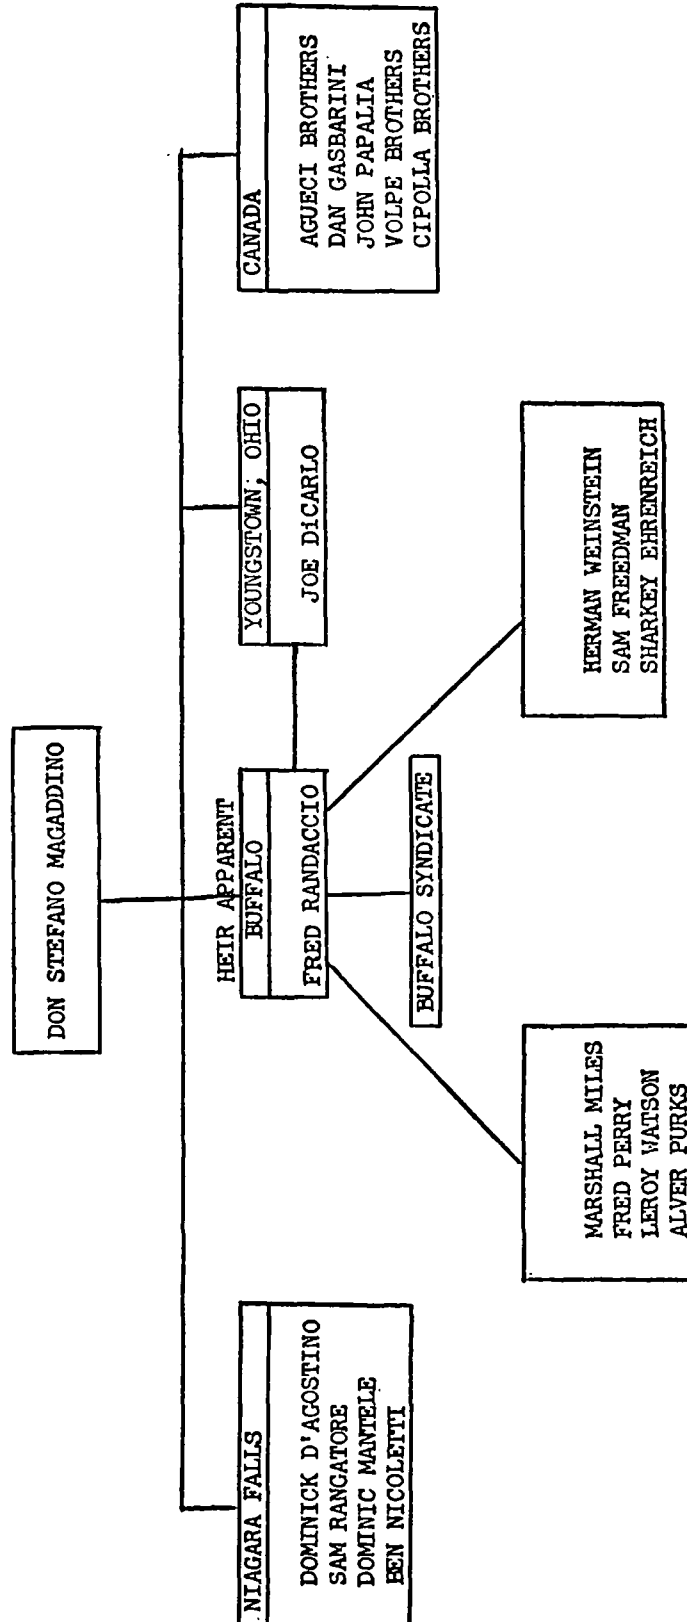

Mr. AMICO. Yes, sir; I, with the help of Sergeant Giambrone, made up this chart and we have it documented from our files.

The CHAIRMAN. Let it be made exhibit No. 65.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 65" for reference and follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 65

MAGADDINO EMPIRE OF ORGANIZED CRIME

BUFFALO POLICE DEPARTMENT, BUFFALO, NEW YORK

588 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. AMICO. I would say on this chart, as we have depicted, on Stefano Magaddino as the top man. He does control various areas. His primary area of influence, of course, is in Buffalo, N.Y.

With the heir apparent, Mr. Fred Randaccio, who we feel is so-called underboss and in charge of the Buffalo area. I will come back to that particular area.

In Niagara Falls, his hometown, he has as his immediate lieutenants, Mr. Dominick D'Agostino, record on narcotics, somewhat charged with the narcotic activity of the syndicate in the Niagara Falls area; and Sam Rangatore, vending machine operator, and somewhat of a bodyguard to Don Stefano, an enforcement-type individual.

Dominic Mantele, who has always been seen in the company, also, of Magaddino, who again is a trusted lieutenant and handles a lot of his general affairs.

Mr. Ben Nicoletti, who handles the Niagara Falls area, and close-by Canada gambling activities.

On the far end of the chart we have the Canadian areas that I am talking about, would be generally Toronto and Hamilton, in those areas. I will just cover them quickly. We have the Agueci brothers, Gasbarini, Papalia, Volpe brothers, and the Cipolla brothers.

This is mostly considered narcotic combines. Of course, the specialties are both narcotics, extortion, and gambling, but we know, especially in our investigation, in narcotics especially.

We also have in the chart Youngstown, Ohio; and I don't mean to depict that as a big threat, but presently in Youngstown we have Joe DiCarlo, very close associate of Magaddino, Montana, and others on our particular chart.

Joe DiCarlo was quite a menace to Buffalo's Police Department some 10 or 15 or 20 years ago. He was a big man then and he ruled in a violent manner, and since has left for other places, gone down to Florida. He returned to Buffalo a short time and he is presently in Youngstown, Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. You still regard him as a big man in the syndicate, do you?

Mr. AMICO. In the syndicate; he still has influence in the syndicate and he still has a lot to say. Of course, I think, if you permit me to, I should at this time go back to the Buffalo organization.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you come back to this chart? I notice you show some other ties there.

Mr. AMICO. Yes, I will. I might at this time read a prepared statement that I have on Don Stefano Magaddino, because I believe that the man is in a position where it is worth going into somewhat more detail with him, and with your permission, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. AMICO. Stefano Magaddino, alias "The Boss," "The Old Man," and "Don Stefano," lives at 5118 Dana Drive, in an exclusive area of Lewiston, N.Y., with his wife. His luxurious home is located on a plot of land adjacent to a similarly luxurious home occupied by his daughter and son-in-law, James LaDuca, who was in attendance at the Apalachin convention.

Don Stefano is the irrefutable lord paramount and titular head of syndicated organized crime in the Buffalo-Niagara Falls and Toronto areas.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 589

Stefano is known to be the "don" and in absolute control of all illegal operations in the area as pertains to organized criminal activities. No crime by members of the organization is permitted without his permission and guidance.

Don Stefano was arrested on August 16, 1921, as a fugitive from justice, relative to a homicide at Avon, N.J., and turned over to Avon, N.J., Police Department.

Informed police authorities believe Stefano Magaddino was among visitors to the notorious Apalachin meeting, November 14, 1957. His clothes were found on the premises where the meeting was held.

It has been reasonably theorized that a meeting with such magnitude of important notorious Apalachin guests would not proceed without the presence of Don Stefano Magaddino, who has extensive criminal interests and influence in syndicate decisions.

Don Stefano, before the Apalachin disclosures, was known to wield a great deal of influence in Niagara Falls politics. In the late 1930's Magaddino was reported to be associated with John C. Montana in the Empire State Brewery in Olean, N.Y.

It was during this time that Montana was regarded as a trusted lieutenant of Magaddino, and second in command. This close association with the Stefano Magaddino dynasty of criminal activity in the western New York area has been more closely cemented by inter-marriage of the two families.

Also closely associated with Magaddino is Herman Weinstein, who is alleged to have profited handsomely from his illegitimate transactions with the mob in the way of bootlegging, black market gasoline operations during World War II, and many other illegitimate transactions. Weinstein is now regarded as a successful motel operator, owning the plush Peace Bridge Motel, which is considered a meeting place for prominent syndicate members.

I mention this association because our surveillance, I might add, takes us many, many times into this plush motel, where many of these syndicated individuals from in and outside of the Buffalo area tend to congregate.

Since Apalachin, Stefano Magaddino has relinquished immediate control over legitimate businesses such as Magaddino Memorial Chapel, the Power City Distributing Co. of Niagara Falls and Camellia Linen Supply Co. of Buffalo, N.Y.

Stefano Magaddino is ostensibly considered to be in retirement from legitimate business holdings, passing on his interests directly or indirectly to members of his immediate family.

Magaddino's present chief lieutenant in charge of Buffalo syndicate operations is Fred "Lupo" Randaccio. Randaccio indisputably controls all gambling, labor racketeering, and other illegitimate activities for the old man.

Associates of Stefano Magaddino include John C. Montana, Samuel Freedman, Herman Weinstein, Roy Carlisi, Fred Randaccio, Fred Mogavero, James Zerrilli (Detroit), Joseph Falcone (Utica), Anthony Perna, James LaDuca, Dominic D'Agostino, Samuel Rangatore, Dominic Mantele, and Benjamin Nicoletti, the last five from Niagara Falls and Samuel Pieri, of Buffalo.

I have given the names there of those associates.

590 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator JAVITS. May I ask a question about Magaddino? Lieutenant, first thank you very much for your testimony, which I think will prove to be very interesting and very important. I notice in your written statement you say Magaddino is ostensibly considered to be in retirement from legitimate business holdings, passing on his interests directly or indirectly, to members of his immediate family.

However, do you believe that he is actually in retirement or is he still running this empire?

Mr. AMICO. He is still running the empire. Our observations and our information funneled to our particular intelligence bureau confirms that he is still very much active in both legitimate businesses or enterprises.

Senator JAVITS. Now, as to Montana, who has represented such an interesting figure in all of these investigations, did he have any criminal record prior to his arrest at Apalachin?

Mr. AMICO. This is a very important point at this juncture. I might say that our research disclosed no arrest on either a local, State, Federal, or international level. At no time in any records has Mr. Montana received even a traffic violation. Of course this is prior to the Apalachin disclosure.

Senator JAVITS. Nonetheless you feel justified, based upon your intelligence activities and of course the confirmatory fact of Apalachin which after all is a fact and it stands, to link Montana in this chart kind of in a corollary way to Magaddino.

Mr. AMICO. That is correct, sir. Our observations show his associations throughout the years. Our conferences with many law enforcement agencies on a State and local level prove to us, or at least tend to show us strongly, that certainly Mr. Montana was associated with Magaddino empire.

Senator JAVITS. Now again warning you that you shouldn't answer if it in any way imperils security or your work would you say as to Montana that that continues to this day? Again, I beg of you don't answer if it in any way will interfere with what you are doing.

Mr. AMICO. I might answer it in a limited way and say our surveillance of Montana shows that at the present time, he is separated his activities or terminated his activities completely, so to speak, with the mob.

Senator JAVITS. Now, I know—I notice that you referred to a man named Weinstein and others to the chart under the heading "Jewish ties," and I would like to point out that the staff here has gone to great pains to eliminate a national or ethnic reference to the whole organization, and I think that is a splendid thing.

Wouldn't you recommend, Mr. Witness, that the same be done as to "Jewish ties"?

Mr. AMICO. I certainly would. I should have better titled them perhaps "other associates" or nonmember associates.

Senator JAVITS. In other words, it is just belaboring the obvious to repeat what we have said so many times, that in no way should we give any feeling that criminal activities are the sole property of any religious, ethnic, national, or other group in our country. It is tragic and sad enough without loading them with that. Do you agree with that?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 591

Mr. AMICO. I agree with that. I thought in one aspect, perhaps, it might tend to show that certainly no one has a monopoly insofar as ethnic groups are concerned with crime. I thought maybe anyone who was belaboring that point might see that there are others involved in crime other than people of Italian heritage.

Senator JAVITS. Unfortunately when you try to help one, you might not be helping another. So I think that we should eliminate all such references, and I am glad you agree.

Mr. AMICO. I certainly do, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Now, I notice that you speak of a fellow named Cannarozzo. This is the Magaddino and Montana empire. I wouldn't question you about it at this stage because you haven't mentioned them, as being an employee of D. Madison Cab Co. in Buffalo. That is a Montana enterprise.

Mr. AMICO. Yes, Montana has connections and associations and it is believed that he is the true owner of perhaps the Madison Cab Co.

Senator JAVITS. Is it generally considered in Buffalo that he controls the cab business?

Mr. AMICO. That is about right, sir. I believe insofar as Van Dyke, Madison, and he also has close ties with City Service, that comprises the taxicab business in the city of Buffalo.

Senator JAVITS. Is that all a matter of record, or is it just general knowledge?

Mr. AMICO. It is not a matter of record, perhaps not even a matter of general knowledge. It is a matter of knowledge to those who are interested enough to want to find that out.

Senator JAVITS. I have some other questions on others, but I will reserve those, Mr. Chairman, until the witness gets to that point.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. AMICO. I would like to continue by a résumé on John C. Montana.

John Charles Montana, residing at 340 Starin Avenue, Buffalo, N.Y., with his wife, was born June 30, 1893, in Montedore, Italy.

Montana's "rags to riches" fame started as a messenger boy in a candy shop while attending grade school. He later associated himself with a taxicab business which he started with one cab. Montana continued successfully with his taxi business, gaining control of the Yellow Cab Co., and the Van Dyke Taxi & Transfer Co., causing its merger in 1930 to form the largest taxi company in western New York State. Montana's virtual monopoly at preferred taxi locations such as the Buffalo Airport, New York Central Railroad Station, and area taxi stands located at the better hotels, caused political criticism in later years.

Concurrently with his rapid expansion in the taxicab enterprise, Montana engaged in city politics, and became active in business and civic groups. He was closely associated with influential political, business, and social leaders. Mr. Montana was elected councilman of the city of Buffalo in the years 1928 and 1930, and appointed to other important city posts in subsequent years.

In 1956 he was named "Man of the Year" because of his civic contributions, that is, his recognition as councilman, successful businessman, his many contributions to charities, chairman of the Buffalo Zoning Board, and his constant stand expounding good government.

592 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

He became a member, and in some instances, the president of a host of civic, fraternal, and political organizations too numerous to mention, such as chamber of commerce, Elks, Buffalo Athletic Club, and the Erie Downs golf course to mention but a few.

Montana appeared before the Senate Rackets Committee and testified that he had gone to Apalachin with Antonio Magaddino, an uncle of Montana's nephew through marriage. He claimed that he was unaware of Magaddino's extensive past criminal record, consisting of falsifying passports in Italy, extortion, rape, and violations of U.S. immigration law. Incidentally, Montana was one of the few, or perhaps the only one, that perhaps did not invoke the fifth amendment as a result of those hearings and trials.

Montana was convicted of conspiracy to obstruct justice in the U.S. Federal court, which was subsequently reversed on appeal.

To list Montana's legitimate associates would be to list the who's who of Buffalo and New York State's prominent personages.

His reputed underworld associates would be, of course, Joseph Barbara (deceased), Stefano Magaddino, Antonio Magaddino, Fred Randaccio, James LaDuca, Roy Carlisi, Sam Pieri, Samuel LaGattuta, Samuel Freedman, Herman Weinstein, Joseph Falcone (Utica), and James Zerrilli (Detroit).

At one time Montana was closely associated with Joe DiCarlo, former Buffalo public enemy No. 1. DiCarlo was associated with labor and union rackets and the distribution of lottery tickets in the Buffalo area.

Montana has been closely associated with Magaddino and regarded as a trusted lieutenant, and thus closely associated with Stefano Magaddino dynasty of criminal activity in the western New York area, with headquarters in Niagara Falls, N.Y. Since the Apalachin disclosure, however, Montana has seldom been seen in public with members of the criminal world.

Senator JAVITS. May I ask a question or two here? Lieutenant, Mr. Montana before 1959, before the Apalachin convention, I gather that these facts that you are now stating were not known at that time or were they known to you?

Mr. AMICO. The facts insofar as——

Senator JAVITS. As his association with these racketeers?

Mr. AMICO. Well, they were not known to the police department or general public. As you probably well know, intelligence units have not been in effect in police departments more than a couple of years and the units as intelligence and criminal gathering units that enable us to keep closer ties with these suspects and individuals we feel are associated with so-called organized crime. At that time, it wasn't certainly generally known and it was maybe not even known. But by a very few.

Senator JAVITS. So that you really feel the book was opened on Mr. Montana by Apalachin?

Mr. AMICO. Definitely, sir.

Senator JAVITS. I notice that you say Montana has virtual monopoly at preferred taxi locations, such as the Buffalo Airport, New York Central Railroad, and area taxi stands located at better hotels, caused political criticism in later years. Does that continue until this day, and does he still have the taxi monopoly in Buffalo?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 593

Mr. AMICO. No, sir. That has been more or less minimized at this particular time. One particular stand that seemed to be very preferred by the Hotel Statler-Hilton now is open to all independents. I know, I at one time drove a cab for some 6 months in that area, and whether it was because of his political connections at that time or whether it was because of his connections with the so-called mob, we knew enough not to get anywhere near that particular stand because we knew it belonged to John Montana. You just didn't go into that particular area. The same went for the airport and the same went for the railroad stations.

Senator JAVITS. Now, are they all open now?

Mr. AMICO. They certainly are, sir.

Senator JAVITS. They are open to individuals?

Mr. AMICO. They are. The reason why I put that in was subject to political criticism, there was a particular individual, Mr. Lim Conryn on the independent ticket for mayor at that time and he made quite an exposé at that time on Montana's preferred position of the cab enterprises.

Senator JAVITS. But none the less, his cab companies still dominate the Buffalo market, do they not?

Mr. AMICO. They certainly do and it is considered a very legitimate business; and, as a matter of fact, I have heard the remark time and time again he has perhaps the most courteous and trusted drivers of any of the cab companies.

Senator JAVITS. Now ostensibly, do normal businessmen run these companies? I don't want you to give me any names because it would be unfair to these people, but I just ask for a generic classification. Montana isn't the president of these companies, and he isn't their manager, is he?

Mr. AMICO. The companies you are referring to, taxicab companies, he is the president.

Senator JAVITS. And he actually operates them?

Mr. AMICO. As a matter of fact he was president up to a few months ago, and he has turned it over to his nephew, and some other individuals. It is just of recent months that he has turned the presidency and managerial capacity over. It is my understanding that there is a corporation; that he is chairman of the board. I know he is very actively engaged—not to disclose any police surveillance, but it is common knowledge that he daily and routinely goes to his place of business and that certainly he is—he has still a keen interest in his taxi enterprise.

Senator JAVITS. He runs a cab company?

Mr. AMICO. Yes, sir.

Senator JAVITS. And those are most of the cabs on the streets of Buffalo?

Mr. AMICO. Yes, sir; that is correct, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Now, do you have any comment on that in police terms, the idea that notwithstanding your disclosures, the Analachin disclosures, and the situation you lay before the Senate committee, this man is still operating a very lucrative and important business enterprise with complete acceptance of the local community and he is doing business there today, and from all we can see will be tomorrow, just as if this information had never existed. Do you have any comment on that, in terms of the enforcement of law?

594 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. AMICO. I believe I would compare this, that I would say is our great American way of life, that it is such a great nation that anyone regardless of who he may be is certainly given an opportunity to succeed and become successful in business. Now it is an apathetic, lethargic public that is enhancing Mr. Montana's position, and maybe a public hearing of this type might do much toward possibly minimizing his importance, and probably do much toward awakening the public to show that this type of organized crime does exist and some of these people perhaps, it is best not to patronize them and not to go along and not encourage this particular setup.

So it is the public themselves that either contribute or detract from such an endeavor.

Senator JAVITS. Lieutenant, I am delighted that you make that point, because I think it is so important to make. No law enforcement and no police plan and no district attorneys. and no committees and no government in our country, thank God, is absolute and complete in its authority. In the final analysis it is public opinion that really gives the final sanction, and so I couldn't agree with you more that at this point in the career of this particular man, it is the public and the public alone which has to count. I think it is also true that it is the genius of our society and of our justice that there is no such thing as a retainer for life. Even the worst people can redeem themselves after having paid their debt to society. I feel that we have to let it go at that, but I am very glad that you made that point and it is a very profound one in respect of American life. I thank the Chair for the opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you go right ahead?

Senator BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest as the chairman has suggested already, that rather than read these very lengthy biographies of everybody on this chart, that it would be more useful to include them in the record and let the committee question the witness.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I think I intend to read only the top echelon which is the top four, and then he can put it in and have it printed in the record, and not go any further.

Mr. AMICO. I might stop right here if the Senator wishes. I had in mind to cover one more individual that I thought was worthy of mention, but I might go along the same lines of thinking that you have put forth, if that is your desire.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Can you give us a quick recap of these other individuals?

(The balance of Mr. Amico's statement follows:)

FREDRICO G. RANDACCIO

Fredrico G. Randaccio, also known as "Fred Lupo," was born July 1, 1907, in Palermo, Italy. At the present time, he resides at 562 Richmond Avenue, Buffalo, N.Y.

Randaccio was first arrested in 1922, as "Fred Lupo," for juvenile delinquency. About 2 years later he was arrested for gambling. That same year he was arrested for bootlegging. In 1928, Randaccio was arrested for assault, third degree; again in 1930 for felonious assault, and in the latter part of that same year he received a 10-year sentence for assault, first degree. This charge was reduced from robbery, first degree, after holding up a garage proprietor.

Randaccio was paroled, but was returned to prison in 1938 for violating that parole.

In 1956, deportation proceedings were initiated against Fred Lupo Randaccio by the Immigration and Naturalization Service. These proceedings were dismissed, since Randaccio's citizenship was obtained as a result of his 6 months' service in the U.S. Army, in 1945.

Randaccio's business fronts are varied. A corporation called the Frontier Lathers, Inc., was formed, with Randaccio as its president, John Cammillieri as vice president, and Pat Ntarelli as secretary-treasurer. This corporation lasted a short time.

Randaccio then entered into a partnership with Fred Mogavero in the cigarette-vending machine enterprise under the name of Delaware Vending Co. This company attempted to take over and monopolize the predominantly Italian west side of Buffalo, with the use of persuasive salesmen such as John Cammillieri, Pat Ntarelli, and Sam Miano.

Randaccio's next and present business venture is with a construction company known as Tur-Ran Builders, operating out of Amherst, N.Y., a suburb of Buffalo. This business was formed by Randaccio and Fred Turano.

Randaccio is considered Don Stefano Magaddino's "enforcer"; that is, the governing force in the Buffalo area for Magaddino's criminal empire.

To maintain his present position, Randaccio has surrounded himself with a corps of trusted and loyal associates, such as John Cammillieri, to handle labor and union racketeering; Pat Ntarelli and Joseph Fino and Daniel Sansanese to take care of organization bookmaking interests, and Steven Cannarozzo to handle the syndicate's policy business.

Although lacking formal education, Randaccio is regarded as a great organizer, with ample ability to hold the organization together in times of stress.

Other associates of Randaccio include Fred Mogavero, Herman Weinstein, Stefano and Antonio Magaddino, James LaDuca, Salvatore Bonito, Paul Briandl, John Montana, Roy Carlisi, of Buffalo, and Vito Aquece, Charles Cipolla, and Daniel Gasberini, all of the neighboring Canada area.

SALVATORE J. PIERI

Salvatore J. Pieri, alias "Sam" Pieri, and "Samuel Johns," was born January 29, 1911. He resides at 596 West Avenue, Buffalo, N.Y.

Salvatore Pieri was first arrested for grand larceny first degree and burglary third degree, on June 4, 1928. His next arrest came about 2 years later in October 1930, this time for petty larceny. About 3 months later he was picked up on an indictment warrant charging him with robbery first degree in Rochester, N.Y.

This indictment was later dismissed. In September 1931 Pieri received a 60-day sentence in Erie County Penitentiary for smuggling. In the early part of 1933 Pieri was again arrested for robbery first degree and grand larceny second degree.

About a month later, both these charges were dismissed. In March and May of 1935 Pieri was arrested and charged both times with consorting with known criminals. His next arrest came in January 1942, when he was charged with carrying a loaded concealed weapon, and concealing an escaped prisoner.

His last arrest came in May 1954, when he was arrested for violation of Federal narcotics laws. He received a 10-year sentence at Atlanta Federal Prison. Pieri served approximately 8 years and 4 months of his sentence, and arrived back in Buffalo on May 7, 1963.

At the present time Pieri is unemployed and living with his daughter at Buffalo, N.Y. Pieri has close ties with his brother John, also known as "John Rai," now serving a life sentence for murder in Ohio State Penitentiary where he has been for the past 25 years.

Pieri has a sister, Mrs. Elsie DiCarlo, who is the wife of Joe DiCarlo, formerly of Buffalo, N.Y., and who has been branded by a former Buffalo commissioner as Public Enemy No. 1.

Pieri was topman in the Buffalo area for the organization before his arrest in 1954. While in prison, Fred G. Randaccio has replaced him and is so solidly entrenched that his removal is difficult to achieve.

There is a possibility that there will be a struggle for power in an attempt by Pieri to regain his position as the head of the Buffalo organized criminal dynasty.

His associates and codefendants include Sylvester Polliatto, alias "Sam Polo," Nunzio Romano, Ben Yusolovich, Angelo Filicia, Anthony Desimone, Frank Consolo, Steven Simmons, Alfred Warren, Anthony Crishei, Anthony Nassilli, Harry Ricobene, Salvatore Lazzaro, Michael Erra, and Amato Bucci. He has close associations also with Salvatore Rizzo, Stefano Magaddino, Antonio Magaddino, James LaDuca, and John C. Montana.

JOHN CAMMILLIERI

John Cammillieri, born May 8, 1911, in Italy resides at 542 Richmond Avenue in Buffalo, N.Y. John Cammillieri came to this country from Campobello Di Licata Gigenti, Italy, on May 30, 1916, at the age of 4 years.

Cammillieri applied for his citizenship on August 10, 1942, as John Victor Cammillieri. He became a citizen on March 2, 1944.

John Cammillieri's criminal record started on August 17, 1930, with his arrest for grand larceny. Then on June 4, 1931, it was grand larceny second; on August 18, 1931, assault with intent to kill; on June 28, 1932, burglary third and on October 2, 1933, extortion and robbery first. On this last charge, he was sentenced to 20 years at Elmira State Prison.

In the past few years Cammillieri headed the Vinjames Construction Co. and is reputed to handle union affairs for the mob. He also handled the Niagara Falls locals for construction on the power project and has close tie-ins with the Hod Carriers Local No. 210. For a short time he was a third member of the Frontier Lathers, a flashing construction light company.

The other two members of this concern were listed as Fred G. Randaccio and Pasquale Ntarelli. After this company was dissolved Cammillieri showed interest in the cigarette-vending machine business. This business was formed by Fred Randaccio and Fred Mogavero.

The Delaware Vending Co. attempted to take over and monopolize the entire Buffalo West Side cigarette vending machine business. The business was short lived due primarily to pressure exerted by the Buffalo Police Department intelligence unit.

He is closely associated with Stefano Magaddino, Fred Randaccio, Daniel Sansanese, Fred Mogavero, Joseph Fino, Pasquale Ntarelli, and many others.

PASQUALE NATARELLI

Pasquale Ntarelli, alias Pat Titters, was born July 9, 1910. He is now living at 60 Manchester Place, Buffalo, N.Y. He is married, and has previously worked as a salesman, truckdriver, laborer, counterman, small businessman, and gambler.

Ntarelli is an associate of Joe DiCarlo of Youngstown, Ohio, and Buffalo, N.Y., Fred Randaccio, also known as Fred Lupo, Salvatore Bonito, Stefano and Antonio Magaddino of Niagara Falls, and Roy Carlisi of Buffalo.

He was picked up for at least 25 juvenile charges.

Besides these, Ntarelli has been arrested for robbery first degree, robbery second degree; burglary, larceny, violation of parole, possession of policy slips, and contriving a lottery.

Early in his career, Ntarelli worked for Joe DiCarlo. Later, he and Fred Randaccio were partners in the rackets and gambling including bookmaking, numbers racket, and crap games.

Ntarelli is still a close friend and associate of Fred Randaccio, alleged top man in the Buffalo area, protecting the interests of "the old man", Don Stefano Magaddino. Ntarelli could be classified as a first lieutenant to Randaccio, and also one of the muscle men, with responsibilities over some of the gambling interests as related to the mob.

Besides Randaccio, Ntarelli is a close friend, and in the past a business associate of John Cammillieri, and Steven Canuaro, three of the men who make up the nucleus of the underworld element in this city.

ROY CARLISI

Roy Carlisi was born April 10, 1909, at Chicago, Ill. His present address is 20 Anderson Place, Buffalo, N.Y., where he resides with his wife and children.

At the time of his attendance at the Apalachin convention, Carlisi was the owner of Club 97, a bar and restaurant located in Buffalo. Information received reveals that in earlier years, Carlisi owned and managed a wholesale-retail clam distribution business.

It is said that at the height of the Carlisi power, that dispensers of clams found it wise to conduct their clam business exclusively with the Carlisi enterprise and as such Carlisi enjoyed a competition-free atmosphere in business.

Carlisi was first arrested on December 30, 1937, in Chicago, on a charge of violation of the Internal Revenue Act (to wit, the operation of a still), which charge was later discharged. On January 4, 1943, he has a record showing SOS War Department No. 40 O.W.B. Trial, no disposition available.

Carlisi's reputed associates are Stefano Magaddino, Anthony Magaddino, Fred Randaccio, Fred Mogavero, Paul Briandi, Joseph Fino, Daniel Sansanese, Salvatore Bonito, Steven Cannarozzo, and Benedetto Spano.

Carlisi is presently associated and in partnership with Glen R. Bender operating Buddy's Chicken & Fish Takeout Service in the City of Buffalo. Confirmed reports are that the said business which deals mainly in the sale of clams is flourishing successfully legitimately.

STEVEN CANNAROZZO

Steven Cannarozzo alias "Flat Top"; Siki "Cannarzio," age 42, is divorced and resides at 29 Danforth Place, Buffalo, N.Y. He has a series of arrests dating from 1939 to 1959, for such crimes as violation of Internal Revenue laws, assault, disorderly conduct, gambling, and possession of dangerous weapons.

In June 1959 he was wounded when a volley of shots was fired through a window at the Madison Cab Co. in Buffalo. He was rushed to the hospital in critical condition from multiple bullet wounds and survived. His assistant, James Delmont, fled the Buffalo area, but was found, less than a year later, in a field outside of San Bernardino, Calif., a victim of a gangland murder.

His head had been battered in with a blunt instrument.

Cannarozzo at the time of the shooting, declined to assist the Buffalo police in their investigation and would not tell the police who shot him, which is typical of the gangland code of silence.

Cannarozzo's last arrest was in 1959 for feloniously contriving a lottery. It is believed that Cannarozzo's criminal specialty in the past few years has been within the realm of gambling activities.

Our information is that Cannarozzo allegedly was elevated to lieutenant status in the underworld fraternity. Steve's rise and prominence in the underworld is attributed mainly to family ties.

Steven Cannarozzo is presently a dispatcher and an official of the Madison Cab Co. in Buffalo, N.Y.

His associates are Fred Randaccio, Pascal Natarelli, Samuel Frangimoro, Bartholomew Cannizzari, Roy Carlisi, Fred Mogavero, and Daniel Sansanese.

SAMUEL BROCATO

Samuel Brocato, formerly of 210 Maryland Street, Buffalo, N.Y., has a record of arrests dating back to 1935. He has done time for counterfeiting, and has been arrested for robbery, first degree; assault, third degree, and numerous petty offenses. Brocato has been closely associated with Anthony Perna of Buffalo. At one time these two men were believed to control the six-for-five moneylending racket for the crime syndicate in the Buffalo area.

Brocato has left the Buffalo area, and is believed to be operating in the Arizona area at this time.

JOSEPH FINO

Joseph Fino was born March 13, 1915. He resides at 236 Pellman Place, West Seneca, N.Y.

The police record of Joe Fino dates back to May 12, 1931, and includes at least 20 entries, including petit larceny, burglary, armed robbery, assault with intent to kill, felonious assault, simple assault, criminally receiving stolen property, and gambling.

Joe Fino is very close with Daniel Sansanese. These two men were and are considered with the "arm," or muscle for the local organization.

Fino's major source of income is currently being derived from bookmaking. He has grown in the organization from hoodlum status to upper echelon rank, a few steps from Fred Randaccio. His associates outside Sansanese are Fred Randaccio, Fred Mogavero, Salvatore Bonito, Paul Briandi, and Pat Politano.

SALVATORE S. BONITO

Salvatore Bonito, alias "George Raft," was born March 30, 1914, in Buffalo, N.Y. He is currently residing with his wife and family at 49 Antoinette Drive, Depew, N.Y.

Salvatore Bonito has a criminal history dating back to 1928. He has been constantly in trouble with the police. He was adjudicated a juvenile delinquent at 14 years of age. He is a third-felony offender who has been in New York State Industrial School, Elmira Reformatory, Clinton Prison, and Attica State Prison.

Bonito is reputed to be a good safeman, and by some thought to be an expert with nitroglycerine. He has been involved in every type of crime, including burglary, counterfeiting, and robberies, but of late his main interest is organized gambling. It is believed that Bonito will revert to more serious crime along with his deep involvement with gambling.

His associates include Thomas Callea, Fred Randaccio, Fred Mogavero, Daniel Sansanese, Michael Tascarella, Paul Briandi, Anthony Domino, Joseph Fino, David Ninos, Benedetto Spano, Arthur Weiss, James LaDuca, Peter Paticelli, Salvatore Rizzo, and Steven Cannarozzo.

Bonito was first arrested on December 23, 1930, for petit larceny. The next arrest was on February 7, 1931, for burglary, third, and grand larceny, second. He was sentenced to Elmira Reformatory, sentence suspended. On March 3, 1931, he again was arrested for burglary, third degree. He was convicted, and sentence was suspended.

Six months later, on September 18, 1931, he was arrested for petit larceny, which was discharged. He again was arrested on May 17, 1934, for robbery, first, and assault, second. Both these indictments were dismissed.

On May 1, 1936, Bonito was arrested and turned over to Federal agents for counterfeiting U.S. currency, and about a month later, on June 12, 1936, he was arrested for burglary, third, and possession of burglar tools.

He was convicted and sentenced to 5 to 10 years at Attica State Prison, on November 17, 1937.

Bonito was released on parole, and on May 20, 1942, was arrested for vagrancy which was dismissed, but the following day his parole was violated, and he was returned to Attica for the remainder of his sentence.

He again was arrested on February 27, 1950, for attempted grand larceny, second. He was convicted, and sentenced to serve 2 to 3 years in Attica. After his release, he was arrested in December of 1960, and January of 1961, for accepting horse bets, and possession of bookmaking records.

Salvatore Bonito has, through the years, grown in stature with the members of the syndicate—from performing small jobs and associating with run-of-the-mill, penny-ante hoodlums. He is now closely associated with ranking members of the local crime syndicate and his duties are mainly in gambling supervision, such as the collecting for the organization of gambling proceeds.

This man is considered capable by members of the organization and the police to perform any and all criminal assignments for the syndicate to include serious and violent crimes.

DANIEL SANSANESE

Daniel G. Sansanese was born May 27, 1908, and resides at 208 Lexington Avenue, Buffalo, N.Y.

Sansanese was first arrested for robbery, first, and assault, first, on May 12, 1927. His accomplice, Dominic Naples, was killed by a police officer during the commission of this holdup.

Sansanese was sentenced to 7 to 15 years. He was paroled on November 26, 1932.

On November 19, 1935, Sansanese was arrested for armed robbery and possession of a dangerous weapon and was sentenced to 30 years as a second felony offender. He was paroled on December 23, 1944.

On June 19, 1950, he was arrested in Norwich, N.Y., for burglary, grand larceny, and possession of burglar tools. He pleaded guilty to grand larceny, second, and was sentenced to 2½ to 5 years and was released after maximum expiration on October 3, 1953.

While in prison, a close friendship was made with his cellmate, Joseph Fino. Through the years after their release, these two men became known as the "arm," or "muscle" for the organization. In their younger years, these men were feared by those both in and out of the organization.

Today the subject is still considered as the muscleman and has taken on added responsibilities in the organization's gambling operation as a trouble-shooter and overseer. He has no legitimate business or front, and is an inveterate gambler.

The associates of Daniel Sansanese include Joseph Fino, Pascal Politano, Fred Randaccio, John Cammillieri, Fred Mogavero, Roy Carlisi, Steven Cannarozzo, Paul Briandi, Salvatore Bonito, and Pascal Natarelli.

PAUL A. BRIANDI

Paul A. Briandi resides at 37 Virgil Place, Buffalo, N.Y. He was born in Buffalo on April 9, 1907.

The criminal record of this man started in 1919, when he was charged with truancy at the age of 12 years. From this time on, his record shows at least one or more arrests for each succeeding year until 1925. These years account for truancy, juvenile delinquency, vagrancy, motor vehicle violations, fighting with dry agents, petit larceny, and attempted grand larceny.

On February 15, 1925, he was sentenced to Elmira Reformatory for 10 years on robbery, first, reduced to robbery, third. On March 4, 1926, he was transferred to Napanoch, where he was paroled on October 13, 1927.

In 1930 the record shows two traffic infractions and then again on May 6, 1931, he was arrested for assault, third, resulting in probation for 2 years.

On August 4, 1931, he was charged with assault, third, and fined $10. On May 25, 1933, an assault, second, charge was discharged; on May 17, 1933, assault, third, was discharged, and on September 18, 1933, an assault, third, charge resulted in a suspended sentence.

On September 12, 1935, the charge was violation of probation, and the sentence was probation continued. Then on July 6, 1935, he was charged with 2460 P.L. and 1146 P.L. (These charges consisted of placing a girl in a disorderly house, and living off the proceeds of her work.) For this he received a $5,000 fine, and 20 years suspended sentence.

On January 13, 1942, he was arrested and charged with 974 P.L. (policy slips). On June 3, 1947, he was arrested and charged with 1433 P.L. (malicious mischief). Dismissed.

The last entry shows that on November 9, 1952, he was charged with 970 P.L. (gambling).

This last arrest completes his arrest record up to this date. His present associates consist of Fred Randaccio, John Cammillieri, Joseph Fino, Steven Cannarozzo, Pascal Natarelli, Daniel Sansanese, Pascal Politano, and many hoodlums of lesser importance.

Briandi's function appears to be confined to gambling within the organization. He has been known to manage the syndicate's betting rooms, and to collect the proceeds for the organization's betting action.

ANTHONY PERNA

Anthony Perna, alias "Anthony Gentile," and "Lucky," was born April 11, 1903. He resides at 246 Massachusetts Street, Buffalo, N.Y.

Anthony Perna has a long police record of 33 arrests, including rape, sodomy, kidnapping, extortion, felonious assault, counterfeiting, pimping, and consorting with known criminals.

He is presently associated with the Perna Funeral Home in Buffalo, N.Y., which is operated by his son the licensed funeral director.

Perna has a close association with Stefano Magaddino, Roy Carlisi, and Sam Brocato, and Sam Lagattuta. Perna and Brocato have in the past been closely associated in the 6-for-5 racket of money lending at usurious rates of interest. This combination was broken up a short time ago because of Perna's gambling habits, and as a result Perna's prestige suffered within the organization.

At this time it is difficult to appraise his position in the syndicate even though he is still well thought of by Don Stefano Magaddino.

SALVATORE PETER RIZZO

Salvatore Peter Rizzo also known as San Rizzo was born on August 14, 1913, in Buffalo, N.Y., and resides at 412 Vermont Street in this city.

On October 10, 1942, he was arrested for gambling for which he received a suspended sentence. On January 8, 1944, he was arrested and charged with contriving a lottery and was fined $25.

On July 14, 1945, he was arrested on a warrant charging him with robbery, first, and he was No Billed by a grand jury on this charge. On September 29, 1945, he was arrested for rape and sodomy and was discharged on both counts on October 16, 1945.

On August 25, 1948, he was arrested for contriving a lottery and bookmaking counts at 12 Brayton Street. The lottery charge was dismissed and he was held for probation and investigation on the bookmaking count. On October 14, 1948, he was fined $50 on this charge.

600 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

On September 25, 1945, Rizzo was arrested with Salvatore Pieri, a close and trusted associate. They were charged with violation of the Federal narcotic laws, for which Rizzo received a suspended sentence.

This combination had been repeatedly described as the source of supply for narcotic dealers in Cleveland, Ohio.

At the time of their arrest Pieri and Rizzo with 16 other defendants were charged with operating a multimillion-dollar ring with outlets in Cleveland, Ohio.

His associates are Daniel Sansanese; Pascal Natarelli; Joseph Fino; Salvatore Pieri; Steven Cannarozzo, and Pascal Politano.

PASCAL F. POLITANO

Pascal F. Politano, alias "Baggy Pants," "Pantaloons," and "Lucky Pat," resides at 57 Days Park, Buffalo, N.Y. He was born December 21, 1922.

Politano is considered to have led a charmed life. He was arrested and charged with an attempted burglary of a bank in West Seneca, N.Y., a suburb of Buffalo. He was tried and found not guilty by a jury.

Again about 3 years later he was arrested for an attempted safe job—two of his associates were actually found cracking the safe. This time he was indicted by a grand jury but it was subsequently dismissed.

Again on June 13, 1961, he was arrested for attempted arson, third degree. On this occasion he was actually found in the building with the incendiary equipment ready to ignite—he was found not guilty by a jury.

To climax this charmed life story—he was shot five times at a range of about 3 feet—he went to the hospital and was released about 2 weeks later with no ill effects.

Lucky Pat was the manager of a tavern owned by his mother. This was a den of iniquity where suspected holdup men, burglars, pimps, and gamblers used to frequent.

He is considered a tipster—that is he cases and plans lucrative burglaries, for a commission. His modus operandi is to drive the burglars to the scene of the crime, and then circle the area and warn them if police are nearby.

Politano was closely associated with Fred and Frank Aquino, with Vincent Santangelo, and Anthony Palestine, all of whom were murdered. Pat Politano was shot by Vincent Santangelo's brother Pascal, now serving time in Attica State Prison for the shooting.

Politano's associates include Joe Fino, Danny Sansanese, Pat Natarelli, Fred Randaccio, Paul Briandi, Salvatore Bonito, and many hoodlums of lesser stature.

He appears to be in the lower echelon of the organization, but still falls under their protective cloak of silence.

SAMUEL LAGATTUTA

Samuel Lagattuta was born in Italy on April 7, 1899, and resides at 555 Lafayette Avenue, Buffalo, N.Y. Lagattuta has a police record showing 32 arrests for such crimes as carrying concealed weapons, arson, suspicion of murder, and gambling.

Lagattuta has been considered a hoodlum of low organization status until he was found at the home of Joseph Barbera at Apalachin, N.Y. This skyrocketed him to underworld fame, which he seemed to enjoy.

Lagattuta lists his occupation as a house painter, however our records reveal no basis for this claim. He was closely associated with the older hoodlum element such as Sam LoVullo, S. Lumentto and Angelo Perna.

LoVullo, deceased, was considered an enforcer for the organization. Lumentto and Perna, along with LoVullo and Lagattuta, were all arrested in 1937 for suspicion of murder when they were found with a .38 caliber revolver in the glove compartment of their car.

SALVATORE T. MIANO

Salvatore T. Miano, alias "Sam," was born December 26, 1918. He is now living at 1753 Hertel Avenue, Buffalo, N.Y.

Sam Miano's police record shows 13 entries for various crimes and infractions, such as burglary, robbery, first degree, threatening a complainant, violation of OPA gas rationing laws, unlawful transportation of tires, and many traffic violations.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 601

Miano is presently associated with a seemingly legitimate business known as the Metro Paving Contractors.

His numerous underworld associates include Fred Randaccio, John Cammillieri, Roy Carlisi, Salvatore Rizzo, Salvatore Bonito, and Paul Briandi, to mention a few.

He is reputed to be a muscle man within the organization, and we suspect he is destined for advancement within the organization. He is presently known to engage in assignments relative to strong-arm measures in the field of labor racketeering.

JAMES LA DUCA

James La Duca, of 5114 Dana Drive, Lewiston, N.Y., was born in Buffalo, N.Y., on October 19, 1912. He is married, and has two children, Joanne and John. His wife, the former Angeline Carmela Magaddino, is the daughter of Stefano Magaddino; reputed to be the No. 1 man in organized crime in the Buffalo-Niagara Falls area.

Prior to his arrest at Apalachin, on November 14, 1957, LaDuca had no criminal record, but associated with members of organized crime. In 1939 he drove a taxicab for the Van Dyke Taxi Co., owned by John C. Montana, another Apalachin delegate.

At one time he was secretary and treasurer of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers Union, Buffalo, N.Y.; secretary and treasurer of the Magaddino Memorial Chapel Inc., of Niagara Falls, and is alleged to have had a concealed interest in Charles Distributing Co., former holder of wholesale beer license, Niagara Falls, through his wife Angeline.

LaDuca is known to have associated with such people as Stefano Magaddino, his father-in-law, Willie More and Paul Palmeri, New Jersey hoodlums, Joe DiCarlo of Youngstown, Ohio and Buffalo, N.Y. (formerly Buffalo public enemy No. 1) and John C. Montana.

At the time of his arrest outside Apalachin, he was in a car with John Scalish of Cleveland, Ohio, and John DeMarco of Shaker Heights, Ohio. While in New York City, just before the Apalachin meeting, LaDuca placed numerous calls to Joseph Falcone, leader of the Utica, N.Y., underworld.

On May 21, 1959, Federal agents launched a nationwide manhunt for LaDuca, and Anthony Magaddino.

A sealed indictment charging conspiracy to obstruct Federal narcotics and labor-racketeering investigations, was returned by a Federal grand jury in New York City May 13, 1959.

The indictment accused all 27 delegates of giving "false fictitious and evasive testimony" about the Apalachin meeting.

On Tuesday, January 22, 1962, LaDuca and Issie Morgenstern of Rochester, N.Y., former president of the Richford Hotel, in Buffalo, N.Y., went on trial in Federal court on charges of violating the Taft-Hartley law.

LaDuca was accused of receiving and Morgenstern of paying $10,833 over a period of November 1, 1955, to December 27, 1957, while LaDuca was an officer of a union that represented employees of the hotel. The indictment was returned in January 1959 while he was in hiding from Federal authorities.

The Taft-Hartley case before Federal Judge H. P. Burke, involved a charge that LaDuca received $433.33 a month from Morgenstern during the 2 years he was financial secretary-treasurer of Local 66, Hotel and Restaurant Employees.

LaDuca was ultimately acquitted of the charge. On February 20, 1961, the indictment charging LaDuca with "conspiracy to obstruct justice" was dismissed in the U.S. district court, New York City.

MICHAEL C. TASCARELLA

Michael C. Tascarella, alias "Torch" and "Mike Torch," was born in Buffalo, N.Y., on February 7, 1921. He was first arrested in Buffalo on December 12, 1944, for accepting bets on horseraces (sec. 986 Public Law). He paid a $25 fine, and returned to booking horses in a more cautious and lucrative manner. He was next arrested for burglary and grand larceny, second degree, on May 23, 1948. These charges were later dismissed. In Lockport, N.Y. (a city close to Buffalo), Tascarella was again arrested on December 18, 1949, for burglary, third degree. He was convicted of attempted grand larceny on February 27, 1950, and sentenced to 1 year 3 months to 2 years 6 months, in Attica State Prison, and investigation of this burglary disclosed that his accomplices were Salvatore Bonito, Arthur Weiss, David Nines, and Anthony Domino. A large arsenal was confiscated, including a .45-caliber army automatic, three other revolvers, burglar tools and nitro glycerine.

While out on appeal for his conviction, he was again arrested on July 26, 1950, and charged under Federal law with conspiracy to counterfeit. He was convicted and sentenced to 5 years in the Allenwood, Pa., Federal Prison Camp.

After his release from Allenwood, Tascarella was next arrested on June 5, 1962, near Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, for possession of $50,000 worth of heroin. He and Joseph Angello of Seventh Street, Buffalo, were arrested by Royal Canadian Mounted Police when they stopped their car on a West Flatborough (a suburb of Hamilton) farm road. He was sentenced to 14 years for this crime.

Before his present confinement, Tascarella was considered to be a major source of the distribution of large-scale narcotics between Canada and the western New York area, representing the typical syndicate narcotic operations.

Tascarella's rise in our local crime syndicate is not a stellar one. He was a lower echelon type, doing menial jobs for the syndicate, for either pay or favor.

ANTONIO MAGADDINO

Antonio Magaddino, alias "Nino," lives at 1528 Whitney Place, Niagara Falls, N.Y. He was born in Castellmare Del Golfo, Italy, on June 18, 1897. He entered the United States on November 1, 1923, and was naturalized in Niagara Falls, N.Y., on June 21, 1948.

Antonio had no criminal record in this country up until the time of the Apalachin convention, but he was arrested in Italy on numerous occasions for various crimes, such as on February 29, 1916, fingerprinted at Ventimiglia, Italy, charged with falsifying a passport under the name of Antonio Giovanni Maggardino (disposition unknown), again in Ventimiglia, Italy, on March 15, 1916, for clandestine activities (details unknown). He was released about a month later on April 16, 1916. His next arrest came at Castellamare, Italy, on August 14, 1916, for homicide. He was discharged on July 23, 1917, insufficient evidence to prosecute. On June 19, 1928, at Castellmare Del Golfo he was denounced for robbery, rape, and extortion committed in 1924. Particulars are not known. On January 29, 1929, he received amnesty for using false passport by the magistrate of Trapini and on March 1, 1930, he was released by the Trapini Tribunal Court of Appeals, for traveling without a passport.

The only criminal record in the United States came as a result of his attendance at the Apalachin convention when he was sought on a warrant charging him with obstruction of justice.

He surrendered to U.S. marshals after this case was reversed on appeal.

Antonio is vice president of the Magaddino Memorial Chapel located in Niagara Falls, N.Y. He is the brother of Stefano, and it is thought that on occasions he represents his brother at underworld meetings.

His associates include Dominic D'Aostine, Sam Rangatore, both of Niagara Falls, N.Y., Roy Carlisi, Fred Randaccio, John Cammillieri, Pat Natarelli, and John C. Montana of Buffalo, N.Y., and Willie Moore and Paul Palmeri of New Jersey.

Antonio Magaddino, prior to the Apalachin conclave was constantly in consort with major Buffalo gangland associates. He governed his brothers' Buffalo dynasty by his omnipresence at Buffalo night clubs where such major hoodlums would regularly congregate.

Mr. AMICO. I point now immediately to the chart and mention the name of Fred Randaccio. We have labeled him as the underboss. He is second in command only to Magaddino. Fred Randaccio is responsible for carrying out all of the policy and thinking in the organized criminal area for Don Stefano. He is the fellow in charge of the Buffalo operations. He is somewhat the enforcer of the group. I might say that Fred does deal with an iron hand, and he has tended to keep violence in the Buffalo area to a minimum insofar as any murders and aggravated assaults are concerned.

He is immediately surrounded with what we call four lieutenants, the lieutenants being John Cammillieri, Pascal Natarelli, Roy Carlisi, and Steven Cannarozzo.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Your chart reflects that Randaccio is the successor to Salvatore Pieri; can you explain how he became successor?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 603

Mr. AMICO. Yes, our information is that Salvatore Pieri was pretty close to Don Stefano, somewhat responsible for the criminal activities in the city of Buffalo.

In 1954, Sam Pieri was arrested by U.S. Federal Bureau of Narcotics. He, with some 17 other major narcotic violators, was arrested in a conspiracy; and in this instance Pieri was sentenced to 10 years in a Federal institution. Pieri has just recently as last May of this year been released from Federal prison.

We are wondering about Pieri, and we are wondering what he is thinking insofar as a return to power. We are hoping that, of course, no violence will pursue in this particular area, at this time.

Now, at the time Pieri was incarcerated, he was with Randaccio, and he ascended to power in the criminal underworld in the Buffalo area.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Will you go ahead?

Mr. AMICO. Cammillieri is immediate lieutenant that we feel and say because of our criminal intelligence, more or less has influence and authority to control over racketeering in the labor racketeering in the Buffalo area; and Pascal Natarelli. He is more or less an individual in charge of bookmaking in the form of gambling; and Roy Carlisi is a close associate and adviser of Randaccio. Roy Carlisi was in attendance at Apalachin. And Steven Cannarozzo is a newcomer. As the Senator indicated he was an official and employee of the Madison Cab Co. As a matter of fact, a point of interest on Cannarozzo is that he was fired at, I believe, some four or five times by Mr. Delmont, and at the time he knew his assailant, and he failed to cooperate with the police in the investigation, and had made some remark that was overheard by one of the police officers, to one of his associates, that "I know who he is and we will get him in his own way." It was less than a year later that Delmont was found out in the field in the State of California, a victim of gangland murder. Cannarozzo is an up-and-coming youngster and his specialty, we feel, as far as our criminal intelligence information reflects within the realm of gambling again insofar as policy, and so on, are concerned.

He is presently, I believe, he still has one or two cases pending within the gambling sphere. As a matter of fact, possibly without disclosing any police information, I feel that a man like Cannarozzo and some other 30 or 40 arrested in Buffalo not too long ago, as a result of a State crime commission investigation, would have possibly been in jail today had the State been able to use wiretap evidence.

That is the missing link or the insufficient evidence necessary to corroborate this gambling activity at that particular time.

Now, the entire chart depicts 21 individuals. Those I have covered more or less are the hierarchy. The remaining 15, and 2 below that referred to as relatives of the boss, are somewhat in the class of what we refer to as section leaders. They more or less have each one, say, some three or four or five close associates or followers, and they vary in the particular specialties anywhere from arson, gambling, narcotics, and enforcement groups.

Down below we have relatives of the boss, Antonio Magaddino and James LaDuca, who were in attendance at Apalachin and very close to Don Stefano by relation, and close to Randaccio in the crime syndicate in the city of Buffalo.

604 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

A question might be asked: Why do we have 21 and how do I support Mr. Valachi's statement? Again, I said we feel that we have some 75 to 80.

Now, I have mentioned again just the section leaders, and not what we refer to as members or associates, as Mr. Valachi referred to as perhaps soldiers and buttonmen.

Those we have managed to leave off the chart, and we felt it would be just too cumbersome at this time to go into detail in that area.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Are there any questions on this particular point?

Senator JAVITS. I would like to ask this of the witness: Now, this fellow Cannarozzo, when I asked you about Madison Cab, it was directed to him and according to your statement he still works for Madison Cab; is that correct?

Mr. AMICO. That is right.

Senator JAVITS. To this very day?

Mr. AMICO. That is correct.

Senator JAVITS. I have one other question, if I may.

Obviously, these criminals are not going to use telephones if we have more effective wiretapping laws?

Mr. AMICO. May I interject one point here? It is funny, that many times, as Mr. Valachi says, they might refer to it as code, but many times they slip. I know in many instances. I being of Italian heritage, have listened to them talk in Italian, thinking perhaps that this was code, and this itself was a big joke, so they do slip in many instances, and do because of the compelling situation at the time, go ahead and say some key remarks, perhaps, that are picked up and are very helpful in our investigations.

Senator JAVITS. As a matter of fact, they probably even would be more careful about that, if they knew that you had greater authority, but I was coming to the final question that I wanted to ask you, and that is: Do you think that the mere fact that they would be indicted from using the phone as freely as they do now, would put a very considerable crimp in their activity?

Mr. AMICO. I feel if we did have wiretap legislation, it would help us tremendously in the field of law enforcement.

Senator JAVITS. Now, can you tell us one of the main rackets operating in Buffalo now? You have testified to a good many, but let us get it updated. What is this syndicate engaged in now in the way of rackets, do you know?

Mr. AMICO. May I preface my remarks by saying that I feel Buffalo is one of the least crime-ridden cities in the country. My detailed characterization of the individuals does not necessarily mean to cause any alarm. I feel because we are on top of the problem and what has happened in the past, that I am able to talk as I have been.

Again, I might go further in answer to your question and say that at the present time I think so-called as we refer to six for five, shylocking or loan shark business, would be predominantly, perhaps, the most active type of illegitimate activity in the city of Buffalo.

We do have, of course, gambling insofar as horse gambling, that we know of. We make arrests periodically in the gambling area.

That, again, does constitute a major portion of crime in Buffalo insofar as organized crime, and we have some area of narcotics.

Senator JAVITS. Well, of course you are on the border there, which is always a problem.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 605

Mr. AMICO. That is right.

Senator JAVITS. What were the numbers or lottery racket?

Mr. AMICO. We do have some of that. However, it appears at this time, because of strict enforcement, it has been kept down to somewhat of a minimum.

Senator JAVITS. Now, I notice that under Cammillieri, who is one of those you describe, your statement speaks of the fact that he was very active in labor extortion and you say in the past few years Cammillieri headed the Vin James Construction Co., and is reputed to handle labor union affairs for the mob.

We also handled Niagara Falls locals for construction on the power project, which is the Niagara Falls Power, just completed by the power authority, and he has close tie-ins with Hod Carriers Local 210, for a short time he was a third member of the Frontier Lathers, Flashing Construction Co.

Does that still continue and is that one of the rackets pursued?

Mr. AMICO. Frontier Lathers is since extinct. It is a labor racket and it is minimized. He is very close to some of the mob who have direct control, relatives of the mob or business agents and so on.

An interesting thing, and this is of recent activity, is that in order to participate or work in the Hod Carriers Union, it was necessary some 15 years ago to partake of some of their gambling activities, that is those individuals who did some betting while on the job, would be those individuals that would remain on the job for longer periods of time.

In this fashion they were able to build up somewhat of an empire up until, of course, the last few years.

Senator JAVITS. In the last few years that is no longer so?

Mr. AMICO. It is at a very minimum pace.

Senator JAVITS. Now, taking it in total, do you believe that this syndicate still operates as a syndicate in the Buffalo area?

Mr. AMICO. The observations we have made, I would have to answer in the affirmative.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator BREWSTER. Lieutenant, I have noticed in your testimony, and also in the testimony of other law enforcement officers, you have used the phrases, "it is alleged," "we believe," and "it is understood."

Do you believe there is a possibility that reputation of an innocent party has been damaged by your testimony?

Mr. AMICO. I have gone over my preparation in detail and at this time I would have to say I believe that it has not been damaged.

Senator BREWSTER. Every one of the people on this chart has a criminal record?

Mr. AMICO. I would say their criminal records range anywhere from 1, starting with Magaddino and Montana, and Montana is only one as a result of the Apalachin disclosure, to 49 in the instance of 1 individual, 49 arrests. I believe 95 percent of them have what we call or refer to as FBI numbers, and records, generally constituting that they have been charged criminally somewhere throughout the country.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I think that this might assist the Senator and also the subcommittee: Do you have a rundown, generally speaking, of the number of arrests and the type of information?

Mr. AMICO. Yes; and with regard to the names that appear on the chart, which has been made an exhibit, I wish to submit the following information: The total number of arrests for these individuals, and I am referring to 21, is 355, an average of 17 per person. The lowest number of arrests for any individual, as I said before, is 1, and the highest is 49.

In the case of arrests for assault, robbery, grand larceny, burglary, and gambling, the arrests average one per person. As to narcotics they average one arrest for every three persons, and homicide is one arrest for every two persons, and extortion one arrest for every four persons, and possession of burglary tools, one arrest for every four persons.

They have been able to amass a very shocking record, I would say.

Senator BREWSTER. I agree on that now.

Changing the subject, let me develop this for a moment. You referred to Cannarozzo as "this youngster." I notice that he is 42. I also checked the biographies, and I do not see a single person named in their twenties or thirties. What is the significance of this?

Mr. AMICO. That is a very good point. I have in my mind just today sort of a correlation I have worked out, if it is of any significance or of any benefit. I say the oldest individual on this particular chart happens to be Don Stefano Magaddino, at 73, and glancing over at the calculations and figures, I have prepared, I notice that there is some significance in the position they have commensurate with their particular age. However, I refer to Cannarozzo as "this youngster," or "young in age" because he has ascended to the position of lieutenant in the criminal underworld.

I feel again, and maybe I should hesitate to say this, this is not necessarily as more or less an accomplishment on his own. His family, I believe, through his family, they have had some strong ties and they normally take care of their own sons and grandsons and that is one other way. There is a reason for his ascendancy in the position of lieutenant at the comparatively younger age.

Senator BREWSTER. So you would have men in their twenties and thirties, in the other 50 or 60 members of the syndicate in Buffalo.

Mr. AMICO. That is correct, sir. These are men that haven't actually proven themselves to the point where they are worthy of a position on the chart.

Now, we prepared a chart of this nature, and we prepared this some 6 weeks ago, I believe, and I call your attention to Salvatore Rangatore. Our latest information now is that he has established permanent residence in Arizona. Our latest intelligence is that another fellow has moved up in his place, a fellow by the name of Belitiere. There are others that we have left out and some of them are on the verge. They almost earned themselves a position on this chart and maybe 6 months from now the chart insofar as the lower echelon is concerned might be considerably changed.

Senator JAVITS. Would the Senator yield for one other question, if I may?

The importance of Valachi's testimony, of course, is the hierarchy. These names are known, and so on, but the importance is the hierarchy, and the relations of one to the other. Now, what can you tell us about why you place these people in a hierarchy, and why you claim that there is a relationship of one to the other, and that Don Magaddino stands at the top of the heap?

Mr. AMICO. Maybe I can by analogy. Whether this would be effective or not, if I were asked why I know these people have the particular positions, why they are members of this crime cartel, by analogy I might be asked how do you know today you are in the Senate Investigations Committee? How do you know the chairman is Senator McClellan, and how do you know the other Senators are Javits, and so on?

Now, I can tell by the relationship. You people are here, and I didn't see you sworn into office, but I know because of your demeanor, and your positions you hold on this particular table, just your reactions, and so on, and the press coverage is very important in some instances, and as a result of all of this, I feel now I could in my mind properly orient an organization, a particular group.

Any surveillance observation we have made, we see Mr. Magaddino walk around in such a way, with an air of importance. His immediate followers are these gentlemen that are depicted high on the chart. When Mr. Randaccio walks around, we see men like Cammilleri, and Natarelli and Sansanese, and when we observe them in places, probably night clubs and taverns and restaurants, we see the position that they hold on the particular table. That, in addition to information that has been funneled to us, that in addition to making a study of their past criminal records, generally would provide us with this information.

Senator JAVITS. Therefore, when you say that the value of the Valachi testimony is very heavy, it affirms these relationships and the structure of organized crime.

Mr. AMICO. Definitely. If he was accurate in other instances as he was with the Buffalo area, I feel definitely it supports and confirms what we have been discussing here.

Senator JAVITS. And it helps you in law enforcement.

Mr. AMICO. It certainly does, sir.

Senator JAVITS. Now, I have one other thing, and then I will be through. I notice in describing a fellow named Michael Tascarella in these biographies, if we can call them that, you point out that as recently as June 5, 1962, he was caught with $50,000 worth of heroin. I am trying to get some idea of the order of magnitude of these rackets in the Buffalo area.

608 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. AMICO. I have a chart depicting that, Senator, if I could call your attention to that particular chart. Maybe we could properly cover that point at this time.

Mr. O'DONNELL. If we can dispense with that for just a moment we will come right to it. The chart that you have introduced, which is exhibit 65, although—

Senator JAVITS. Would you allow me, in exhibit 65—may we block out that word there?

Mr. O'DONNELL. We certainly will, the category as to ties. Certainly.

Now, on this chart, you have been discussing in detail up to the present time the people in Buffalo that you have on Exhibit No. 64, where their photographs are, and their names are.

Now, on Exhibit No. 65, you have gone into Canada, Youngstown, Ohio, and Niagara Falls. Can you give us any indication as to why you have embraced this larger area?

Mr. AMICO. As I believe I said before, Don Stefano's influence or sphere of influence in the criminal organization or organized crime extends its tentacles out to these various areas.

Because of information we have exchanged with law enforcement agencies in these areas, because of the observations we have made of these individuals in the city of Buffalo, we feel that they belong in the chart as depicted there.

Mr. O'DONNELL. In other words, what you have done is try to show that Stefano Magaddino's empire is much more embrasive than Buffalo, although you haven't gone into any particular detail as to the members that are in that organization.

Mr. AMICO. That is correct.

Mr. O'DONNELL. And I note on the chart itself, which is exhibit No. 64, Magaddino is classified as the boss of the entire western New York area, as well as Ohio Valley area; is that correct?

Mr. AMICO. That is correct.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Now, have you prepared another chart which has not been made an exhibit as yet, but is classified as the narcotics distribution chart, Buffalo area?

Mr. AMICO. Yes, I have.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman, may that be introduced as an exhibit and we will discuss it?

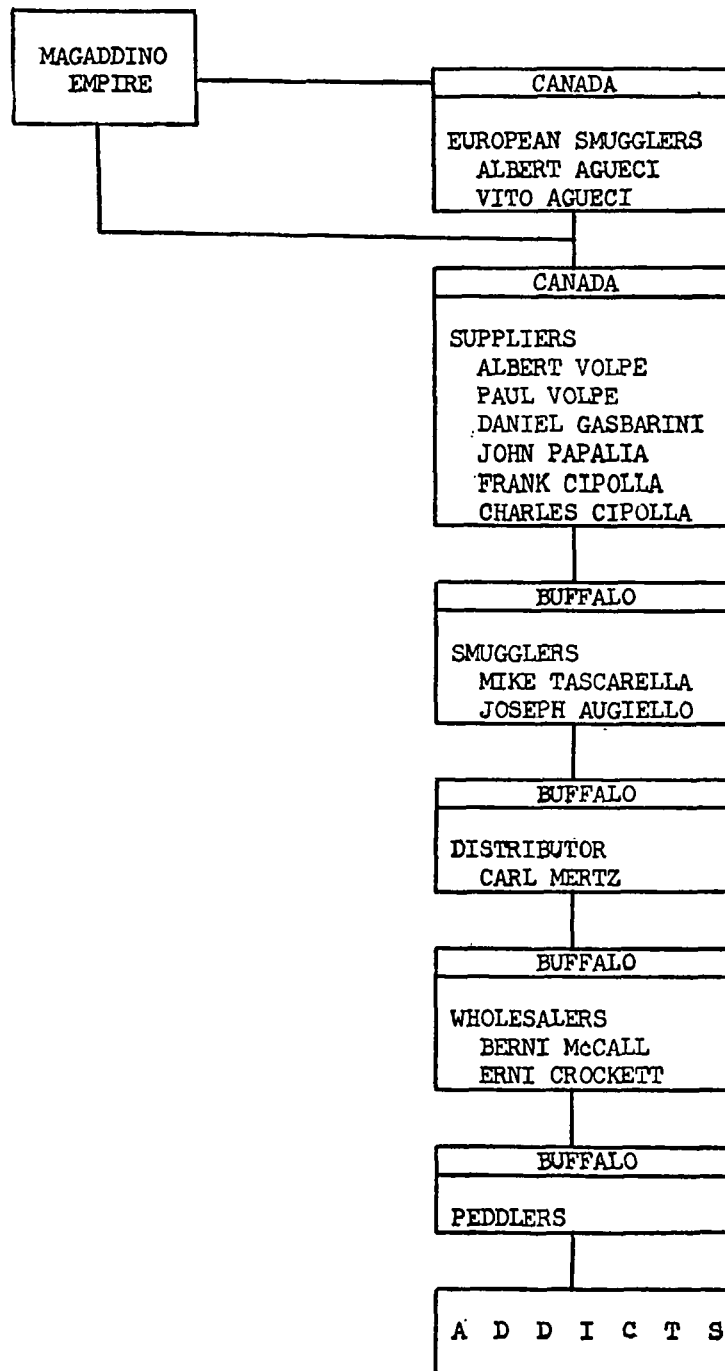

Senator BREWSTER. It will be marked as "Exhibit No. 66."

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 66" for reference and follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 66

NARCOTICS DISTRIBUTION CHART

BUFFALO AREA

BUFFALO POLICE DEPARTMENT, BUFFALO, NEW YORK

610 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. O'DONNELL. What are you attempting to do in this particular chart?

Mr. AMICO. In this particular chart I am attempting to depict one source of narcotics flow in the Buffalo area.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Could you explain how the flow of narcotics works insofar as you have depicted it on the chart?

Mr. AMICO. Yes, sir, I will attempt to explain the chart. I might preface my remarks by saying that all of the narcotics certainly doesn't come from Canada. Much of it comes from New York City, and from other devious means and routes. This particular one we managed with information at our disposal to set up this chart and break it down in the fashion that it is.

It is our information, and good information, that Magaddino's empire and Magaddino himself still has a lot to say with the narcotics flow in the city of Buffalo on a higher level. As a matter of fact, any activity in a higher level in narcotic area, without Magaddino's permission, and acquiescence or blessing, would meet up with sudden disaster, as will be explained.

Albert Agueci and Vito Agueci are some top men in the Canadian area. These two gentlemen attempted to come to the United States and were refused admittance in about 1950. They made their way into Canada and they are citizens at this particular time and set up, because of their experience and because of their connections with the European Continent, a supply of narcotics.

We referred to them as smugglers, smuggling in an international scale from the Continent. At this juncture point, their following connections would be a group, one of any of the following: Albert Volpe, Paul Volpe, brothers, Daniel Gasbarini, John Papalia, and Frank and Charles Cipolla, to mention a few.

Our experience and actual information is that Mike Tascarella, who is depicted on our chart, very well known to us, and Joseph Augiello, who has been in the United States some 8 or 10 years, were couriers or smugglers insofar as narcotics was concerned from Canada to the Buffalo area.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Where would they receive the particular items from, the narcotics?

Mr. AMICO. Their actual pickup of items as shown by an actual arrest would be in Canada. In this instance, it was somewhere near the area of the Gulf of Ontario.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Would this be from the suppliers you have named in Canada?

Mr. AMICO. That is correct. At this particular level, or, incidentally, these two gentlemen were arrested some years ago, and that particular combine was broken up. However, following the chart, after these individuals smuggled the narcotic contraband into the Buffalo area, they had one big distributor that they dealt with, a fellow by the name of Carl Mertz. He, in turn, distributed down to two so-called wholesalers, Berni McCall, now in jail from another investigation, and Ernie Crockett. He is now awaiting trial.

From this level is where the Buffalo police or other city jurisdiction lies. Much of our efforts in law enforcement to suppress narcotics would be in this lower level that I have labeled there as "peddlers" of narcotics in the lower range. We do make investigations, and many times arrests, of a large number of peddlers and addicts.

Now, with the help of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, we are able then to go up a step or two. But very seldom do we reach the top level of Agueci.

Now, an interesting point comes up with this Vito Agueci. I notice that is Albert Agueci, and I notice his name has been brought up before by Mr. Valachi, and this is of interest because we have some intelligence information in our file. It appeared that just prior to his death—

Mr. O'DONNELL. Excuse me, if we may just back it up a moment. Can you tell us what has happened to the Agueci brothers prior to the death of one of them?

Mr. AMICO. They were arrested as a result of some Federal Narcotics Bureau investigation. They were some of the 16, I believe, other defendants who were arrested on a charge of conspiracy, and as a matter of fact, Vito Genovese was in that, and so was Valachi, if my memory doesn't fail me.

Albert Agueci, or Vito Agueci, is still in jail, and Albert Agueci was killed as a result of gangland vengeance.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Do you want to tell us about that killing?

Mr. AMICO. Yes. The information developed by our unit in conferences with other law enforcement units shows that Agueci had obtained the permission of the Magaddino clan or Magaddino himself to engage in narcotics in the Buffalo area. Of course, an agreement of this sort is provided for and part of it would be that Magaddino himself and the empire shall be the recipients of a certain percentage of the so-called profits.

In return for these profits, the don, in this case Magaddino, his side of the agreement is that he will provide some kind of protection from interference from other mobsters, and some type of protection insofar as arrest is concerned to provide for the bail, and provide for possibly spending money, and provide for many other things.

In his instance, our information developed that Magaddino after Agueci was killed, had reneged on his part of the bargain to help Agueci, at least to be bailed from his incarceration. Agueci finally made bail through his wife, and one of the first things he did was to return to Buffalo to vie for vengeance against the old man. I believe the Senators are in possession now of a picture that depicts what a gangland murder looks like. In this instance they sent a message, a very horrifying and shocking message. My report, if I can read from it, shows the following—

Mr. O'DONNELL. That is part of the report that you have?

Mr. AMICO. That is part of the report that I have summarized. On November 23, 1961, the body of Albert G. Agueci, of 21 Armitage Drive, Scarsborough, Canada, was found in a field near Rochester, N.Y. His hands were bound behind his back, and ankles were tied with long cord, and he was strangled. His jaw was broken, half his teeth had been kicked or knocked out. Substantial portions of meaty tissue were removed from the calves of his legs. His body was doused with gasoline, and ignited. His body was mutilated beyond recognition. This was not only to cause his death, of course, but this was to send a message to anyone else who had the temerity or the gall to try to resort to vengeance against one of the dons in the empire.

I feel that it truly depicts a typical gangland murder.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Can you give us any idea or do you have any information concerning it or would it prejudice you, if you told us how the smuggling operations into Canada, into the hands of the Agueci brothers, was accomplished? How did the drug come into the possession of the Agueci brothers, prior to its being distributed?

Mr. AMICO. I believe at this time that I might probably hesitate to answer that. I feel that I would invade the province of the Federal Government who has, more or less, the information at hand.

Mr. O'DONNELL. All right. Mr. Chairman, I have a copy of the investigation and complaint report of the sheriff's office in Monroe County, which was furnished to me by Mr. Amico, and I would like to have it introduced as an exhibit after he has identified it.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, it may be presented to the witness.

(The document was handed to the witness.)

The CHAIRMAN. Do you identify the document that is presented to you?

Mr. AMICO. Yes, sir; I do.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it?

Mr. AMICO. This is a report of the sheriff's office in reference to the Agueci homicide, and also the coroner's report showing the cause of the investigation the coroner made in Monroe County in the State of New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Let that be received as exhibit No. 67.

(Document referred to marked "Exhibit No. 67" for reference and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

Mr. O'DONNELL. Do you have any other exhibits you would like to make with regard to this chart at the present time?

Mr. AMICO. I believe I have substantially covered it unless there is some area that you have questions on.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Are there any questions? I have one other question, and that is all, Lieutenant. Can you give us a very brief synopsis or possibly Giambrone can do it, as to legitimate businesses that are operating up in the Buffalo area that are controlled or in which these individuals on the chart have an interest? Do you have any information?

Mr. AMICO. I might first generally say, of course, as one of the Senators brought out, that Mr. Magaddino is engaged in funeral undertaking business. We see no illegitimacy at this time, other than, of course, he enjoys a virtual monopoly of servicing those individuals that are deceased from the families of individuals from the criminal underworld.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Do you have any information which would indicate that certain bodies, I am talking about gangland victims now, are cremated or anything along that line?

Mr. AMICO. There has been talk concerning that area, but this is purely speculation.

Mr. O'DONNELL. All right, will you continue?

Mr. AMICO. Another area of legitimacy would be in cigarette vending and jukebox operations, that they have been engaged in and recently have terminated. Also, there is some linen supply operations that they have in the city of Buffalo, and also in that area of flashing units and that area whereby a certain Joseph Barbara, Jr., was engaged in at one time.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 613

At this time I might turn over to Sergeant Giambrone some preparation he has on that matter.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Would you come forward, Sergeant, and sit up closer to the microphone if you will?

Mr. GIAMBRONE. On July 4, 1960, we learned that Joseph Barbara, Jr., was in the city of Buffalo. Our information disclosed that his purpose was to set up an outlet for the Tri-State Pre-Hung Door Co. of Endicott, N.Y.

He arranged warehouse facilities in the downtown waterfront section of Buffalo. A small office for this operation was started with Frontier Lathers, Inc., then located on Buffalo's west side.

Frontier Lathers, Inc., was formed on or about January 14, 1960. Its three major stockholders were Fred G. Randaccio, John Cammillieri, and Pascal Natarelli.

Toward the end of 1960, Joseph Barbara left town. Barbara returned to Buffalo about a year and a half later on February 20, 1962. According to the information we received, the purpose of this visit was to invite Stefano Magaddino and Antonio Magaddino, James LeDuca and Charles A. Montana of Niagara Falls, N.Y., and Fred Randaccio, of Buffalo, to his wedding, which was to take place in Detroit. He married Josephine Vitale, daughter of Peter Vitale, in Detroit on March 3, 1962.

This was the last information that we received relevant to Barbara's activities in the Buffalo area. This attempt by Barbara did not succeed and he did not acquire this outlet for reasons unknown to us.

Mr. O'DONNELL. This is an indication of attempts made by them to infiltrate legitimate businesses, am I correct?

Mr. GIAMBRONE. Definitely.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Do you have any information to this: Mr. Amico referred to the linen service and does that have any connection with the barbershops up there?

Mr. AMICO. Not as of late, but investigation discloses, in the past year, that Camellia Linens located in Buffalo, was owned and operated by Magaddino and his immediate relatives. This is a type of business that catered to restaurants, supplying the linens for restaurants and barbershops, and what came to my attention, not in the form of an official complaint but undertones of perhaps extortion in this respect. Many times they would contact these barbers, perhaps some of the members of the gang would get a haircut and perhaps tip them a substantial amount, and then go in a few weeks later and indicate to them that they would like to have their business there, their linen supply business.

These individuals would indicate to them a tendency not to change because they certainly were happy with their linen supply at the particular time. Well, the mere presence of these individuals many times, dressed in the way they were, the demeanor that they showed, would tend to sort of discourage some of these individuals to resist them and to, in effect, acquiesce, and it is said it is better to get their linens than to fight them. Now, you might wonder what is so important, perhaps, with some linen supply. They might, at the outset, even come in and say, "We will supply your linens for maybe a penny or two per linen cheaper," but after the individual has once changed his services or supply, he is then stuck, and this outfit might, and it has been in cases in the past, perhaps not only increase the prices to where they were, but even add to it. This wouldn't be all. In many instances, if there were, for example, 50 pieces of linen that were counted by the barbershop proprietor, and this individual would come in and say you had 100 pieces of linen this time, and he would say I only counted 50, and he would say we counted 100, and because of his presence and because of what he represented, perhaps, the fellow would acquiesce and say, "Well, I guess I had a hundred." This was the means, at that time, whereby I feel they gained moneys in an illegal way.

The same will go for cigarette vending machines and jukeboxes. I had an experience in one instance where they had made a movement; Randaccio and a fellow named Fred McGove really had gone into business in a cigarette-vending machine operation. They had attempted to monopolize the entire predominantly west side of Buffalo. In many instances they did this in a legitimate manner. However there were instances where some were recalcitrant individuals, felt that certainly after some other supplier had been loyal to them they didn't want to change individuals in the middle of the stream. They again came in there in their typical fashion and dressed up in this normal Hollywood style, that you might see in the movies or television, and with their persuasive tones or undertones would sell them the idea that they should change their cigarette-vending services to their own. In one instance, one fellow had the gall, or at least the ability and the guts to resist them, and he came to me, and had asked me what he could do. I said, "Well, you are aware perhaps that this does take guts, and there are going to be threats," and he said, "That is fine." He was willing to go along, and it was only because of insistent intervention by our unit that they gave up trying to change him and to take their machines.

They indicated very persuasively and strongly that he would not open his particular restaurant, that they would break the place down, and he might find his body out in the alley, but here was an individual with the real guts, and with the real temerity, and it wasn't easy. I will explain here it wasn't easy even for me to get out and harrass these individuals with the defense I had at my disposal, it wouldn't be enough for an arrest or conviction. The individual indicated to me, what do I have to do, be found dead before the police can do something?

So this is an indication perhaps of what might happen.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I have no further questions, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other questions?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I have presented to me by the Buffalo Police Department, which I would like to have them identify, and be introduced as exhibits, the criminal arrest records of the individuals on this chart. That is on exhibit No. 64.

(The document was handed to the witness.)

The CHAIRMAN. Can you identify that material?

Mr. AMICO. Yes, sir; they were prepared by me.

The CHAIRMAN. They were prepared by you?

Mr. AMICO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And state what it is?

Mr. AMICO. These are the criminal records of the various individuals that I have mentioned on the chart.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; it may be received as exhibit No. 68.

(Document marked "Exhibit No. 68" for reference, and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 615

Mr. O'DONNELL. Senator, I have been previously sworn and I have received the FBI criminal records with regard to the individuals on chart 64, and I would like to have this introduced as an exhibit for reference.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be received as exhibit No. 69.

(Documents referred to marked "Exhibit No. 69" for reference, and may be found in the files of the subcommittee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

The Chair then wishes to make a brief statement, and an announcement.

With the adjournment of this session today, the subcommittee concludes this portion of the series of hearings in which we are studying the operation of organized or syndicated crime. We are hindered in carrying out our original schedule due to a request by the Treasury Department not to proceed at the present with our planned study of the narcotics racket. To do so, we are advised, might jeopardize pending criminal prosecutions in cases that are now ready for trial in the State of New York, cases in which some 20 defendants are charged with conspiracy to violate the narcotics laws and possibly other offenses.

We will, therefore, defer the study of the illicit narcotics traffic until after that trial has been concluded.

These hearings, I think, have produced a more detailed insight into organized crime than has been presented or that was available to us heretofore. For the first time a member of the secret underworld government, Cosa Nostra, testified under oath describing the operations of that criminal organization, and the misguided and dedicated loyalty of its members.

By the strenuous efforts of law enforcement agencies, Joseph Valachi's testimony has been corroborated in many important details, even to the extent of identifying a large number of murderers and perpetrators of other crimes. The corroboration furnished by law enforcement officers makes Valachi's testimony more credible and important.

The shocking narratives that we have heard here during these days of testimony generates, I think, an immediate sense of urgency. The conditions depicted here cannot be shrugged off. These thousands of skilled and confirmed professional criminals drain the strength of this Nation, both morally and economically. These conditions are not improving; they are getting worse and will continue to get worse until adequate steps are taken to combat and contain this national menace.

A few years ago, in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York, the Honorable Irving R. Kaufman, who is now a member of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, imposed a sentence on some of the same criminals that we have been discussing during these hearings, persons who were present at the Apalachin meeting. At that time Judge Kaufman said, and I quote:

We are not dealing here with unsophisticated, unintelligent defendants who have drifted almost accidentally into criminal activity and are bewildered by the operation of the criminal law. For the most part, we are dealing with sophisticated, hardened, intelligent defendants who have knowingly refused to live by the rules of an ordered society for most of their lives.

He further said, and I quote:

These defendants have defied law and order for years. They have worn two faces. They have preyed on legitimate businesses and businessmen, and on other decent citizens as well as on labor unions. They have even sought to corrupt and infiltrate the political mainstream of our country.

They are devoid of conscience and pose a serious threat to this Nation's moral, social, and economic fibre.

These words of Judge Kaufman are as true today as they were when he said them.

This subcommittee must now study the record of this series of hearings to see what action it should recommend to the Congress. We should determine whether law enforcement needs new and additional weapons in its arsenal to combat this entrenched, professional, criminal army. We must decide what new laws are necessary to protect our free society from the parasites we have heard described in these hearings.

I wish to express the thanks of the subcommittee to all law enforcement officers who have appeared here as witnesses and who have given valuable assistance to the committee. A number of officers of different agencies, of law enforcement, both State and municipal, as well as Federal, have helped the committee and worked with the staff tirelessly and conscientiously and devotedly to the end that we might find some solution, at least a partial solution, to this very grave problem with which we are confronted.

We are also pleased that one Joe Valachi, a member of the mob, and a convicted criminal, has testified and made a valuable contribution to the investigation and study this committee is making. Whatever his past, and it is certainly black and forbidding, his appearance and the evidence he has given is definitely, in my judgment, a public service.

To thank individually everyone, however, who has contributed to these hearings would be impossible. There are some who have been extremely helpful, as I have indicated. In fact, there are many. I wish to name some of them for the record, and I hope in doing so that I am not omitting the names of too many who rightfully should be included. I do say it is impossible in the course of a long hearing and a complicated hearing sometimes, such as this is, when we are trying to find out the unknown and trying to have to dig and delve into every part we can to find out what the facts are—it is not possible for the Chair to always know all of the people who have cooperated and helped so much, but I will direct that the list of witnesses attached to this statement be inserted in the record at this point.

Hon. Robert F. Kennedy, Attorney General of the United States.
Police Commissioner Michael J. Murphy and Assistant Police Commissioner Leonard Relsman, New York, N.Y.

Sgt. Ralph Salerno, supervisor of detectives, central investigation bureau, intelligence unit, New York City Police Department.

Arthur Sage, inspector, criminal investigation bureau, Detroit Police Department. Earl C. Miller, commander of criminal intelligence bureau, Detroit Police Department; and William J. DePugh, sergeant, Detroit Police Department. O. W. Wilson, superintendent of police, and Capt. William J. Duffy, director of intelligence division, Chicago Police Department, Chicago, Ill. Neil G. Brown, chief of police, city of Tampa, Fla.; and Jack de la Llane, director of the criminal intelligence unit. James M. Russ, county solicitor, county of Orange, State of Florida. Col. Walter E. Stone, superintendent of Rhode Island State Police, and Lt. Joseph J. McCauley, and Cpl. James Mullen. Edmund L. McNamara, police commissioner, city of Boston, Mass.; and John T. Howland, chief, bureau of inspectional services, Boston Police Department. William A. Schneider, commissioner of police, Buffalo, N.Y.; Lt. Michael A. Amico, assistant chief of detectives; Detective Sergeant Samuel N. Giambrone; and Robert Casey, deputy corporation counsel, city of Buffalo. Bureau of Narcotics: George H. Gaffney, assistant to the Commissioner; John R. Enright, Assistant Deputy Commissioner; Martin F. Pera, narcotics agent; Eugene Marshall, narcotics agent; and Armando J. Muglia, narcotics agent. General Accounting Office: Maurice Frame and Joseph Shevlin. Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations: Jerome S. Adlerman, Alphonse F. Calabrese, LaVern J. Duffy, Paul E. Kamerick, Arthur G. Kaplan, Philip W. Morgan, Donald F. O'Donnell, and Harold Ranstad. Department of Justice: James McShane, Chief Marshal. New York Police Department: Joseph Corrigan, Cyril Jordan, and Thomas O'Brien.

I wish now to thank you gentlemen who have appeared here this morning, and I believe I can say to you that as a result of these hearings, I believe there is a consciousness now on the part of the Congress, more so, and on the part of the public, that something has to be done. I don't know whether the recommendations we have received so far with respect to legislation are the right answer or the whole answer, but I don't think Congress can rest, nor should the public be complacent about this thing until we have undertaken to give to the law enforcement agencies of this country of ours every weapon that we can properly give to them within the framework of the Constitution.

I hope that we will get down to business here in the Congress and try to come forth with new laws that are consistent with our principles and fundamentals of liberty and justice to the end that we may more effectively combat this menace in the future than we have been able to do in the past.

I yield to either of my colleagues.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to say very briefly that when we started the Valachi hearings, I had some reservations as to their value, and as to whether we ought to engage in them at all.

I will say to the Chair that I think that they have proved eminently worthwhile, that they have demonstrated what I think was perhaps splendidly summed up by Lieutenant Amico himself:

The relationship of these syndicates one to the other, these criminal syndicates, and of the individual mobsters, one to the other, showing a hierarchy of crime which should be a revelation to the American people, especially as it makes it choate and immediate, and apparent, and the fact that we have updated this situation today, the last crime hearings having been about 10 years ago.

It is extremely important, and, Mr. Chairman, I do think that we have had from Valachi important testimony which brings the information which the police organizations have together and confirms it for them, and they so testified, and also gives us new light and new indications of the path in which legislation is required.

So I think that the Chair has every reason to feel gratified that the hearings have been worthwhile, constructive, and will be very helpful, and that the public, also, will have been enlightened upon this subject so that it may give support to legislation and support to law-enforcement officials whose lot is a very, very trying one, dealing with these vicious characters.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I believe, as a lawyer and as a practicing law enforcement officer myself, it is entirely possible to do what needs to be done and to protect the innocent or those who are charged with every protection which the Constitution proposes. I mean, without vitiating at the same time what we have to do to keep up with these criminal syndicates, it is very clear, as happens in any struggle, the criminals are fully alert to every opening presented by the enforcement officials, and take advantage of it. It is a constant struggle as to which one is ahead at any given moment, and, therefore, so critically important to be updated in this very dramatic and yet very effective way, the whole situation.

Speaking personally, Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that the Chair could not have been more gracious, and more cooperative, and more effective in the personal handling of these hearings, in giving every member a chance to have his say, and to question the witnesses, and at the same time keeping them within reasonable compass.

I think this is a signal achievement, quite typical of the Chair, whose reputation in the Senate is very high, and should be stated certainly by a member of the opposition. I thank the Chair for this opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. I thank my distinguished colleague and member of the committee.

I may say that the Chair regards this investigative work not as a responsibility of the Democratic majority. It is the responsibility and duty that devolves upon all of us who happen to draw this assignment, and the Chair, to whatever extent in this hearing or any other that we have conducted has been successful, constructive, or well ordered and handled, it has been due primarily to the cooperation and the assistance that has been given to him by the fine and excellent members and colleagues who serve on the committee with him. The Chair can't do much in the committee if he doesn't have the cooperation of his colleagues. He can preside and do those things, but you get results and a committee operates effectively when there is cooperation and when we are all dedicated to a common purpose for our country.

I have been very fortunate, this Chair has, in having with him on committees of which I have chaired in this regard, people who have forgotten about their partisan interests and devoted themselves solely to serving their country and to getting results.

Senator JAVITS. May I say that Senator Curtis and Senator Mundt don't happen to be here today, and Senator Mundt for reasons of health, and Senator Curtis for urgent other business and I am sure from my conversations with them that they would feel just as I did about these hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Brewster, did you wish to make any comment?

Senator BREWSTER. Briefly, Mr. Chairman, these hearings have certainly developed the existence of a national crime syndicate far more reaching than certainly I had realized. I believe now that both the Congress and the country can more effectively combat this type of criminal activity.

I would like to add my congratulations to those of the Senator from New York, to our chairman for realizing the need for hearings such as these, and for the intelligent and fair manner in which they have proceeded. I think it is also wise to comment that without the assistance of the Attorney General of the United States and the many agencies under his control, and also the great assistance of our State and city law enforcement agencies that have helped and assisted in many, many ways, it would have been impossible to ever conduct these hearings so successfully.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I inadvertently failed to say—I think I submitted the members of the staff who have worked on this particular hearing, and they are in the list of names I submitted—but another indispensable factor to the successful work of a committee is a competent and efficient and dedicated staff. We have that, and I don't mention their names again, but that makes it also possible to bring to the attention of the Congress, of the committee, and of the country many things that we didn't know about, that we hadn't thought were of such importance until we got all of the details and the staff works out the details for us.

I might say this about these hearings: It was indicated by some Senators, as Senator Javits has indicated, and Senator Brewster, that there might have been some doubt in the beginning about the propriety or advisability of holding these hearings. I say to you frankly, the Chair shared some doubt about it. But that is pretty much like you have a crime which has been committed and you know somebody has committed it, and you have some evidence, and you go before the grand jury, and you can't always get an indictment, but you probably would be derelict in your duty if you didn't undertake to develop the facts and find out.

So it isn't every time a committee starts an investigation, or an inquiry into some aspect of its mandate, to inquire into, it isn't always that it is going to turn out to be a dramatic exposé, or revelation, but we do have to go into them and we try not to waste time. We try to be reasonably certain that there is something there and a duty for us to perform by conducting such hearings as we have here.

Well, again, my thanks to everyone, and the committee will stand in recess subject to call.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of recess: Senators McClellan, Brewster, and Javits.)

(Whereupon, at 12:30 p.m., the subcommittee recessed, to reconvene at the call of the Chair.)

(Information requested on p. 537 is as follows:)

Over the last several days, I have had an opportunity to read the newspaper items as well as a copy of the official record covering certain testimony of Col. Walter E. Stone, superintendent of Rhode Island State Police, before the U.S. Senate Investigating Committee in Washington and his subsequent partial clarification thereof, as well as other newspaper statements made by others relative to Colonel Stone's testimony.

As president and treasurer of Gilbane Building Co., I deem it necessary to make a public reply to Colonel Stone and to correct the record of his testimony before the Senate subcommittee relative to our company's employment of a certain shop steward of the Laborers Union, Local 271 of Providence.

Gilbane Building Co. is and has been for many years constantly hiring laborers in the normal course of business at the jobsite for our numerous construction projects and making assignments where required. When and if labor problems develop it is customary for our company officials in charge of labor relations to discuss these various problems with the respective business agents of the several labor unions, most of whom we have international agreements with and consequently we confer with the international representatives. Local shop stewards are appointed by the respective unions to handle the ordinary day-to-day union activities. Gilbane Building Co. has no jurisdiction or authority over the appointment or designation of these shop stewards who are the spokesmen for labor at the particular building project. During the time the individual referred to by Colonel Stone was employed at one of our projects, there were no labor problems. I would also point out that this individual has also worked for other responsible construction companies in the area.

Our company officials have no detailed knowledge of the general reputation of the many laborers on our payroll. However, in this particular instance, I was visited at my office some time in midsummer of 1963 by State police representatives of Colonel Stone who informed me that they had information that illegal bookmaking activity was being conducted at one of our building projects. They further advised that a drive was being conducted throughout the State on illegal bookmaking activity and our company was being requested to cooperate in this effort. The State police representatives inspected our payroll records and identified the name of one of our project employees as a suspected bookmaker. I immediately offered to make a company investigation of this matter and if found true, would direct his immediate discharge, but was specifically requested by the State police representatives to let them handle the investigation with our company's cooperation. I was further requested not to reveal this proposed confidential investigation to any other officer or employee of our company. The State police conducted their investigation over a period of several weeks and nothing unusual was developed relative to the suspect or any other employee. On September 16, 1963, the suspected employee voluntarily terminated his employment with our company, approximately a month before Colonel Stone's statement. Knowing that our cooperation was solicited and willingly given, I was indeed disappointed that Colonel Stone did not make a full disclosure of the incident.

I had been informed by the State police that many large employers were being similarly contacted and that cooperation from all was being given in an effort to eliminate bookie activity in the State of Rhode Island, in which I wholeheartedly concur. Gilbane Building Co. joined in this effort but unfortunately its cooperation has not been recognized or confirmed by Colonel Stone in his public statements.

No one of the principal officers or owners of Gilbane Building Co. has ever met or had any contact, personal or indirect, with the men referred to by Colonel Stone until the former employee reapplied for work at this office on October 21, 1963, nor have they had any contact or experience with any other officials of the character Colonel Stone describes in the conduct of labor relations of the Gilbane Building Co., Colonel Stone's police information is entirely damaging in this respect.

Gilbane Building Co. has been in the building business for some 90 years and is a solely owned Gilbane family corporation. Over the years, we have enjoyed the benefit of the efforts of many hundreds of loyal and efficient employees. We have contracted with many of the Nation's finest companies, large and small, as well as performing major building projects for educational institutions, hospitals, U.S. Navy, U.S. Army, and U.S. Air Force. During World War II we were one of the very few contractors in the United States to receive the coveted Army and Navy "E." We presently have underway numerous multimillion-dollar projects throughout the country. Many other large projects are now under negotiation.

I would like to state that at no time, to my knowledge, during the long history of our company has any outside influence ever been brought to bear to secure labor harmony at any of our company projects. All our labor problems, discussions, and negotiations are conducted directly between the respective business agents of the union or the international representatives involved and our company officials in charge of labor relations.

Because of our widespread activity and because we value our business integrity and reputation, we are bringing this statement to the attention of our U.S. Senator, John O. Pastore, and Senator Thomas McIntyre of New Hampshire, with the request that they arrange to have this statement inserted in the record of the Senate Investigating Subcommittee to correct the incomplete and inaccurate testimony of Colonel Stone as it relates to the Gilbane Building Co. and criminal element interference or influence with normal company labor relations.

SUPPLEMENTARY AFFIDAVIT

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
County of Providence.

I, Thomas F. Gilbane, being duly sworn, depose and say that I am president and treasurer of Gilbane Building Co., a Rhode Island corporation; that in connection with my affidavit submitted with cover letter of October 22, 1963, to the U.S. Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations the within supplementary affidavit is submitted by request; that a check of our company records indicates that Stephen Broccoli, a laborer, was employed by our company at the Providence automated post office project, Providence, R.I., for the period commencing March 16, 1959, to August 23, 1960, and at the Pawtucket, R.I. housing project commencing November 8, 1962, to September 16, 1963; that a search of our records indicates he did no work for our company in the years 1958 and 1961; that your affiant had no personal knowledge that employee, Broccoli, was a shop steward although the on-site company personnel had knowledge of this fact; that neither your affiant nor any other responsible company official had knowledge of any criminal record of employee, Broccoli; that the delay in submitting this affidavit was occasioned by the considerable research required in checking all company personnel records.

THOMAS F. GILBANE,

President and Treasurer, Gilbane Building Co.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 3d day of December 1963.

WILLIAM F. MEAGHER, Notary Public.

My commission expires June 30, 1966.

AFFIDAVIT

I, Walter E. Stone, colonel and superintendent of the Rhode Island State Police, being sworn on solemn oath depose and say that my testimony before the Senate investigating subcommittee relating to the statement concerning the Gilbane Building Co., of Providence, R.I., which said testimony was given under oath and caused a statement to be issued by Mr. Thomas F. Gilbane, president of the Gilbane Building Co., is a fact and I stand on that said testimony.

My said testimony is based on the following facts hereby listed:

I would like to give a criminal summary of Stephen Broccoli, date of birth, July 26, 1914, who resides at 70 Yellowstone Avenue, Warwick, R.I., to the honorable committee.

Stephen Broccoli, a convicted gunman, has a record of criminal arrests that extend from Providence to California, for the crimes of violation of the gambling laws, armed robbery, unlawful flight to avoid prosecution, resisting arrest, and violation of a deferred sentence along with other detentions. These criminal arrests are recorded from 1931 to 1952. Stephen Broccoli's Federal Bureau of Investigation No. is 1268606. Stephen Broccoli's Rhode Island State Police Nos. are 2852, 3263, 3858, 6352, 8237, 8823, 9880, and 13542.

The criminal record of Stephen Broccoli is attached hereto and made a part hereof.

Stephen Broccoli had been employed by the Gilbane Building Co., assigned by the Laborers Union of America, Local No. 271, Providence, R.I. It is the understanding of the Rhode Island State Police that the duties of Stephen Broccoli, shop steward, working on a Gilbane Building Co. project, until his termination of employment, were to act as spokesman for labor at a particular building project, handling the complaints of fellow employees, and refer these complaints to his union.

The very presence of this man with his long criminal background would instill fear into any legitimate employee, with a reasonable complaint, the fear of bodily harm.

It is a fact that Broccoli did work for the Gilbane Building Co. and it is a fact that he is a convicted felon and it is a fact that Broccoli is associating with known criminals.

WALTER E. STONE.

TUESDAY, JULY 28, 1964

U.S. SENATE,
OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
Washington, D.C.

The subcommittee met at 10:40 a.m. in room 3302, New Senate Office Building, pursuant to Senate Resolution 278, agreed to February 10, 1964, Senator John L. McClellan (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Members of the subcommittee present: Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat, Arkansas; Senator Daniel B. Brewster, Democrat, Maryland; Senator Karl E. Mundt, Republican, South Dakota; Senator Carl T. Curtis, Republican, Nebraska; Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, New York.

Also present: Jerome S. Adlerman, general counsel; Paul E. Kamerrick, assistant counsel; LaVern J. Duffy, assistant counsel; Philip W. Morgan, chief counsel to the minority; Eugene J. Marshall, Bureau of Narcotics; Ruth Y. Watt, chief clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will come to order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of convening: Senators McClellan, Mundt, and Curtis.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will make a brief opening statement.

This subcommittee now resumes hearings which were suspended in October 1963. As originally outlined, we expected first to have testimony describing major criminal organizations and then to hear testimony concerning a specific criminal field, that is, illicit traffic in narcotics, in which these organizations function.

In hearings last fall, we learned about criminal organizations from the testimony of law enforcement officials and, for the first time, from the testimony of a former member of the secret criminal society, the Mafia, or what some term the "Cosa Nostra." However, before we were able to examine the operations of this and other organizations in the field of illicit traffic in narcotics, we were informed by the Department of Justice, by the Bureau of Narcotics, and by a Federal judge that for us to proceed further at that time with the hearings we had scheduled relating to the narcotics traffic might prejudice the outcome of a trial that was then in process in New York City in which a number of defendants were charged with conspiracy to violate the narcotics laws. That trial has since been concluded. The substantial number of convictions obtained in that trial—I believe there were 11 convicted—would seem to underscore the wisdom of our having postponed further hearings until this time. We now think that we are ready to proceed.

Now, whether we can keep on schedule as it has been arranged, I am not sure. We are in the closing days, we think the closing days, of a session of Congress, and the work and pressure of other duties may very well make it necessary for us to rearrange the schedule as it is now presented.

The hearings conducted last fall provided a more detailed insight into the functioning of organized crime than has heretofore been available to the subcommittee. For the first time, a former member of the underworld government, Cosa Nostra, described the operation and scope of that criminal organization and the perverted loyalty of its members.

The testimony of Joseph Valachi does not stand alone, many important segments of his testimony have been corroborated by the meticulous efforts of law enforcement agencies. The force of logic compels the conclusion that the great body of his evidence is accurate. No one of maturity and vision can escape concern for the lawlessness, the murders, the degradation, and the threat to our society that was exposed in the testimony given by Valachi. The weakening of this Nation, both morally and economically, by this army of confirmed professional criminals, can hardly be calculated with accuracy but it undoubtedly constitutes a major threat to our economic stability and internal security.

Unless this organized lawlessness is dealt with effectively, it will surely become stronger and more firmly entrenched and thus the menace and danger to our society will be further augmented and increased. In certain areas it seems this may have already occurred.

The subcommittee will now examine into how the criminal elements function in the field of narcotics. The purpose in making this examination is to determine what action, if any, the subcommittee should recommend be taken by the Congress. We shall try to decide whether the conditions which now exist require that law enforcement agencies be provided with new weapons and instruments of enforcement. If our society is to remain free, we must decide what measures are appropriate to meet this menace and how this criminal army can be defeated without infringing on the legitimate rights and privileges of law-abiding citizens.

In making this study, we propose to start on the hillsides and remote areas of Asia and Asia Minor, where the poppies are grown. We will show the processes employed to change the opium poppies to heroin which is the form in which it is ultimately used by the addict. We will follow it through clandestine laboratories in Europe, through the smuggling processes, to the point where it is ultimately sold on the streets today at grossly inflated prices. We intend to examine each segment of the depraved hoodlum network by which narcotics are delivered to the unfortunate addict in our country.

Finally, having studied the criminal organizations in operation, we expect to hear testimony from persons knowledgeable in the field of narcotics concerning the treatment and rehabilitation of addicts. It is reported that there are 60,000 narcotic addicts in this country. It is clear that measures which have been taken up to this time have not eliminated the problem. It is our intention to study the conditions existing at the present time, to assess the effectiveness of existing deterrents and to endeavor to learn whether recent experience dictates some change in the handling of the people who are involved in this illicit narcotics business.

During the course of our hearings last October into the operations of the underworld and particularly the so-called Cosa Nostra, certain testimony relating to the illicit traffic in narcotics was taken in executive session to avoid the possibility of prejudice in the outcome of prosecution pending at that time before the Federal court in the city of New York.

This testimony was given by Mr. Joseph Valachi and dealt with the subject of narcotics and particularly with the financing of the purchase of narcotic drugs by himself and other members of the Mafia.

The criminal cases pending at that time have since been concluded and 11 defendants were convicted. The subcommittee, therefore, is now able to make this testimony a part of the public record and the reporter is directed to insert the pertinent portion of the transcript into the record, at this point.

(The testimony referred to follows:)

(On October 29, 1963, Mr. Joseph Valachi testified in executive session before the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations on organized crime and illicit traffic in narcotics. A part of this testimony was made public by the members of the subcommittee on July 28, 1964, and follows below:)

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1963

U.S. SENATE,
OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
Washington, D.C.

The subcommittee met at 10:20 a.m., in room 3302, Senate Office Building, pursuant to Senate Resolution 17, agreed to March 14, 1963, Senator John L. McClellan (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat, Arkansas; Senator Henry M. Jackson, Democrat, Washington; Senator Thomas J. McIntyre, Democrat, New Hampshire; Senator Daniel B. Brewster, Democrat, Maryland; and Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, New York.

Also present: Jerome S. Adlerman, general counsel; Donald F. O'Donnell, chief counsel; Paul B. Kaminerick, assistant counsel; Lavern J. Duffy, assistant counsel; Ruth Y. Watt, chief clerk; James J. P. McShane, chief U.S. Marshal; Eugene J. Marshall, Bureau of Narcotics; and Ralph Salerno, New York City Police Department.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Coming to the last phase of your testimony, I would like to go now to this different phase, and that is the discussion of narcotics as far as Mr. Valachi can help us.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to emphasize that this is important, because we need this information and we will go into the narcotics traffic as a full-fledged investigation at the conclusion of your testimony, and I hope you will be as helpful as you can, because that is one of the prime targets of our investigation of this series of hearings.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Valachi, you have been involved in the traffic in narcotics, among other rackets that you were in, like numbers games, and shylocking and so forth. One of the things you were in while you were a member of Cosa Nostra was narcotics; is that right?

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH VALACHI—Resumed

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; I would say in my first case——

Mr. ADLERMAN. When did you first get into the narcotics field, approximately?

Mr. VALACHI. I had one deal in 1952, Mr. Adlerman.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That was 1952?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 631

Mr. ADLERMAN. And could you tell us a little bit about how you got into it, and how you got involved, and so on?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, Sally Shillitani came to me and asked me if I could get some loan. I think it amounted to about $8,000 or $9,000. He said I would make about $5,000 profit in about a month.

I said "Sally, I ain't got the money, but I can get the money," and in other words, I could borrow the money. And I got the money for him in a couple of days, and I borrowed some from one guy, and some from another one, and I gave Sally Shields the money. Well, Sally Shields, it seemed that he wasn't paying me, and a month passed, and another month passed, and he was always telling me stories. Finally, I got into the details with him as to what he was doing, and I suspected that Sally wasn't telling me the truth. So finally I suggested that whenever he had to go to France or anything like that, I had a good man for him. Well, he thought it was a good idea, and I recommended Pat Pagano.

In the meantime, I told Pat Pagano that when you do go to France, and you meet these people, whoever they are, get along with them, you know. To make them like you, because I don't think that this guy is telling me the truth, and I had then introduced him to Sally Shields. Well, finally he did send Pat Pagano, and I don't remember who else went with Pat Pagano to France.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Where did they go in France?

Mr. VALACHI. Is there a Le Havre or something like that? When Pat came back he explained to me that he met a Dominick, a millionaire.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He met a Dominick?

Mr. VALACHI. That is the first name.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know his last name?

Mr. VALACHI. The way I understand, he was known, he says he was, because he died, and he was known throughout that country or that town as Dominick and everybody knew him, and in fact he was the richest man in town. That is the way Pat explained it to me. He also met the wife, you see. Dominick had told him that his wife was expected in America in a few months and that she would be in touch with him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Why was she coming to America?

Mr. VALACHI. She was coming to America because she was pregnant and they wanted the baby to be born in America.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They were, prior to that time, American citizens?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, I understand that Dominick originally came from America, or something like that. And Sally explained to me that Sally Shields was far behind with this Dominick in money transactions, or whatever they were doing in the narcotics. A few months went by when Pat got in touch with me that he had gotten a telephone call from Dominick's wife, and he was going to meet her. He went to meet her at some hotel, and I don't know what hotel, it was downtown someplace, and when he finally came back to me, he told me she wanted $8,000, which I think it remained that way, when Pat left, in case she needs some money to give it to her. That is what I was looking for. When Pat came over, and told me that she wants $8,000. So I got that loan for salary at that time and I don't know where else to go, and I didn't want to go any deeper so I went to Tony Bender and I went to his house in Jersey, even though there was a law in 1948, I figured I would take a chance and talk to Tony. So I went to see Tony.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You say even though there was a law—what law are you referring to?

Mr. VALACHI. Narcotics.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The Cosa Nostra rule of no involvement in narcotics?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; this is 1952, and that law was in effect in 1948. That is why I mentioned it. So I spoke to Tony, and I explained to him that I had some proposition, and I was a little coy with him in testing him out, and he seemed to be interested. So he said that he would give me the $8,000 and I said give me about $1,000 for expenses, which Pat had borrowed, and I forgot to mention that, and when he went there the first time. So he gave me $8,000 and I gave it to Pat, and—

Mr. ADLERMAN. Where did you get the $8,000?

Mr. VALACHI. From Tony Bender, and I didn't get it that same day, and I got it about the next day. And I gave it to Pat, and Pat brought it to Dominick's wife.

Now, a few days went by when Pat came up to me and he said that he was seeing Dominick's wife practically every night, even though I forgot to mention this in the statement. I am just thinking about it as I am talking, and he said she seems to like me, Pat is telling me. And I said "Pat, do me a favor, don't fool around with the man's wife and do what you have got to do and stay to business." And he said "She is getting bold," and I said, "Avoid her."

I didn't mention that before. But as I was talking I just thought about it.

In the meantime, not long after that, there was a boat came in with 15 kilos, and I wouldn't remember how long it was, and it might have been 4 weeks.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You had made the arrangements to loan him the $8,000 to give to Dominick's wife, and had you made any arrangement of how many kilos they were to bring in?

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't know.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You left it to Pagano?

Mr. VALACHI. I left it to whatever Dominick would do, would say 15 kilos to Dominick. It is a small shipment, Mr. Adlerman. The way I understand he was a big dealer. That would be a small shipment.

Mr. ADLERMAN. It would be considered a small shipment by Dominick?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; and the way I understand, he shipped 50 or 100.

Mr. ADLERMAN. When you gave him the $8,000, you knew you were going to get it back in narcotics?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes. I didn't know whether it was 15 or 10 or 35, and I didn't know what, but the way I said before, that Dominick was a millionaire. He seemed to have liked Pat.

When I spoke to Tony, the first time, I had told him that it would be a 50-percent basis, with Tony, and I told him that. Well, he nudged, you know.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 633

Mr. ADLERMAN. What boat did this come in on, do you know?

Mr. VALACHI. I never mentioned the boat, but I am going to tell you, I am pretty sure it was the United States, but don't hold me to it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How did they get it off the boat?

Mr. VALACHI. I would want to explain it. By this time Sally Shields got himself arrested, at this time, and by the time the narcotics arrived.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was he arrested for?

Mr. VALACHI. He was arrested for counterfeiting.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Counterfeiting?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, and he got 15 years on that. What I want to explain to you is in the time we were waiting for this narcotics to come in, it might have been 4 weeks or 6 weeks, I don't remember, but Sally Shields was arrested with 25 others, and most of them Frenchmen. These were the ones that Sally, there was a LaFite, if you remember, and Joe Aseno, and there were about 25 of them.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You say Sally Shields was arrested with this group, most of whom were Frenchmen?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; and a couple of women.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, you say Sally Shields was arrested on a charge of counterfeiting, with the other group of French people. What happened after that?

Mr. VALACHI. I was glad that I had sent Pat there, especially now with Sally Shields arrested. The shipment came in, and Tony made Patty Moccio, they handled everything. They got it off the boat when it did come, and it cost $1,000 a kilo to get it off the boat.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You say, Moccio, Pasquale Moccio—who was he?

Mr. VALACHI. He is one of us, one of the members.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who put him into the deal?

Mr. VALACHI. I don't think he was a member at that time yet.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Who put him in the deal?

Mr. VALACHI. Tony Bender.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, you passed the information on to Tony Bender, that you got from Dominick's wife, that the shipment was in?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. From there Tony Bender arranged with Pasquale Moccio to get it off the boat?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir; and Pat Pagano helped him, and they got it off the boat, and I remember, because $1,000 a kilo.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This is a kilo of heroin?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, you know what a kilo is.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Two and a half pounds of heroin?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir. Well, that cost $15,000. The next thing, Pat Moccio was in charge of everything.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Where did they deliver it? Do you know?

Mr. VALACHI. I wouldn't know. Pat Moccio took over, and I don't know where Patty had his place.

Senator JACKSON. How did they get it off the boat?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, through the seamen. I wouldn't know much about it, but the seamen got it off the boat.

Senator JACKSON. More than one seaman?

634 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. In this particular case, I think it is one, and it could be more than one.

Senator JACKSON. He secreted it on his person?

Mr. VALACHI. This same seaman I am referring to testified against Pagano, and Pagano got 5 years.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In another case.

Mr. VALACHI. It was all mixed up, and in fact I got 5 years in the same case.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But not in this case?

Mr. VALACHI. Not in this case, no. It was all mixed up affair.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In this case, nobody had ever been arrested?

Mr. VALACHI. Nobody was ever arrested. I want to answer the Senator. The seaman, Senator, gets this $1,000 a kilo. If he has anybody else that helps him, he will take care of that from his $1,000 a kilo, which comes out of the $15,000.

The CHAIRMAN. It is $1,000 to get it off the boat, that is extra?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, per kilo.

The CHAIRMAN. That is to get it off the boat?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What does it cost besides that?

Mr. VALACHI. In France, I think at that time in France it was $2,500, Senator.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You don't know who they turned it over to?

Mr. VALACHI. No, he distributed it.

The CHAIRMAN. How were you paid off?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, now, Tony sent for me about a few weeks after, and he went on to tell me that how did I want it, or I will explain that. He went on to tell me about Vito Genovese, Sandino, and Vinnie Mauro and John the Bug, and he made all of these partners.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is Tony Bender, you mean?

Mr. VALACHI. Tony Bender, yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. He had a discussion with you and told you that you had a number of partners that you didn't know about before, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Vito and Tony Bender, myself, Pasquale Pagano, Sandino, John Stoppelli, and Pasquale Moccio, and Vinnie Mauro, and one other I couldn't recall. In other words, I found nine partners.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And you expected at that time that Tony Bender would split it with you 50-50, and you would take care of Pasquale Pagano?

Mr. VALACHI. I would take care of my end and he would take care of his end, and then he also hit me with this: He said Vito Genovese owed Frank Costello $20,000, and he said "You know, we make a good showing, and we take it off the top, and we will pay the debt for him."

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, he cut in Vito Genovese for $20,000?

Mr. VALACHI. Besides his share he paid Frank Costello $20,000 that Vito was supposed to have owed Frank Costello $20,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This was taken off the top?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you know what they charge on the narcotics per kilo in France?

Mr. VALACHI. $2,500.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 635

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, that 15 kilos, that came to $37,500, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. With the $15,000. At that time the market in New York—

Mr. ADLERMAN. No, I am discussing how much it cost you in France. That would be $37,500, is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir, $37,500. And that is with the $8,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And you advanced $8,000 to Dominick's wife?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So that came out to the amount that you owed Dominick of $29,500. You gave here $8,000, and you owed her $37,500.

Mr. VALACHI. Let me look that up, please. $29,500.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is the balance you owed to Dominick?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you ever pay that money to him?

Mr. VALACHI. No.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How was this split up now? How much was a kilo of heroin worth in New York?

Mr. VALACHI. It runs about $165,000, all told.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is $11,000 a kilo.

Mr. VALACHI. For the 15 kilos.

Mr. ADLERMAN. $165,000?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. For each kilo it would be worth $11,000?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, that is what the market was, between $1,000 and $12,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Let us see what your expenses were. If you had paid fully on this deal, it would have cost you $37,500. Is that correct?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Then the transportation by boat was $1,000 a kilo, and that came to $15,000.

Mr. VALACHI. All told expenses was $53,500. That includes $1,000 general expense with $15,000 taken off the boat and the $37,000 and it came to $53,500.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, then, the total amount with all of the expenses came to $111,500. Is that right?

Mr. VALACHI. The total expense, you mean?

Mr. ADLERMAN. No, the net, after you paid the expenses.

Mr. VALACHI. It came to $111,500.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Then the amount that was taken, the $20,000 that was taken off by Genovese to pay Costello?

Mr. VALACHI. And a balance of $91,500.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And this balance of $91,500 was to be split between you, Tony Bender, and the nine partners that you now found?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, and then Moccio came to see me, and he said—

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did Moccio get paid?

Mr. VALACHI. I will come to that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. All right, tell us what happened.

Mr. VALACHI. Then Moccio came to me and he said to me I could have mine in goods. I had these two kids bothering me—

Mr. ADLERMAN. What was that again? You said Moccio came to you.

636 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. And asked me if I would take mine in goods, that is material.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Whether you would take it in heroin?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir. So I had these two kids bothering me, Fiore Siano and Pagano, and they were in the small business. you see, so we got together, Pat and I, and we gave it to Fiore and Joe Pagano.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How much heroin did they give you for your share?

Mr. VALACHI. They gave us $20,000 worth.

Mr. ADLERMAN. $20,000 worth?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That would be a little less than 2 kilos.

Mr. VALACHI. Well, they gave us 2 kilos.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And you figured that was worth about $20,000?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And you in turn gave it over to the two youngsters, Fiore Siano and Joe Pagano?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, they paid about $5,000, and they still owe, the exact amount of $14,700, which we never got, Pat and I.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They gave you $5,000 in cash, and they paid you back?

Mr. VALACHI. They didn't give it to us in cash, it was at $1,000 at a time.

Mr. ADLERMAN. For the $20,000 worth of heroin that you got, all you got back was $5,000?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And they kept the balance?

Mr. VALACHI. I forgot to mention one thing. I want to explain to you why I decided, why they decided, not to pay any, the Frenchmen. I had a talk with Pat, and I didn't like the proposition, and I don't care to fool around with it no more, and I said the best thing we can do is don't pay nobody, and we are stopped. I forgot to tell you that, and I had suggested that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I don't quite follow that.

Mr. VALACHI. After I heard about the nine partners, I had no more interest. I didn't care to pay Dominick, and I didn't care to make any other deal, and I was dissatisfied, in plain English. I am answering that, Mr. Adlerman, to make you Senators understand what they give us. They are supposed to give us, and I might explain how they take from us, and from this deal here you can understand how they take from us, and not what we gave to them.

Senator McINTYRE. Did you actually lose $3,000 on this deal? Did you not put up the $8,000?

Mr. VALACHI. I lost about—No, that $8,000 went back to Tony, Tony Bender.

Senator McINTYRE. You didn't owe it?

Mr. VALACHI. I paid part of it, up to this time I still owe money on that debt. Up to this time I must owe, I would say a few thousand dollars, and I have been paying out a little bit at a time, the original one that I borrowed from Sally Shields, I am talking about. I paid that off a little bit at a time, but not with this.

Senator McINTYRE. The only proceeds you got was $5,000?

Mr. VALACHI. Well, we don't collect from the boys, from the kids, and we are trying to help them make some money, you understand,

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 637

Senator. Had we got all of the money in, at least I could have paid the original amount that I borrowed. That is the reason why most of all I didn't care to bother with that any more, and don't pay the people over there, and this way I don't have anything to do with it, and that was the first and the last contract I brought downtown and they never saw me again.

Now, I was in West Street with Pat Moccio——

Senator McINTYRE. If you kept your original agreement, you would have made roughly over $50,000 on your half share?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Instead of that, you got $20,000 in heroin and when you tried to dispose of it, you were cheated again and you were double-crossed again, and you only got $5,000 out of it?

Mr. VALACHI. That is right. They still owe us the money, the kids, and we call them the kids at that time, and so I am using the same expression.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is this the first deal that you ever got into in narcotics?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, in that kind of a deal; yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Did you ever have any other contact with Dominick after that?

Mr. VALACHI. Oh, no.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Of course you never paid him?

Mr. VALACHI. Naturally, yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, did you yourself ever dispose of narcotics?

Mr. VALACHI. In my first case; yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Just that time?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. How long were you in the field of narcotics after that?

Mr. VALACHI. You mean after 1952?

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VALACHI. I didn't fool around any more until 1956, and when I got out on bail, on the reversal, I had lost the restaurant and I was pretty much in bad shape and I started fooling around with narcotics, but on a small scale.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Before you leave the other case we were just discussing——

Mr. VALACHI. Let me finish with Moccio. In West Street actually is where I found out for the first time from Moccio himself, and I had spoken to John the Bug one time, and I said, "How did you make out?"

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is Johnny Stoppelli.

Mr. VALACHI. And Johnny said "what money"—and it wasn't long after, I am speaking to Johnny and I said, "You didn't get any money?" and I said, "You were down as a partner." And he said "I am what, what partner?" And when I realized he didn't know anything about it, I didn't want to go any further, I figured I would go down to Tony and Tony would say, "What are you doing, investigating me?" So I dropped the subject.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Johnny the Bug, and Moccio, and the others of the nine partners of yours, you discovered that they didn't know anything about it?

638 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. VALACHI. I stopped when I spoke to Johnny, and now I am close with Johnny Moccio, and this is about 1956, and being we were close in the cell, this subject came up. To my amazement, and I never figured that Pat Moccio never got anything, and I was talking to Pat. And so Patty Moccio, someday, somehow Pat said to me, "At least you got $20,000." And I said, "I didn't get nothing," and I said, "Are you trying to tell me you didn't get no money," and he put up his right arm and said, "Oh, my God." I nearly died.

He disposed of everything, and he handled everything, and he didn't get anything, and he said, "They always used to use the oil, they need money, and they need money, and by the time I went to get my money there was none left." I said, "You mean to tell me you didn't get any money out of that?" And I said, "Are you kidding?" And he put up his arm again, and what did I call him? I said, "You slob." And he said nothing at all, nothing at all. And he said he was taking care of the Gold Key Club and he wasn't getting anything, at least he would go up in the wee hours of the morning, and go to the market, and there was never any pay for him.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Tony Bender had invested $8,000 in the deal, and he got back $165,000 less the $20,000 that he gave to you in goods, and he made $140,000 between himself and Vito Genovese?

Mr. VALACHI. A few months after that, Mr. Adlerman, he told me to be at a certain address in Yonkers, and I don't know whose house it was, and I didn't even know Dominick lived in Yonkers, and it might have been Tommy Ryan who called me, and I don't remember who called me, and I went up to the appointment and who do you think was there? It was Vito Genovese. And he went on to ask me, and he said, "Did you ever deal in junk?" I said "Yes." He said, "You know that you ain't supposed to fool around with junk." And I said "Yes," and he looked at me, and he said, "Well, don't do it again," and I said "OK."

Mr. ADLERMAN. This is a few months after he took the money?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; and I saw Tony Bender, and I said, "Tony, Vito hauled me down to the Sailor's house, and in front of Dom the Sailor he asked me about a deal," and I told him what happened, and he said "Forget it."

Mr. ADLERMAN. Tony Bender told you to forget about it?

Mr. VALACHI. I said "OK," and I forgot about it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Genovese made his own rules and broke his own rules?

Mr. VALACHI. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I just want to try to figure out how much money they made on this deal.

Mr. VALACHI. You have to figure at about $111,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Well, transportation by the boat was $15,000, and $1,000 to miscellaneous expense, and plus the $8,000 that they loaned, and that meant that they came back, they got a balance of $121,000 on that investment.

Mr. VALACHI. That is taken over the $20,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Of which they took off the $20,000 for you, and they made $111,000 on their investment.

Mr. VALACHI. And a bawling out.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 639

Mr. ADLERMAN. Yes, sir; and you got bawled out in the bargain, and they said you shouldn't be in the junk business.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe, Mr. Duffy, you have prepared a statement on this narcotics transaction as related by Mr. Valachi, have you not?

Mr. DUFFY. Yes, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. I am going to let you refer to it and if you say it is accurate, I will let it be placed in the record, actually printed in the record.

Mr. DUFFY. We have a capitulation of the profit, and cost, of the 15 kilos, and we have a summary of that.

The CHAIRMAN. That document was prepared by Mr. Duffy, and you have examined it and you have a copy of it before you?

Mr. VALACHI. I have the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. And it is correct according to your testimony.

Mr. VALACHI. Yes; the same thing, and that is why I brought it.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be printed in the record at this point.

(The document referred to follows:)

ILLEGITIMATE RACKETS OF VITO GENOVESE—NARCOTICS

Vito Genovese, along with Anthony Strollo, alias Tony Bender, profited through the years in narcotics. Around 1952, 15 kilos of heroin were smuggled into the United States from France through the efforts of the wife of Dominick (phonetic), who was located in Paris. Dominick was a longtime source of narcotics in the United States.

Around 1952, Sally Shields (real name Salvatore Shillitani) had contacts in Europe with a Frenchman named Dominick (phonetic) as his source for heroin. Valachi sent Pasquale "Pat" Pagano to Europe to make contact with Dominick. Not long after this, she came to the United States in order to have her baby in this country. While in the United States, she contacted Pat Pagano. Although her husband, Dominick, was a millionaire, she needed some money and she asked Pagano for $8,000. Pagano contacted Valachi, who in turn obtained $8,000 as a loan from Anthony Strollo. The money was then turned over to Dominick's wife. In the meantime, Pasquale Moccio and Pat Pagano had arranged with Dominick's wife that she would secure a supply of heroin and turn it over to them. The $8,000 was partial payment for the heroin that was to be shipped in from France. The heroin did arrive which amounted to 15 kilos. The arrangement for taking it off the boat was made by Pasquale Moccio.

The remaining amount of $91,500 was to be split between nine partners, each to receive approximately $10,000 for each share, Anthony Strollo gave Valachi and Pagano their share in heroin (value approximately $20,000—each share approximately $10,000). Heroin turned over to Fiore Siano and Joseph Pagano. Valachi expected to get back the $20,000, but received only $5,000. Strollo lied to Valachi that nine partners split the profits (approximately $91,500). Strollo and Genovese pocketed the remainder (approximately $71,500).

Valachi and Pagano both took their share in heroin (value $20,000). He distributed the heroin to Fiore Siano and Joseph Pagano. They were supposed to pay to him the market value of the two shares, $20,000, but they only paid him $5,000 so he feels they still owe him around $15,000. Strollo told Valachi how the profit from the 15 kilos was to be split up. Nine individuals were in on the deal and each received one share (value $10,000). Participants were; Vito Genovese; Anthony Strollo, alias Tony Bender; Joseph Valachi; Pasquale Pagano, alias Pat Pagano; Sandino Pandolfo; John Stoppelli, alias Johnny the Bug; Pasquale Moccio; Vinny Mauro, and one other Valachi cannot recall.

Subsequently Valachi learned that Strollo had lied to him. Only Genovese, Strollo, and Valachi had received any of the proceeds. Moccio was new in the organization and he received nothing.

Moccio had done all the work but did not complain when he received nothing from the transaction. The rest of the profits were pocketed by Strollo and Genovese. Stroll told Valachi he had paid $20,000 off the top because Genovese owed it to Frank Costello.

After Genovese took his profit from the narcotic transaction, he called Valachi in and criticized him for being involved in narcotics, which was violative of the rule that members of the Family stay away from narcotics. Genovese then told Valachi to stay away from narcotics in the future. Later when Valachi told Strollo about his conversation with Genovese, Strollo told him to forget what Genovese told him.

Not long after the transaction was completed, Genovese sent for Valachi who went to the home of Dom the Sailor (real name Dominick DeQuatro) who lived in Yonkers. During Valachi's conversation with Genovese, Dom the Sailor was present, Genovese criticized Valachi for being in narcotics and then proceeded to tell Valachi about the Family rule that all members were to stay away from narcotics. Genovese told him not to do it again. A short time later Valachi met with Strollo. Valachi told him about his conversation with Genovese. It was then that Strollo told him not to pay any attention to what Genovese said.

The CHAIRMAN. We will recess now.

(Whereupon, at 12:20 p.m. the committee was recessed.)

TUESDAY, JULY 28, 1964—Continued

The CHAIRMAN. Again, I am not sure that we can keep on schedule, but it is our purpose to pursue this inquiry as expeditiously as we can, consistent with our other duties, to the end that we may make a record here that will give some guidance to us and to the Congress with respect to what further action the Congress can take, how law enforcement officials may be strengthened in their responsibilities to enforce the narcotic law.

I now yield to any of my colleagues who wish to make any comments.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I think that you have covered the background very adequately and very effectively. I would simply like to add that following the conviction of these 11 narcotic bigwigs last fall, I had an exchange of letters with the Office of the Attorney General in which I inquired as to the degree of assistance that Joseph Valachi and this committee had been in those hearings in helping to provide leads and information of value to the Attorney General's Office in this work.

I was pleased to receive back a reply pointing out that the work done by the committee had been of real contributory value in that direction. I mention that only because every once in a while somebody says, "Well, why do you have investigations? You don't get people put in jail, and you don't arrest anybody."

That isn't our job. Our job is to try to focus public opinion and attention on the problem, and to try, through testimony, to develop leads and suggestions which would help to alleviate the problem, either by legislation or by alerting law enforcement officials, the local or State or sometimes even at the Federal level. So I was happy to receive that reply.

Of course, we were all highly gratified at the recent developments whereby some of the most significant narcotics operators in this country have been arrested, and I note that some of those names had an old, familiar ring, Mr. Chairman. They were among those that we saw on the plethora of charts that surrounded our room as we were going into the Cosa Nostra and the Mafia hearings.

So I am happy to tell the chairman that the work which we have been doing has resulted in some practical results. I would hope to achieve at the end of this hearing some consideration of additional legislation in this field which will help protect the youth of America against the preying avarice of these narcotic dealers, because there is a very close relationship between juvenile delinquency and the narcotics trade.

I surmise that we are going to find, before we are through, that there is a very close relationship between the narcotics trade and the international Communist conspiracy, because from my own work in this field I know that the Communists utilize this type of activity to help break down the morale and the morals of a free country. If they can break down the morals of young Americans, they are on the road to helping destroy their patriotism and to lure them into the Communist camp.

I congratulate the staff and the chairman on the fact that we are going ahead full tilt on this job, although I agree with him that I doubt that we are going to be able to keep the daily afternoon schedule the way we would like to because of the pressure of events which we hope are leading to an adjournment before an important date in Atlantic City.

The CHAIRMAN. I am sure the Atlantic City meeting will take place irrespective of adjournment.

Senator MUNDT. But I hope we can adjourn before the event.

The CHAIRMAN. I am willing.

Senator CURTIS, do you have anything to add?

Senator CURTIS. I have no further statement.

The CHAIRMAN. While we are speaking of the work that the committee does in these investigative hearings, what the outcome may be sometimes, we might reflect upon what happened just yesterday or Sunday, I believe. I think as a result of these hearings, there was information developed that led to another trial that resulted in a conviction last Sunday. They were not hearings in this particular category, but hearings held by one of the investigating committees of the Senate on which some of us served.

So it is well, I think, if we can work in some of these areas at different times—I think it strengthens the hand of law-enforcement agencies and also it may serve as a deterrent in some instances, but certainly it keeps Congress informed of the current problem and indicates sometimes action that Congress can take to strengthen the position of law-enforcement officials and to actually serve the cause of law enforcement by enacting new legislation.

Another reason why we haven't been able to hold these hearings sooner, as I think the record might reflect, is because the Senate was engaged in an enterprise, a legislative enterprise, that consumed about 3 months' time during which committees were not permitted to meet except for about 1 hour a day, in some instances, and it was not practical to try to conduct investigative hearings meeting 1 hour a day, occasionally during the week, so we had to defer the beginning of these hearings, which could have begun earlier, insofar as the trial was concluded. It was concluded much earlier and these hearings could have started earlier, except for the condition that prevailed in the Senate.

Very well, we will call the first witness.

Commissioner Giordano, will you come around, please?

Will you be sworn?

Do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. GIORDANO. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state your name, your place of residence, and your present official position?

TESTIMONY OF COMMISSIONER HENRY L. GIORDANO

Mr. GIORDANO. My name is Henry L. Giordano. I live at 1609 New Hampshire Avenue, Silver Spring, Md. My present position is Commissioner of the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you held that position?

Mr. GIORDANO. I have held the position of Commissioner of Narcotics since August of 1962.

The CHAIRMAN. What position did you hold prior to that time?

Mr. GIORDANO. Prior to that time I was the Deputy Commissioner of Narcotics, under Commissioner Anslinger.

The CHAIRMAN. How long did you serve in that capacity?

Mr. GIORDANO. I served in that capacity for a period of 4 years.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you been with the Narcotics Bureau?

Mr. GIORDANO. I have been with the Bureau a little over 23 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have a prepared statement?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, then, you may proceed to read it.

Mr. GIORDANO. Mr. Chairman and distinguished members of the committee, I wish to thank the committee for the opportunity to report the activities of the Treasury Department's Bureau of Narcotics in the suppression of the narcotic drug problem.

FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT

The primary force in the Government's fight against the illicit narcotic trafficker for the past 34 years has been the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics. The Bureau has the task of bringing to justice the cunning and ruthless individuals and groups engaging in the illicit narcotic drug and marihuana traffic. Although the Bureau of Narcotics is a law-enforcement agency, we also have the responsibility of regulating the legitimate supplies of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes, the importation, exportation, and manufacture of narcotic drugs, and various controls of this trade to prevent diversion to illicit channels.

The responsibilities of the Bureau of Narcotics as established by Congress relate to opium, its alkaloids and derivatives; the coca leaf and its derivatives; marihuana; and specially defined synthetics known as opiates.

The Bureau of Narcotics is a relatively small agency, having only 433 employees, including 297 enforcement agents and supervisors located in 16 districts covering the United States, Europe, the Near, Middle, and Far East, and Central and South America. In the United States, our headquarters offices are located in the larger cities and our agents are assigned to these offices proportionate to the extent of illicit traffic. The majority of our agents are assigned in the cities of New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, and Detroit. In foreign areas we have a headquarters office in Rome, Italy, with branch offices at Paris and Marseilles, France; Beirut, Lebanon; and Istanbul, Turkey. We have a headquarters office at Mexico City, Mexico, with a branch office at Monterrey, Mexico. Also, we have established a headquarters office at Bangkok, Thailand, with branch offices in Hong Kong and Singapore.

BASIC VIEWS OF THE BUREAU OF NARCOTICS

Even before the creation of the Bureau of Narcotics in the Treasury Department in 1930, the Federal Government established a threefold program in attacking the narcotic addiction problem. We have continued to follow this program:

1. A strong, vigorous law-enforcement policy aimed at exacting stringent punishment for illicit traffickers in narcotics.
2. Proper treatment and effective rehabilitation of addicts with a view of curing addiction.
3. International and national cooperation with enforcement agencies to help eliminate the local violators and the foreign sources of supply.

FEDERAL LEGISLATION

Shortly after the turn of the century, America awoke to the fact that it was faced with a serious problem. It was estimated that 1 out of every 400 people of the United States was addicted to narcotic drugs.

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Commissioner, that sounds like a pretty high incidence of addiction. How does that compare with your present rate?

Mr. GIORDANO. That compares with the present rate of 1 in 4,000 at the present time.

644 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator MUNDT. You are making genuine progress; 1 out of every 400 in 1900, about?

Mr. GIORDANO. About 1900, prior to the enactment of the Harrison Act.

Senator MUNDT. And 60 years later 1 out of 4,000.

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. Is the rate continuing to decrease?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes, Senator.

Major Federal antinarcotic efforts began in 1909 with the Opium Exclusion Act, barring importation of opium except for medicinal purposes. This legislation was followed by the Harrison Act of 1914; the Import and Export Acts of 1914 and 1922; the act of June 7, 1924, barring importation of crude opium for the purpose of manufacturing heroin; the Marihuana Tax Act of 1937; the Opium Poppy Control Act of 1942; an act to control synthetic narcotic drugs in 1946; the Boggs Act of 1951; the Boggs-Daniel Narcotic Control Act of 1956; and the Narcotics Manufacturing Act of 1960.

BOGGS-DANIEL NARCOTIC CONTROL ACT OF 1956

The most significant legislation in more than 40 years to help check the spread of addiction was the Narcotic Control Act of 1956. Extensive hearings by congressional committees had determined that leniency in sentencing was the prevailing practice in narcotic cases. The important feature of the Boggs-Daniel Act is that all peddlers of narcotic drugs are on notice that they will not be dealt with lightly when convicted in Federal court of selling narcotic drugs. The law now affords certainty of imprisonment for convicted sellers. This was a unanimous act of Congress, providing mandatory minimum sentences with no possibility of probation or parole for convicted peddlers and smugglers. There is also a discretionary measure in the act which does not preclude probation and parole for utilization where the circumstances warrant leniency, and under certain conditions the offender may be sentenced under the Federal Youth Corrections Act.

We have found through our undercover activities that the large-scale traffickers are extremely fearful of these penalties. I submit that criminal sanctions against all narcotic sellers, be they addicts or non-addicts, including long terms of imprisonment, are essential to effective enforcement of the narcotic laws and the eradication of the illicit traffic. In those areas of the country where there are mandatory sentencing provisions under the laws of the States, accompanied by vigorous and continuous law enforcement, there has been a substantial reduction in the traffic, and in some cities addiction is at a virtual minimum.

ADDICT SURVEY AND EXTENT OF ADDICTION

The Bureau of Narcotics has continued to maintain a tabulation of narcotic drug addicts who have come to our attention through private, local, State, and Federal authorities. There have been 48,535 active addicts recorded in our central index as of December 31, 1963. This is a ratio of approximately 1 addict in 4,000 as compared with 1 in 400 in 1914. Several years ago, the narcotic addiction problem was widespread throughout the United States. At the present time, however, the major concentration of narcotic addiction is in less than 10 cities of the United States.

Senator CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I don't want to devote a long discussion to this before we go into other matters.

These statistics, however, tend to prove that the approach in the United States is the correct one, as contrasted to some foreign countries that do not outlaw narcotics, but permit doctors to dispense them. Do you have an opinion on that?

Mr. GIORDANO. We believe this is the proper approach. There has been some suggestion that in Great Britain they handle the problem differently than the United States. Their laws are generally the same as the United States. They do have a more lax attitude toward the administering of narcotic drugs than we do.

Senator CURTIS. But an addict can lawfully buy them?

Mr. GIORDANO. An addict in the United Kingdom can go to the doctor and even under their rules and regulations, the doctor is supposed to withdraw him if possible. The doctor writes the prescription. It is supposed to be a withdrawal program over there, just like here. However, there is evidence that certain doctors have been taking care of addicts there.

The fact is, a recent report in the paper on a Lady Frankau, who has written several articles, gave talks about her treatment of addicts, and the report indicated that she gave an addict a prescription just after he had been released from the hospital, having been withdrawn, and gave him this drug and he ended up in the morgue from taking the drug when he had already been withdrawn from the drug.

So they do have a more lenient attitude toward it there because they assume that they haven't got a problem. However, I have been over there on several occasions and they have a serious marihuana problem and a serious amphetamine problem and they are talking about doing it as the United States does—increasing penalties and with tighter controls.

Senator CURTIS. Do I understand that in 1914, 1 person out of 400 was an addict and now it is 1 out of 4,000?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

Senator CURTIS. Thank you very much.

Mr. GIORDANO. It was not uncommon when I first entered narcotic law enforcement to find an addict in possession of several cubes of chemically pure morphine or substantial quantities of high-grade smoking opium. I recall that during those years, confirmed addicts suffered extreme withdrawal symptoms when deprived of their usual dosage. Today, however, there is a very noticeable change. Heroin, an imported substance, is now the preferred drug in the illicit traffic, and smoking opium is almost a thing of the past.

Our agents have received underworld reports that because of the rigid enforcement of the narcotic laws and the penalties facing the smuggler and peddler, as provided in the Narcotic Control Act of 1956, some of the top echelon traffickers have announced that they are no longer willing to assume the risks involved in such activities. The subcommittee will recall that on October 9, 1963, in answer to a question as to whether the pressure of narcotics prosecutions, investigations, and publicity has caused a change in the policy of the Cosa Nostra,

Joseph Valachi commented that “* * * all families were notified—no narcotics.”

Our intelligence indicates that it is becoming more difficult for the large narcotic traffickers to secure financial backing from the underworld moneylenders. Consequently, the illicit supply has decreased, the prices are exorbitant, and the narcotics reaching the consumer are adulterated to a small fraction of the original purity.

The CHAIRMAN. Has a lot of this come about because of the system we have here, by reason of our vigilance and strenuous efforts to combat this traffic?

Mr. GIORDANO. We believe that, Senator, very strongly.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me from your testimony there has been remarkable success from the efforts we have made. We have reduced the number from 1 addict out of every 400 people to 1 out of every 4,000. It is very commendable progress.

Obviously the system we have operating, particularly since we tightened up the laws in the last few years on the penalties, making punishment mandatory, has had a very salutary impact upon the criminal element.

Mr. GIORDANO. We believe that very strongly—that this has had quite an impact on the illicit traffickers—and, of course, the Federal approach is toward the major traffickers, the sources of supply, the interstate, the international traffickers—and these are the people who have been feeling the brunt of these new penalties—and as a result are getting out of the traffic.

Of course, we are not complacent at all, as long as we have any problem, any addicts, and we have to keep this momentum going.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you feel that the Boggs-Daniel Act passed a few years ago has produced very effective results, that it has been a great help to you and your agency in the enforcement of the law?

Mr. GIORDANO. I don't think there is any doubt about it, Mr. Chairman. The original Boggs Act of 1951 provided for mandatory penalties after a certain period of time, second and third offenders, and during the hearings held by Congressman Boggs and Senator Daniel, in 1955, it developed that the people were using so-called first offenders in the traffic in certain areas, and particularly in the New York area, and these people were getting probation and suspended sentences. As a result, they brought the 1956 Control Act to take care of the first offender—the peddler—in traffic.

The CHAIRMAN. The minute they were released and sentence suspended, they could go right back into business; is that true?

Mr. GIORDANO. Exactly.

(At this point Senator Curtis withdrew from the hearing room.)

The CHAIRMAN. Do you find that to be true?

Mr. GIORDANO. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. Since there is now a law that makes sentencing mandatory, that has tended to deter their action—their activity.

Mr. GIORDANO. I don't think there is any question but what this act is a deterrent to people engaging in the narcotic traffic. They are finding that there are other criminal activities they can become engaged in where they are not faced with this type of control.

The CHAIRMAN. There is more deterrent.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 647

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes, sir.

(At this point Senator Curtis entered the hearing room.)

Senator MUNDT. On that point, Mr. Commissioner—something that is pertinent to what the chairman just discussed—I notice this statement of yours:

In those areas of the country where there are mandatory sentencing provisions under the laws of the States, accompanied by vigorous and continuous law enforcement, there has been a substantial reduction in the traffic, and in some cities addiction is at a virtual minimum.

That would lead me to conclude that there was still work to be done on the part of some of the States which have failed to add to the provisions of the Boggs-Daniel Act even more severe penalties for certain traffic; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

Senator MUNDT. Do you have a listing you can put into the record of the States which you feel have the optimum laws, or satisfactorily working laws, and then the States where work needs to be done, so that the good people of this country will know which legislators they should talk to and which Governors they should contact?

Mr. GIORDANO. I would be very happy to have that included in the record.

Senator MUNDT. May that be included at this point Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it may be inserted.

Mr. GIORDANO. I do have a chart which I believe the committee also has available.

Senator MUNDT. Fine.

Mr. GIORDANO. This chart indicates the areas where we have the problem. Over 10,000 is just the one State, New York State, and in the category of 5,000 to 9,999 we have California and Illinois. Then in the 1,000 to 4,999 category, Texas, Michigan, and New Jersey, and the District of Columbia.

Senator MUNDT. I notice from the chart here that South Dakota is indicated merely white. What does that mean?

Mr. GIORDANO. At one time I was supervisor for this area out of Minnesota, and this whole area, as you can see, even Minnesota, is an area where they have consistently, even without having the mandatory penalties, the courts have consistently applied the penalties with adequate severity, commensurate with the crime. As a result, this is what we have.

Senator MUNDT. In other words, there is a direct relationship between the severity of the penalty and the willingness of the judges and the courts to impose it to the incidence of the crime?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is true. And enforcement, of course. You have to have good enforcement.

Senator MUNDT. In these three States indicated in red—California, Illinois, and New York—where the incidence is most disturbing, are there weaknesses in their State laws, Mr. Commissioner, or is it because the lack of enforcement, or because of population pressure, or for some other reason?

¹ Except 2-year sentence for first sale and 5-year sentence for second sale is possible.

² No parole, probation, or suspension if sale is to minor.

³ Suspended sentence and probation available for any first offense, parole possible when approximately one-half of sentence is served.

⁴ Suspended sentence not available.

⁵ Suspended sentence, probation, or parole not available to third offender.

⁶ One-year sentence possible for all sale offenses.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 649

Mr. GIORDANO. I would point out that in New York there is a problem in New York State in the penalties. They have in their law a provision for making certain possession below one-eighth of an ounce a misdemeanor and above one-eighth of an ounce is a felony. As a result, I have been informed, and we checked, that over half of their cases are disposed of by reducing it, if it is a felony, to a misdemeanor; in other words, to unclog the calendar. As a result, they have 3- and 6-month sentences.

Senator MUNDT. In other words, in New York if they had a higher penalty for carrying less than one-eighth of an ounce of heroin, this would greatly diminish, in your opinion, the drug traffic in that State?

Mr. GIORDANO. I think in the State what is happening is that the traffickers are sort of in a revolving door. They are in and out again. This doesn't happen in the Federal court, but you can't just have the Federal courts. There are the State courts applying their State laws and they have to be able to take these people out of circulation. But as long as they are in circulation, they are just out again and maybe arrested two or three times within the year.

(At this point Senator Brewster entered the hearing room.)

Mr. GIORDANO. New York has moved ahead in the method of treatment. They have set up the Metcalf-Volker Act for providing treatment for addicts, which is helpful, except that they are only relying on the voluntary feature of this program instead of compelling them. Most of them have to be compelled to go in.

Illinois' problem is primarily in Chicago. There has been some improvement in Illinois because they have increased their penalties. They have set up a State narcotic commission. Illinois has improved.

In California they changed their penalties about 2 years ago and for a period of about 2 years there was a reduction in the traffic in California. I understand there has been a little upsurge again, but this could be only a temporary thing and move back down again.

So in those areas—well, I think the best example is Ohio. At one time Ohio was one of our worst States for the problem of drug addiction and drug traffic. As I recall, we had some 20 men in Ohio. The State of Ohio was one of the first to put in a penalty of 20 years. Ohio is now down in this category of between 350 to 500 addicts when they were in the category of Illinois and New York prior to that time.

We have closed the offices in Ohio. We now have 3 men in there, and before we had to have 20.

Senator MUNDT. In the main, how is the jurisdiction broken down between the Federal responsibility and the State responsibility, say, in the narcotics traffic in New York State?

Mr. GIORDANO. In New York State we continue to concentrate, as I say, on the major traffickers, the people who are bringing the drug in and the distributors, and the international traffic, of course.

The New York Police Department has an excellent force. They run between 150 and 200 men on the New York narcotic detail alone. They are doing a good job. Unfortunately—

Senator MUNDT. There is nothing wrong with the New York Police force. They are kind of working overtime in Harlem these days.

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes. But what they are doing is rearresting the same people two and three times a year.

650 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator CURTIS. The same people?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right.

Senator CURTIS. Why is that necessary? Aren't they convicted?

Mr. GIORDANO. They are convicted, but they are given 3- or 6-month sentences and they are right out again.

Senator MUNDT. This is something in the State law.

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes. This law which provides the breakdown of less than one-eighth of an ounce a misdemeanor and over one-eighth of an ounce is a felony. Even if they have over one-eighth of an ounce, as I explained earlier, to process this case speedily they will let the individual plead to a misdemeanor, and as a result, he then gets a sentence of about 3 or 6 months.

Senator MUNDT. What does one-eighth of an ounce mean in terms of a dope addict? Is that very much?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is considerable. One-eighth of an ounce is 60 grains, and the addict, of course, will use all he can get. Normally they are using, I believe, 2 or 3 grains at a shot.

Senator MUNDT. How much would one-eighth of an ounce cost a narcotic addict? How much has he invested in that?

Mr. GIORDANO. It varies from place to place. In some areas it will be—one-eighth of an ounce could be as high as $300, and in other places in the New York area it would be a lot cheaper than that.

Senator MUNDT. In other words, this would be more than he would take in any single day or any single treatment?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

Senator MUNDT. It would last him a week or something like that?

Mr. GIORDANO. It would be more than for a single day.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Commissioner, just to clarify it, one-eighth of an ounce is really considered sort of the breaking point between an addict pusher and an organized crime pusher.

Mr. GIORDANO. The one-eighth ounce primarily was figured to be the breaking place.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In other words, to try to distinguish between those who are engaged in the pushing of addiction and selling on the retail level, on a commercial or criminal basis, and those addicted peddlers who might have a few grains.

Senator MUNDT. The one-eighth of an ounce would be found on a peddler and not a consumer?

Mr. GIORDANO. Over one-eighth would generally be on a trafficker. Under one-eighth they felt would be on an addict. But the unfortunate part is when you try to set a breaking point. You can have a situation where the trafficker will carry just less than one-eighth of an ounce—a grain—and then when you have the situation where they have this, so that they can clear the calendar, so to speak, it is unfortunate.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Isn't it true now that they carry the bags of heroin, they break it up into smaller quantities, so that they don't carry as much around with them as they formerly did, to come under the one-eighth of an ounce?

Mr. GIORDANO. This is what I understand has been happening in New York. I was getting to this; about the fraction of the purity. In New York, for example, where it was running 3 to 5 percent on the street, now it is a little bit higher percentage but they are carrying less than this quantity that brings them into the felony category.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask if you do not have a series of charts and tables giving statistics, and otherwise confirming your testimony, Mr. Commissioner?

Mr. GIORDANO. I have a series of charts available.

The CHAIRMAN. I have before me one headed "Federal Bureau of Narcotics, Active Narcotic Addicts Reported in Several Selected States as of December 31, 1963," which gives a breakdown of the 48,000-plus addicts that you have testified to.

Without objection, I will direct that this chart be inserted in the record, that it be inserted in full—the charts and tables contained in this document which you have in your hands.

Mr. GIORDANO. I would appreciate it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. We will let it go into the record in full.

(The document referred to may be found in the appendix on p. 759.)

The CHAIRMAN. I have another one before me that says "History of Narcotic Addiction in the United States." Have you that before you?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. We will let it be printed in the record at the same time.

(The chart referred to will be found in the appendix on p. 771.)

Senator MUNDT. In conjunction with that, Mr. Commissioner, will you indicate what happened in about 1946 or 1947 when all of a sudden the narcotic addiction rate shot skyward? I just wondered what happened?

Mr. GIORDANO. We had during this period of time the addiction rate gradually going down. Then we ran into the war period where there was almost a complete ban on the importation of heroin, because everything was military shipping, and the ships were not going to these places where the heroin was produced—the opium was produced—so there was a very decided drop during that period because the only things available during the war period were the drugs diverted from legal channels and a little bit from Mexico.

Senator MUNDT. How about the upsurge? There was an upsurge.

Mr. GIORDANO. Then shipping opened up and, at the same time, the racketeers—and here is where we move into the Mafia—took advantage of this over in Italy. We will have some reports on that. They moved in on this actually legitimate manufacturing company, but some of the officers were not quite so legitimate, and they began to divert from this plant all this heroin.

Actually, this particular case was where our Luciana was one of the ones making the arrangements. So we have this terrific upsurge. Of course, it was timed almost the same as after World War I when there was a little bit of an upsurge.

Senator MUNDT. Did you say, "Luciana?"

Mr. GIORDANO. Lucky Luciana. Because of this problem—and you will note this is when the Boggs Act went in—it started this decline and then with the Control Act it has continued to go down.

The CHAIRMAN. Have we placed this map that you have testified from a few moments ago into the record?

Mrs. WATT. Not yet.

652 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. We will let that map be placed into the record at this point.

(See fold-in A.)

(162)

Mr. ADLERMAN. We haven't gone into the areas where the narcotics come from, but the ordinary routes for coming into the United States would be from Italy and France, mainly; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And during wartime there was no marine traffic between Italy and France and the United States, and that cut the source of supply as far as the illicit traffic was concerned.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

I do have what I think would be very interesting at this point, which I would like to introduce in the record, certain further charts. These are actually charts from the committee's prior hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair make this observation, since one of my colleagues on the committee observed and emphasized that his State shows white on the chart, that I believe my State does, too.

Mr. GIORDANO. I am sure it does.

The CHAIRMAN. How about Senator Brewster's State?

Well, anyway, we have a few States that are white.

Very well, you may proceed.

Mr. GIORDANO. This, as you may recall, Mr. Chairman, is the chart produced by the committee as a result of the Valachi hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you speak a little louder?

Mr. GIORDANO. This is the chart made by the committee as a result of the Valachi hearings, and these are the family charts.

Here on Vito Genovese we have marked off those individuals of the family that the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics was responsible for convicting. In this one family we eliminated 19 percent of that family.

The CHAIRMAN. In what period of time?

Mr. GIORDANO. This would be within the past 10 to 15 years.

The CHAIRMAN. We will let that chart be placed into the record at this point.

(See fold-in B.)

(163)

Mr. GIORDANO. Here is the Gaetano Lucchese family, and 40 percent of that family we eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. When you use the word "family," what do you mean by that?

Mr. GIORDANO. I am using the designation on the chart.

The CHAIRMAN. You are using the Valachi testimony when he referred to them as families?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, it is a section, so to speak, in the organized group of the Mafia?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes. And the Carlo Gambino family, 20 percent.

The CHAIRMAN. All of these charts will be placed into the record.

(See fold-ins C, D, E, F.)

(164)

Senator MUNDT. Mr. Commissioner, in these arrests in New York and Washington, D.C., within the last week or so, there was a so-called big shot in the narcotics racket whose name, as I recall, started with an "M."

Mr. GIORDANO. Romano was the one arrested here.

Senator MUNDT. Is he a member of any of these families?

(162) (163) (164) Fra le pagine 652-653 del documento originale sono inserite sei carte che — contrassegnate, rispettivamente, con le lettere V, Z, AA, BB, CC e DD — sono pubblicate, insieme alle altre carte, nella Parte Terza del presente tomo. (N.d.r.)

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 653

Mr. GIORDANO. I don't think he was a member of the family, but he was part of this whole organization. Actually, that particular case was an outgrowth of a case that we developed in 1960 which involved a diplomat, Mauricio Rosal, who was the courier.

Senator MUNDT. An Ambassador from where?

Mr. GIORDANO. He was an Ambassador from Guatemala to Belgium and the Netherlands. He was the courier. In that case, that particular case was one of the largest seizures that we made. It amounted to a little over 100 kilos, which is 200 and some odd pounds. These people that we arrested over the weekend——

The CHAIRMAN. What would the value of that be? Let's say on the wholesale market first.

Mr. GIORDANO. On a street level this would run around, I would say, about $20 million, on the street level.

Senator MUNDT. How much would you say the peddlers or agents would have invested?

Mr. GIORDANO. Well, they would have had invested in there—it is running about $3,000 over in France, $3,000 a kilo. They had 100 kilos. That is $300,000 approximately that it cost them.

Senator MUNDT. In other words, they would take the $300,000 and pyramid it up to $20 million?

Mr. GIORDANO. This goes through several layers. This would cost them so much a kilo. Maybe they would pay the courier so much a kilo for bringing it over, and then when they sell it here it is selling at the wholesale market rate now at around anywhere from $18,000 to $22,000 a kilo.

This is another indication: In 1958-59, in New York a kilo of heroin wholesale was between $8,000 and $12,000, and now it is up to between $18,000 and $22,000.

The CHAIRMAN. In 5 years' time it has doubled.

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes. This is because of the pressure.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed with your statement.

Mr. GIORDANO. As an example of the effectiveness of the continual pressure on the violators, during the past few years many hospitals with facilities for treatment of addicts have seldom encountered an addict with a severe degree of physical dependence to heroin.

DRUGS OF THE ILLICIT TRAFFIC

While heroin is the drug of primary concern because of its preference by users, we occasionally run across a case involving other drugs; namely, morphine, Dilaudid and methadone. I am pleased to say, however, that with the cooperative efforts of the drug industry and the professions, the problem of the diversion from legitimate channels is very minor.

I regret, however, that there has been a resurgence of cocaine traffic during the past few years due to the Cuban situation. Cuba has become a problem in this respect, and because of the smuggling of this drug by Cuban nationals, some of whom have been determined to be Castro sympathizers, we now find considerable quantities of cocaine in the United States, particularly in Miami and New York.

In 1962, in one case alone, there was seized more cocaine than had been seized in the entire United States in the previous year.

654 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ADLERMAN. Can you tell us the source of the cocaine, from what area it comes?

Mr. GIORDANO. The cocaine starts out as coca leaf in Bolivia and Peru and is processed in that area to the cocaine paste, or the base, and then it moves up from there either through Mexico or through Cuba into the United States.

Now it appears that the prime method of moving is through Mexico, involving these Cuban nationals who are free to move back and forth. They bring it up from South America in through Mexico.

Senator MUNDT. There must be some alternative sources beyond Peru and Bolivia, are there not? If we shut it off there, would that stop it entirely?

Mr. GIORDANO. This is the prime source for cocaine and the prime area for coca leaf. This is a problem which I am sure Commissioner Anslinger will discuss, which has concerned the United Nations Commission, but they have this problem of the chewing of coca leaf in those countries by the Indians. This, of course, is a problem of changing or converting the Indians from chewing the coca leaf into a normal diet so that they can then eliminate this growth of coca leaf.

Senator MUNDT. Let me ask you what is probably a very simple question. Is this coca raised in Bolivia and Peru also alternatively used for some legitimate commercial purposes, like making cocoa that you drink, and things like that?

Mr. GIORDANO. It is used as a flavoring extract, and also a small amount of it is used in the United States and in the other countries for cocaine.

Senator MUNDT. A legitimate use.

Mr. GIORDANO. A medicinal use.

Senator MUNDT. This is not really a plant or a weed that is used for drugs alone.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

Senator CURTIS. Is there any connection between the increased cocaine traffic from Cuba and the shipment from this country of drugs as part of the ransom to Castro?

Mr. GIORDANO. None whatsoever.

Senator CURTIS. There wasn't any cocaine sent down there?

Mr. GIORDANO. No. In fact, the drugs that were sent to Cuba were in such a form that they would not normally be attractive on the illicit market. Most of them were drugs that would not be attractive to the addict. It was a combination.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the addict have to further process them?

Mr. GIORDANO. Most of the drugs were in a combination that would be taken by mouth, and the addict is not interested in that. He is interested in getting the pure substance. Most of these were the milder types, such as codeine. There was some morphine, but that was primarily in forms that would be rather cumbersome for the addict or the traffic to handle and there wouldn't be enough of a profit in it because what we sent down there wouldn't, certainly, last very long in the illicit traffic, if at all.

Senator MUNDT. Is there a high degree of addiction in Mexico and Cuba, or does the drug just go through there in the commercial enterprises?

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 655

(At this point Senator Curtis withdrew from the hearing room.)

Mr. GIORDANO. In Cuba, there has always been a cocaine problem, although the Cuban Government says now they do not have any problem. But they had it before and there is no indication that the situation has changed.

Senator MUNDT. They have also said that they do not have any missiles. I do not believe either one.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Commissioner, just for the record, the coca leaf is a different plant from the ordinary cocoa we use for chocolate.

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. One is a bean and comes from an entirely different plant than the coca from which we make cocaine.

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Cocoa does grow in many other areas of the world, but the coca that is used for cocaine——

Mr. GIORDANO. Coca is the coca leaf, and cocoa is cocoa.

Senator MUNDT. That is a different kind of coca altogether, a specialized kind of product which, in the main, is used for the narcotics traffic in Peru and Bolivia.

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

NATIONAL ENFORCEMENT APPROACHES

Mr. GIORDANO. On the national level, agents of the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics direct their efforts against the highest echelon narcotic traffickers, particularly those who hold positions of trust and management in groups engaged in organized criminal pursuits. We feel that our principal technique, that of the undercover approach, has proven to be the most efficient and effective method of combating such violators. In addition to enabling us to amass considerable intelligence on many of the top members of organized crime, we have, since 1956, developed 20 major conspiracy cases resulting in the conviction of 206 important gangsters, including such notorious violators as Vito Genovese, Big John Ormento, Carmine Galante and Joseph Valachi.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you what is the present status of Genovese? How long is he in prison for?

Mr. GIORDANO. I believe it is 20 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that a number of sentences running concurrently?

Mr. GIORDANO. I couldn't answer that.

The CHAIRMAN. He has only served some 2 or 3 years on this 20 years.

Mr. GIORDANO. It was a conspiracy count and I believe it was just one count within 20 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Mr. GIORDANO. Four Apalachin delegates are included among those who were convicted.

With the approval of the committee, we have here two lists of people—narcotic traffickers—who have been apprehended since 1951, up to July 1963. One is the international cases and the other is the national cases.

656 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. Have convictions been procured in all those instances?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. They may be received in evidence. They may be printed in the appendix of the hearings. They need not be printed as part of the body of the record, and will be found in the appendix on page 772.

Mr. GIORDANO. We have just three other charts that I thought would be of interest after my testimony. One chart shows the heroin seizures by the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics from 1954 to 1963. Then I think the most effective one shows what has happened as a result of our expanding our foreign operation and moving into the Far East.

On seizures you can see the sudden upturn of seizures where we work with foreign authorities. In other words, all that we are taking is being taken out of circulation before it even starts to the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the reason for your having to set up offices in foreign countries; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. And you work there with local law-enforcement agencies to stop it at its source, before it ever gets across over here.

Mr. GIORDANO. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. Those charts may be printed in the record.

(The charts referred to will be found in the appendix on p. 805.)

Mr. GIORDANO. I should like to emphasize that the Bureau of Narcotics does not direct its efforts toward the development of addict possession cases but, instead, we seek out evidence against major sources of supply, wholesale peddlers and interstate and international violators.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you leave the others primarily to State authorities?

Mr. GIORDANO. State and local enforcement officials.

The CHAIRMAN. You try to get the big fellow, to stop it before it reaches the peddlers?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. GIORDANO. It may interest you to know that the vast majority of the cases developed by our agents involve the illegal sale of narcotics and a further evaluation reveals that 60 percent of the defendants arrested are nonaddicts.

The CHAIRMAN. They are simply exploiting the human frailty of those who are addicts.

Mr. GIORDANO. Exactly.

These facts are in sharp contrast to the view being expressed in some circles that the Bureau of Narcotics succeeds only in snaring the unfortunate addict in possession of small quantities of drugs for self use.

The CHAIRMAN. Your statistics pretty much sustain your contention that you are getting the big one. Obviously, if you have reduced the user from 1 in 400 addicts to 1 in 4,000, it would indicate that you are stopping it, I think, at its source.

Mr. GIORDANO. Our job is to make narcotics as unavailable as possible. That is our job.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 657

Let me make it clear that the Bureau of Narcotics has always favored treating addicts, who are not engaged in commercial selling or trafficking, as medical rehabilitation cases and not as criminals. In this connection, the Bureau has supported proposed legislation such as the bill introduced by Senators Kenneth B. Keating and Jacob K. Javits—S. 1694 of the 87th Congress—which provides that certain eligible addicts, under charges for violating a criminal statute, should be given an opportunity to submit to treatment for narcotic drug addiction rather than prosecution for the criminal offense.

The CHAIRMAN. That is just for the addict, where he is not trafficking but he is just the victim of the illicit traffic.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not propose any extenuating consideration like that for the fellow who is in the business of exploiting and profiteering from the human misery, do you?

Mr. GIORDANO. Absolutely not.

Senator MUNDT. The addicts must be broken down into different categories, because some addicts would just be purchasers of narcotics, just the victims. Don't you have addicts who also do a little pushing on the side to make money so that they can continue to be addicts?

Mr. GIORDANO. This 40 percent—the other 40 percent are addicts who are sellers, who are incidentally also addicts, but they are important traffickers at the same time.

(At this point Senator McClellan withdrew from the hearing room.)

Senator MUNDT. Sixty percent are nonaddicts, so you have forty percent to deal with.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right.

Senator MUNDT. Of that 40 percent, are there not some who are just purchasers, just addicts?

Mr. GIORDANO. No.

Senator MUNDT. Do you not have a fellow who just buys the stuff and uses it without being a seller?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes. But these figures that I am giving are cases that we in the Bureau are developing. I am not talking about what are being developed by the local authorities. This is the area where you would get the small addicts in possession.

Mr. ADLERMAN. These are felony cases that have been tried in Federal court.

Mr. GIORDANO. In Federal court, of people who are important traffickers and also addicts at the same time.

Mr. ADLERMAN. These cases are essentially directed at those who are trafficking in addiction rather than the addicts themselves.

Senator MUNDT. That is the 40 percent. Then what do you do with this 40 percent? Are you advocating that they just go to a hospital to be cured? They are all criminals.

Mr. GIORDANO. No, for these people we are advocating the features of the control act, and this is what is now being applied.

Senator MUNDT. Then, the so-called Keating-Javits proposal would not deal with either your 60 percent or your 40 percent?

Mr. GIORDANO. Exactly.

Senator MUNDT. I see.

658 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. GIORDANO. In other words, there are many cases, Federal cases, where an individual is an addict and may be a check thief or something like that, where the individual is an addict. He is not a peddler but he has violated a Federal law as such. This is where this would apply.

(At this point Senator McClellan entered the hearing room.)

Senator MUNDT. Let us call them noncommercial addicts. Do those consumer addicts come within cognizance of the Federal Bureau, too? Do you occasionally pick them up?

Mr. GIORDANO. There could be a rare occasion, and under those circumstances if it does develop there are always the features of the Harrison Act and the control act where, for possession, they can be charged under the possession part of it, purchasing, and that permits parole, probation, and suspended sentence.

Senator MUNDT. As I recall from reading Alex King's book, one of your objects of search and seizure at one time, you maintain a hospital, do you not, and you try to cure the addicts?

Mr. GIORDANO. At Lexington and Fort Worth Federal Hospitals.

Senator MUNDT. Are those cures very successful? What percentage of the cures are finalized and what percent become repeaters, like Alex King?

Mr. GIORDANO. As far as when an individual is released from a hospital, he is allegedly cured. But the problem is, and I am sure you will hear quite a bit about this from other witnesses, is the followup treatment after they get out, because now they are released from the hospital or from many of these State hospitals, and they are immediately, you might say, thrown back into the former environment and they become addicted again.

The degree of recidivism in drug addiction is very, very high. Unless they have some form of control, some supervision when they get out from the treatment process, the chances of their reverting to drug addiction again is very high, that they will revert, and in a very short period of time.

(At this point Senator Javits entered the hearing room.)

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Senator MUNDT. To summarize that, in other words you have not discovered what you would call a sure cure, a permanent cure.

Mr. GIORDANO. A permanent cure? No; I think there is no question but what this is the area that needs the most done, the health area. I think this is where there has been a lot of talk about followup rehabilitation. I can recall prior hearings which brought about the Boggs-Daniel Act. They talked about rehabilitation and followup as what was needed, but I haven't seen any results.

Senator MUNDT. I have heard reports, Mr. Commissioner, that there is a likelihood of the researchers bringing up very soon a so-called alcohol pill which tends to give a permanent cure to alcoholism because it does something to your system so that the consumption of alcohol becomes revolting.

I wondered if progress is being made in the direction, where they finally have found some chemical or some pill so that after a certain period of treatment a cured addict would take the pill, it would make him sick or something, and he would think, "Nuts to that, I don't want to use it."

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 659

Mr. GIORDANO. I know of no research in that area and I know of nothing that would indicate that is being pursued. What they are doing, primarily, is trying to develop synthetic drugs that are non-addicting, that still have the pain relieving qualities of morphine and so forth, but without the addicting qualities. They are making progress in that area.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, you may proceed.

Mr. GIORDANO. In addition to working closely with the Bureau of Customs, which has primary responsibility for the prevention of smuggling, we have extensive liaison and cooperation with local and State enforcement officers in eliminating the intrastate retail peddlers. We maintain a narcotics training school which offers a 2-week intensive course in narcotic law enforcement procedures to local and State officers. Since the school was established in 1956, we have provided training to 1,418 students from law enforcement agencies in 48 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and 27 foreign countries. As a result of our liaison and training program, there has been very gratifying response on the part of local and State authorities who have recognized their responsibilities and have made major contributions to the overall enforcement effort.

INTERNATIONAL MEASURES

On the international level, the worldwide controls of narcotic drugs rest upon several multilateral treaties concluded between 1912 and March 8, 1963, with the coming into force of the 1953 Opium Protocol. The operation of the international system is based upon national controls by individual countries within the limits of their jurisdiction. In compliance with the stipulations of the various narcotic treaties, individual countries are bound to adopt appropriate legislation, introduce necessary administrative and enforcement measures and cooperate with the international control organs as well as with other countries. The scheme of international controls has resulted from the realization of the necessity for close association of nations for the accomplishment of a purpose important to each of them. The Bureau of Narcotics has continually sought close cooperation with other nations in the fulfillment of our obligations under international treaties.

Also, on the international level, we have found that engaging the international violator firsthand at the source pays substantial dividends. Our most talented and highly trained agents are assigned to oversea areas to work in cooperation with specially designated law enforcement officers of other countries. The work has been extremely gratifying and has repeatedly led to the location and destruction of clandestine laboratories and seizures of tremendous quantities of narcotic drugs destined for the illicit traffic in the United States.

Prior to 1962, our foreign responsibilities had been limited to Europe and the Near East. On October 22, 1962, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury James A. Reed issued a directive which extended our responsibilities to include all foreign areas. Surveys are currently under consideration to determine the need for an increase in our oversea staff, particularly in South America and the Far East.

In our expanded operations in the Far East, we contemplate making much headway in stemming the flow of illicit traffic moving from the Yunnan Province of Communist China and the Shan States of Burma.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Communist China a party to the treaty?

Mr. GIORDANO. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you would get no cooperation, of course, from that country.

Mr. GIORDANO. No cooperation.

In the short time our agents have been working with the Thailand Central Narcotic Bureau, more than 2½ tons of opium and nearly 60 kilograms of morphine base have been seized.

The Bureau's participation in this foreign program has been based on invitations extended by individual governments. As a result of our increased foreign enforcement activities, the efforts through the United Nations Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the continual cooperation with the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol), and the awareness of the narcotic problem by officials of other countries, there is now a vigorous and effective enforcement program covering nearly all of the free world.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there countries in the free world that do not participate and are not parties to treaties?

Mr. GIORDANO. Some are parties to some treaties and some are not to certain treaties because of their national government, but I would say that generally when I am talking in this context, that all of them are doing something. Some are doing more than others. The problem is to encourage those that are not doing as much to do a little bit more.

The CHAIRMAN. But generally all the countries of the free world are interested in the program and are working either fully cooperatively or in part with respect to the stamping out of this traffic?

(At this point Senator Mundt withdrew from the hearing room.)

Mr. GIORDANO. Exactly. This is whether or not they are signatories to the various treaties.

As I recall, one treaty we did not sign because it did not provide a strong enough program for eliminating opium. But we still recognize all of the features of that treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, you may proceed.

LEGISLATION DESIRED

Mr. GIORDANO. I would like to point out that our undercover narcotic agents are able to advance only to a certain point in penetrating the inner circles of organized crime, and it is always exceedingly difficult to corroborate the statements furnished by the occasional informant who is courageous enough to furnish testimony. We have a long way to go in the formulation of legalized weapons to rectify our investigative disadvantages. In my opinion, the most important legislation this committee should recommend is an appropriate wire-tapping measure. There is now before Congress, Chairman McClellan's proposed "Federal Wire Interception Act" (S. 1308, April 10, 1963) which would provide desirable facilities for utilization of this urgently needed investigative aid. As such audio surveillance would be carefully proscribed under strict limitations, and permitted only by Federal court order, the bill provides a proper balance between the needs of law enforcement and the high regard we place upon human liberties. Chairman McClellan's bill provides excellent measures under which we could operate in coping with the secret communication facilities employed by organized narcotic traffickers who now conspire from all points in the United States by telephone with virtual immunity.

I would also like to call to your attention another matter which I believe deserves favorable consideration. There is at this time a serious defect in the laws of the United States relating to obstruction of justice. Under the present laws it is not a crime to threaten witnesses prior to the formal initiation of judicial proceedings. We frequently encountered situations where our potential witnesses have been menaced, including actual threats of murder. I, therefore, urge the adoption of appropriate legislation which would provide severe penalties for anyone who intimidates another person to prevent him from testifying or furnishing information, and anyone who otherwise obstructs a criminal investigation being conducted by an agency of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. If I understand your testimony, it is not now a violation of the law to threaten anyone before he has become a witness. Is that correct? I mean legally before he is considered a witness in a pending case or on a pending charge.

Mr. GIORDANO. This is exactly the situation. In other words, if we have a witness in a narcotic case, and until such time as he is actually brought before the court as a witness, or the grand jury as a witness, if he is threatened before that time, before there is a process on it, it is not a violation of our law.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, at the time, say, an illicit transaction is had, and someone happened to see it or know about it, or if one engaging in it would threaten the other, "If you ever tell this, the Mafia will get you or the Cosa Nostra will be sure to see that you are put under the ground," or anything like that, that now does not constitute a crime until the grand jury may start to investigate and start calling witnesses investigating that particular incident. Is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. So any threat made at the time the offense is committed and before the processes of law are brought into operation does not constitute a crime.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, you are handicapped because many times witnesses are intimidated or prospective witnesses are intimidated or deterred from testifying before the law reaches the state of prohibiting the act.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, you may proceed.

CONCLUSION

Mr. GIORDANO. There has been substantial progress in the field of narcotic drug control. It is quite clear, however, that narcotic addiction in the United States is still a problem, and there is no room for complacency in our long-range approach to reaching our ultimate goal. With the present laws now in force by the Federal Government and most States; with continued success in our foreign enforcement program; with an intensified program by the States for compulsory civil commitment of addicts for treatment; with increased assistance to States where necessary in the development and strengthening of their own treatment programs; and with further exploitation into the causes and cures of addiction, we will see an even greater improvement in the future.

If there is anything I can do to help with the work of the subcommittee, please let me know, because I am vitally concerned and I have a full appreciation of the importance of your functions.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Mr. Commissioner. You have given a very excellent presentation on this subject. I am sure that as we study your comments and the data you have presented we will understand the problem far better than we do now.

I would like to ask you just one question and then I will defer to other members of the committee. By reason of the Boggs-Daniel Act, legislation that was passed some years ago, do you feel that had a material benefit or impact?

In other words, that is become a very potent weapon for you in this battle?

Mr. GIORDANO. It was one of the most important weapons that we have, that has been given to us in many years.

The CHAIRMAN. It has enabled you, then, to bring about a reduction—you feel that one of the consequences of it is to further reduce the number of addicts in this country?

Mr. GIORDANO. We feel it has brought about a reduction in the availability of the drug and this will eventually help in reducing the problem of addiction.

The CHAIRMAN. It also made it possible for you to apprehend and convict and get proper punishment for those who were violating the law, who were engaged in the traffic?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct, and those important in organized crime.

The CHAIRMAN. I asked those questions to lead up to this: You have recommended, as I understand, two additional actions by Congress, one being the passing of the wiretapping bill and the other to deal with this problem of obstruction of justice, to tighten up the law in that regard. Based on your experience, Mr. Commissioner, what impact do you think the enactment of those two statutes would have? How beneficial would they be to you and how necessary are they, do you feel?

Mr. GIORDANO. I think taking the first one, the wiretap, I think this is essential, that we have something, some legislation along this line because, as I indicated, the trafficker—and this is not only the narcotic trafficker but anyone who is in organized crime—

The CHAIRMAN. Of course it would not be confined to just this particular area of criminal activity. That would apply to all. And so would the other.

Mr. GIORDANO. But they are carrying their business on by the use of the telephone and they have immunity at this time.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 663

The CHAIRMAN. There is opposition certainly to the first one, the one about legalizing or authorizing wiretapping, and there is some legitimate opposition. In other words, I agree that it is a serious matter when you go to authorizing the interception of telephone communications. I think it is very serious, and I think it has to be dealt with most carefully, under the highest and strongest restrictions, and controls must be placed on it by law so that it cannot be used promiscuously, or so we can try to make sure that it is only used in those areas, legitimate areas, where we are seeking to ferret out crime and procure evidence that would be necessary and legitimate in the prosecution of criminals.

I think it is something that has to be studied. I do not want to go overboard. I have introduced a bill and I think it needs study. I think it needs the careful consideration. Yet, I think I can appreciate that it would be a very potent weapon in combating crime, not only in the narcotics field but in other areas. And you think these two statutes would be very useful weapons.

Mr. GIORDANO. Absolutely. I certainly feel, particularly on the wiretapping, that this should be under all proper safeguards so it is not left to the enforcement officer himself to decide. I think both bills do provide that.

The CHAIRMAN. It would have to be an absolutely proper showing made before a court of competent jurisdiction, making sure that it is never used except in a legitimate search for people who are violating the law, or on the occasion of other criminal activity.

Senator Brewster, have you any questions?

Senator BREWSTER. Mr. Commissioner, does the Bureau of Narcotics now tap any wires at all?

Mr. GIORDANO. No, we do not.

Senator BREWSTER. Do you employ any private contractors of any type to tap any wires?

Mr. GIORDANO. No, we do not.

Senator BREWSTER. Do you in any way receive any information from the interception of telephonic communication?

Mr. GIORDANO. We do not, that I know of. I mean we receive information and I would have no way of knowing whether somebody gave us information that they got some other way. But as far as I know, no. I may go a little further to explain that the Treasury Department, not only the Bureau of Narcotics but the Treasury Department, has an order which has been long standing. As I recall, it has been in effect ever since I came in the Bureau. That is no wiretapping, period.

Senator BREWSTER. Do you use any type of electronic or mechanical device other than what is commonly called a wiretap to intercept any type of audiocommunication?

Mr. GIORDANO. I would say we do not use anything to intercept any type of an audiocommunication with the exception of agents who may be working undercover may have a transmitter on them so that other agents can be listening to what transpires between our agent and the person he is talking to in the undercover work. But other than that—

664 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator BREWSTER. Is this a successful operation, where some type of device is carried that will transmit the conversation that transpires?

Mr. GIORDANO. I think it is very helpful for cooperative purposes, when you are in court.

Senator BREWSTER. Is the evidence obtained that way admissible in court?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes, it is.

Senator BREWSTER. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Javits?

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Giordano, let me first thank you for defending the good name of New York. I gathered that in my absence there was some discussion about why there are so many addicts in the New York area. Of course, it is the greatest seaport in the country and thus is naturally a center of narcotic addiction. I gather Los Angeles also has an unusually high percentage; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. And Chicago.

Senator JAVITS. May I ask you first about the testimony which we have just released, given by Joseph Valachi on October 29, 1963, and your reference to some of the Valachi testimony. Does your testimony take into account the testimony we have just released?

Mr. GIORDANO. No; I don't believe so. What I referred to was testimony—as I recall, that was public testimony at the time—where Valachi indicated, when the question was asked about narcotic traffickers and the involvement of these people in narcotics.

Senator JAVITS. When we had the Valachi hearings, there was some question about a statute which would perhaps expand the concept of consorting, as we have in some State statutes, with underworld characters. May I ask you, Mr. Giordano—as this testimony is now released, and as the committee would also, probably, with the chairman's usual beneficence, make available to you anything else you might need which has not been made public—whether you feel any other legislation should be recommended by your Bureau than the legislation you have already recommended, based upon what we now know about the operation of the so-called underworld families in the narcotics field?

Mr. GIORDANO. I would be very happy to furnish the committee with my views, the Bureau's views, after I have had an opportunity to study the testimony.

Senator JAVITS. As directed to that particular situation.

Mr. GIORDANO. As directed; correct.

Senator JAVITS. I also would like to ask you about the controversy which has been going on in the medical profession with respect to the Harrison Act. First, would you tell me if there is any attitude of the Department on some controlled experiment with the prescription of narcotics, according to the British plan, for narcotic addicts? Has your Bureau or has the Treasury Department developed any position on that?

Mr. GIORDANO. Our position on that is the position that has come out of the various groups: the American Medical Association; the National Research Council; the President's Ad Hoc Committee; the Presidential Commission; where they are all in opposition to maintaining addicts on narcotics. As far as research is concerned—research into methods of withdrawal and different ways to approach it—we support this research.

Senator JAVITS. I think those are two separate questions; but you have answered them both.

Under those circumstances, what is your comment on the argument which seems to be raging in the medical profession, in which some doctors claim that the Harrison Act does not prevent doctors from prescribing narcotic drugs if they wish, and some doctors claim that it does and that doctors have been placed in grave jeopardy by rulings of the Bureau and, hence, treated as if it were prohibited by law?

Mr. GIORDANO. I think first the report that you make reference to is the New York Academy report, and there are many inaccuracies in that report which I have called to their attention. They apparently do not wish to correct it.

The other is the Advisory Council of Judges to the National Crime and Delinquency. I have some material here where we feel that our regulations are not contrary to any of the Supreme Court decisions, including the Linder case.

Senator JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may offer for the record the two reports to which Mr. Giordano has just referred; that of the New York Academy of Medicine and that of the Judges—

Mr. ADLERMAN. We will have representatives of both of those organizations testify next week.

Senator JAVITS. If I may continue, I think it would be very useful, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The reports can be received now and made an exhibit to his testimony and, thereafter if you wish and find it necessary, you may incorporate them into the record.

Senator JAVITS. Also, if Mr. Giordano would not object, before we have these witnesses, perhaps we could have his critique of these two reports.

Mr. GIORDANO. Absolutely.

Senator JAVITS. I think it would be extremely helpful to us, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you supply them?

Mr. GIORDANO. We do have, and I think I have furnished to Mr. Adlerman, a document, where we comment on the statement of the Advisory Council of Judges, and the comments regarding the interpretation of the Linder decision, our regulations and what they mean and what they say. Attached to that is a letter from Judge Smith, who was one of the judges that was on this Commission, the Advisory Council, where he takes violent issue with the report even prior to its release.

He has authorized me to use this letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Let this be received and made exhibit No. 1.

(Documents referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 1" and will be found in the Appendix on p. 808.)

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, we will have to recess soon and, after that if you wish, you may interrogate the witness about it. This may cover what you had in mind. At least after reading it, you would know what it is more completely.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you.

666 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. Giordano, after looking over both of these reports, and bearing in mind that we will have these witnesses, would you consider giving us any additional critique that you feel would be justified so that we may more intelligently question you?

Mr. GIORDANO. I would be happy to.

(Comments of the Commissioner of Narcotics on the "Report on Drug Addiction" by the New York Academy of Medicine will be found in the appendix on p. 834.)

Senator JAVITS. There is one other point I would like to pursue. I am happy that you thought well of Senator Keating's legislation and mine with respect to rehabilitation of the narcotic addict who is not a seller or trafficker of narcotics. Would you say that that represents the largest number in percentage of the narcotic addicts—the ones who are not sellers of traffic in narcotics?

Mr. GIORDANO. Who would be the largest what?

Senator JAVITS. Percentage of addicts.

Mr. GIORDANO. No; I wouldn't say that would be the largest percentage.

Senator JAVITS. Could you give us any estimate of those who would fall in that category? That is, you list, say, 48,000 addicts. What percentage would you classify as addicts who are not engaged in commercial selling or traffic—as an order of magnitude, I realize you can't be specific?

Mr. GIORDANO. It would be strictly an estimate on my part as to how many, but I would say maybe 40 to 50 percent.

Senator JAVITS. About half in round figures?

Mr. GIORDANO. About half.

Senator JAVITS. So that our legislation for civil commitment in lieu of criminal prosecution would reach about half of the narcotics addicts?

Mr. GIORDANO. Not necessarily, because this relates to the Federal offenses. If you are asking, under the Federal law, the number that are brought in, I would say it would reach very few because our effort is directed toward the major trafficker. It would be helpful in other areas, for instance, other Federal violations, thefts of checks by an addict, and so on. But I think the area where the main approach should be made is at the State level on a civil commitment program to reach these people even before they become involved with the law.

Senator JAVITS. Generally speaking, do you approve of the approach of our State law in New York, which seeks to do exactly this?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes; I approve of it, and not only that but we cooperated in preparing it. The unfortunate thing, I think, is that they are not using the compulsory feature of it. They are using only the voluntary feature or the court feature of it.

As I testified earlier, there is another sad situation, I think, and this I mentioned in New York earlier this year, that in New York City almost half of the cases that go in end up as a misdemeanor. They are felonies but to clear the calendar they make them a misdemeanor. What happens under those circumstances is that the addict, when he knows it is a felony, then he takes advantage of the treatment. But when it is reduced to a misdemeanor, he will take the 3 months in jail instead of the treatment.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 667

(At this point Senator McClellan withdrew from the hearing room.)

Senator JAVITS. That is the so-called one-eighth-of-an-ounce rule?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right.

Senator JAVITS. And you would think this is defeating the purpose, to some extent, of the New York law?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

Senator JAVITS. I assure you I will take it up with our law enforcement people to see what answer they have to the point which you have raised.

Mr. GIORDANO. I also feel—in fact, I talked to Mr. Volker about this—there should be an expansion of this Metcalf-Volker Act, and that is to provide or permit other people to bring a person, we will say, before a committee magistrate, to present the documentation to bring him for commitment.

I think it has now been confined to a member of the family or a health officer. Many times the police officer runs into somebody else or some other individual who could bring this before the committee magistrate instead of standing there waiting until the man ends up committing some violation.

Senator JAVITS. I shall certainly take that up with them as well.

(At this point Senator McClellan entered the hearing room.)

Senator JAVITS. I would like to ask you specifically about the four bills that have been introduced by Senator Keating and myself. You have already commented on one of the bills which in this Congress is S. 864, in relation to civil commitment.

You also commented, and correct me if I am wrong, about my own bill, S. 862, of which Senator Keating is a sponsor, which would strengthen the on-going program of federally aided research under the National Institute of Mental Health into causes and cures, withdrawal techniques, and so forth.

I gather you fully approve of that?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

Senator JAVITS. Is it not shocking that so little has been done on this dread scourge in the way of research as to how to deal with the subject, medically, and in other respects?

Mr. GIORDANO. I think a considerable amount of research has been done that apparently is not maybe publicized enough. There has been a lot of work in Lexington along this line. This does not say it should stop.

Senator JAVITS. Do you feel that transferring more of the effort to the National Institutes of Health would be a useful thing to try?

Mr. GIORDANO. I don't know just in what areas it should be, Senator, but I still support research in this area.

Senator JAVITS. My bill proposes to authorize, specifically, a program in the National Institute of Mental Health.

Mr. GIORDANO. As I recall, they are supposed to be, at this time, responsible in that area.

Senator JAVITS. Except that they have no money.

Are you acquainted with Senator Dodd's bill to endeavor to do more in the international control field? Do you care to make any comment on that?

668 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. GIORDANO. I believe that is in another area. That is in the amphetamine and barbiturate area. So I would rather not.

Senator JAVITS. The fourth bill in the series Senator Keating and I have sponsored, S. 861, would authorize aid to States and localities or nonprofit organizations to engage in both treatment and rehabilitation within the metropolitan environment. That is designed to get away from the "bluegrass" commitment idea, in which an addict who has been treated at Lexington or Fort Worth goes back to narcotics as soon as he returns to his metropolitan environment because there is no followup there.

We have begun to do something about that in my own construction, which has been adopted by the Senate-House conferees, of the Community Mental Health Centers Construction Act passed last year. That program is just about getting started, but wherever such centers are constructed, they may include facilities for treatment of narcotics addicts.

Would you have any comment on the need for any such program?

Mr. GIORDANO. As you know, I can't comment on a specific bill unless I have seen it, but I would say that our feeling in the Bureau is and always has been that the responsibility for the treatment of the addict first falls upon the State people, in areas where they have a large problem, where the Federal Government should support, then I feel the Government should give support. I think this is generally your bill.

Senator JAVITS. That is it exactly.

Mr. GIORDANO. We feel that that is necessary, yes, in those areas where they do need support. But I still feel that it is initially the States responsibility.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further questions?

There may be a few other questions after the noon recess, but I think we will recess now. It will be our purpose to come back at 2:30. I may observe, however, there is legislation on the floor of the Senate that is under consideration that there may be votes upon.

Again, we may not be able to keep our schedule. But we will try to come back at 2:30. Please return at that time.

The committee stands in recess until 2:30.

(Members present at time of recess: Senators McClellan, Brewster, and Javits.)

(Whereupon, at 12:30 p.m., the subcommittee recessed, to reconvene at 2:30 p.m. of the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

(The subcommittee reconvened at 3:07 p.m., Senator John L. McClellan, chairman of the subcommittee, presiding.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

TESTIMONY OF HENRY L. GIORDANO—Resumed

The CHAIRMAN. We will proceed.

There is just one question that the Chair wishes to ask you before I yield to Senator Brewster or the counsel.

Your testimony this morning indicated that great progress has been made, particularly in the matter of reducing the number of addicts in this country during the past half century, I would say.

With that tremendous progress, would you say there is any urgent need for the continuation of the effort? In other words, would you say that we have the matter under such control now that the conditions are so generally satisfactory that we could begin to relax our efforts? Do you think that condition prevails?

Mr. GIORDANO. No, that condition does not prevail, Senator, because I think what we have to do is we have to prevent the formation of new addicts, and we have to do something about treating those addicts, curing them, at this time, and I think there is still a lot of work in this area of treatment and rehabilitation. Certainly we can't let down on the enforcement, because the moment we relax immediately there will be an upsurge, without a doubt, in the availability of drugs.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, we can't be satisfied with conditions as they are now because although they are very gratifying and we have made the progress we have, the fact is if we did relax our effort this condition wouldn't prevail very long; is that the contention?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, constant vigilance and diligence is necessary in the enforcement field in order to maybe hopefully continue to reduce the consequences of this traffic, illicit traffic, and also with the idea of preventing the creation and development of new addicts, and an expanding market for the product.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is absolutely correct, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. So to further carry on the program of prevention and law enforcement in this field, you think you need the two additional weapons that you spoke of this morning?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes, we do.

The CHAIRMAN. Those are the legislative weapons.

Senator Brewster, have you any questions before I permit counsel to proceed?

Senator BREWSTER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask one further question.

You have indicated, Mr. Commissioner, that a very substantial number of addicts take the misdemeanor charge and 90 days incarceration. My question is: In 90 days does the addict physically recover from the effects of the previous addiction? Does the body, itself, recover from the effects of the drug?

Mr. GIORDANO. Within 90 days the individual will be off drugs and the physical craving will have disappeared. However, the mental condition is still there and the moment they are released they go right back to the use of drugs again.

670 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Senator BREWSTER. So the fact that the addict does go back is not because of a physical craving; it is because of a mental weakness or a mental condition?

Mr. GIORDANO. This is as I understand it from talking to them and also from the medical authorities at the hospitals who have studied the situation.

Senator BREWSTER. In your opinion, the 90 days incarceration serves very little useful purpose so far as a cure of the addict is concerned?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

Senator BREWSTER. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Mr. Counsel.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Commissioner, could you give us the statistics as to the number of addicts in the United States?

Mr. GIORDANO. The number that we have recorded, that have been reported to us by various State and local law enforcement and health agencies, as of December 31, 1963, totals 48,535.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In addition to that, I believe you understand, or it is well known, that this does not account for all the addicts in the United States.

Mr. GIORDANO. No, this doesn't.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Those are the ones that have been reported to you.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What is the estimate as to the number of actual addicts in the United States?

Mr. GIORDANO. I would estimate that it would not exceed 60,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. About 60,000?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And about another 12,000 in addition to those reported.

Mr. GIORDANO. About.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you have about four-fifths of them reported to you.

Mr. GIORDANO. That we believe; yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Could you give us a breakdown as to the main section of the country or areas where addiction is most prevalent?

Mr. GIORDANO. The main areas of the country are actually New York, California, and Illinois, with Michigan running a low fourth. In New York City, of the number that are reported to us, they account for 48.3 percent, almost half of the addicts reported to us being in New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. As Senator Javits suggested this morning, is that because these places are ports, like Los Angeles and New York?

Mr. GIORDANO. Well, that contributes to the problem, metropolitan areas that are ports.

The CHAIRMAN. And it also provides the opportunity to bring them in, does it not?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes, sir; that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, where you have the most commerce, an area particularly on the seashore, these are places where it is most likely to come in, to be smuggled into the country; is that true?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct. However, there are many other factors involved, such as when you run into areas of leniency it is natural, then, for the addicts to end up in that area, and the traffickers.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 671

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, where there is a tendency to be lenient by the courts and the law enforcement officials, the risk is not so great because the cost of punishment is less, and, therefore, they are willing to take the risk more readily than they would in an area where the law is strictly enforced and where penalties are heavy.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

Illinois is second with 14.6 percent of the addicts. Those are mainly in Chicago. California is third, with 14 percent. The majority are in Los Angeles. Then in Michigan, it is 3.6 percent, and most of those are in Detroit. So in four States you have almost 80 percent of the problem.

The CHAIRMAN. In four States you have 80 percent of the problem, is that what you say?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you tell us, Mr. Commissioner, what type of person it is? Are they low-income groups of people, or any particular race of people, the largest victims? I assume it is the low-income people generally; is it not?

Mr. GIORDANO. Generally people in low incomes, generally people who have some personality defect, or they are referred to by the medical authorities as addiction-prone. The economic area and environment both playing a part in it.

At the present time, the ratio is about 5 to 1, five men to one woman.

In the other area, the Negro addicts account for 53.9 percent of the total number. In the other areas, in these charts I have submitted it is broken down, the Mexican addicts—and this is primarily in the California and Texas areas—6.6 percent; in the Puerto Rican nationality it is 11.7. The remainder of the 26.9 are white addicts, the remainder are the white addicts. This is the general picture of the grouping.

The CHAIRMAN. In that respect, some statement has been made here indicating that the Communist apparatus undertakes to promote illicit drug traffic. What can you say about that and how can you relate it in any way to any of these areas, the general traffic here in this country?

Mr. GIORDANO. I can relate it primarily to the Far Eastern area, that a good, major portion of the opium flowing out the Far Eastern area comes out of Yunnan Province in China with no effort on the part of the Communist government to do anything about it.

The CHAIRMAN. You get no cooperation from the government there, the actual source of the ingredients of the product?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Without that cooperation, it makes it more difficult for you to stop it at its source.

Mr. GIORDANO. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. You have to stop it somewhere this side of where the poppy is grown.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right. That is why, in our expanding operation, one of the key offices we opened was the office in Bangkok, Thailand, which is where this is flowing.

The CHAIRMAN. You think by opening that office there you have been able to be more effective?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes, we have.

672 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. I notice you have opened a number of offices overseas in the last few years. You think that enables you to cut off the source?

Mr. GIORDANO. I am sure it has been helpful. The chart that the chairman permitted to be introduced earlier will show the upswing in the seizures since we established these offices, seizure of drugs in quantity. It shows the price ratio. All of those drugs were put out of circulation before they even started to head for the United States.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Commissioner, as to the areas, geographical areas where the addiction is most prevalent, in New York State it would be in New York City, primarily.

Mr. GIORDANO. Practically all in New York City.

Mr. ADLERMAN. With 22,886 reported addicts in New York City.

Mr. GIORDANO. I think there were only about 500 outside of New York.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Outside of New York City?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The same is true in Illinois. Chicago is the highly concentrated area for addiction.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is true.

Mr. ADLERMAN. With some 7,028 addicts; is that right?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Reported addicts.

Mr. GIORDANO. Practically all in Chicago or the immediate area of Chicago.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Los Angeles would be third, with 2,600 and some odd.

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And Detroit with 1,700.

Mr. GIORDANO. Practically all in Detroit.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And the District of Columbia with a little over 1,000 reported addicts.

Mr. GIORDANO. Right.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That would be the fifth largest city.

Mr. GIORDANO. May I say that in California, while the majority are in Los Angeles, however, San Francisco, a seaport, does have a number, but most of them are in Los Angeles.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, the reported addicts may not be the actual number. There may be a larger percentage. There may be 25 per cent that are not reported.

Mr. GIORDANO. As I say, we estimate it should not exceed 60,000.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, I notice that these are the areas—New York, Chicago, and so forth—are the areas where organized crime has its strongholds; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In your experience as Commissioner, and prior to that time when you were in the Bureau of Narcotics for many years, have you found that the organized crime has spread to any large extent outside of the New York City and Chicago-Detroit areas?

Mr. GIORDANO. Well, I have found that they seem to confine themselves to the major cities. There are some outside in certain other cities where they are entrenched, but primarily New York, Chicago, Los Angeles.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 673

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you find as a general rule that the heroin traffic, which is the biggest addiction drug in the United States, the heroin traffic is mostly in the hands—particularly on the wholesale, import level, distributing level—in the hands of organized crime?

Mr. GIORDANO. Well, I would say with the exception of the movement of drugs from Mexico.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That is the one exception in this whole picture of heroin addiction?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right. But in the areas where the major shipments are involved, the large shipments, why, the members of organized crime are right in the middle of it.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now, prior to the 1920's and maybe the 1930's and so forth, a little prior to that time, at the point where we had as many as 1 person out of 400 addicted, geographically where were these people located and what were the ethnic groups that were involved?

Mr. GIORDANO. At that time they were distributed pretty well across the country, not only in the larger cities, but even in smaller rural areas. The ratio at that time showed 5 women to 1 man, and primarily white origin.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So that prior to the 1920's the problem of addiction was widespread throughout the United States?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes, it was.

Mr. ADLERMAN. In the rural areas as well as the cities.

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That was the day before the strict enforcement under the Harrison Act and under the Boggs Act and other acts in between.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not true at that time they could go to the local doctor and get treatment?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. So the question arises, I think, that making drugs available to the addict by doctor's prescription is not the way to remedy this situation apparently.

Mr. GIORDANO. This would not remedy it. All we would have would be a resurgence of the problem that we had back in the 1920's.

The CHAIRMAN. I can remember times when you could go to a doctor and if a doctor gave you a prescription, it was all right. He was the judge of whether you needed it and, therefore, he could prescribe it and administer it. I don't think turning to that system would give us any relief at all.

Mr. GIORDANO. No, actually if you give an addict drugs you are not curing drug addiction. That does not solve the problem.

The CHAIRMAN. The only way to cure him is to take him off them.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Another thing, while we are on this particular subject, if a doctor has the right to prescribe it just as a matter of accommodating an addict, would not new addicts be created by reason of going to a doctor and perhaps pretending they needed it, claiming they needed it, or something? I don't know whether that is the way to get started. I don't know how they get started.

Mr. GIORDANO. Generally the addicts become addicted through association with other addicts. These people that are addicts have sufficient drugs available to start someone to becoming an addict, that is, a person who is prone to be, addiction prone or susceptible because of their environment, they become an addict.

The CHAIRMAN. Do addicts encourage others to become addicts?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes, indeed. There was a study made several years ago in Lexington and the doctors who made the study estimated that each addict created four new addicts provided he had the drugs available.

The CHAIRMAN. Provided the drugs were available to him, each addict will create four more?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't know that anyone is actively advocating now returning to that system of permitting doctors to prescribe it, but if so, it seems to me these facts would counsel against such action.

Mr. GIORDANO. We hear this program mentioned quite frequently.

The CHAIRMAN. There are those who still feel that is the way to handle the problem?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. But from your experience, you would say that is the worst thing you could do?

Mr. GIORDANO. Absolutely.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Commissioner, a little while ago, in answer to Senator Brewster's question, you were asked about the dependency on drugs physically and psychologically, but an addict can be withdrawn from drugs usually in the course of maybe a week or 2 weeks in a hospital by gradual withdrawing of the drugs, and he loses his physical dependency on drugs in the course of only a couple of weeks; is that right?

Mr. GIORDANO. It varies. Sometimes it is 2 weeks and sometimes a little longer, depending upon the degree of addiction.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Let's say a month. However, the real problem is not the physical dependence on the drugs as it is a psychological need for a means to support the man's personality or woman's personality. They have a weakness in their nature and they need something to give them a boost or a kick, whatever it may be; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. This is what I understand from the studies that have been made on this problem.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Throughout the country there are certain areas where the drugs are not available now, in rural areas. You don't have the criminal element there present with the drugs available. In those areas, would you have people who would be, say, prone to addiction if it were available, if it were accessible to them?

Mr. GIORDANO. I don't think there is any doubt that we would have people in those areas. We have large alcoholic problems. We have the problem now developing on amphetamines and barbiturates, developing in the outside areas.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Many people who tend toward alcoholism, if drugs were available, if opiates were available, they would go to opiates, wouldn't they?

Mr. GIORDANO. I don't think there is any question.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I think we should make clear that there are millions of people who have been treated for medical conditions, men badly wounded during wartime, who received narcotics of one sort or another, who, if their personality is well adjusted, physically and mentally, while they have been receiving a course of drugs or sedatives, opiates of some kind, do not become addicted. They are not prone to addiction. They can throw it off. They don't come to rely upon the drugs; isn't that true?

Mr. GIORDANO. This is true.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This is true in the civilian population as well?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is true.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But there are some groups of people who have a weakness in their personality and they need something to support them other than the ordinary method of living; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Commissioner, as I understood you a while ago, you said there was a time when there were five women to one man addicted.

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And that situation has about reversed?

Mr. GIORDANO. Just reversed.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you attribute that to?

Mr. GIORDANO. Well, of course, at that time we had these many home remedies that primarily had narcotics in them, sold over the counter or prescribed quite freely, in which the women would use it for a particular condition, and as a result they were brought in contact with the narcotic much more at that time than the male was.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Commissioner, you have had a number of addicts under observation at one time or another. You have had to deal with them for many years now; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You have had considerable experience with them. Do you feel that the majority of them are capable of holding a job and leading a useful life while they are under addiction?

Mr. GIORDANO. I would say absolutely no. I have never seen any that have been able to efficiently operate while under drugs. This doesn't mean that they can't do some jobs. But the efficiency is impaired and generally they are unable to hold a job. In many cases they are unskilled and it makes it even more difficult.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Let's take the doctor or the nurse who becomes addicted because the drug is available to them, accessible to them, and they become addicted. There is a certain percentage of the doctors and nurses in the United States who are well known to be a problem because of the accessibility of drugs to them, and that certain of them do become addicts; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Is it generally found that once they become addicts, a short time after that they are incapable of handling themselves as doctors should handle themselves, or as nurses should handle themselves?

Mr. GIORDANO. Every one that I have had dealings with in my 23 years—I have seen doctors who completely ruin their practice as a result of being on drugs. Drugs were available. There was no reason that they couldn't see the fact that it was ruining them. They had drugs available and their practice was ruined, their life was ruined, their family was ruined. As a perfect example, here is an individual who is educated and it is very obvious that as long as they are on drugs they cannot function.

Senator BREWSTER. May I interject for a moment?

Commissioner, if you take a perfectly normal, healthy person, who is healthy physically and mentally and in every way whatsoever, and they would agree to take drugs over a period of several months, in spite of their health to start with, would they automatically become addicted?

Mr. GIORDANO. They would acquire a certain attachment to the drug, but they would be able to be taken off of it without any recurrence.

Senator BREWSTER. So you would generally say there has to be some built-in weakness in the person to become an addict?

Mr. GIORDANO. This isn't what I say. This is what the medical authorities say. This is what, from my experience, appears to be the case.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Following the point raised by Senator Brewster, I would like to clarify that. Would you say that that type of person, a person well adjusted mentally and physically, who is given a long course of drugs, develops not so much a psychological dependency on the drugs, but a physical dependency on the drugs, and when he is taken down and they are diminished to the point where he is not taking any at all, and you dry him out, he loses his physical dependency after a period of treatment, but mentally he has never been an addict; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I know there would have to be a rough estimate, but what do you estimate the average cost of addiction is per addict? Is there an average cost?

Mr. GIORDANO. We have estimated that it costs, based on the number of addicts reported, about $350 million a year to support their habit.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean "to support them"? Do you mean the cost of the drugs?

Mr. GIORDANO. The cost of the drugs to support them; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. About $350 million expended at the consumer level?

Mr. GIORDANO. At the consumer level.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Again we come to the proposition that if they become addicts, they don't lead a useful life, they can't hold a job, so they have to get the money in one form or another. What are the common ways that they acquire the money to support their habit of addiction?

Mr. GIORDANO. One of the most common is theft of property and, of course, prostitution, gambling. In fact, they move in all the criminal areas. They are not confined to any one. Some more than others.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Generally the women will go into either prostitution or shoplifting—they call it "boosting," or something of that sort; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The men will generally go into some form of thievery, check kiting, check raising, forgery, or something of that sort, mostly crimes not against the person so much as it is crime against property.

Mr. GIORDANO. It is primarily in this area.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Occasionally, of course, you get one that is violent. I think you pointed out one case today where a heroin addict shot and killed a person.

Mr. GIORDANO. A policeman in New York.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So that in order to support the habit of drug addiction, most of them have to resort to crime to get the money.

Mr. GIORDANO. There is no question about that.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And since the estimated cost of the illicit drugs runs to $350 million, if they are stealing, engaged in this form of activity, a certain percentage of them engaged in theft, they would have to steal many times more than the amount of their habit, daily habit, of the cost of the drugs, because they have to dispose of this to fences and so forth, and they only get about 20 to 25 cents on the dollar of value of the thing that they stole; is that correct?

Mr. GIORDANO. If they were in that particular field. As I mentioned there are others, such as prostitution.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Well, if we take a percentage of 50, it would still be a very sizable amount. It would run almost $1 billion in thefts a year to support a habit of $150 or $200 million.

Mr. GIORDANO. This is true. However, I think I pointed out that they are not confined just to this one area of property theft. I mean, they are getting money in other ways, illegal ways.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Such as prostitution and other ways.

Mr. GIORDANO. Yes.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I think the figure on $350 million comes out roughly to about $5,000 per year per addict. Is that about right? Someone handed me these figures and I assume they are correct.

Mr. GIORDANO. I assume they are.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So if half of them are engaged in thievery or theft, it would mean that half of them would be stealing at the rate of maybe $25,000 to $30,000 or $40,000 a year.

Mr. GIORDANO. It is a considerable sum, Mr. Adlerman.

Mr. ADLERMAN. I think I covered most of the points I wanted to raise, Mr. Commissioner. Is there anything else you would like to add?

Mr. GIORDANO. I would like to add this in view of the fact that we got into the area of theft and criminal activity on the part of the addict.

I don't want to leave the impression with this committee or anybody else that as a result of their addiction they are in a criminal activity. California ran a study and there have been studies by other Federal probation groups. The most recent study is one, I think, that the committee will have available from the FBI.

In California, in studying the records out there, they have arrived at the conclusion that 77 percent of the addicts whom they had in custody or had records on had criminal records prior to their addiction. The report from the FBI, which will be available, says that it is 73 percent who were criminals before addiction.

678 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The CHAIRMAN. Which indicates, does it not, that there is an instability in the individual before he becomes an addict?

Mr. GIORDANO. That is correct. It also indicates, I think, if you talk in the area of giving them drugs, this is not going to cure their criminal activity.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Commissioner, we have been advised that the FBI is going to send us a copy of that report. Do you have a copy there that we could put in the record?

Mr. GIORDANO. I have it and I would like to introduce it.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. It may be printed in the record.

(The report referred to follows:)

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
Washington, D.C., July 27, 1964.

NARCOTICS DRUG LAW OFFENDERS

There are two sources of statistical information on narcotic offenders within the FBI; namely, the uniform crime reporting program and criminal fingerprint identification records. The uniform crime reporting program is a collection of police statistics on a monthly and annual basis made possible by the voluntary cooperation of local law enforcement agencies. Criminal fingerprint identification data is also the result of the cooperative exchange of information on persons arrested between the FBI, local, State, and Federal agencies.

"Uniform Crime Reports—1963," a copy of which is enclosed, reveals that nationally there were 23 arrests for narcotic drug law violations per 100,000 population. This rate ranged widely from 58 per 100,000 in large American cities with over 250,000 population, to 8 in the suburban area and 4 narcotic drug law arrests per 100,000 in the rural area. There were an estimated 35,400 arrests for narcotic drug violations during the calendar year 1963. The above publication contains additional pertinent data concerning the age, sex, and race of persons arrested for narcotic drug law violations, as well as a special tabulation on the types of drugs involved in narcotic arrests.

Your attention is invited to page 28 of "Uniform Crime Reports—1963," specifically the section captioned "Careers in Crime." The information discussed therein results from a new statistical program analyzing the criminal histories of known offenders based on criminal fingerprint identification records. The table on page 32 discloses certain characteristics of the chronic narcotic offender. It is based on a review of over 6,000 individual criminal records of persons who had been arrested at least twice and had at least one narcotic violation charge. Of possible interest to your inquiry is that 73 percent of these narcotic offenders were arrested on some other criminal charge prior to the first arrest for a narcotic drug law violation.

The following information was developed from a further examination of the above criminal records, but limited to 1,000 narcotic offenders who were identified by local authorities as "addicts" or users of narcotic drugs. Keep in mind that this is the record of the chronic offender who failed to respond to court or correctional treatment. The mean average age of these offenders was 34. Less than 1 percent were under 20 years of age, 53 percent were between 25 and 34 years of age, and slightly more than 6 percent were over 50 years of age. The average criminal career of these 1,000 offenders; that is, span of years from first to latest arrest, was almost 12½ years. During this period these offenders averaged 11 arrests for criminal acts; 19 percent had been arrested for a narcotic violation on one occasion, 22 percent twice, and 59 percent were arrested three or more times on a narcotic drug law violation.

These records indicate that 55 percent received either a suspended sentence, probation, parole, or conditional release on a narcotic charge during their criminal careers. After this leniency, they averaged five new arrests for criminal violations. Again, 73 percent of these narcotic offenders were arrested for some other criminal offense prior to their first arrest on a narcotic charge. Over half of these 1,000 narcotic offenders had been arrested during the course of their criminal careers for narcotic offenses by both Federal and local authorities.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Mr. ADLERMAN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Commissioner, thank you very much.

If, in the course of the hearings, which will continue from time to time, and be recessed from time to time, you come into possession of other information that you think is pertinent to this inquiry or if you recall something that you haven't told us that we should know, we will welcome it and we will be glad to have you come back again to place the material in the record.

Since we are into this, I would like to make this a thorough and complete study of the problem. We have made progress that is gratifying and satisfying, and we would like to go on further and try to eliminate this evil from our midst. As we build this record, we will want to consider legislation that may be needed and helpful in pursuit of our objective. If you have any suggestions for legislation that come to your mind that the committee should weigh, we would like to have those, too.

We do appreciate your cooperation; that of your office and your agency. Thank you.

Mr. GIORDANO. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Anslinger, will you come around, please, sir?

You do solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give before this Senate subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. ANSLINGER. I do.

TESTIMONY OF HARRY J. ANSLINGER

The CHAIRMAN. Will you identify yourself for the record, please?

Mr. ANSLINGER. My name is Harry J. Anslinger. I reside at 612 Pine Street, Hollidaysburg, Pa. I am at present the U.S. representative on the Commission on Narcotic Drugs of the United Nations.

The CHAIRMAN. Formerly you served—

Mr. ANSLINGER. As Federal Commissioner of Narcotics.

The CHAIRMAN. For how many years?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Thirty-two years.

The CHAIRMAN. Prior to that, were you in the service?

Mr. ANSLINGER. I was in the Treasury Department service and also in the Diplomatic and Consular Service. Also an observer at the League of Nations for some 10 or 12 years at the opening of the Vichy Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Then we can say for the record that there is no one in the United States who is possessed of greater experience in this field than you are.

Mr. ANSLINGER. You are being very generous.

The CHAIRMAN. We certainly welcome you. Do you have a prepared statement?

Mr. ANSLINGER. I have, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, we will be glad to hear it.

Mr. ANSLINGER. Mr. Chairman and honorable members of the committee, I am going to confine my remarks mostly to the international field.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

680 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ANSLINGER. There are nine treaties and protocols covering the control of narcotic drugs. There was the protocol of 1953 which limits the production of opium to medical and scientific needs of the world. The legitimate areas are Turkey, India, the U.S.S.R., and Yugoslavia.

The CHAIRMAN. What you attempt to do with this treaty you are referring to is to limit the amount of production to the medical needs.

Mr. ANSLINGER. To the medical and scientific needs after an estimate is submitted to an international body by all of the nations of the world, and there is the limitation of the manufacture of narcotic and synthetic narcotic drugs, and that limitation comes by reason of the fact that all of the nations of the world—all of them—must submit an estimate to a supervisory body in Geneva not later than the first of August of every year and that limitation applies even to parties and nonparties, and if a country refuses to submit an estimate, their sovereign power is taken over by this international body which makes the estimate for that country.

Then there is the control of the distribution, import and export system, set under the 1925 convention. The statistical reporting goes to a central board in Geneva which reviews the world traffic twice yearly.

Then there is a regulation of the trade under the 1912 convention where all those who handle narcotic drugs must be licensed—have a special license. Now, these controls cover opium and 25 opium derivatives, the coca leaf and its derivatives like cocaine. Now, there are 58 synthetic narcotic drugs, all of which are habit forming, and fortunately which are under such control. We have not seen any international illicit traffic in these drugs. And, of course, cannabis (marihuana).

In 1961 a conference was held to consolidate all of these previous agreements into a single convention. That is an excellent treaty except in two areas (a) it seeks to do away with the provisions of the 1953 protocol which limits the production of opium to a few countries. It permits production for export in the present producing countries and in any country which desires to produce up to 5 tons of opium. This would destroy the present system of limiting production and would create excessive production.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that a pending treaty which has not been executed—which constitutes a proposal?

Mr. ANSLINGER. It has 35 ratifications. It needs 40. Most of the ratifications have come from the small nations. The U.S.S.R. has ratified. I think that is the largest.

Senator CURTIS. Would it be binding on all?

Mr. ANSLINGER. No, sir.

Senator CURTIS. Only those who ratify?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Only those who ratify. We will still be parties to the 1953 protocol, and until that is changed, that protocol, so far as we are concerned, the parties must recognize the needs to abide by it.

Senator CURTIS. Does that apply only to the United States?

Mr. ANSLINGER. It is only for legitimate medical and scientific needs. This 5-ton thing is the most unfortunate thing that could have crept into the treaty. I do not see how any country could possibly limit the production to 5 tons for export. Sooner or later it would roll out of control.

If they are supposed to put in an opium monopoly, there are very few opium monopolies which even the large producers of opium have put in which are quite effective. India and Russia have the two effective, very effective, monopolies which limit the production and distribution.

(b) There is a reservation clause in that treaty which would permit any party to avoid being bound by estimates of the drug requirements established by this Board, this international organization, for that party, for any other party, or for any nonparty.

Today, they are all locked up in this 1931 convention, and they are subject to the estimates made by those countries, or if they are not made by the country the Board makes them. Under these provisions, that would disappear, to some extent. Likewise, any party, by reservation, can prevent the examination of its statistics with a view to determining whether the requirements of the convention are being fulfilled.

Today they can be called before the Bar of Justice of the International Bar and they must make an explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. Was all of this designed to weaken our present control and enforcement of the drugs?

(At this point Senator Brewster withdrew from the hearing room.)

Mr. ANSLINGER. It was not designed to do it, but I am quite sure that it would do it.

The CHAIRMAN. On the face of it it indicates that it would.

Mr. ANSLINGER. It would. I am sure that is why the State Department has not sent that convention up here for ratification and does not intend to. It requires 40 ratifications or accessions. So far there have been, say, 35, mostly small nations, and I believe there are several pending, several ratifications pending, which will put that convention into operation this year. We do not intend to ratify it and I am quite sure the Senate would look with disfavor on this treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think there will be the 40 nations ratifying it by the end of this year?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes, sir; by the end of this year, I am quite sure.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, it then goes into effect.

Mr. ANSLINGER. It goes into effect but we are not bound by it.

The CHAIRMAN. Binding only on those who subscribed to it?

Mr. ANSLINGER. That is right. And everything else disappears.

Senator CURTIS. Will it make the problem of control and enforcement in this country more difficult?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Much more difficult.

Senator CURTIS. Did any country or group of countries lobby these small countries into ratifying it?

Mr. ANSLINGER. I wouldn't go so far as to call it lobbying, except that you hold out to these smaller nations the idea that they can produce up to 5 tons for export and, therefore, solve their economic needs. I think the smaller nations have been misled. We tried to point out that certainly no nation could solve its economic disabilities by production of 5 tons.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the value of 5 tons for export? What would be the market value?

682 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Mr. ANSLINGER. Very little. I think it would hardly pay for the manager of the plantation.

The U.S. Government does not intend to ratify, because of these two glaring defects. Outside of that, this is a very fine convention. But we hope this time, and we have some support, to get a revision of this convention after it has been in operation maybe for 1 or 2 years and they will see that it was a very unwise thing to do to take the work of 50 years and suddenly come up with a convention that could very likely be unworkable.

I hope I am wrong, however.

The CHAIRMAN. What has been done to counteract this inducement that has been held out to these countries to get them to ratify the treaty? Has there been no countereffort made to indicate to them what is involved here, and that they are actually, in effect, opening up somewhat of a floodgate for this to get out into the markets of the world to the consumers?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Sir, the State Department, through its embassies abroad, have contacted every government and pointed out these defects. I think the fact that this convention was signed in 1961, and this is 1964, indicates the State Department has been very effective in convincing all nations who hadn't ratified that this could be a backward step. It is quite possible that it might be a little difficult to get the five additional nations. But I think with all of these small nations—because most of these nations that have ratified today are the small nations—Canada and Cuba have ratified, and the U.S.S.R., but beyond that I don't think there is any nation. They are these very small African nations and some of them have an idea that they can come up with—

The CHAIRMAN. Can you tell us to what extent the illicit traffic in narcotics exists in Canada? You said Canada has ratified it.

Mr. ANSLINGER. They have ratified because they were in the leadership in bringing about many of the provisions of the convention. But, of course, they were quite wrong in the matter of the 5 tons and agreeing to the reservation. We don't have a reservation in the 1953 protocol which confines the production to about six or seven countries.

I think the Interdepartmental Committee has rejected the idea of ratifying, and also the President's Advisory Commission has likewise rejected the idea of ratifying and, of course, now we are fighting this rearguard action to prevent it from going into operation, but certainly it will, and from that point on we will have to watch this production situation throughout the world very carefully so that we can move in and see if we can't get a revision to comply more with the U.S. policy, which has always been a strict limitation of production, which we got in 1953 after about 50 years of efforts.

That protocol now disappears insofar as those countries that have ratified the convention, but certainly it wouldn't disappear so far as we are concerned.

LEGITIMATE MANUFACTURE

Prior to 1931, the illicit traffic, the illicit narcotic traffic, was supplied by licensed European and Far Eastern factories. At the present time, there is no known diversion from legitimate factories any place in the world, and that includes the synthetic drugs. The 1931 convention, under which the world operates today and under which everybody is bound, regardless, to limit the manufacture, has been the most effective instrument ever forged in the area of narcotic controls. That disappears with the single convention, except insofar as the United States and other nations.

For instance, I do not think France is going to ratify this treaty. All heroin which is used by the majority of addicts comes from clandestine laboratories.

The manufacture of heroin has been prohibited in all countries except three: the United Kingdom, France, and Belgium. The United Kingdom would manufacture about 90 percent. There are five other countries in addition to these three manufacturing countries which have reported consumption of small quantities of heroin. Even France does not permit the use of it. The use has been outlawed all over the world except in a very few small countries. But in England it is still used widely by the profession.

We can't complain about that manufacture because there has been no diversion.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Mr. Commissioner, did I understand the manufacture of heroin is prohibited generally throughout the world with the exception of these three countries?

Mr. ANSLINGER. It is prohibited throughout the world except those three countries, and its use.

Mr. ADLERMAN. It is not used as a pharmaceutical drug or a medication by most of the doctors in the world with the exception of a very few countries, England, France, and Belgium.

Mr. ANSLINGER. France and Belgium do not permit it. They manufacture a little bit.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They do not permit to to be prescribed?

Mr. ANSLINGER. No.

Mr. ADLERMAN. There are five other countries that do permit it?

Mr. ANSLINGER. They are very small, like Uruguay.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Most of the doctors do not wish to prescribe heroin because it is so highly addictive?

Mr. ANSLINGER. That is correct, and most of the doctors have followed the recommendation of the World Health Organization that the use, medical use, should be discontinued.

Let's take heroin. About five tons were manufactured in licensed factories and today this amount has been reduced to about 100 kilos. In those days, before the 1931 convention took effect, for instance in New York you could buy a kilo of heroin for $360, as much as you wanted.

Mr. ADLERMAN. That was before the Harrison Act?

Mr. ANSLINGER. No, sir. That price went. Until the 1931 convention to limit manufacture, it was still about $350 a kilo. But now it is about $20,000. So this limitation on manufacture has been a magnificent thing. Fortunately, it is all-inclusive in the 1961 convention. They haven't touched that matter of limiting the manufacture. It is the production of opium that we take exception to.

The 1931 convention for instance, world manufacture was reduced 40 tons annually as a result of the necessity of all of these governments having to make their estimate, they had to conform to that estimate, not export any more, not import any more and there were sometimes sanctions or embargoes.

Now we have in the 1953 protocol an embargo in any country that might become a center of illicit traffic by reason of having too much production. The embargo provision has disappeared under the 1961 convention.

Now the manufacture of synthetic drugs is gradually overtaking morphine all over the world. These drugs are under complete control. The manufacturing countries do a very excellent job of keeping manufacture within the limits of the estimates. There is no known diversion into the illicit traffic.

INTERNATIONAL ILLICIT TRAFFIC

Now as to the international illicit traffic, the traffic in opium and its derivatives is centered in several areas in the Far East and here we have, according to the map you will see the——

Mr. ADLERMAN. Do you wish to point out on the map the areas you are discussing now?

Mr. ANSLINGER. This may be the largest area of production here, right in through here. It is Laos, Burma, Thailand, and the mainland of China. That is our largest area.

Mr. ADLERMAN. You do have some opium produced in Yunnan Province in China?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes. There is some here. That is relatively unimportant. This is our biggest production right in this area.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Does that come down by way of Thailand through Bangkok, Singapore, into Hong Kong?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes, it does.

I might point out this, that there is a large production of opium in Burma. The United Nations just recently made a survey and I am unable to give that to the committee right now as to the amount involved because it is still a restricted document but it is substantial. The same thing in Thailand. Thailand was asked for a survey and that will be coming along next year. Laos, we do not know. Certainly in the Yunnan Province the tonnage right now could not be estimated.

The CHAIRMAN. I hate to interrupt you but it seems we have to go to the floor. Can you come back in the morning?

Mr. ANSLINGER. I can come back in the morning. I would like to leave before noon if I could.

The CHAIRMAN. I am sure we can get through with you in the morning. It is just one of these things.

Mr. ANSLINGER. What time, sir?

The CHAIRMAN. Let us come back at 10:30 in the morning. I am sorry we have to recess until in the morning. I hate to interrupt you right in the midst of your excellent presentation. We will have to recess until tomorrow morning at 10:30.

(Members present at time of recess: Senators McClellan and Curtis.)

(Whereupon, at 4:05 p.m. the subcommittee recessed, to reconvene at 10:30 a.m., Wednesday, July 29, 1964.)

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

WEDNESDAY, JULY 29, 1964

U.S. SENATE,
OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
Washington, D.C.

The subcommittee met at 10:45 a.m. in room 3302, New Senate Office Building, pursuant to Senate Resolution 278, agreed to February 10, 1964, Senator John L. McClellan (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Members of the subcommittee present: Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat, Arkansas; Senator Carl T. Curtis, Republican, Nebraska; Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, New York.

Also present: Jerome S. Adlerman, general counsel; Paul B. Kammerick, assistant counsel; La Vern J. Duffy, assistant counsel; Philip W. Morgan, chief counsel to the minority; Eugene J. Marshall, Bureau of Narcotics; Ruth Y. Watt, chief clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will be in order.

(Members of the subcommittee present at time of convening: Senators McClellan, Curtis, and Javits.)

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Anslinger, will you come around, please?

I am sorry that we had to interrupt our meeting yesterday afternoon because of work on the floor and that we were not able to finish with the witness at that time, especially as he was not able to complete his prepared statement. It was the best we could do under the circumstances yesterday, and we will resume this morning, Mr. Anslinger, if you can begin about where you left off, and we will resume with your statement.

TESTIMONY OF HARRY J. ANSLINGER—Resumed

Mr. ANSLINGER. Mr. Chairman and honorable members of the committee, I was talking about the single convention yesterday, and the provision there for a 5-ton production for export by any country.

I wanted to tell you that we tried, of course, to eliminate that entirely, but we did whittle it down from 100 tons to 5 tons.

The CHAIRMAN. You are talking about this convention now?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes; and I say we are not proud of that figure, but we did that. I started yesterday by telling you about traffic in opium and its derivatives centered in several areas of the Far East; that is, the Burma mainland, China, Laos, Thailand border areas.

Clandestine laboratory conversion of opium to morphine, morphine base, and heroin in and around Bangkok, Hong Kong, Singapore, and

Macao supplies illicit traffickers in those areas, and sizable quantities of this illicit production are smuggled to Japan, the United States, and Canada.

A brick morphine of the "999" brand is widely produced in that area, and we have been after the authorities in that region to see if they can't trace the source of it. Of course, the factory might be moving from one place to another, but since we are out there now I am quite sure that we will be locating the source of this brick morphine.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean you don't know where it is produced?

Mr. ANSLINGER. We don't know whether it is Thailand or Burma.

The CHAIRMAN. Yet it has a brand on it?

Mr. ANSLINGER. It is "999."

The CHAIRMAN. That is all that identifies it?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes, sir; and it has been going on for about 5 years. We are going to make a special effort to locate that source. Of course, it will probably move around.

The CHAIRMAN. What would a brick of that weigh? What would be the weight of what you term a "brick," and also about what would be its value?

Mr. ANSLINGER. The value would be astronomical when you convert it into heroin. I don't have any idea.

The CHAIRMAN. When converted into heroin?

Mr. ANSLINGER. The brick is about this size, about the size of this pad of paper.

Now, a United Nations survey, at the request of the Government of Burma, was made of the socioeconomic aspects of opium-producing areas in Burma. That report is still classified, but the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations came along to see what they could do about replacing opium.

The CHAIRMAN. Does Burma cooperate with us?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Very much so, sir. A similar survey is soon to be made by the United Nations in the northern hills of Thailand. Thailand has also asked for a survey, and I assume the Economic and Social Council will agree to that, and the survey will go on sometime this year. In Thailand the situation has been described as a threat to the security of the state and there have been executions for illicit trafficking.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean the Government inflicts a penalty, or the courts there?

Mr. ANSLINGER. The Government has executed several for illicit trafficking on the grounds it is a threat to the security of the state.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think that is discouraging the production of it?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Well, it is not so much the production there, but it is the clandestine laboratories.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the processing.

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes, the processing.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, that seems to be a pretty severe penalty, and it seems to me that would soon bring it under control if any law enforcement would.

Mr. ANSLINGER. They are stepping it up, Mr. Chairman. In fact, I think in one place the Prime Minister went out on a raid himself, because it was getting away from them. Now they have kindly allowed one of our agents to go in there, and he is working with them daily and we see signs of diminishing traffic.

But after this survey, I believe that if we are able to get a crop replacement there, and the traffic dies down a little bit from the northern borders, it might help.

Senator CURTIS. You referred to the executions in Thailand of dope offenders. Now, is my understanding correct that that is what has happened when it has been tied in with the security of the country and the dope traffic is believed to have been part of the Communist conspiracy apparatus?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. It is not in the light of that severe a punishment for ordinary offenders?

Mr. ANSLINGER. No.

Senator CURTIS. It is when it is tied in with the security of the country.

Mr. ANSLINGER. When it is tied in with the security of the state, a threat to the security, there were executions.

Senator JAVITS. May I ask a question there, because I have another committee that I would like to go to.

I notice at the very end of your statement, Mr. Anslinger, that you speak of the fact that even the Soviet bloc is cooperating in the effort to deal with the narcotic transport problem. What would you say about Communist China? We are all advised that Communist China is almost engaged in a conspiracy to feed narcotics out into the world and that ties into the question just asked you by Senator Curtis.

Mr. ANSLINGER. I didn't mean to include the mainland of China in the Soviet bloc, because in the Soviet bloc, Soviet Russia and Poland—and these are producing countries—Russia produces enough opium to take care of her needs, and those of some of the satellites. But Poland and Hungary and Yugoslavia have been cooperating with us all along the line and they have helped us on a lot of scientific projects we have, determining the origin of opium. Of course, I don't include the mainland of China.

Senator JAVITS. Do you know anything about the Communist Chinese situation?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Well, we have presented at the United Nations considerable evidence about the traffic out of Communist China. Naturally, the only reply we get is a slanderous statement. The Russians have asked, naturally, that if we make charges, we should make them with a representative present, which is quite impossible, because we have certainly kept the mainland of China off the Commission. The Nationalist Chinese are the only representatives of the Chinese people who are represented at the United Nations.

Senator JAVITS. Do we trace to Communist China any special influx of narcotics?

Mr. ANSLINGER. From Communist China, you mean?

Senator JAVITS. Yes.

Mr. ANSLINGER. Well, while you are here, Senator, I will read to you this: This is from the 17th session in 1962, and it is just a short review here. This is in the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, a report with reference to the traffic in opium from the Yunnan Province. That is the southernmost Province.

688 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

The representative of China stated on several different occasions, up to as late as 1960, a witness who had been a schoolteacher in Burma, and had seen convoys of 30 to 70 mules coming from Yunnan down through Burma into Thailand. The witness also stated in recent years the traffic from Yunnan to Burma, Thailand, had come to consist more and more of morphine rather than opium, which indicates clandestine laboratories.

Now, there were three witnesses that appeared before the U.S. Treasury officials in Taipei during that year. These three witnesses, former inhabitants of the Yunnan Province of mainland China, who had fled to Formosa, made detailed statements on the cultivation of opium in Yunnan and its export to the Shan States in Burma.

One witness himself had been a cultivator in 1953 and 1956 and, with his mules, joined caravans transporting opium to the Shan frontier; that is, Burma, where the Burmese Government doesn't have too much administrative authority, and they are trying to get hold of that. It was transshipped by trucks to a trading company at Rangoon, Burma. This was confirmed by other mule skimmers, for instance, who ran caravans of 108 and 82 mules. They transported over 4 and 3 tons, respectively, two sealed tins of 20 kilograms being carried by each mule.

The cultivator—this was not the muleskinner—estimated that 6 tons of opium had been produced annually in the area where he lived, and that the total production of the region had been on the order of 1,000 tons, which is just one particular region. So there was direct evidence about the smuggling out of Yunnan into Burma, and into Thailand, which is converted into heroin and smuggled into Japan and the United States and Canada.

Senator JAVITS. Thank you very much.

(At this point Senator Javits withdrew from the hearing room.)

Mr. ADLERMAN. Commissioner Anslinger, isn't it true that the situation in the Far East has changed radically as far as the use of drugs is concerned, and where formerly it was almost wholly opium smoking, they have now had a sharp increase in the use of heroin, for example in Thailand and in Singapore and the other areas?

Mr. ANSLINGER. It has changed almost entirely to heroin use. That is also true in Iran, where nothing but opium smokers were there, and now the heroin has taken over.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This is considered by the Eastern authorities as a much more dangerous situation than opium smoking ever was.

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes, sir; very much so.

Mr. ADLERMAN. One of the reasons why the late Premier of Thailand sat on a trial of this man in Thailand, where he was sentenced to death, was because this man was operating a heroin laboratory, converting opium into morphine and then into heroin.

Mr. ANSLINGER. That is correct.

Mr. ADLERMAN. This is the first laboratory, or one of the first laboratory operations in Thailand which was called to the attention of the Thailand Government.

Mr. ANSLINGER. That is correct, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. So they were taking sharp steps to prevent the manufacture of opium into heroin.

ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS 689

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes. That is the great problem there; and, of course, in Hong Kong that is almost exclusively heroin.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The heroin user there is different from the heroin user in the United States.

Mr. ANSLINGER. Well, they have in Hong Kong what they call "chasing the dragon," where they take a piece of tinfoil and put barbiton or barbitol, and mix it with heroin and light a match under it and then chase it around. That is called "chasing the dragon" with a little straw, and they set up a very terrific habit there.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They inhale the fumes, do they?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They also smoke it in the tip of a cigarette. They put a few crystals of heroin in it, a practice which is not followed in the United States.

Mr. ANSLINGER. They do that. The type of use is different than it is in this country.

Mr. ADLERMAN. But this is becoming a very much larger problem in the Far East than it was?

Mr. ANSLINGER. They didn't have this problem before.

Now, I want to point out here, when we come to the free drug areas, when all of the big powers—and this was at the close of the war—Great Britain had their opium shops in Hong Kong and Singapore. They were, of course, there, and the Portuguese had a monopoly in Macao, and it was mostly for revenue. The Dutch had their shops all through the Dutch East Indies, which is now Indonesia, and in Indochina they were all over the place.

But I think, or I am quite sure, the pressure from the United States forced them to close all of those free opium shops after the war. There was only one holdout, and that was Thailand, and after a while they capitulated.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Now the opium is converted into a morphine base, usually, and then into heroin?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. The laboratories operating in the Far East have been concentrated where?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Well, they have been concentrated in Hong Kong, in Thailand, in Singapore, we believe, of course, up in Yunnan Province, and Macao.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Those are the areas where they have laboratories?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, you may proceed.

Mr. ANSLINGER. In the Near East there is diversion of opium in Turkey and clandestine morphine base and heroin laboratories in Syria, Lebanon, and Turkey. Much of the morphine base finds its way to Marseilles, France, where it is converted into heroin in clandestine laboratories and smuggled to the United States and to Canada, but the French are very helpful in this regard and they have helped us on a number of occasions.

There is a small illicit production of opium and heroin in the mountainous regions of Mexico which finds its way into California, and there the Mexican Government is bending every effort to try to eradicate the opium poppy.

690 ORGANIZED CRIME AND ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS

Now, there is considerable illicit manufacture of cocaine in Bolivia and Peru which is destined for the United States and Mexico.

Mr. ADLERMAN. On the production of cocaine, wasn't it about 1951 that the Bureau of Narcotics, together with our State Department, was able to obtain the assistance of the Peruvian Government in practically closing down all of the illicit trafficking in cocaine at that time?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADLERMAN. And they had about 80 prosecutions, did they not, in Peru?

Mr. ANSLINGER. There were some 47 factories operating then.

Mr. ADLERMAN. They revoked the licenses to grow and store and process the coca leaf.

Mr. ANSLINGER. They closed them up for about 20 years. We didn't see a cocaine user from coast to coast here. In fact, the Lexington Hospital, checking back 2, 3, or 4 years ago, there was not one cocaine user among all of the patients in the Lexington Hospital. We just about eradicated the cocaine use. Now there is some.

Mr. ADLERMAN. What has happened in the last 2 or 3 years that we have a resurgence of the cocaine use?

Mr. ANSLINGER. Well, they have got ahead of us by establishing cocaine factories in out-of-the-way places in Bolivia and Peru. In October of this year there will be a meeting in La Paz, Bolivia, to see what can be done about shutting them down.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Where is this meeting taking place?

Mr. ANSLINGER. In La Paz, Bolivia, in October.

Mr. ADLERMAN. Bolivia.

Mr. ANSLINGER. And the Peruvians are trying to do a job, and it is rather difficult.

Mr. ADLERMAN. We had very successful cooperation with them in the past, I assume.

Mr. ANSLINGER. Excellent, especially with Peru.

Now I want to talk about the extent of addiction in manufactured drugs. We went into this situation.

The United States has about 48,535 addicts, and in Canada there is the same problem we have, but their records show 3,576.

In the Republic of Germany they have a problem of 4,383. They are all manufactured drugs and no smuggling of heroin there. There is a problem that needs to be attended to stop diversion because of too many doctors' prescriptions.
